within the compaſs of the ſaid two Acts, except upon that which is ſpecially contained therein; and Conſulters and Adviſers are not contained therein. And as to that contained in the other Act of Parliament, cited anent Airt and Part, it is anſwered, That they are different: And if they be alike, Airt and Part ſhould only be mentioned in the Dittay, and not in the other with Conſulting and Adviſing, which are clearly ſeveral Points, and muſt be ſeverally elided; in reſpect whereof, that part of the ſaid Alleadgance ſtands relevant. And where it is replied, That the Pannel's Depoſitions, alledged in the Exception, to verify that he was not Conſulter, Adviſer, &c. becauſe that the ſaid Depoſitions bears that he knew not of the penning, and gave no Advice thereto, that that Part of the ſaid Alleadgance is likewiſe denied ut ſupra, and not a Defence: It is triplyed, That as my Lord Advocat repeats his Reply againſt the Denial, ſo for the Pannel the ſaid Defence and Duply, made in fortification thereof, are here repeated; eſpecially that part of the Duply founded upon the ſaid Depoſitions, bearing that the ſaid Depoſitions are uſed by my Lord Advocat againſt the Pannel, and therefore muſt work in his favour alſo. Where it is replied to that part of the Alleadgance, bearing that the Pannel cannot be convened as Author and Deviſer, becauſe he has given Advice, and in token thereof has mended and reformed a part of the ſaid Libel; that that cannot be reſpected, becauſe of the Reaſon contained in the ſaid Exception, bearing that it is contrary to the Depoſitions, and that it impugns not the Relevancy: It is anſwered and duplyed to the ſaid Reply, That the ſame ought to be repelled, in reſpect of that part of the Alleadgance which is founded upon the Pannel's Depoſition, and needs not impugn the Relevancy, becauſe it is peremptor for that part; and as it is relevant, ſo it is inſtantly proven by the ſaid Depoſitions, and elides that Member of the Dittay, being peremptorly proponed, and inſtantly verified and proven by the ſaid Depoſitions. And albeit it be replied by my Lord Advocat, That the ſaid Depoſitions are not uſed by him neither as Part nor Proof of the Libel, yet it is contrair, becauſe they are mentioned in ſome part of the Libel, and ſo uſed. And as for Proof, they cannot be yet uſed as ſuch, till the Relevancy be diſcuſſed. But albeit my Lord Advocat ſhould not uſe them, yet the Pannel uſes the ſame; and the ſaid Depoſitions may be found a lawful Probation to him of any thing that he ſhall found thereupon.

And where it is alledged by my Lord Advocat in his Reply, That that part of the Defence uſed by the Pannel againſt the Interlining libelled, that the ſame is not relevant, becauſe not libelled when interlined, as that part of the ſaid Alleadgance bears; and it is anſwered by my Lord Advocat, That that part of his Lordſhip's Qualification is uſed jointly with the reſt; and that quocunq; tempore interlined is an Evidence of the Pannel's Concurſe with Haig, in reſpect it was done by Haig in name of the Pannel and the reſt of the Supplicants: To that it is duplyed, That that part of the Alleadgance proponed for the Pannel ſtands relevant, notwithſtanding of that part of the Reply made thereto; and that it is yet contended for the Pannel, That it is no ways relevant to alledge quocunq; tempore interlined thereupon, to infer againſt the Pannel that he was Author, Deviſer, and Airt and Part of the penning: for common Senſe evinces, that to be Airt and Part of the penning or deviſing of a Writing, muſt be done either the time of the forming of the ſaid Writ, or very ſhortly after, otherwiſe Interlining can never infer Author, Deviſer, or Airt and Part of the penning. And it is clearly ſet down in the ſaid Alleadgance, that great time intervened betwixt the Author's penning and deviſing of the ſaid Libel, and the Pannel's interlining of it; for it is clear and nottour to my Lord Advocat and the Lords of the Committee, by clear Depoſitions before them, that the ſaid interlined Libel was that ſame which was intended to have been preſented to his Majeſty by the Earl of Rothes, and that it was not interlined during the hail time the ſaid Earl had the ſame, and for a long time after. And ſo that part of the ſaid Dittay is no ways relevant to infer the ſaid Pannel to be Author for the ſaid Interlining, becauſe the time of the ſaid Interlining is not libelled quando, and that it was at the time of the penning, or immediately after.

And where it is anſwered, That the ſaid Libel was done by Haig in name of the Pannel and the reſt, that part of the Anſwer ought to be repelled, as altogether irrelevant, not bearing that it was done at their Command; for to do any Deed in name of another Perſon, cannot be counted that Perſon's Deed in whoſe name it was done. And where it is replied, That the General is relevant, without that part of the Qualification anent the Interlining after that the Pannel received it from Haig, eſpecially ſeeing it will be conſtant by the Depoſitions, when they will be produced before the Aſſize, that there was no interlining longo intervallo, but ſhortly: To that it is duplyed, It ought to be repelled in reſpect of the Alleadgance, and the Qualifications therein contained, bearing clear and undeniable Circumſtances of the time of the interlining; and likewiſe in reſpect of the ſaid Depoſitions, whereupon that part of the ſaid Alleadgance is founded, and which now the Purſuer uſes by propounding his Reply thereupon. And ſeeing both the Purſuer and the Pannel condeſcends upon the ſaid Depoſitions as a Probation of that part, that part of the Dittay cannot be referred to the Aſſize, to be proven before them, anent the time of the ſaid Interlining; but as the Defence is relevant, as it is proponed, and ought and ſhould be ſo found, ſo the Depoſitions may be preſently received as the Probation thereof, being inſtantly verified and proven, as ſaid is. And where it is anſwered, That the nine Months, contained in the Alleadgance, alledged to have intervened betwixt the penning and interlining, is not verified; it is duplyed, That, firſt, Relevancy muſt precede Probation: Secundo, That the ſaid Space and Time may be gathered out of the Circumſtances contained in the ſaid Alleadgance and Depoſitions: And laſtly, The Pannel's own Declaration muſt be taken thereupon, ſeeing the Purſuer ſhews nothing in the contrary. And this Judicatory admits no Dyet to prove any thing that is found relevant, which is not proven inſtanter. And where it is alledged againſt that part of the Pannel's Alleadgance, bearing, That the ſaid interlined Copy was never ſeen before it was produced before the Committee; and that the Pannel had Promiſe not to be ſnared, and needed not to have produced it, except he had pleaſed; and that it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That all that was urged from the Pannel by the Committee was by good Warrant, whereunto he was obliged to anſwer upon his Allegiance; and that the Denial to anſwer before them would have inferred againſt the Pannel a more dangerous Crime, if he had refuſed; and the Committee only urged a true Declaration anent the Author: It is duplyed, That

That the Pannel is not to diſpute now anent the Warrands of the ſaid Committee, and upon the Crime that might have followed if he had denyed to anſwer, and whether he might have declined them or not. But this he duplies in fortification of that part of the Alleadgance, That albeit he had neither declined the ſaid Committee (as he did not) nor had oppoſed in any caſe their Powers or Warrants; yet he might have lawfully proponed before them this Defence, which to his great and heavy prejudice he did omit, That of Law and Reaſon he was not obliged, nor could not been urged to have made any Depoſitions, nor given Anſwers to Interrogators anent any Demand concerning the ſaid Libel quarrelled; becauſe his Anſwers and Depoſitions might have been the Ground of a Criminal Purſuit againſt him (as now it is.) And ſo with reaſon he might have been ſilent, and the ſaids Lords of Committee could have taken no exception againſt him for his ſaid Silence. And therefore that part of the ſaid Pannel's Alleadgance ſtands relevant, notwithſtanding of the Anſwer bearing that he could not have been compelled to have made any Depoſition either upon his Oath or Declaration, if he had remembred, and had alledged the Danger that was to follow and enſue thereupon. In reſpect whereof, the ſaid Replies, and every one of them, ought to be repelled, in reſpect of the ſaid Alleadgances and Duplies made in fortification thereof.

It is farder duplyed for the Pannel by Mr. Alexander Pearſon, That where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat to that part of the laſt Defence, bearing that Mr. William Haig, the Author and Penner of the alledged Libel, by his own Grant in his miſſive Letter, and alſo acknowledged by the Dittay, that his Declaration that the Pannel gave his Allowance to the penning and forming of the ſaid alledged Libel, cannot be reſpected, nor have any Faith, quia Particeps Criminis adverſus Socium fidem non facit; whereupon my Lord Advocat infers a Grant againſt the Pannel, of his giving Allowance to Mr. Haig in the forming of the alledged Libel: To which it is anſwered, That the Inference and the Conſequence is not good, and has no force; becauſe the foreſaid Defence does no ways inforce a Grant of Allowance by the Pannel to the forming of the alledged Libel, but does only import that Mr. William Haig, the Author and Penner thereof, that his Declaration (not granting any) bearing the Pannel to have given Allowance to him in forming the alledged Libel, cannot be reſpected, nor have any Faith at all againſt the Pannel, himſelf being clearly the Author and Penner thereof; quia Particeps aut Socius Criminis adverſus alium, fidem non facit.

It is alſo farder duplyed for the Pannel by the ſaid Mr. Alexander Pearſon, That where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, that it is againſt Law and Reaſon to oppone Jusjurandum in Criminalibus, and that the Oppoſition of an Oath given has only place in Civilibus; it is anſwered, that the contrair is true in Law, to wit, That Cauſes Criminal are ſometimes even decided by Oath of Party by clear Law. Firſt, Leg. 25. §. 5. F. de Jurejurando: Verba Legis, Si quis juraverit ſe non capuiſſe, non debet adjuvari hoc Jurejurando in actione Furti, quia aliud eſt Furtum feciſſe, quod vel clam fieri poteſt. Et Leg. 6. §. 5. F. de his qui notantur Infamia: Verba Legis, Sed & ſi Jurejurando delato juraverit quis non deliquiſſe, non erit notatus; nam quodammodo Innocentiam ſuam Jurejurando approbant, quibus luce clarius eſt. Et in Cauſis Criminalibus Juramentum deferri, ergo etiam Cauſas Criminales per Juramentum delatum decidi. And it is alike, utrum Juſjurandum a Judice an a parte delatum ſit, utrumque enim deciſorium eſt Litis; expreſſa Leg. 1. F. de Jurejurando: Verba, Maximum Remedium expediendarum Litium in uſum venit Jurisjurandi Religio, quia vel ex pactione ipſorum litigantium, vel ex authoritate Judicis deciduntur Controverſiæ: & Ratio quia Judex non defert Juramentum niſi in ſupplementum, & ubi res aliter probari non poteſt. And therefore that part of the Defence foreſaid ſtands good and relevant, notwithſtanding of the Reply.

It is likewiſe duplyed by Mr. John Nisbet for the Pannel: Where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, that the opponing of the Pannel's Depoſitions, wherein he diſavows that he is Author, Deviſer, conſcious or acceſſory to the framing of the alledged Libel, is not a Defence, but a Denyal; it is duplyed, That ſundry Points of the Dittay being qualify'd by the Pannel's Depoſition, there reſults to him a relevant Defence in Law, upon the Indiviſibility and complex Taking of his Depoſitions, quia Confeſſio non poteſt pro parte acceptari, & pro parte ſperni: Bartol. in Leg. Aurelius, §. Idem quæſit, num. 2. F. de Liberatione Legata. Pharm. Quæſt. 81. num. 168, & aliis numer. Quando eſt Preſumptio quod qualificato confitente occiderit ad ſui defenſionem, ut parte ſi occidens ſit vir probus, nullamque occidendi & offendendi cauſam habebat, & quia occiſus erat homo rixoſus; talis qualificata Confeſſio non poteſt dividi, nec pœna extraordinaria imponi, & ſic confitens omnino abſolvendus eſt.

Whereas it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, that the Relevancy of the Qualification, and the Conformity and Diſconformity of the Pannel's Depoſitions, is not proper to be debated here, but muſt be remitted to the Aſſyze; it is duplyed, That all Diſpute and Debate of Law muſt be decided by the Judge, and is not pertinent to be agitated before the Aſſyze, who are only Judges Facti, & Quæſitores to make inquiry into the Verity of the Deed.

Whereas it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, that Interlining vel in actu ipſo, vel poſt actum quocunque tempore, of a Piece drawn up for the uſe of the Pannel and others intereſted, evidences the Pannel's acceſſory Concurſe in the forming and deviſing the Piece; it is duplyed, That it is moſt unreaſonable, becauſe it ſhould follow, that Interlining of any Piece or Book ſhould import Concurſe in the firſt framing of it, which is contrair to Reaſon.

Whereas it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, That Principium & Finis tanquam duo Extrema Medium includunt; as is acknowledged by us in the Uſe of that Maxim; and conſequently that the firſt Intimation of the Pannel's Knowledge, and the immediate receiving of the Piece challenged, and Interlining ex poſt facto, are relevant to make the Pannel Author, or Airt and Part: it is duplyed, That that Maxim is uſed by us in the Interpretation of ſundry Paſſages of a Piece done unico Contextu, which therefore muſt be preſumed to be done uno Animo & uno Stilo, by the Analogy of the two Extremes interpreting the Midſt; and can never be uſed to make diſparat Acts, to join prepoſterouſly, to prove Acceſſion in forming and deviſing, ſeeing the firſt Imitation alledged by my Lord Advocat is of Knowledge, which preſuppoſeth a thing to be done.

Where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, that the Libel produced before the Lords of the Committee with the Pannel's Depoſitions, notwithſtanding Promiſe and Aſſurance that they ſhould not be uſed, may be uſed by my Lord Advocat, and that the Procedure of the Lords of Committee is moſt warrantable, that the Pannel was obliged to anſwer by his Alleadgance; it is duplyed, That the warrantable Procedure of the Committee is not conteſted, nor cannot be; and that the Pannel, albeit he could not decline his Majeſty's Commiſſioners, might very well in Reaſon and Law have refuſed to depone his own Dittay. And we adhere to the former Citations, averring that the Aſſurance given by Judges ſhould ſecure Pannels againſt any uſe that could have been made of their Depoſitions.

It is added to the Duplies by Mr. Robert Macgill, That where my Lord Advocat has replyed, that the Oath of a Party to be indicted may be urged in Criminals, quod hoc vix ſit auditum in Jure, Clarus, §. ult. Quæſt. 63. & Quæſt. 45. num. 9. And if it hath been practiſed in ſome parts, as likewiſe in this Country in the Examination of theſe who are to be indicted, Conſuetudo illa eſt vetuſtas erroris quæ non adeo ſuo momento valitura, aut ut Legem vincat aut Rationem. Apud Gregorium, & Codice Juſtiniano, quæ ſit longa Conſuetudo. The Reaſon of the Law is, that the maintaining of our Life is ſo natural, that what will we not ſay for the defence of it? Et ſupra omnia evitandum eſt Perjurium. And the Reaſons of the Practicians is nothing, which is leſt Crimes ſhould be unpuniſh'd: for upon Probation by Writing, Witneſſes or other Confeſſion, quæ non eſt jurata, or upon Preſumptions luce meridiana clariores, an alledged Criminal may be put to the knowledge of ane Aſſyze; or otherwiſe the Queſtion may be uſed ad eliciendum veritatem. And where Celerity of Puniſhment may be objected rather or a Man perjure himſelf, vindictæ Tarditas Supplicii gravitate compenſetur. But accepting the Practique to be ſo, I ſay, that in Confeſſione jurata nullo pœnæ metu proper Impunitatem promiſſam. The Maxim of the Law muſt be here received, quod approbo, non reprobo; eſpecially ſeeing the Pannel was ſo ſimple and careleſs in reſpect of his Innocency, that he remitted the forming of his Depoſitions to the Lords of Committee themſelves, he being then removed the time of the dyting and writing of them, and did ſubſcribe them fide implicita.

Where it is replyed, that adviſing and deviſing may be attributed or qualified by any ſubſequent Deed to the alledged Crime; it is anſwered by that of Saluſt, Et antequam incipias conſulto, &c. and ſo it is in Mandato. And as to the Ratihabition, eſt fictio Juris; and it is to be underſtood in Criminibus manifeſtis, & non ubi quæritur de nomine Criminis; as in our Caſe. And remits to the Diſtinction alledged in the hinder part of the firſt Exception.

It is duplyed by Mr. Roger Mowat to the two Practicks of Auchindrane and Carrarie alledged by my Lord Advocat, That they ſuit not this Caſe, ſaying that Depoſitions ſhould not prove in favour of the Pannel, becauſe if any Depoſitions were given by theſe two Perſons (not granting the ſame) they were given after their Indictment for the Crimes of Murder; but here the Depoſitions are given before any Crime known. Secondly, If any Depoſitions were given, they were the voluntary Depoſitions of the Party, not demanded by the Judge. Thirdly, It is not replyed, that theſe Delinquents proponed any Defence upon their Depoſitions, and craved their ſaid Depoſitions to verify the ſaid Diſpute. Laſtly, It was not there alledged and offered to be proven, That there was ane other Author of the ſaid Murder, which was their Crime; whereupon if they had condeſcended and offered to prove the ſame, their Depoſitions would have been further reſpected. In reſpect of which clear Differences of theſe Delinquents from this Caſe, no reſpect can be had to the Practicks alledged.

The Dyet continued till to-morrow the 2d Inſtant.

The King's Majeſty's Advocat having heard the Duplies made to his Lordſhip's Reply, declares that he finds nothing worthy therein to be anſwered, except one Point of Law moved very impertinently anent the Diviſion of Confeſſion in Criminals, and another made in facto anent the Challenge made to the Committee in an alledged Promiſe made to the Pannel at the time of his Examination. And for the firſt, which is diſputable in jure, if it had been pertinent to the purpoſe, his Majeſty's Advocat declares he would have triplyed thereto in writing, and is ready, upon my Lord Juſtice's Deſire, to clear it to his Lordſhip. And as to the other part in facto, 'tis more pertinent to be cleared before the Aſſyze. And therefore he ſuperſedes his Anſwer, except he be enjoined thereto by my Lord Juſtice-General.

Quinto, It is alledged by Mr. Roger Mowat for the Pannel againſt the ſecond Alternative of the Dittay, That the Pannel ought to be aſſoilzed, and cannot be put to the knowledge of an Aſſyze, for alledged hearing, concealing, and not revealing, and not apprehending of the Author of the alledged infamous Libel, and alledged divulging and diſperſing thereof, as the Dittay bears: becauſe giving, and not granting, that the foreſaid Supplication quarrelled might be found ſcandalous againſt Mr. William Haig, the known Author thereof; yet quoad this Pannel, who is not, nor cannot be found the Author, it cannot be ſo declared, becauſe the Addition of the Act 1594, militats only againſt ſuch Writings as are manifeſtly, clearly, and without doubt or difficulty evident and ſeen, and known to be infamous Libels, and at the very firſt ſight may appear ſuch unto every ordinary Underſtanding. But the quarrelled Supplication being of a dutiful ſtrain, and ſuch as might be miſtaken even by very underſtanding Readers and Hearers, the addition of the ſaid Act can no ways be extended to the Hearers, Concealers, not Revealers and not Apprehenders. But ſo it is, that the ſaid quarrelled Supplication was delivered by the ſaid Author to the Pannel as an humble Supplication, and given by him to the Earl of Rothes as an humble Supplication, and returned to him under the ſame name: likeas the Pannel is content to make Faith anent his Knowledge and Conception thereof, that he received and retained the ſame eo nomine; and therefore cannot be put to an Aſſyze upon theſe Points, ſeeing they are Points that cannot in reaſon be found capital by the Common and Civil Law, but by the ſaid Addition, which was made in turbulent Times, and never took effect, but in continual deſuetude, as has been ſaid before. And it were very hard, upon ſuch ane

Act,

Act, never practiſed heretofore, to make Noblemen and others his Majeſty's good Subjects obnoxious to a Capital Crime. And albeit the ſaid quarrelled Supplication might now be found to be infamous, yet the finding it now to be ſuch, ought not, nor cannot be drawn back to infer the Pain of Death upon thoſe who bona fide did not think it ſuch, as now it is ſaid to be by the ſaid Dittay; they having juſtam & probabilem Ignorantiam, by doing that which truly they did, thereby not to have incurred the hard and rigorous Cenſure of the ſaid Act of Parliament. Secondly, It is alledged, that Abſolvitur ought to be granted ut ſupra to the Pannel, becauſe the Supplication quarrelled was never declared heretofore infamous: and before it had been declared infamous and ſcandalous, and by the ſaid Declarator the Pannel had been certified of the Danger, the alledged Having and Hearing thereof cannot be now ſuſtained as a relevant Ground to infer this Criminal Purſuit and Pains of Death againſt him. And with reaſon it ſhould have been firſt ſo declared againſt him, that he and others his Majeſty's loyal and good Subjects being lawfully warranted by the ſaid Declarator, might have thereafter eſchewed to have offended in that kind. Thirdly, Abſolvitur ought to be granted, becauſe the ſaid quarrelled Supplication was intended and offered to be preſented to his Sacred Majeſty; which intended Offer of the ſaid Supplication by the Earl of Rothes, put the Pannel in tuto, that he could never have ſuſpected any Crime or Puniſhment for hearing, keeping, &c. to have followed after the ſaid intended Offer: and ſo was thereby in optima fide to hear, keep, and not to reveal any thing thereanent. The making of the which Offer to his Royal Majeſty, in the Pannel's Judgment, did then vindicat him that he thought nor conceived not the ſaid Supplication ſcandalous or ſeditious; ſeeing it is preſumed that no Man of Judgment or ordinary Senſe and Reaſon, would be ſo fooliſh as to offer his own Dittay to his Prince.

And that the Pannel's Innocency may farther appear, and that his Opinion and Judgment of the ſaid quarrelled Supplication, as he offers to declare the ſame then to have been, may be truſted above all other Preſumptions that can be adduced in the contrair; it is to be remarked, and gravely and wiſely conſidered by the Judges, that the Purſuer in effect has no other Evidence nor Probation of the ſaid Particulars libelled in the ſaid Dittay againſt the Pannel, but ſuch as proceed from his own Depoſitions made before the ſaid Committee: which Point is ſo conſiderable, that in reaſon no advantage ſhould ariſe thereupon againſt him, ſeeing he was not obliged thereto, but of his own accord. And as in Law a Perſon accuſed criminally cannot be compelled either to depone or declare at the command of the Judge, ſo the Depoſitions given by this Pannel before the ſaid Committee, ſhould not be reſpected, in ſo far as the ſame may be made ane Ground of the ſaid Dittay, which concludes and infers no leſs againſt the Pannel nor the Pain of Death. And for the Point of concealing and not revealing the ſaid Writ, de facto the ſame was revealed by the Pannel to the Earl of Rothes, in ſo far as the ſame was appointed to be preſented to his Sacred Majeſty, and thereby to have been revealed to his Highneſs: likeas accordingly the Earl of Rothes did offer to preſent the ſame, as ſaid is. In reſpect whereof, abſolvitur from the ſaid concealing and not revealing; abſolvitur likewiſe for not apprehending, becauſe, as is ſaid before, the Pannel is ready to declare, that in his Judgment and Conception he did not think the ſaid quarrelled Supplication to be ſuch as it is libelled by the Dittay, for the Reaſons before adduced. And in that reſpect it was hard for him as a private Man to take upon him to apprehend the Author of a Writing, which before he had not conceived to fall within the compaſs of the ſaid Act of Parliament. For albeit in Matters of Treaſon all good Subjects are obliged in Duty under all higheſt Pain to diſcover and delate Authors and Practiſers thereof; yet in other Matters, in Writing, and ſuch-like, wherein are doubtful and ambiguous Expreſſions, which may ſuffer divers Interpretations and Conſtructions according to the Humours, Capacities, and Conceptions of the Readers; there is no ſuch Neceſſity poſed by the ſaids Acts of Parliament libelled, nor by the Makers of the ſame, that a Writing coming to a Man's hands, whereof he makes not the right Senſe and Meaning as others do make thereupon, that the ſaid Writing not rightly underſtood by him, ſhall thereupon be a Ground of a Criminal Purſuit to make him loſe his Life for not taking, or not apprehending, or not revealing the Author of the ſaid Writ. The Preparative ſeems dangerous and ſingular; it would therefore be carefully adverted unto, ſpecially at this Time, and in this Caſe; whenas the putting of the ſaid Act in practice, ſeems to have the firſt beginning upon this Pannel. And the taking and apprehending of Leidges has heretofore been dangerous to ſundry Apprehenders; and is inſtanced by the Earl of Queensberry and the Laird of Geichtis Practices, for taking of Leidges at their own hands.

It is anſwered to that part of the ſaid Dittay anent Mr. Haig's apprehending of his own Danger upon the ſimple ſight of the Committee's Letter by the Pannel, that that cannot make the Pannel acceſſory to his Eſcape, no more nor his own Conſent anent the penning of the ſaid quarrelled Supplication can make the Pannel Airt and Part of the forming and penning thereof; ſeeing the ſaid Pannel's ſecond Depoſition bears that he was neither upon the Counſel nor Knowledge of his Eſcape, and knew not of it till three or four days after he was gone. That part of the Dittay anent the Pannel's receiving of Mr. Haig's Letter, is no way relevant to infer the Pain and Crime libelled againſt the Pannel. Firſt, Becauſe this is not a Matter of Treaſon, wherein receiving and writing of Letters are prohibit. Secondly, The Pannel was not prohibit by the Lords of Committee to receive any Letters. Thirdly, The ſaid Letters are produced and delivered to the ſaids Lords, which in Rigour of Law he needed not to have done. Fourthly, Being produced, they prove nothing againſt the Pannel, but are clearly in his favour; becauſe Mr. Haig profeſſes himſelf therein to be Author and Penner of the ſaid Supplication. And where it follows in the ſaid Dittay, that it is affirmed and avowed in ſome of the ſaid Miſſives, That Mr. Haig had the Pannel's Approbation and Allowance to the making and penning of the ſaid Supplication, that is altogether irrelevant, as having no Warrand from the ſaid miſſive Letter, which contains no ſuch Affirmation as is libelled. And the Pannel craves the Letter, bearing that Paſſage, preſently to be read, ſeeing it is in my Lord Advocat's hands; which Deſire ſhould be granted, becauſe the Pannel has ſeen it, with the reſt of his ſaid Miſſives, by Warrand from my Lord Juſtice and his Aſſeſſors.

It

It is added by Mr. Alexander Pearſon to the Exception, That the Pannel is not guilty of concealing, not revealing and divulging of the alledged infamous Libel, becauſe the Writing quarrelled being in form of a Supplication, and uſed as a Supplication by Offer made thereof to his Majeſty, who then gave no Signification of any Offence therewith, the Pannel is not, nor cannot be counted formally a Concealer, not Revealer, or Divulger of an infamous Libel, there being no ſuch Knowledge nor Opinion anent the Writing foreſaid of the Pannel: Quia injuriam poteſt facere nemo, niſi qui ſcit ſe injuriam facere. Leg. 3. §. 3. F. de Injuriis. Sed accuſatus non habebat hanc ſcientiam, ſed juſtam cauſam credendi, to think of it otherwiſe as a Supplication, for the Reaſons above rehearſed. And as when any is accuſed of Theft, it is a good Defence to ſay, Quod domini voluntate & conſenſu rem contrectant, ſaltem putavit dominum conſenſurum, ſive id falſo, ſive id vero putet; expreſſa Leg. 46. §. 7. de Furtis, maxime dum ſuberat infra cauſa ita credendum. So by the like Reaſon in the matter of meddling with the infamous Libel, it muſt defend the Pannel, That he had no Knowledge or Conſcience of ane infamous Libel, and that he had juſt and probable Cauſes to think of it as a Supplication, ſive id falſo ſive id vero putavit, & generaliter ubi de obligando queritur, propenſiores eſſe debere nos (ſi habeamus occaſionem) ad negandum, ubi deliberando ad liberationem, ait Arianus, Leg. 47. de Obligationibus & Actionibus: ergo in re præſenti rapienda eſt occaſio ad liberationem accuſati. Specially anent the Divulging, becauſe this Point of Dittay anent Divulging, is not founded upon any Acts of Parliament, but only upon the Common and Civil Law, and therefore ſhould be decided by the ſaid Law; by which the Defence now alledged for the Pannel is very relevant. Farder, that part of the Dittay, bearing that the Pannel by ſhowing to Mr. Haig of the Warrant of his Citation, did thereby give him occaſion to eſcape furth of the Country, is not revelant; becauſe that which of it ſelf is good, may give occaſion to Evil: And the Pannel's ſhewing the Warrant of his Citation, is no more nor if being verbally cited, he had told Mr. Haig of his Citation, which is no Crime.

It is added by Mr. John Nisbet, that the Dittay ſubſuming concealing of the Piece quarrelled, is contrary to it ſelf, bearing the imparting of it to my Lord Rothes, of purpoſe to preſent to the King's Majeſty.

It is added, that the not apprehending the Author of an infamous Libel, is not relevantly qualified, by the not taking of Haig; ſeeing it is not libelled, that the alledged Libel was declared to be of that nature, or conſpicuouſly or nottourly, at leaſt to the Pannel's knowledge, an infamous Piece; and that it was in the Pannel's power to apprehend the Author, without incurring any hazard of Law, for the injurious Interpellation or Apprehending of any Perſon, whom he was not able to convince to be Author: ſpecially ſeeing the not apprehending of the Author of a treaſonable Piece cannot import any Guilt againſt the not Apprehender, who is not able to convince the Author of the Crime by lawful Probation, and therefore not obliged to apprehend, ſince he cannot do it without the danger of Retaliation, in caſe he ſuccumb; James VI. Par. 2. cap. 49. And in Law, Qui injurioſe interpellit in Judicio civili tenetur Injuriam, F. de Injuriis, Lege 19. Et ſi Liber pro Fugitivo apprehenſus ſit, apprehendens punitur. And by the like Reaſon the Apprehender of a Party, whom he cannot convince by lawful Probation, is puniſhable: And in the Civil Law, he is obnoxious in the Pains of Lex Julia de Vi publica, and of Lex Cornelia de Injuriis.

Secondly, The apprehending injoined by Act of Parliament is only ſubſidiary, when a Party is declared Author, and cannot be well apprehended by the Judge: And a Party that is ready to delate the Author of an infamous Piece, to the end that he may be apprehended by the Judge, he is not obliged to apprehend him ſummarly.

Thirdly, The not apprehending of the foreſaid Author is excuſable; becauſe the Pannel was enjoined by the Lords of the Committee not to divulge the Buſineſs whereupon he was convened, and to keep all things ſecret until his Depoſition.

It is farther eiked by Mr. Robert Macgill, anent the not apprehending, That the Pannel ought to be aſſoilzed therefrom, becauſe Freedom is ſo natural and favourable, that even amongſt the Romans many of their Magiſtrates had not Prehenſionem; and that which the Tribunes of the People had, it was alſo for the People's Freedom. Gellius, lib. 13. cap. 12. Wherein it is certain of the Law, quod nec magiſtratibus licet aliquid injurioſe facere, quin injuriarum teneantur. Leg. nec Magiſt. 32. F. de Injuriis. Unde etiam Captura debet eſſe ex decreto Judicis & Judicia, quæ reſultant ex proceſſu generalis Inquiſitionis debent eſſe ſufficientia ad Capturam, decerniturque Captura ex facti qualitate, & debet proceſſus eſſe informatus licet reus, qui capiendus eſt, non citatus ſit: Clar. §. ultima, Quæſt. 28. & Quæſtione 20. num. 2. Quod in delictis enormibus id ita hodie ſervatur. If then it be ſo, in Magiſtratibus Capturam jubentibus, can it be thought that any municipal Law can command Apprehenſion, niſi in caſibus de Jure, & rationi competentibus? And ſo in Criminibus Decorum enormitate jam ſatis conſtat (where the Pannel profeſſes before God) & Juſjurandum purgativum de Jure recipitur. Leg. Lex Cornelia 5. §. 8. de Injuriis. That he never remembred of ſuch an Act, he could never have imagined at that time the Piece quarrelled to have been of ſuch a ſort, much leſs to be treaſonable; and remits here to the Diſtinction of Crimes propounded in the laſt part of my firſt Exception, where Crimes and Pains ought to be ruled in Reaſon even in municipal Laws; and except in ſuch ſeditious Speeches, which is the firſt ſort of inordinat Speeches againſt a Prince, Ubi & tractatus adeſſe debet, ut in Conjuratione Catilinæ; no Lawyer did ever think the Haver, Hearer, and not Revealer, not Apprehender, to be puniſhable by Death; & ut videtur abſurdum. All municipal Laws ought to receive their own Limitations according to Reaſon: and remits here to the ſecond Part of my Duply, in fortification of my firſt Exception, grounded upon Gailus, lib. 2. Obſervatione 33. anent the Interpretation of municipal Laws; and to the Limitation exponing the Act 134. which forbids any Man, of whatſoever Quality, to ſpeak in time coming anent the Government: which would be abſurd, if it received not its own Limitation to ſpeak (about it) in Council and Parliament. And repeats here again the gracious Acts of our dread Sovereign anent the ſurveying of the Laws.

It is anſwered by my Lord Advocat to the fourth Exception propounded againſt that part of the Dittay, whereby the Pannel is indicted, and is puniſhable by by Death; and that by the Act of Parl. 94. for not apprehending of Haig the Author of the infamous Libel, and for not revealing of the ſame, ought to be repelled in the hail Members thereof. And notwithſtanding the ſame, the Dittay in that part is ſeverally and per ſe relevant, ought to be put to the Knowledge of an Aſſize; becauſe it is ſubſumed in the Dittay preciſely, according to the Words of the Act, That the Pannel, who knew Haig to be Author, did not apprehend, but concealed him and it, and not revealed them; and alſo gave occaſion to Haig of his Eſcape; and ſince his Eſcape, received divers Letters from him, which were concealed till the Pannel was interrogat thereupon by the Committee. And where it is alledged in the Exception, That the Dittay is not relevant in this point, not condeſcending that the infamous Libel was declared to be an infamous Libel; and in particular, that the Dittay in that part is contrair to it ſelf, which bears the Pannel to be guilty of concealing; and yet bears alſo that he delivered it to the Earl of Rothes, to be preſented to his Majeſty: It is anſwered, That the Dittay is relevant, becauſe it ſubſumes directly according to the Act of Parliament, which ſpeaks not of an infamous Libel declared to be ſo, but of an infamous Libel of Speeches, which are ſo really in the ſelf. And there is no Contrariety in the Dittay, becauſe giving to the Earl of Rothes is concealing, except it were qualified that the Earl of Rothes were ſuch a Perſon to whom the Act of Parliament ties the Hearer to reveal, which he is not, not being of his Majeſty's Secret Council. And where it is alledged that the true Meaning and Senſe of the Act is only to be underſtood of Reproaches and infamous Libels, which are certainly, conſpicuouſly, and nottourly ſo, and not of ſuch Speeches and Libels which are of a doubtful and ambiguous, or indifferent nature, which at the firſt View and Hearing could not appear to all Men to be infamous and ſcandalous: It is anſwered, That ubi Lex non diſtinguit, nec nos diſtinguere debemus. And ſeeing the Act comprehends Reproaches and ſcandalous Libels, which are ſo really, & non opinone, the Judge and Aſſize are obliged to judge and proceed according to the nature of the thing prohibited, as it's ſo really, and not to leave place to fruſtrate the Execution of the Law under the Veil of Opinion. And of the Law, ignorantia juris neminem excuſat ne quidem in delictis, licet ſit ignorantia probabilis præcipue in atrocioribus; of which nature this is. Neither can the Pannel pretend excuſe upon the Incertainty, Obſcurity, or Ambiguity of the infamous Libel; becauſe this infamous Libel, by the firſt View, Reading, and Inſpection thereof, might and ſhould have appeared to him to have been of that nature. And no Nobleman, or whatſomever Subject of whatſomever Quality, being of the Pannel's Knowledge, Learning, and Underſtanding, can or could juſtly pretend any Doubt or Scruple; but that the ſaid infamous Libel was, in the firſt View and Reading thereof, of the nature of a ſcandalous Libel, puniſhed by death. And albeit in infamous Libels againſt Subjects there might be ſome Shadow of Excuſe, by reading and looking upon the ſame, and receiving thereof either for Curioſity, or to learn the Quickneſs of a Wit evil ſet in the penning of ſuch infamous Libels: But ſuch Excuſes are damnable in infamous Libels which touch with the leaſt Aſperſion or Blame the Honour, Credit, and glorious Eſtimation of our gracious Sovereign. Likeas the Pannel cannot pretend Ignorance, in ſo far as he granted in his Depoſitions, that after his receiving thereof from Haig, when he did communicate the ſame with the Earl of Rothes, that they found the ſame of ſuch a Strain as ought not to be preſented to our gracious Sovereign. And where it is alledged that this Act of Parliament 94. in the Points of the Addition anent not apprehending and not revealing, are not of Crimes puniſhable to death by the Common Law; and that the ſame has been in long deſuetude, and out of uſe; that ought not to be reſpected, becauſe we are ruled by the Laws of the Kingdom, by the Acts made by King James the Firſt and King James the Fourth, before alledged; and there is no Preſcription in Law. And where it ſeems to be adduced to infer probabilem ignorantiam, it is anſwer'd, Quod omnis ignorantia juris eſt improbabilis & punibilis. And where it is alledged the Pannel habebat ignorantiam facti eamq; probabilem quæ excuſat in delictis; in ſo far as albeit this infamous Libel was puniſhable to death in the Perſon of the Author, yet it cannot be puniſhable to death in the Pannel, not being Author, as he alledges, becauſe it was delivered to him as a Supplication, to be preſented to his Majeſty; and that he preſented it to the Earl of Rothes, who made offer thereof to his Majeſty, and after returned it to the Pannel, which (as the Pannel alledges) put him in tuto & in bona fide not to apprehend Haig, nor to reveal it to any of his Majeſty's Council as a ſcandalous and infamous Libel, becauſe he did not conceive it to be ſo; and is content to depone upon his great Oath, That he did not know, nor apprehend the ſame to be an infamous Libel: It is anſwered, That the Nature and Strain of the infamous Libel muſt be the Rule of Puniſhment or Impunity, and not the Opinion of the Pannel; the Reproaches, Exprobrations, and ſcandalous Aſperſions thereby put upon his Majeſty's ſacred Perſon, Eſtate, and Government, being ſo nottour, evident, and conſpicuous, that neither the Pannel, nor none of his Knowledge and Judgment, could pretend Excuſe or Ignorance in the reading thereof; Et eſt ignorantia maxime inexcuſabilis neſcire hoc quod omnes ſciunt: but ſpecially in the Pannel, who adverted to it narrowly, and heard it not ſimply ſpoken, but had it delivered to him in Writing, which he keeped, copied, and adviſed with, and found the Strain thereof of that nature, as was not fit to be preſented to his Majeſty. And where it is alledged, That the Pannel cannot be puniſhable to death for not apprehending of Haig, and not revealing of him and his infamous Libel, except it had been declared to have been infamous, and Haig to have been the Author thereof; and that the apprehending of Haig in a matter ſo obſcure and doubtſome, would have been dangerous to the Pannel per τοιαυτοπαθίαν or Retaliation, ordained by the Act of Parliament of King James, his Majeſty's bleſſed Father, of happy Memory, Parl. 2. cap. 49. It is anſwered, That Act of Parliament requires no other Declarator but the real Nature and Quality of the Speeches and infamous Libel; neither could there have been Danger in apprehending, being warranted by the Law. And where it is alledged, That all depends upon the Pannel's Depoſitions, which he made voluntarly for Satisfaction of the Lords of Committee, and that therefore he muſt have yet place to clear his own Depoſitions; and that for clearing thereof, he is ready to depone, by his great Oath, that at the Receipt of the ſaid infamous Libel, he received the ſame as a Supplication, and ſo keeped it, and retained it: It is anſwered, That the moſt ſubſtantial Part of the Dittay is founded upon the nature of the infamous Libel, and not not upon the Pannel's Depoſitions; wherein his Denial of Knowledge upon Oath cannot liberat him from the Puniſhment of Death contained in the Act of Parliament.

And where it is alledged, that albeit the Juſtice ſhould find this Libel to be infamous now, yet it cannot be drawn back to the time of his Receipt from Haig; it is anſwered, That it needs no Declaration of Judge, and conſequently is not to be drawn back, but was ſo from the beginning.

And where it is alledged, that albeit in Matters of Treaſon all Subjects are obliged to delate, yet not in Matters which are doubtſome, but certain; it is anſwered, That this is certain & de jure & de facto: de jure, becauſe commanded to apprehend under the Pain of Death; de facto, becauſe of the ſaid infamous Libel, which is really and of the own nature ſo.

And where it is alledged, that Credulitas in Furtis præbet cauſam probabilem, for the which the Text of the Laws are adduced; it is anſwered, Quod illa Credulitas probanda eſt aliter quam per Juramentum rei.

And where it is alledged, that proniores eſſe debemus ad liberandum; it is anſwered, That this has no place in atrocioribus, and which are ſo clear and manifeſt as this.

And where it is alledged, that the Pannel ought to be aſſoilzed for not apprehending and not revealing, becauſe he did reveal it to the Earl of Rothes, who did make offer of it to his Majeſty; it is anſwered, Quod nullo modo relevat, in reſpect of the Act of Parliament which ordains the revealing to be to a Counſellor, which Rothes was not. And the Offer to his Majeſty by the Earl of Rothes non relevat, except it be alledged, that the Earl of Rothes offered it to his Majeſty as a ſcandalous Libel, to be puniſhed conform to the Act of Parliament; which is not nor cannot be alledged. And ſuppoſing that this revealing by the Earl of Rothes to his Majeſty might be ſuſtained as lawful for procuring Impunity from the Act, which is not granted; yet the Pannel is puniſhable to death upon the other Member, for not apprehending of Haig, whom he in his Depoſitions declared to have been the Author thereof, and whom he might have apprehended, both at the time of receipt thereof, and alſo at the time when the Pannel ſhewed to Haig the Warrand of his Citation before the Committee, he having him then in his power. And where it is alledged, that he could not apprehend him then, in reſpect of the Command given to the Pannel by the Committee, to acquaint no Perſons with the Cauſes of his Warning; that cannot be adduced for an Excuſe, but rather makes the Pannel inexcuſable, becauſe he tranſgreſſed the Command of the Committee in ſhowing of the Warrand to Haig, and yet did not apprehend him; but ſhowing of the Warrand, gave him occaſion to eſcape. And where it is alledged, that giving of occaſion is not relevant, and alſo that receiving Letters from him (not being in a Matter treaſonable) is not puniſhable; it is anſwered, That theſe Circumſtances are not eſſential Parts of the Dittay per ſe, but uſed as Adminicles to aggravat the Pannel's Crime in not apprehending of Haig, and entertaining with him Correſpondence after his flight.

And where it is alledged the Letters, if they were produced, would prove nothing againſt the Pannel, but in his favours, non eſt hujus loci, becauſe now we are only upon the Relevancy of the Dittay. But when they ſhall be uſed in the proper Place before the Aſſize, it will be clear, that the ſame make rather againſt than for the Pannel, in reſpect whereof the ſaid fourth Exception, and hail Members thereof ought to be repelled.

It is duplyed by Mr. Roger Mowat, in fortification of the Defence proponed for the Pannel, bearing, that giving and not granting that the foreſaid Supplication quarrelled, might be found ſcandalous againſt Haig the Author; yet quoad the Pannel cannot be found, becauſe the Addition of the Act 94 militats only againſt clear Writings, clearly known to be infamous; and at the firſt this appears not ſo, being of a doubtful Strain, as the Exception bears.

Whereunto it is replied, that the hail Members of the Dittay, anent hearing not revealing, not apprehending the Author, are ſeverally relevant, in reſpect of the Act of Parliament; whereupon it is ſubſumed, that the Pannel knew Haig to be the Author, and did not apprehend him, but concealed and revealed neither him nor the ſaid alledged Libel, and ſicklike occaſioned his Eſcape, and received Letters from him ſince. It is duplied, that the ſaid fourth Alleadgance proponed for the Pannel, ſtands relevant in the hail Members thereof, notwithſtanding of the ſaid Reply founded upon the ſaid Act of Parliament; and the Pannel refers himſelf to the ſaid Exception and hail Members thereof, to be judicially pondered and conſidered. And farther alledges, that the ſaid Reply is not relevant, bearing, that that Part of the Subſumption of the Dittay is founded upon the ſaid Act, bearing, that the Pannel knew Haig to be the Author, and did not apprehend him: Becauſe albeit the Pannel knew him to be the Author, as his Depoſition bears in theſe words, that he took him to be the Author; yet it followeth, not by good Conſequence in Law or Reaſon, that he took him to be the Author of this as a ſeditious and ſcandalous Libel, as my Lord Advocate in his Replies bears hardly upon us, which were to take Controverſum pro Confeſſo: And ſo the Pannel ſtill abiding by his former Defence, acknowledges, that if he had known the Libel to have been infamous, he was tied to the ſtrict Obſervance of the Act of Parliament made againſt Libels of that nature and kind. But ſeeing the Pannel has ſtill denied all ſuch Knowledge as is inforced upon him by the Dittay and Reply, and that it is againſt Reaſon that any furder Knowledge of a Writing ſhould be inforced upon a Party, otherwiſe than he declares himſelf, and has declared ab initio; for he has ſtill affirmed, and yet does affirm, that he never conceived that quarrelled Writ to have been infamous, or to have carried or rubbed any Aſperſions upon his ſacred Sovereign; which if he had perceived, he would rather have loſt his Life before he had concealed one jot thereof, as he was bound in Duty. And ſo ſeeing the Gloſs and Commentar of his Knowledge of the ſaid Libel, muſt always be referred to himſelf, and not by the Gloſs made in the Dittay, importing no leſs than the Loſs of his Life; the ſaid Reply ought to be repelled, unleſs it were alledged that the Pannel, by his Knowledge and by his Underſtanding, had perceived the ſaid Libel to be as the Dittay bears, which he profeſſes he never did. For if this Ground hold, that all Men reading Writings ſhould have alike Knowledge thereof; and that any reading a Writing ſhould underſtand all the Senſe or Commentaries that could be made thereupon, or elſe to incur ſuch Pains as might follow; this Inconvenience might enſue, that Bairnes, or mere Ignorants rants or Fools, reading Writings of this kind and nature, might incur the self-same Dangers; which is a great Inconvenience, for certainly they know no better: and by their Knowledge they apprehended not the Danger, which wiser and more learned Men prying more narrowly thereinto, did perceive and find out. For it has pleased God to give every Man his own particular Knowledge, and not all Knowledge to one. And except it were replyed, that the Pannel either by Word or Writing had signified or expressed any other Knowledge or Conception of the said quarrelled Writing, which may verify against him that he acknowledged the same to be scandalous, as the Dittay bears, the said Reply should be repelled as irrelevant. And the Conception and Knowledge of the said Writing must necessarly be referred to the Pannel's own Declaration, whose Life and Fortune cannot be taken away upon another Man's Exposition of a Writing, which the Pannel is content to make Faith that it never entered in his Judgment or Sense to know that to have been the Meaning; which if he had known, he could not but at the first view have fulfilled and obeyed the Law set down in the saids Acts, as his Dispositon, and his Carriage, and his bygone Actions clearly evince, and needs no further questioning. In respect whereof, the said Reply ought to be repelled, as altogether irrelevant, for the Reasons before alledged.

And where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, That the giving of the said infamous Libel by the Pannel to the Earl of Rothes, is de facto concealing, except the said Earl were such a Person to whom the Act tyes the Hearer to reveal; which he is not, because he is not ane Counsellor: to that it is duplyed, That the said Reply is no ways relevant, because albeit the said Act of Parliament expresses a number of kinds of Persons in place, to whom the Crimes prohibit by the said Act are to be revealed; yet it excludes not other Persons, but that such Crimes may be revealed to them as well as to the Persons contained in the Act: and the revealing thereof to other Persons would be counted good Service, and not taken for a Fault in the Revealer. Secondly, The said Earl, to whom the said Writ was revealed, albeit he be not Privy Counsellor, yet by the Laws of this Country he is born a Counsellor, and was so at the making the said Act, as all the Earls in Scotland were then: and therefore the revealing to the said Earl may be estimat to have been done conform to the said Act. Thirdly, The said Earl is ane Sheriff, and by the Act of Parliament the saids Crimes are ordained to be revealed to Sheriffs, as one of the Persons mentioned in the said Act: and therefore the Delivery of the said quarrelled Writ to the Earl of Rothes by the Pannel, is clear revealing, and not concealing; at the least is such revealing, that in Law and Justice should liberat and free the Pannel from the Crime libelled in the Dittay, and from the heavy Pain that follows thereupon, being no less than the Loss and Tinsel of his Life.

And where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat to that part of the said Defence, bearing that the Act of Parliament is of notorious and known seditious Libels, and not of doubtsome and ambiguous Writs, which in reading may suffer divers Senses and Constructions, of the which last kind it is alledged that the Writ quarrelled is: to the which it is replyed, Ubi Lex non distinguit, neque nos distinguere debemus. And seeing the Act comprehends Reproaches and scandalous Libels, which are really so, & non in Opinione; the Judge and Assyze should proceed according to the thing prohibited, and not leave place to the Veil of Opinion: To that part of the said Reply it is duplyed ut supra, That albeit the said Act comprehends reproachful and scandalous Libels, which are really so; yet it follows not, for the Reasons adduced in the first Duply made to my Lord Advocat's first Reply immediately preceding, which I here repeat brevitatis causa: for here is all the Controversy, Whether my Lord Advocat's Opinion in the Dittay, or the Pannel's Opinion in the Defence against the Dittay, shall carry the greatest force, seeing they are both different Opinions. And it seems most favourable and most reasonable, that a Nobleman's Life being quarrelled and drawn in question and hazard upon the Interpretation and Commentary, that the Pannel should have the preference anent the Interpretation, for preservation of his Life, Honour, and Estate; especially in respect that it is not only simply offered, that he should declare the true meaning, which he always knew and understood, of the said Writing, but likewise offers to make Faith thereupon. And as this is most reasonable, so it ought to be favour'd upon the Pannel's part in this Case, so heavy and so dangerous to him; for it is not denyed, but the Act prohibits the hearing, having, concealing, &c. of infamous and scandalous Writings; but this Writing quoad eum cannot be called so: neither prohibits the Act, that Readers of such Writings should otherwise read, know and understand the same, nor according to the Knowledge that it has pleased God to give them.

And to that part of the Reply, bearing that the Pannel cannot pretend Excuse upon the Uncertainty and Ambiguity of the said quarrelled Writing, because by the first view it might and should have appeared to him to have been of that nature; albeit in Libels against Subjects there might be some Excuse by reading, retaining, and looking upon 'em; yet the Pannel cannot pretend Ignorance after the receiving thereof from Haig, and communicating the same to the Earl of Rothes, that they found it of such a strain, as should not be presented: It is duplyed, That this part of my Lord Advocat's Reply doth unwillingly force the Pannel to fall upon the Exposition of the Words of the said Libel; which cannot be eschewed, in respect of that part of the Reply, bearing that by the first view it might and should have appeared to him to have been of the nature of a seditious Libel: which the Pannel flatly refuses, and is formally contrair, because he never took it to be so; for the first words of the said quarrelled Writ are thir, (these) To the King's most Excellent Majesty, the humble Supplication of the Lords and others Commissioners of the late Parliament, humbly sheweth, &c. And these being the first words of the said Writing, if in reason it may be affirmed that the Pannel cannot pretend Excuse, because by the first view that Writing containing these words; if, I say, it might and should have appeared to him to have been a seditious Writing, the Pannel remits himself about it to the wise and judicious Deliberation of the Judges and noble Auditors. For as it has been oft said before, and now not to be repeated, the Pannel declares that he never took the said Writing in his Opinion and Judgment for any other kind of Writing or Libel, but for ane humble Supplication and Remonstrance, in all humility to have been presented to his Sacred Majesty; and which accordingly was delivered to the Earl of Rothes, to have been preſented and by him offered to his Majeſty, and refuſed in manner contained in my Lord Advocat's own Declaration of his Sacred Majeſty's own Speech and Words uttered to the ſaid Earl of Rothes, the time of the offering thereof: whereupon the Pannel takes Inſtruments. And ſo the ſaid quarrelled Writing not being at the firſt view ſeditious, as is libelled in the Dittay, and contained in the Reply, but in the ſaid firſt words being a moſt humble Supplication; the Pannel moſt juſtly pretends Excuſe, that ſeeing de facto the ſaid firſt words are not ſeditious at the firſt view, that therefore he ought not to be convened by this Dittay, as Haver, Hearer, and Concealer of the ſaid ſeditious Writing; but ought to be ſuffered and permitted to make his own Interpretation, that he never thought it ſo; and therefore cannot be purſued criminally upon his Life therefore, as the Dittay bears.

And to that part of the Reply, bearing that albeit in Libels againſt Subjects there might be ſome Excuſe by reading, receiving, and looking upon the ſame; yet the Pannel cannot pretend Ignorance, in reſpect of his Depoſitions, after receiving from Haig, by communicating the ſame to the Earl of Rothes, that they found it of ſuch a ſtrain as ſhould not be preſented: to that it is duplyed, That the ſaids Depoſitions make nothing againſt the Pannel; for the Pannel did never deny the Receipt of the ſaid quarrelled Writing from Haig, nor that he did communicate the ſame to the Earl of Rothes, and that they found it of ſuch a ſtrain as ſhould not be preſented. But the Times being diſtinguiſhed, the Doubt is ſoon ſolved: for the Depoſitions apparently expreſs not the Times. For the Pannel did not depone, That before delivery of the ſaid quarrelled Writing to the Earl of Rothes, and before the Earl of Rothes his intended Offer thereof to the King's Majeſty, that they found it of ſuch a ſtrain as ſhould not be preſented: but that Conference betwixt the Earl of Rothes and the Pannel, was long after the intended Offer and Refuſing. At which time, upon the occaſion of the Harſhneſs and Miſconſtruction of ſome words, that Speech was uttered betwixt them; and from that time ſurth, nothing further followed. And therefore the Pannel's Depoſition makes nothing for the ſaid Argument, That the Pannel could not pretend Ignorance: in reſpect whereof, the ſaid Reply, and hail Members thereof, ought to be repelled.

It is farther duplyed by Mr. Alexander Pearſon, That where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, that the Pannel's Opinion of the Writing, and the alledged probable Cauſe of his Ignorance to be a ſcandalous Libel, adduced, cannot defend the Pannel from concealing, &c. becauſe the Writing in itſelf is really ſcandalous, and at the firſt view might and ſhould have appeared in that nature to any Man of the Pannel's Underſtanding; and who can pretend Opinion neſciendo hoc quod omnes ſciunt? It is anſwered, That the Pannel's Opinion of the Writing, and the probable Cauſes of his Ignorance of the ſame to be ſcandalous, does defend the Pannel from the Crimes libelled, not only for the Reaſons and Laws already adduced, in the matter of Injury and other Crimes, which are moſt pregnant; but alſo becauſe no Capital Crime whatſoever is or can be committed ſine dolo, whereof the Pannel is altogether free in all ſorts thereof; Et a dolo vero & a dolo præſumpto ex qualitate facti. A dolo vero, which the Pannel's innocent Intention evinceth in the Defences proponed for him in the ſecond Exception; and there he is purged abundantly, for the Reaſons contained therein, which are here repeated brevitatis cauſa.

The Juſtice and Aſſeſſors continues this Dyet till to-morrow, the 12th Inſtant.

It is alledged by the ſaid Mr. Alexander Pearſon, and duplyed by the Pannel, Secundo, That the ſaid Pannel is free a dolo præſumpto, quia tunc præſumitur dolus ex qualitate facti, ubi quis facit quod ſcit vel ſcire debet ſe non debere facere: At in propoſito noſtro nulla ſcientia nec conſcientia criminis in accuſato, nec ignorantia ejus quod omnes intelligunt. But moſt juſt and probable Cauſe of Ignorance of the Writing to be ſcandalous, which would have affected even the wiſeſt and moſt ſagacious then; although now ex poſt facto, by Pregnancy and Vivacity of Spirit, the Writing quarrelled being ſearched unto exactly, the ſame being interpret by the Dittay, and urged upon the Pannel as ſeditious; which Interpretation now of it, cannot make damnable the Eſtimation and Opinion of the Writing quarrelled, which it had of before amongſt Men of common Underſtanding, to make culpable of capital Crime: Quia Injuriarum Eſtimatio non addit tempus quo judicatur, ſed ad id quo facta eſt referre debet; Expreſſa Leg. 21. F. de Injuriis. Et nunquam creſcit ex poſt facto præteriti Delicti Eſtimatio. And it is hard that the Pannel, upon Error of Judgment, ſhould incur capital Puniſhment.

Where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, That the Pannel cannot pretend Ignorance of the Writing quarrelled, becauſe by his Depoſition the 7th of June, he has declared that he thought it not fit to be preſented to his Majeſty; it is anſwered, That the Reply is not relevant, and that the Pannel then thinking it not fit to be preſented, hinders not but the ſaid Writing being thought fit by others to be preſented to his Majeſty, and indeed offered to his Majeſty, the Pannel thereby was confirmed the more to think of it as a Supplication, and may make the Defences thereupon, upon his Credulity foreſaid.

Where it is reply'd by my Lord Advocat, Quod omnis Ignorantia juris eſt improbabilis & punibilis, and that the Pannel can pretend no probable Ignorance thereof; it is anſwered, That the addition of the Act of Parliament 94, anent Concealers, whereupon this part of the Dittay is only founded, had never Strength nor Vigour of Law, (never being yet practiſed againſt any ſince the firſt making thereof) but being as it were by deſuetude aboliſhed, ut ſupra in our firſt Exception, ſhews that the Ignorance thereof is neither improbable, nor puniſhable againſt the Pannel.

Where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat to that part of the fourth Exception, bearing quod Credulitas in furtis præbet cauſam probabilem, and that by parity of Reaſon it ſhould have place alſo in the matter of infamous Libels; to the which it is replyed, Quod illa Credulitas aliter probanda eſt quam per Juramentum Rei: It is anſwered, That the Pannel urges not his Credulity of the Writ quarrelled upon his own Declaration only, but alſo upon other Circumſtances, Evidences, and Preſumptions, already adduced in the ſaid fourth Exception and former Defences; which clearly evinces the Pannel's Credulity, and the Juſtneſs thereof.

Where

Where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat to that part of the Exception, proporting the Words of the Law where it is ſaid, Ubi de obligando & liberando quæritur, propenſiores eſſe debemus ad liberandum; to the which it is replyed, That the Law cited has no place in clear and manifeſt Crimes, as this is: It is anſwered, that the Reply takes Controverſum pro Confeſſo, That the Crime whereupon the Pannel is accuſed is clear and manifeſt, which it is not; but in the Notion of a Crime (if any there be, which we do not grant) the ſame is moſt abſtruſe and obſcure: and if any Clearneſs be, it is for the Pannel's Innocency; in reſpect whereof, the Exception ſtands relevant, notwithſtanding of the Reply.

It is further duplyed by Mr. Roger Mowat, to the Reply made by my Lord Advocat to that part of the ſaid fourth Defence, bearing that the Pannel is not puniſhable for not apprehending and not revealing, upon an Act become in deſuetude, becauſe the Leidges are ruled by the Laws of the Kingdom, as the Acts of K. James I. and K. James IV. bears; and that there is no Preſcription in Laws, and that omnis Ignorantia juris eſt improbabilis & punibilis: It is duplyed, That albeit the Leidges are and ſhould be ruled by his Majeſty's Laws, yet where Laws are become in deſuetude, and have never been practiſed, the Leidges ought to be certified thereof, and new Intimation ought to be made, as in the firſt Defence at length is contained. And neither of theſe can be alledged in this preſent Caſe; and therefore the dangerous Conſequence of this and the like Laws ought to be prevented before the ſame be practiſed, which is the Mind of the Law-giver. And to that, bearing that there is no Preſcription in Laws; it is duplyed, That Deſuetude muſt be eſtimat equipollent to the Preſcription of Laws obſcure, or that are not in daily cuſtom. And where it is replyed againſt probable Ignorance, Quod omnis Ignorantia juris eſt improbabilis & punibilis; it is duplyed, That Ignorantia juris in damnis vitandis non nocet: and this is our Caſe. And where it is replyed to that part of the ſaid fourth Defence, bearing that the Pannel had probable Ignorance, the Defence ought to be repelled, becauſe the Nature and Strain of the quarrelled Writing muſt be the Rule of the Puniſhment or Impunity, and not the Opinion of the Pannel; Et quod eſt Ignorantia maxime inexcuſabilis neſcire hoc quod omnes ſciunt: It is duplyed to the ſaid Reply, That the Pannel ſtill contends that the Nature and Strain of the Supplication quarrelled may be the Rule of his Puniſhment and Impunity, according to his Opinion of the right Meaning and Senſe that he made thereof, for the Reaſons already adduced in the former Duplies immediately preceeding; wherein the Pannel contends, that with reaſon he himſelf muſt be the only Trucheman and Interpreter of the ſaid Writing, in caſe any other Commentar or Interpretation be made thereof, containing ſuch a Senſe and Meaning, as being received and admitted, will bring upon him the Puniſhment of Death: which Duply is here repeated brevitatis cauſa.

And where it is replyed, That the Reproaches and Exprobrations therein contained are ſo nottour, that the Pannel nor none of his Judgment could pretend Ignorance on the reading thereof; it is duplyed ut ſupra, That the Pannel refuſes his having knowledge of any ſuch Reproaches, and profeſſes his Ignorance thereof; albeit he read the ſame, and others likewiſe of better Judgment than himſelf, who did never obſerve nor find out the like, according to their Judgment and Underſtanding. Which Reproaches and Scandals, if they had perceived and remarked, (as they did not) would have touched them as near as any other of his Majeſty's Subjects whatſoever of their Quality or Degree: but ſeeing the Pannel, and the reſt of the Hearers and Havers of the ſaid quarrelled Supplication, pretend their Ignorance foreſaid of any ſuch Knowledge, as is now expreſſed in the ſaid Dittay; the Purſuer can never be heard to force any other Knowledge upon them, to that end that they may be found guilty of the Crime libelled, and Puniſhment of Death therefore.

And where it is replyed, That it is Ignorantia maxime inexcuſabilis neſcire hoc quod omnes ſciunt; it is duplyed, That my Lord Advocat will do well to apply that Rule to the preſent Caſe, and ſhow quid ſit hoc quod omnes ſciunt. For if his Lordſhip means by his Dittay, then that Rule can have no place here, becauſe no Man knew any ſuch Gloſſes or Interpretation of the ſaid Supplication, but the Purſuer himſelf, before the coming furth of the ſaid Dittay. And if before that time many were of another opinion, concerning the meaning of the ſaid Supplication; then my Lord Advocat cannot be heard to ſay, that it was Ignorantia maxime inexcuſabilis in the Pannel neſcire hoc quod omnes ſciunt, ſeeing no Man knew that which was ſet down in the ſaid Dittay, but my Lord Advocat himſelf: and many knew, and yet know, that the ſaid quarrelled Supplication in their Judgments and Conceptions carried with it no ſuch Meaning or Conſtruction.

And where it is replyed, That the Pannel's Defence, founded upon his Depoſitions which he made voluntarly for ſatisfaction of the Committee, cannot be reſpected, becauſe the moſt ſubſtantial parts of the Dittay are founded upon the ſaid quarrelled Supplication, and not upon the Pannel's Depoſitions; and that his Denial of Knowledge by Oath, cannot liberat him from the Pain of Death: It is duplyed, That albeit many ſubſtantial Points of the ſaid Dittay be founded upon the ſaid Supplication, yet they are founded upon the Pannel's Depoſitions alſo. And albeit the ſaid Dittay quarrels and impugns the ſaid Supplication in ſundry Paſſages, which the Pannel doth not maintain as they are expreſſed in the Dittay, becauſe when he and the other Supplicants read and heard the ſaid Supplication, they found no ſuch meaning in it; and they leave the Defence of that Commentary to the Author himſelf, and declare ut ſupra by their Judgment they found it not of ſuch a ſtrain as the Dittay bears: The Declaration ought now to be received, for clearing of the Pannel and remanent Supplicants from all Suſpicion of ſuch Knowledge as the Dittay bears upon them, for the Reaſons foreſaids, contained in the former Defences and Duplies. In reſpect whereof, the ſaid Reply ought to be repelled, in reſpect of the ſaids Depoſitions already given, and of the Pannel's Declaration upon Oath, which he now offers to give.

Where it is replyed to that part of the ſaid Defence, bearing that albeit the ſaid alledged Libel ſhould be now found to be infamous, yet cannot be drawn back, That there needs no Declarator of the Judge; conſequently may be drawn back, becauſe it was infamous from the beginning: it is duplyed, That the Defence ſtands relevant notwithſtanding the Reply. Which Defence bears expreſly that the Pannel and other Supplicants received the ſaid Libel (now quarrelled) as an humble Supplication; and in token of their ſaid Knowledge addreſſed the ſame to be preſented to his Sacred Majeſty, as the ſaid Defence bears. And ſo what has been found out ſince to be therein by the Purſuers, and thoſe of deeper Wit and Knowledge than the Pannel and other Supplicants, cannot be laid to their charge; for whom all Preſumptions are moſt clear and evident, that the Pannel had never ſo much as one Thought or Opinion, as is contained in the Dittay.

Where it is replyed to that part of the Exception founded upon the Inſtance of Treaſon, as the ſame bears; it is duplyed, That my Lord Advocat in that Anſwer takes Controverſum pro Confeſſo, ever taking this for a ground that the Supplication is ſeditious and ſcandalous, and ſo to be reputed and holden againſt the Pannel and others in the like Caſe, which is ſtill denyed, for the Reaſons before adduced. Where it is anſwered by my Lord Advocat, That that part of the ſaid Defence anent the revealing to the Earl of Rothes is not relevant, in reſpect of the Act of Parliament; it is duplyed, and ought to be repelled in reſpect of the former Duplies anſwering this Point, That Earls, the time of making the ſaid Act, were born Counſellors; and that the Earl of Rothes was a Sheriff, which the Act allows.

And where it is replyed, That the Offer to his Majeſty non relevat, except it were alledged that he offered it as a ſcandalous Libel; it is duplyed, That the ſaid Reply is no ways relevant, becauſe it was ſufficient by preſenting it to his Royal Majeſty to reveal the ſame in that manner: And it cannot be now known whether it would have been ſo thought by his Sacred Majeſty, albeit he refuſed the ſamen; but it is certain that the Pannel and the Preſenter would never have preſented the ſame, if they had thought it ſcandalous. And that part of the Defence, bearing that it was revealed by the preſenting, needs not to bear that it was offered to be preſented as ſcandalous, for that was not their End, neither had they any ſuch Meaning by the ſaid preſenting; their Intention being, as is contained in the ſaid Defence, to have it preſented as an humble Supplication, to receive a gracious Anſwer, as other Remonſtrances had gotten before. And ſo there is no neceſſity to alledge it was to be preſented as a ſcandalous Libel.

And where it is replyed, That (granting) the ſaid Revealing to his Majeſty might have been ſuſtained as lawful, yet the Pannel is guilty of Death for not apprehending; it is duplyed, That the ſaid Reply is not relevant, becauſe if the ſaid revealing was lawful, ergo there was no neceſſity of apprehending; for the words of the Act of Parliament anent the Prohibition are alternative. And albeit, as it is anſwered before, that the Pannel thought Mr. Haig to be Author, yet in reſpect of this Conception of the ſaid Libel, he thought him not to be ſuch an Author as merited Apprehenſion, becauſe the ſaid Libel in his opinion fell not within the ſaid Act of Parliament. And repeats his former Anſwer, and the two Practicks about the apprehending of free Leidges; adding thereunto the late Lord Maxwell's Practick, who having apprehended by virtue of a Commiſſion, was notwithſtanding forefaulted therefore.

To the Reply, bearing that my Lord Advocat granted that the Circumſtances of the Receipt of Haig's Letter are not eſſential Parts of the Dittay per ſe, but uſed as Adminicles to aggravat the Pannel's Crime of not apprehending, and giving him occaſion to eſcape, and entertaining of Correſpondence with him thereafter: it is duplyed, That the Pannel and his Procurators accept of the ſaid Anſwer, and proteſt that no reſpect be had thereto, as ane eſſential part of the Dittay. And the alledged Correſpondence is no ways relevant, not bearing that the Pannel did write Letters to Haig: for Correſpondence muſt be mutual, otherwiſe it can be no Correſpondence.

Where it is replyed, quod non eſt hujus loci to produce Haig's Letter; it is duplyed, That 'tis maxime hujus loci to be produced, if that part of the Dittay founded upon it be found relevant, becauſe they were already produced by Warrand of my Lord Juſtice; and being now produced, nothing ſhall be found in them to carry any Warrand for that part of the ſaid Dittay. And being produced to the Pannel, and his Procurators for their Information and Defence, muſt yet be produced to be compared with the ſaid Dittay. For if they ſhall find that the Dittay and the Letter do not agree, then that part of the ſaid Dittay founded upon the ſaid Miſſive will not be ſuſtained, and ſo cannot be put to the knowledge of an Inqueſt. In reſpect whereof, the hail Replies and all the Members thereof ought to be repelled.

It is duplyed by Mr. John Nisbet; Where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, That the Diſpute againſt the Relevancy of the Qualification is ſuperfluous, becauſe the general Subſumption conform to the Act of Parliament is per ſe relevant: it is duplyed, That the General is not relevant, quia non oportet in Criminibus vagari, Leg. Libellorum, F. de Accuſationibus: Et Locus, & Tempus, & Minutia Delicti exprimenda ſunt; alioqui Accuſatio ipſo jure eſt nulla. Clarus, §. final. Quæſt. 12. num. 8.

Whereas it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, That the Dittay is not contrair to itſelf, becauſe of the acquainting his Majeſty by my Lord Rothes's means does not expiat and purge the concealing, my Lord Rothes not being one of theſe Perſons to whom the Delators of ſuch Pieces, and Authors thereof, is appointed by the Act of Parliament: it is duplyed, That theſe Perſons are only ſpecified for receiving of ſuch Delations in ſubſidium, where the Revealer knows not any other ſummar and ſecret way to acquaint his Majeſty; and not to tye them to an unneceſſary Circuit, where by a more compendious way his Majeſty may be acquainted, and the Authors ſuppreſt. And we repreſent the Inconvenient to enſue, if Parties by whoſe means his Majeſty has been acquainted with Pieces of that kind, ſhall be obnoxious to the Pains of the Act for not ſeeking a Bailly or Sheriff, to tell unto them that which by other and more direct means is ſhown to his Majeſty.

Whereas it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, That the Acts of Parliament require not a judicial Declarator of the nature of ſuch Pieces, nor the former Knowledge of the Party challenged, but without diſtinction puniſh the not Revealers and not Apprehenders of the Authors of Pieces materially ſeditious; Et ubi Lex non diſtinguit, nec nos diſtinguere debemus: it is duplyed, That Statutes being particular Concluſions of Law, preſuppone Principia univerſalia & prima, and imply intrinſecally the common Notions of Law and Reaſon. And therefore ſeeing in Reaſon there cannot be a Crime of concealing, unleſs the Piece or Author alledged to be concealed were either declared to be, or to the Pannel's knowledge were ſuch as he ought to reveal, becauſe celare is relative to knowledge; it is not relevantly ſub ſumed that Haig was Author of ane Piece materially ſcandalous, and that that the Pannel revealed him not, unleſs a former Knowledge were aſſumed likewiſe. And the Law it ſelf furniſheth a Ground for this Diſtinction, becauſe the Word Concealing importeth Knowledge: Et ſtatuta punientia delicta capitaliter non habent locum niſi dolo interveniente, etiam quod de dolo non fiat mentio. Paulus de Caſtro in Lege Nemo, num. 5. Codice de Epiſcopis & Clericis, Ubi perſtringit imperitiam judicum qui verbis ſtatutorum mordicus inherent, & multo magis cum dolus requiritur, vel expreſſe vel tacite, tunc enim nec lata culpa ſufficit, tacite autem requiritur dolus, cum ſtatutum utitur verbis, nullus audeat vel preſumat. Which are expreſly in the Act of the 10th Parliament; and muſt of neceſſity be conſidered to underſtand the Addition contained in the Act of the 14th Parliament; Idque multo magis in delictis quæ de ſua natura requirunt dolum prout eſt falſum injuria & ſimilia. Phar. Quæſt. 87. per totam. Whereas it is replied, Quod Judex debet procedere ſecundum naturam rei prohibitæ, and ſhould not leave place to elude the Law ſub velo opinionis; it is duplyed, That by all Statutes of that nature Crimes are only obviated and prohibited: And the Judge ſhould proceed to try whether Crimes be committed, or not, and not to condemn Eſcapes or Errors of Judgment, which are not arbitrary to the Will to ſhun, but depend upon the Diſpoſition of Organs, and Repreſentation of Fantaſms, which are exhibited ab intellectu agente, and neceſſitate intellectum patientem to ane Aſſent, where it is furniſhed with no probable Grounds to elide the ſame; as is known even to the Novices in Philoſophy by that trivial Maxim, Intellectus per aſſenſum premiſſarum convincitur ad aſſentiendum concluſioni, ſaltem quoad ſpecificationem. And where my Lord Advocat would expoſe the Weakneſs of the Pannel's Judgment in not diſcovering the nature of ſeditious Pieces, to inforce the Puniſhment of a Crime, it is duplyed, That the Law is not eluded by the ſlender Pretence of Opinion; but the Pannel's Conception of the Piece, verified by his Oath, and by all poſſible Preſumptions, which we have at length deduced, muſt liberat him from the Guilt and Pain of the Crime, ſeeing in Law carent animo injuriandi ex quo crimen conſiſtit, verified by the Oath of the Party; and any aſſiſting Preſumption imports abſolvitur, as is already ſhewn by the forecited Laws, and the Harmony of Doctors. And whereas it is replied, Quod ignorantia juris non excuſat in delictis atrocioribus; it is duplyed, That ignorantia juris being at the moſt lata culpa, æquiparatur dolo, & non excuſat in actionibus deſcendentibus ex contractu, vel quaſi, ſed excuſat in criminibus vel delictis, quia voluntas quæ maleficia diſtinguit ſpectatur, non veritas vel exitus. Leg. Divus Hadrianus, F. ad Legem Corneliam de Sicariis. Phar. Quæſt. 87. Ubi regulariter dolum requirit, & ubi abeſt dolus, pœnam aſſerit ceſſare, idque etiam in crimine Læſæ Majeſtatis, num. 10. & per totam. And the Atrocity of the Crime excludes not a probable Excuſe, Quia cauſa qualibet, etiam levitas, credulitas excuſat a dolo regulariter. Phar. Quæſt. 90. num. 1. Et non ſolum ſi ſit levis ſed colorata & irrationabilis imo etiam temeraria & beſtialis. Idem ibid. num. 3. Ubi refert doctores concordantes Claudius Battandiæ, Reg. Si fatua credulitas a dolo excuſat cum vehementibus preſumptionibus probatur, num. 1, & 2. Et cauſa levis excuſat in crimine injuriarum, & ad excuſandum ſufficit error verus vel preſumptus. Phar. dicta Quæſt. num. 29. Et levis cauſa excuſat etiam in crimine Læſæ Majeſtatis. Ibid. num. 26. Et multo magis in iis qui de ſua natura nec de jure civili reprobata ſunt: As is the Points of not apprehending and concealing. Ibi enim dolus non preſumitur, & ſi quis ſic egerit ſine dolo & animo delinquendi creditur agentis aſſertioni ex quo habet pro ſe juris preſumptionem. Num. 14. & num. 90. Et ignorantia juris excuſat a dolo. Num. 91. Et craſſa ſupina & affectata excuſat ex opinione. Baldi & Tiraquelli, quo citat Num. 99. Niſi ſint circa ea quæ ſint de jure naturali gentium & divina prohibita. Whereas it is replied, That the Pannel cannot pretend Ignorance in reſpect of the Piece conſpicuouſly infamous, and of the Pannel's Sufficiency and Qualifications, and in reſpect of the Perſon injured, being his ſacred Majeſty; and therefore excludes all Excuſe upon Curioſity, or any other reſpects, excuſable by the Law, and, at laſt, in reſpect of the Pannel's diſapproving of the Piece in his own Depoſitions: It is duplied, That the Piece is not nottourly infamous for the Reaſons adduced. And here we proteſt, That my Lord Advocat's odious decyphering of the Piece, neceſſitates us to vindicate not it ſelf, but the Conception that the Pannel had, and that any Man may have, that is not pre-occupied with the unnatural Gloſſes of the Dittay. And for the Pannel's Qualifications, it evinceth that he would not have delivered a Piece nottourly infamous to be preſented to his Majeſty, as is acknowledged by the Dittay, and ſo to have indangered his Honour and Life, if he had had any ſuch Conception of it. And for the Pannel's diſproving of the Piece, it convinceth not his ſiniſtrous Intention in uſing or having a Piece diſprovable, becauſe it is not deponed that he diſproved it as ſeditious or infamous, but quando verba confeſſionis ſunt dubia, poſſunt & debent declarari & interpretari per confitentem, & in meliorem partem. Phar. Quæſt. 81. num. 38. Et confeſſio dubia & incerta interpretatur in bonam partem in favorem confitentis, & ſecundum illius intentionem. Bald. in Leg. unica num. 23. Codice de Confeſſis. And the Pannel declares that he diſproved it not as ſeditious, but fit to be ſuppreſs'd, in reſpect of his Majeſty's Will expreſſed to my Lord Rothes anent Pieces of that Strain. Whereas it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That the Defect of the Common Law, in the Points of concealing and not apprehending, cannot be obtruded, and that there can be no Preſcription of Laws; yet there is Antiquation and Deſuetude, as we have before ſhewn: And the Defect of the Common Law is adduced as a probable Candour of the Deſuetude in Points deborder from the Common Law. Whereas it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That the nature of the Piece muſt rule, notwithſtanding of the Pannel's Conception thereof, becauſe it is only required that the Piece ſhould be really ſeditious; it is duplyed, That in matter of Crime the Intention and Conception is moſt conſiderable, as is already inculcat; and when there is a Queſtion anent the Credulity of the Party, his Credulity is probable by Oath, Barad. §. Recte Lege inter omnes, F. de furto; eſpecially where there concur ſome Preſumptions. Whereas it is replied, That ignorantia eſt inexcuſabilis neſcire quod omnes ſciunt; and that the Pannel's narrow Advertency and Canvaſſing of the Piece challenged, in reading, copying, adviſing, interlining, join'd with his Opinion anent the Preſentation thereof, excludes all Preſumptions of Ignorance: it is duplyed, That it cannot be ſaid quod omnes ſciunt, ſeeing my Lord Rothes, a Nobleman of eminent Quality and Sufficiency, made offer, at leaſt mention thereof, as a Supplication to his Majeſty, for the Pannel's Opinion. It is already anſwered for his perpending of the Piece; it is ſo far from aggravating or convincing his Knowledge of the Piece to be of that nature, that he is confident that indifferent and impartial Judgments, the more they advert vert to the Strain of it, they will be the more edified of the Nature of it, that it is not ſo nottourly injurious. And therefore the Pannel proteſts that his Procurators may vindicate his Conceptions of it, and remonſtrate the ſtrange Inferences that the Dittay makes of it. Where it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That apprehending is warranted and enjoined by the Acts of Parliament, and therefore not dangerous; it is duplied, That apprehending is warranted, when Parties are able, by lawful Probation, to bind upon the Perſons apprehended the Guilt of the Crime for which they delate and apprehend them. And that even in the Crime of Leſe Majeſty there is no Warrant to apprehend Parties, albeit known to the Apprehenders guilty of the Crime, unleſs they be able to qualify and prove the Guilt under the Pain of Τοιαυτοπαθία and Retaliation in caſe they ſuccumb. Where it is replied, That the moſt material Parts of the Dittay are founded upon the nature of the Piece it ſelf, and not upon the Pannel's Depoſitions; it is duplied, That howſoever there reſults a relevant Defence in Law upon the Pannel's Abſentia animi, which is probable by his Oath, aſſiſted with Preſumptions; and is admitted in the moſt ſtrict Inquiſitions, as is conſtant by the uniform and conſtant Harmony of all Criminaliſts. Whereas it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That there needs not a Declarator of the Judge to be drawn back; it is duplyed, That in all Countries where the concealing of Heretick Books is puniſhed, a judicial Declarator is neceſſarly required; and the private Opinion and Miſtaking of Parties before Declarator was never cenſured, much leſs puniſhed.

Whereas it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That the Maxim, Proniores debemus eſſe ad liberandum non habet locum in atrocioribus & delictis contra Principem; it is duplyed, That we retort this Anſwer, ubi lex non diſtinguit nec diſtinguere debemus. Et non delinquit qui in dubio contra fiſcum reſpondet, F. de jure fiſci; & turpe eſt & principi injurioſum credere inventum qui principem omnibus benefacientem, neminem ledentem, injuria velit efficere; & quavis excuſatio etiam leviſſima & maxime fatua in criminibis atrociſſimis admittitur.

It is added by Mr. Robert Macgill to the preceding Duplyes, That where my Lord Advocat replieth, that Juris ignorantia non excuſat; that the ſaid Rule may be underſtood in Jure, quod uſu invaluit: For even if in theſe petty Statutes anent the inflicting of pecunial Pains contained in the 9th Act, Parl. 21. 1612. a new Intimation of them is thought fitting to put the Leidges in mala fide before they be practiſed, what then in this Act, and ſome others, under the compaſs whereof ſundry here may fall, ſhall there not an Intimation be required where Life, Honour, and Lands, are in danger, and a capital Pain to be inflicted for to put the Leidges in mala fide? Item, Where it is replied, Quod nec ignorantia facti excuſat propter præſumptum dolum; it is anſwered, That the Pannel's Ignorantia facti is ab omni doli preſumptione aliena; who could never think that under the general Law, contained in the Addition, could come in all ſort of inordinate Speeches, and all ſort of Hearers, Concealers, and not Apprehenders. And for the excuſing of any Dole that can be preſumed, he adduces the Knowledge of Law and Reaſon, which ought to expone all municipal Laws, ut evitetur abſurdum; which is, that all ſorts of inordinate Speeches or Writs, even againſt a Prince, and all Concealers and not Apprehenders, ſhould be puniſhed alike: For the Prætor ſays, Si quis adverſus ea fecerit, prout quaque res erit animadvertam. Leg. item apud Labeonem 15. G. 251. 28. Ubi de pœnarum diſtinctione ex circumſtantiis juxta Legem aut facta 16. in principio, F. de pœnis, quam conſideratione affectus & animus facientis maximum habet momentum, Leg. illa 3. §. 1. dicta Leg. 15. §. 38. Lege ſi quis certum 26. in fine, F. de injuriis. So that my Lord Advocat's Reply anent Credulity, that it excuſes not, and that it is not a ſufficient Warrant ad juramentum purgativum, and that it ought not to be here received; the ſame ought to be repelled, becauſe Credulitas ſive juſta ſit Cauſa ſive injuſta excuſat ubi dolus requiritur, as in our Caſe. Clarus, §. finali, Quæſt. 60. num. 22. Et quod recipiatur juramentum purgativum concurrentibus aliis ad animi boni probationem indiciis conſtat per Phar. Quæſt. 105. Inſpect. 3. poſt num. 111. Leva vero judicia ſufficere, ait Alexander, Conc. 115. Columna penultima, Volumine quarto. Et a delicto etiam conventicula, & malæ congregationes, cauſam vel levem excuſare ait Cravetta, Conc. 4. num. 26. But ſo it is, there may be many good Reaſons alledged, wherefore the Pannel had a good Mind, as that all which is in this quarrelled Petition, might have been proponed in Parliament. And the reſt of the Reaſons adduced in my ſecond Exception, adeo ut dolus hic non ſit præſumendus againſt the Pannel; neither is the Argument good that the Pannel diſallowed it, or thought it not fit for a time, ergo he thought it ſeditious negatur ſequi. And becauſe my Lord Advocat, in all the Members almoſt of his Reply, returns upon this, That the Piece of it ſelf is really ſeditious; and that Obſcurity and Ambiguity of Words may receive Evaſion and Excuſe among Subjects, but not in the Caſe of the Pannel: I anſwer, That the Exception ſtands good, notwithſtanding of the Reply, in reſpect of the Examples and Caſes following. And, firſt, I confeſs that ſuch inordinate Speeches and Writings as were uttered betwixt Catiline and his Complices againſt a Government, and againſt a Prince's Progenitors, or his Perſon, in that ſort are puniſhable both in the Perſon of the Speaker and Penner, as alſo of the Hearer, not Revealer, and not Apprehender; wherein the Caſe of this Addition is verified: and no others are Hearers, not Revealers, and not Apprehenders. Clarus, §. ultima, Quæſt. 87. num. 2, & 3. But mark in a ſecond Caſe, Quod nobilis qui directis verbis & aſſertionibus dixit, ait, ſcripſit, principem ſuum non habere animum remunerandi; by Matheus, De Afflictis, deciſione 307. num. 27. is not thought puniſhable by the ordinary Judge: but remittendus, ut in Leg. unica, ſi quis principi maledixerit ubi tamen improperatur defectus liberalitatis, quæ eſt præcipua virtus in principibus; as our Saviour himſelf affirms, Luke Chap. 22. Ἐυεργέται, Bountiful. The third Caſe is of him who ſpake or writ that which by Interpretation might be miſconſtructed to ane evil Senſe, as was ſaid in the ſecond Part of my firſt Exception: And remits alſo to that Comment of Menochius, adduced by Mr. John Nisbet. And where my Lord Advocat would eſchew, by ſaying that Menochius had not ſuch a Law as we, and that we ought to be governed by our own Laws; remits to the end of my firſt Exception anent the Expoſition of all municipal Laws, according to Reaſon. Ubi Gaylus expones the Maxim, Ubi Lex non diſtinguit nec nos diſtinguere debemus, & ut vitetur abſurdum paritatis; our Laws may be ſo expounded. Ergo if the Authors of theſe laſt Speeches and Writings be ſcarcely puniſhed, far leſs ought the Hearers, not Revealers, and not Apprehenders; for even in Apprehenſion, quæ eſt captura oportet ut conſtet de criminis enormitate, which is not here.

It is triplyed by my Lord Advocat, That he finds no neceſſity to triply. But if the Juſtice, and his Lordſhip's Aſſeſſors, require any thing to be explained in that which is duplyed, upon ſignification of their Pleaſure, he ſhall be ready to exped all Doubts verbo, which he did.

The Juſtice-General continues this Dyet till to-morrow the 13th.

The ſaid 13th of December, 1634. the Juſtice continued the Dyet till the 16th of December, 1634.

Curia legitime affirmata, &c. and Procurators in Defence, as before.

Mr. Roger Mowat, as Procurator for the Pannel, repeats only the former Defences, and Duplies of them, anent the revealing by the Pannel to the Earl of Rothes of the Supplication or Petition contained in the Dittay, and the Earl of Rothes his offering thereof to the King's Majeſty; and that the Act of Parliament is ſatisfied thereby, which does not exclude the revealing to other Perſons nor are mentioned in the ſaid Act: But affirms poſitive all manner of revealing, whereby knowledge may come to his Majeſty, which is the End of the ſaid revealing, ſufficient, as ſaid is, in ane Act of this kind, which has never been in cuſtom. And ſo revealing being clear, as ſaid is, there needed no apprehending.

My Lord Advocat repeats his former Anſwers, That the revealing is not clear nor relevant; and albeit it were, that the not apprehending makes the Pannel guilty, and ſo to fall under the Puniſhment contained in the Act of Parliament libelled.

It is alledged by Mr. John Nisbet under Proteſtation, That the vindicating of the Libel challenged from the Gloſſes of the Dittay, ſhall not import any Approbation thereof, either by the Pannel or his Procurators; but in ſo far as they are neceſſitat, by my Lord Advocat's Replies, to vindicat the Pannel's Innocency in the hearing, or any other Acceſſion to the ſaid Libel challenged. It is firſt replyed by my Lord Advocat in his Replies, bearing that the Nature of the Piece is ſo notoriouſly infamous, that at the firſt view it is apparent to the moſt ſhallow and ordinary Underſtanding, to be injurious to his Majeſty in all the Points libelled: It is duplyed thereto, That the Points of the alledged Libel import no Reproach to his Majeſty's Perſon, Eſtate, or Government, in the Pannel's Conception, for theſe Reaſons: Firſt, That Point anent Geſture is not reproachful, becauſe ſubjecta ſunt talia qualia prædicata demonſtrant, Bartolin. Primario Leg. 3. F. de Inſtructo vel Inſtrumento Legato. And there is no injurious Attribute enumerat, to defame his Majeſty's Geſture; but it is only affirmed, that his Majeſty's Notes bred a Fear, which is ane Attribute of Cauſality, and not of Quality. Secondly, The Intention of his Majeſty's Noting could not be conceived by the Pannel to be ane taxing of his Majeſty of any Point of Indiſcretion or Injuſtice, unleſs the Act of Noting had been qualified in the alledged Libel to be unjuſt or indiſcreet; which were ſacrilegious to think of a Prince eſtranged from his Country, and from the Occaſions of Knowledge and Knowing of his Subjects: for he may in Juſtice and Wiſdom remark the Opinions of the Lords of Parliament, and thereby probably to found a Conjecture of their Inclinations to his Majeſty's Service. Thirdly, The alledging the Noting of the Names of the Diſ-aſſenters could not at the firſt be conceived to imply an officious prying into the Geſture of the Prince, but rather a loyal Fear of incurring the King's Diſpleaſure; taking hold of a ſimple Geſture, whereby his Majeſty might have ſeemed to have taken notice of their Untowardneſs to his Majeſty's Service. Fourthly, There is no ground of Reproach inferred upon his Geſture, as the Dittay bears. It is duplyed to that Point anent his Majeſty's Refuſal to hear the Reaſons of ſome Diſ-aſſenters, That the firſt part of the Anſwer to the former Point quadrats here. Secondly, The alledged Refuſal of his Majeſty to hear the Reaſons of the Diſ-aſſenters, cannot be ſo readily conceived to rub matter of Reproach upon his Majeſty's Sacred Perſon or Proceedings; but in the contrair argues his Majeſty's Royal Goodneſs in not accepting the ſcrupulous prepoſterous Anticipations of Reaſons before voting in Parliament, as being derogatory from the antient and hereditary Liberty of Noblemens Votes, and from his Majeſty's Royal Bounty, ready to acquieſce in the free Opinion of his Eſtates; and far from a previous and partial eſpouſing of either part of any debatable Point, before the final Deciſion in Parliament. And as for the Inference of Fear to become obnoxious to his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, it is not ane Inference of ane Reproach, but rather of a dutiful Love, which debords (runs out) oft-times into a needleſs Fear.

It is anſwered to that Point of the Dittay challenging that Paſſage, viz. That the oppoſing of Reſolutions carried by Plurality of Votes, was never cenſured by a Prince of ſo much Juſtice, contains no Subject of Reproach; but on the contrair, ane ample and due Acknowledgment of his Majeſty's undoubted Goodneſs and Juſtice, uſed as an Argument to deprecat his Majeſty's Cenſure, as incompatible with his Majeſty's Goodneſs, and the Example of other Princes like to his Majeſty.

It is anſwered to that Point of the Dittay bearing that his Majeſty's Honour is undermined by the affirming a general Fear of Innovation in eſſential Points of Religion, That his Majeſty's Honour is not ſtained, becauſe there is nothing affirmed to have been done by his Majeſty, which might occaſion any ſuch Fear; and the Panick and groundleſs Fear of Subjects, reflects no Reproach upon a blameleſs Prince. Secondly, It is affirmed that there is Fear of Novation intended, but not by his Majeſty, as is clear by the Motives of that Fear adduced by the Supplicants, viz. That there is Allowance of printing Arminian Books; which is not poſitively affirmed, but upon report, and the Impunity of Arminian Preaching, which reflects upon Churchmen only, to whom it is incumbent to advert to the Printing and Preaching of Orthodox Tenents. And therefore albeit it were falſe, cannot fall under the compaſs of the Acts of Parliament, as ſeditious and reproachful to his Majeſty, his Eſtate, Perſon, and Proceedings.

It is anſwered to the Point of Admiſſion of Papiſts upon the Parliament and Articles, That in the Pannel's Conception it reflects not againſt his Majeſty, and therefore is not relevant to infer the Crime of ſeditious Libelling, or Acceſſion thereto. Item, It is anſwered to that Point of the Dittay, bearing the King's Majeſty's Proceedings to be miſconſtructed in the alledged Prohibition of the Gentry to meet, That his Majeſty's Royal Procedure is not taxed as unjuſt; but without dyving upon upon the words of Juſtice or Injuſtice of the Interruption of thoſe Meetings, it is only inſinuat, that albeit in Parliament they might have objected againſt the Interruption of thoſe Meetings, and had occaſion to oppoſe his Majeſty's Will, as they thought, that theſe Meetings ſhould be interrupted, they contented themſelves and were not refractory. And herein, and in the hail Strain of the following Points, (in the Pannel's Conception) it is only an Endeavour to ſhew that the diſ-aſſenting from ſome Acts, was not from any Faction and Waywardneſs to oppoſe his Majeſty's Will, as they feared he might have been poſſeſſed with; ſeeing in other Points, wherein they had occaſion, and probable grounds in their opinion to oppoſe it, they were ſilent. Moreover, it is anſwered for this Point, and all others following, Quod in cauſa criminali quando verba poſſint interpretari ad bonum vel malum, in dubio debent intelligi ad bonum, & excludetur præſumptio delicti. Cravetta, Concil. 9. num. 21. Et ſecundum ſubjectam materiam, Leg. Protullus, F. de Uſufructu: Et quando verba dubia ſunt, non debent intelligi captioſe in damnum proferentis, ſed ſecundum ipſius mentem; & convenit animadvertere, qua mente quid dicatur, & multo magis quid concipiatur. Leg. penult. F. ad exhibendum. Et quando verba ſunt dubia, ut videntur injurioſa, vel non, ſtandum eſt declarationi ejus qui ea dixit vel ſcripſit. Menoch. Concil. 197. lib. 12. Multo magis ejus qui imprudens & bona fide iis uſus eſt. Et quando verba ſunt dubia, declaratio ſumitur a verbis præcedentibus vel ſubſequentibus, vel utriſque. Menoch. Concil. citat. num. 7. And therefore if the Strain of the Words, the Nature of the Subject being a Supplication, the Declaration of the Pannel's Conception of them, and other enſuing words which declared them, be adverted unto; it will be found the Pannel is excuſable, if in this Conception they import no Reproach to his Majeſty: for the hail laſt part of the Supplication reſolves in an Enunciation de poſſibili præterito. We might have repreſented quo verificatur ratione præſentis; and therefore if at the time of the Parliament they had Power to repreſent theſe things, the Enunciation of that Power cannot import Calumny or Reproach to his Majeſty. And ſeeing the actual Repreſentation of theſe things could have imported no Injury to his Majeſty, quia ubi licentia loquendi niſi in dando Conſilio & Senatu? Menoch. Concil. 107. num. 2. far leſs could the affirming of their Forbearance from ane Act not injurious in itſelf, have been conceived or interpreted to be reproachful to his Majeſty. And whereas it is libelled, that the Prohibition of the Nobility and Gentry to meet amongſt themſelves, or with the Lords of the Articles, is falſe; non relevat, becauſe it is not poſitively affirmed that they were prohibit, but only that they might have repreſented the Prohibition of theſe Meetings. For the Verity of the which Enunciation, and the Defence of it from being reproachful, the Power of repreſenting is ſufficient with any probable ground to believe that theſe Meetings were prohibit, whether upon Surmiſes, or upon any other occaſion. And laſtly, it is declared afterwards, that they forbear to make uſe of theſe Reaſons, which they might have probably repreſented, to give his Majeſty full Content in every thing that in their opinion maketh not a Breach in our Religion or Laws; whereby the Juſtneſs and Lawfulneſs of all they conſented to or forbore to oppoſe, is clearly acknowledged: And that it appeared to the Pannel, and may appear to any, that they might have oppoſed the King's Procedure. 'Tis not to traduce it as unjuſt in Points which they both by their Silence acquieſced unto, and expreſly acknowledge that they import no Breach in our Religion and Laws, but to ſhow how probably they might have oppoſed divers Points thereof, if they had been poſſeſſed with a ſeditious Spirit of Oppoſition, and thereby carried to diſ-aſſent from other Acts, as they feared his Majeſty might have been moved to believe.

It is anſwered to the Point of ſlighting the Grievances of the Country, That his Majeſty's Proceeding is not taxed, becauſe it is not ſaid that they were proponed in Parliament, and rejected or ſlighted; but only whereas in the Convention of the Eſtates the Perſon chiefly intruſted by his Majeſty undertook to acquaint his Majeſty therewith, and to procure Redreſs, nevertheleſs no notice was taken thereof, and they were ſlighted not by his Majeſty, but by thoſe who undertook to acquaint his Majeſty, and therefore reflects only upon them.

It is anſwered to that Point of the Dittay bearing the ignorant and falſe Affirmations, that before the 1609 Year of God, the Noblemen made choice of ſome of their Rank to be on the Articles, the Supplicants Ignorance, in the Pannel's Conception, lays no Aſperſion upon his Majeſty or his Proceedings.

It is anſwered to that Point of the Dittay, bearing the taxing of the undutiful Choice made by the Biſhops, of Noblemen inſufficient, or unexperimented, to be upon the Articles, That it is not injurious in the Pannel's Conception to his Majeſty, in his Perſon, Eſtate, or Government. Secondly, Repeats the general Anſwer, that it is not poſitively affirmed of the Biſhops, that they did undutifully, or that the Noblemen elected upon the Articles were Popiſh or Ignorant; but that they had probable grounds in their opinion to think ſo, and to repreſent.

It is anſwered to the Point of reproaching of his Majeſty for the Acceptance of the Taxations, That in the Pannel's Conception his Majeſty is not challenged upon his Speeches in Parliament, nor upon the Narrative of his Proclamations, nor by the Antitheſis of King James I. his Practice: But his Majeſty's Speeches in Parliament, his Proclamations, King James I. his Practice, and the Parallel of the Eſtate of the Country, and the End of Taxations under either King, and his Majeſty's Father of worthy Memory, is adduced in the Pannel's Conception as ſpecious Reaſons wherewith they might have oppoſed the granting of the Taxations, if they had had ane diſloyal Intention to mar his Majeſty's Ways and Benefits.

It is anſwered to the Point of challenging of his Majeſty for Employment of his Taxations, and for his Liberality in rewarding his Officers, That in the Pannel's Conception it is not ſpoken poſitively and by way of Reproach, as the former Points, ſhewing how far the Diſ-aſſenters were from Averſeneſs or Tepidneſs in his Majeſty's Service; ſeeing without expatiating on the common Head uſual on ſuch occaſions, againſt the granting Taxations without inquiring of the Reaſons and Cauſes of granting the Taxations; without repreſenting the Inconvenience to enſue, they all unanimouſly favoured his Majeſty's Benefit.

It is added by Mr. Robert Macgill, That the Remedies apply'd to a Diſeaſe, muſt be thought both by the Phyſician, and the Patient or ſick Man, meeteſt and moſt fitting for the curing of the Diſeaſe. But ſo it is, that the Pannel and Supplicants were ſick of a Diſeaſe; and therefore they in curing curing by the Remedies as were thought fitteſt and moſt helpful by them, contained in the Supplication, muſt be thought therein to have had a good Mind, and that they thought and uſed the Remedies according to the nature of the Diſeaſe, as being moſt fit. Their Diſeaſe was Fear of Diſpleaſure from his Majeſty; for we muſt not think according to the Stoicks, That only vires animi quas phantaſias Philoſophi appellant, quibus mens hominis prima ſtatim ſpecie rei ad animum accedentis pellitur, non voluntatis ſint, neque arbitrii: But that alſo aſſentiri & co-opinari incidunt in virum ſapientem. But ſo it is, that this Diſeaſe was filial, erga Patrem Patriæ. And like Bairnes who are dung (i. e. Children that are beat) go back again to their Father, ſo the Pannel and other Supplicants having by chance looked upon the Piece quarrelled, did think it a very good Remedy to appeaſe his moſt Sacred Majeſty, their Father. As it is reported of the Spear of Achilles, that he who wounded them with Fear, might cure the ſame Wound, in ſhewing that they might have repreſented Grievances, which are Diſeaſes, to the only Phyſician. And in our Acts of Parliament, Declamations are forbidden ad Plebem: ſo it muſt be thought of Writings alſo, in the Conception of the Pannel, quæ per Plebem diſtribuuntur atque ita divulgantur, which is not in our Caſe; ergo, &c.

It is anſwered by his Majeſty's Advocat, That all ought to be repelled, in reſpect of the Dittay, and of the particular Points of Reproaches, which not ſo meikle (much) as by the Conception or Meaning of the Pannel can be juſtified. And all which is opponed, is either againſt the Relevancy of the Dittay, which is remitted to the Juſtice; or againſt the Verification thereof, which is proper to the Aſſyze. And if the Juſtice and Aſſeſſors deſire a more ſpecial Anſwer to be made to the Particulars, the King's Advocat offer'd to clear the ſamen by word in hearing of Parties.

It is laſt alledged by Mr. Roger Mowat for the Pannel, That that part of the Dittay anent the Pannel's alledged divulging and diſperſing of the ſaid alledged Libel, is not relevant to infer the Crime and Puniſhment concluded in the ſaid Dittay; becauſe divulging and diſperſing are not contained in the Acts of Parliament whereupon the Dittay is libelled, and ſo cannot be the Ground and Warrand thereof. Secondly, In ſo far as the Dittay bears, that the ſaid Libel was divulged by giving the ſaid Copy to Dunmure; giving, and not granting, that divulging is warranted by the ſaid Acts, or can be ſuſtained as a Warrand againſt the Pannel to infer the ſaid Crime and Pain, that cannot be called divulging, becauſe Dunmure's own Depoſitions bear not, that he received the ſaid Libel from the Pannel to copy or divulge, but that he took it up only to read upon very ſtrict Conditions; which being the true manner of his Receipt thereof from the Pannel, cannot be called properly divulging: becauſe to divulge, properly is to affix in loco publico, as Mr. Thomas Roſs did, whom my Lord Advocat cited; who affixed his ſeditious Paſquils, and Invectives againſt his Nation, whereof he was the confeſſed Author, upon the publick parts and places of the Town and Univerſity of Oxford. Or to divulge is to tyne, (drop) and caſt down Papers in Kirks, Tolbooths, or High-Streets, as did Francis Tennant, likewiſe cited by my Lord Advocat; who left and of purpoſe tynt (dropt) his infamous Miſſives in the Kirks. And it is univerſally maintained, that the delivering of a Libel or Writing to one only, cannot infer divulging; albeit it is not granted that the Pannel delivered the ſaid Writ to Dunmure.

To that part of the ſaid Dittay bearing that the ſaid Libel was divulged by delivering thereof to the Earl of Rothes; it is anſwered, That that was not divulging, becauſe it is confeſſed in the ſaid Dittay, that it was delivered to the Earl of Rothes to have been preſented to his Sacred Majeſty: And it is contended, as before, That that which is affirmed in the ſaid Dittay to be divulging, is more properly to be called revealing, as indeed it was. So that it is retorted, to free the Pannel not only of divulging, but of all Crime for hearing or not apprehending; becauſe if the Pannel delivered it, as the Dittay bears, to have been preſented to his Sacred Majeſty, ergo not as infamous, reproachful, or ſcandalous: which muſt be preſumed by all manner of Preſumptions in favour of the Pannel, that he did not conſent to the preſenting thereof to his Highneſs, as being in his leaſt Thought or Imagination ſcandalous, or otherwiſe as the Dittay bears; but only to have been revealed to his Sacred Majeſty as a Piece which he and the other Supplicants did think and conceive might have been graciouſly accepted, as others of that kind had formerly been received by his gracious Majeſty.

To that part of the Dittay bearing the copying thereof by Mr. Robert Dalgleiſh, the Pannel's Servant; it is anſwered, Quod non relevat to infer divulging, becauſe the ſaid Mr. Robert his Depoſition bears, that he did only deliver the Copy to my Lord his Maſter, and did no farder. Neither depones he, that my Lord did any farder but took the Copy from him; which in no ſenſe can be properly called divulging, for the Reaſons before adduced.

To that part of the ſaid Dittay bearing Mr. John Dunmure's keeping the ſaid Copy in his hands, by the ſpace and in manner libelled; it is anſwered, Non relevat, becauſe it is not, ut ſupra, that the Pannel gave him the Copy, but that he took it, as the Depoſition bears. And what he did thereafter, without any Warrand, Command, or Allowance of the Pannel, cannot be laid to the Pannel's charge, but to his own; ſeeing the manner of his receiving and divulging thereof, is nottourly known to have been againſt his Promiſe, or without the Knowledge or Conſent of the Pannel, by abuſing his Truſt given to him by the Pannel, tho innocently, who was free of all his ſubſequent Proceedings. And there being no Fraud or Malice in that point upon the Pannel's part, who was wronged by Dunmure, tho innocently; that cannot be called the Pannel's divulging: for who lives, and may not be deceived and abuſed in that manner as he was, tho innocently, on Dunmure's part?

To that part of the Dittay anent Mr. John Dunmure his Anſwer to the Earl of Traquair; it is anſwered, That the ſame cannot be reſpected as relevant to infer divulging, becauſe the Pannel's Depoſition bears that he gave no Warrand nor Direction to Dunmure to return anſwer to the ſaid Earl: but that in diſcourſe with Dunmure, the Pannel anſwered not thoſe words, That as honeſt Men would put their faces thereto (i. e. juſtify it) as the Pannel himſelf; but the Pannel's Anſwer only was in theſe words, That as honeſt Men as the Pannel himſelf knew of it: meaning of the Earl of Rothes and other Supplicants, who had intended to cauſe make offer of the ſame to his Royal Majeſty, and accordingly did make offer thereof by the ſaid Earl of Rothes.

And to that part of the ſaid Dittay, concluding that the ſaid Pannel being a Nobleman of good Learning and Underſtanding, ſhould have revealed, ſhould have not concealed, ſhould have apprehended the Author; it is alledged, Non relevat, ut ſupra, and Abſolvitur ought to be granted from that Concluſion, for the Reaſons mentioned before in the Defences and Duplies made for the Pannel, who ſtill contends that as he never did conceive or underſtand the ſaid Supplication, as the Dittay inforces and bears the ſame upon him; ſo his own Commentary and Declaration anent his Meaning and Senſe thereof, ought only to be received, to free and vindicat him from the Crime and Pains libelled. In reſpect whereof, the ſaid Dittay anent the Point of divulging can no ways be reſpected as relevant, but Abſolvitur ought to be granted to the Pannel therefrom.

It is added by Mr. Alexander Pearſon to this laſt and fifth Exception, That the Point of Dittay anent divulging is not relevant, and cannot infer the Pains concluded by the Dittay, becauſe the ſaid Point of Dittay is not founded upon any Act of Parliament mentioned in the Propoſition thereof, but only upon the Civil Law, which the Leidges cannot nor are obliged to know in all the Sanctions thereof; ſpecially ſeeing by divers Acts of Parliament, to wit, King James I. Parl. 3. cap. 48. King James IV. Parl. 6. cap. 79. by the which it is ſtatute, That all the King's Leidges live and be governed under the King's Laws and Statutes of the Realm only, and not by any Laws of other Countries: And therefore cannot infer the Pains concluded by the Dittay.

Farder, The Pannel ought to be aſſoilzed from that Point of the Dittay of divulging, becauſe the Pannel is not nor cannot be counted formally Divulger of the alledged infamous Libel; he not having Knowledge or Opinion of the Writ quarrelled, that it was infamous: but having juſt and probable Cauſe to think of it otherwiſe, ut ſupra. And as Credulity by the Civil Law defends in Theft, ſo by the like reaſon it ought to defend the Pannel here, anent divulging, as is confirmed in the fourth Exception proponed for the Pannel, which I here repeat, and which Defence is moſt relevant by the Civil Law, whereupon only this Point of Dittay is urged, and therefore ſhould elide the ſame.

Item, Farder, The Civil Law does not make any to be Divulger of an infamous Libel, but After-Knowledge of the ſame to be infamous; which is clear by the Ordinance of the Law ſet down in Lege Unica, Codice de famoſis Libellis, which commands the Finder of ane infamous Libel preſently to deſtroy it; which the Finder cannot do, but after Knowledge of the Writ to be ſuch. And 'tis alſo clear by the Prohibition of the ſaid Law, bearing, Si vim earum manifeſtaverit; which requires divulging of an infamous Libel, in the form and ſtrength thereof. In reſpect whereof, the Pannel ought to be aſſoilzed from that Point of divulging.

It is added by Mr. John Nisbet, That divulging is not relevantly qualified in Law, by the imparting of the alledged Libel to my Lord Rothes and to Mr. John Dunmure; becauſe it was imparted to neither of them in quality of an infamous Libel, but to my Lord Rothes in the contrair quality of ane Supplication, to be preſented by him to his Majeſty, as is acknowledged in the Dittay; and to Mr. John Dunmure as a Confident of the Pannel's, under Promiſes of Secrecy: which Procedure and Qualities of imparting are far from the nature of divulging; for the word itſelf implieth a publick Diſperſion, and the expreſs Law requireth manifeſtationem publicam & doloſam publicationem; Canone qui in alterius, Cauſa 5. Quæſt. 1. Doloſum. Canone 4. eadem Cauſa & eadem Quæſt. Et Libellus famoſus dicitur Paſquillus, quod in Urbe Roma ad truncam Paſquini cujuſdam ſtatuam affigi ſolet. Harprechtus in Tractatu Criminali, §. Injuria. Sectione de famoſo Libello, Et qui Libellum famoſum ab alio acceptum viciſſim alii, & uni tantum ſecreto tradidit, Libelli famoſi pœna non eſt plectendus, quia ex traditione ſecreto facta non obſcure colligitur animus non diffamandi; & quia Libellum famoſum non dicitur publicaſſe, niſi qui cum pluribus impertitus eſt. Harprechtus, ibidem.

It is added by Mr. Robert Macgill, That the divulging qualified in the Dittay is not relevant according to the Civil Law, where a Publication and Out-ſetting is required: Pharm. Quæſt. 105. Inſpect. 11. num. 485, 487. And the reaſon is, quod Convicium dicatur quaſi Convolium, Leg. Item, apud Labionem 15. §. 4. F. de Injuriis, ubi §. ſequenti ait dici vociferationem in unum collatum: additis §. 8, & 11, & 12. Quod oportet in Cœtu dici, & cum vociferatione vulgare, etiam Nænio Marcello eſt in vulgus dare, & quaſi multis audientibus ac non taciturnus dicere. Then ei diſperſionem & diviſionem ſuperaddunt, ut ſit in plurium manus ſparſio ab una eademque facta, & maxime ſi in Plebem diſtributio fiat, unde ſævitque animis ignobile Vulgus. Quippe, ut Cicero pro Plancio, non eſt conſilium in vulgo, non ratio, non diſcrimen, non diligentia. And even in that Title of the ninth Book of the Cod. de Seditioſis, it is added, Et his, qui Plebem contra Rempublicam audent colligere. And ſo have I ſaid not long ſince, that theſe private Writings, and the diſperſing of them, muſt be underſtood in our Acts of Parliament, as the Declamations therein mentioned, that is, to the meaneſt and commoneſt ſort; and that to ten at leaſt, quia non dicitur notorium niſi per decem ſaltem tranſeat; Boerius Tractatu de Seditioſis, Præmiſſ. 7. quippe quod populus dici non poſſe, niſi ſint decem: Ibidem Præmiſſ. 3. And remits here what I have ſaid de Seditioſis, in the end of my ſecond Exception. But ſo it is, that the communicating of the Piece quarrelled to Mr. John Dunmure, in that mean ſort as is contained in the Depoſition, and conſequently in the Dittay, cannot be thought a divulging in manner above expreſſed; ergo the Pannel ought to be aſſoilzed from that part of the Dittay.

It is anſwered by my Lord Advocat, That the Alleadgance ought to be repelled, in reſpect of the Dittay, which in this part anent divulging is founded upon the Common Law, Leg. Unica de famoſis Libellis. And which Common Law, in the caſe where we have no particular Law nor Statute of our own, is obligatory againſt the Leidges. And the Acts of Parliament cited by the Defenders, That the Leidges ſhall be ruled by the Laws of the Kingdom allenarly, (only) and not by the Laws of other Kingdoms, excludes only the particular Laws of particular Kingdoms; but excludes not neither the Laws of God, neither the Laws of Nature, neither the Laws of Nations, nor the Common Law: Otherwiſe, odious Crimes againſt which there are no Municipal Laws, as Sodomia, Plagium, privati Carceres, &c. ſhould be unpuniſhable.

ble. And as to the Exception proponed againſt the Relevancy, and the Alleadgance of the Civil Law anent divulging uni; oppones the Dittay, bearing the divulging thereof to three particular Perſons in manner therein libelled.

It is duplied by the Pannel and his Procurators, That the Point of divulging being founded only upon the Civil Law, if it were ſuſtained, is only relevant to infer the Pain of the Civil Law, which is not capital, Niſi cum libellus famoſus continet delicta capitalia in alium imperperata. Secus in eo improperetur delictum non capitale, aut alia quævis Culpa. Gloſſa in Leg. unica. Codice de famoſo libello, in verb. ſi quis famoſum. Phar. Quæſt. 105. num. 11. And of the Canon Law, which has ever had more Force with us: Pœna etiam atrociſſimi Libelli eſt tantum flagellatio. Canone, Qui in alterius, Cauſa 5. Quæſt. 1.

It is farder duplyed by Mr. Roger Mowat, to that Part of my Lord Advocat's Reply, bearing, That the Alleadgance made againſt divulging ought to be repelled, in reſpect of the Dittay, bearing the divulging by the Pannel to three ſeveral Perſons: It is duplyed thereto, That the ſaid Reply ought to be repelled, in reſpect of the ſaid Alleadgance proponed againſt the ſaid Member of divulging, and hail Qualifications thereof, to the ſaids three Perſons; whereunto there is no Anſwer given by my Lord Advocat. And therefore remits the ſaid Alleadgance, and hail Members of it, as yet unanſwered, to be conſidered by the Judge as moſt relevant in it ſelf. In reſpect whereof, the ſaid Alleadgance, and hail Members thereof, ſtands relevant, notwithſtanding of the Reply.

It is triplyed by my Lord Advocat, That the Pain by the Common Law is capital; and the Quotation by Mr. John Nisbet is a Gloſs without Warrant. And albeit ſome reſpect might be had to an infamous Libel againſt a Subject, yet none in that which concerns our Sovereign, tending to the Diſturbance of the Eſtate and publick Peace.

It is quadruplied by Mr. John Nisbet, That we oppone the Gloſſes aforeſaids acknowledged and followed by all the Doctors, and founded upon the Equity of Retaliation; and oppone likewiſe the foreſaid Citations out of the Canon Law it ſelf, and the hail Title of the Canon Law de Maledictis, where Detractors of the Pope himſelf are only obnoxious to the Pain of Flagellation.

The Juſtices continues till to-morrow the 17*th Inſtant.*

Curia legitime affirmata, the ſaid 17th of December, 1634, &c.

My Lord Advocat, after ſome Speech delivered by the Pannel's Procurators, verbo declared to my Lord Juſtice-General, That what was ſpoken was only a ſummary Recapitulation of that which is at length ſet down by the Pannel's Procurators in their Defences; and offered to his Lordſhip, if it were his Lordſhip's Pleaſure that he, as Purſuer, ſhould clear by his Anſwer verbo; and otherwiſe, that my Lord Juſtice, with Conſent of his Aſſeſſors, would cloſe (put an end to) all farder Writing, and declare that no more ſhould be added, but that Interloquitor may be pronounced of that which is proponed and written already. To the which my Lord Juſtice made Anſwer, That there was no Neceſſity to anſwer farder than is ſaid and written already.

It was thereafter humbly craved by the Pannel and his Procurators, That if any thing ſhould occur to be demanded whereupon he deſired to be heard before Interloquitor, that my Lord Juſtice would be pleaſed to hear him, he proponing the ſame verbo in his Lordſhip's Audience.

My Lord Juſtice-General, with Advice of his Lordſhip's Aſſeſſors, declares that all farder Writing in this Matter ſhall ceaſe before the Dittay be found relevant, and referred by Interloquitor to an Aſſize; and continues Interloquitor upon the Exceptions proponed in this Proceſs, and Anſwers made thereto, till Friday next, the 19th of December inſtant.

The ſaid 19*th of* December it was continued till the next Day, the 20*th.*

The ſaid 20*th of* December, 1634, Curia legitime affirmata, &c. Pannel and Procurators as above.

My Lord Juſtice-General and his Lordſhip's Aſſeſſors having read and conſidered the Dittay, hail Exceptions, Replies, Duplyes, with all that is proponed for the Pannel by his Procurators in this Proceſs, and my Lord Advocat's Anſwers made thereto; by Interloquitor repel the firſt Exception proponed by the Pannel and his Procurators againſt the Relevancy of the Dittay, in reſpect of the Acts of Parliament ſtanding unrepealed. Repel the ſecond Exception in reſpect of the Dittay, and Acts of Parliament whereupon the ſame is founded. Repel the third Exception in reſpect of the Dittay, and that there may be more Authors than one; and likewiſe ſuſtain theſe Words of the Dittay, That the Pannel is Adviſer, Deviſer, and Conſulter, in reſpect they all ſignify one thing with Airt and Part. And as to the Qualification of the Interlining, ſet down therein, remit the ſame to the Aſſize, as proper to be cognoſced by them, with the hail remanent Qualifications and Preſumptions contained in the ſaid Dittay, to be proven to the ſaid Aſſize. Repel the fourth Exception in reſpect of the Dittay, and ſcandalous and reproachful Libel mentioned therein; which my Lord Juſtice, with Advice of his Lordſhip's Aſſeſſors, find to be of that nature, notwithſtanding of any thing propounded in the contrair in the Pannel's favour. As to the laſt Exception, repel the ſamen, and ſuſtain that Point of the Dittay annent the divulging of the infamous Libel, to be tryed and proven conjunctim with any one of the reſt of the Articles of the ſaid Dittay found relevant, as ſaid is, to infer the Puniſhment preſcribed by the Act of Parliament; and declare, That if it ſhall be only proven per ſe, to be puniſhed per pœnam arbitrariam. And in reſpect of the former Interloquitor, ordain the Dittay to paſs to the Tryal of an Aſſize. And for that effect, continues this Matter to the 11th Day of February next to come; and ordain the Pannel to be returned to his Ward within the Caſtle of Edinburgh.

Curia legitime affirmata, the ſaid 11th of February, 1635.

The Juſtice Deputs (being Alexander Colvil of Blair, and Mr. James Robertoun, Advocat) foreſaids, with Advice of the Aſſeſſors, before mentioned, continue this Dyet, anent the Tryal of the ſaid John Lord Balmerino, for the Crime ſpecified in his Dittay, to the 11th of March next to come. The Perſons of Aſſize are warned, &c.

The ſaid 11th of March, it is continued till the 18th of March, 1635. And the ſaid 18th Day, in reſpect of the Abſence of Mr. Roger Mowat, the Pannel's principal Procurator, by reaſon of Sickneſs and the Gout, the Juſtice continued the Dyet till the 20th of March thereafter, 1635.

The ſaid 20th of March, 1635. Pannel and Procurators as before.

The Names of the Perſons of Aſſize (Jury).

James Earl of Murray.
John Earl of Lauderdale.
John Earl of Traquair.
George Lord Forreſter of Corſtorphine.
James Lord Johnſtoun.
Sir Alexander Strachan of Thorntoun, Knt.
Sir Robert Grier of Lagg.
Sir John Charters of Amisfield.
Sir Alexander Nisbet of Weſtnisbet, Knt.
Sir Patrick Agnew of Lochnair, Knt.
Sir James Baillie of Lochend.
John Gordon of Buskie.

It is alledged by the Pannel and his Procurators, That the Earl Mareſchal cannot be admitted upon the Aſſize, becauſe he has received Information and particular Inſtruction of the Pannel's Guiltineſs of the Crimes given up in the Dittay, and particular Direction what to do in caſe he paſs upon the Aſſize; which they refer to the Nobleman's own Oath and Declaration: who being ſworn, declared that he received no ſuch Inſtruction or Information of any Perſon. Whereupon, being purged of partial Counſel, the Juſtice admits him upon the Aſſize.

It is alledged againſt the Earl of Dumfreis, that he cannot be received upon the Aſſize, becauſe he has given out his prejudged Opinion againſt the Pannel, affirming, before any Probation led, that the Pannel is guilty of the Dittay; which the Pannel referred to his Lordſhip's Oath, alledging that in Law a Declinator is only to be proven againſt ane Aſſizer by his Oath: And farder affirms, that the ſaid William Earl of Dumfreis has been ſollicited and dealt with by Prayer to find the Pannel guilty of the Dittay. Which being referred to the ſaid Earl his Oath, he denied any ſuch Matter, that he either gave out Speeches of the Pannel's Guiltineſs, or that he was ſollicited or dealt with by Prayer, or otherwiſe; the Juſtice admits him, in reſpect of his Declaration.

It is alledged againſt my Lord Blantyre, that he cannot be upon his Aſſize, becauſe he has publickly reported to ſundry, that the Pannel to his Judgment is guilty of the Dittay, and cannot be cleared thereof; which they refer to his Lordſhip's Oath: who being ſworn, declared that he could not deny that he had ſpoken ſuch Speeches. Whereupon he was repelled, and ordained to ſtand aſide.

It is alledged by the Pannel and his Procurators againſt my Lord Johnſtoun, the Laird of Lag, the Laird of Amisfield, the Laird of Thorntoun, the Laird of Weſtnisbet, that they cannot be received upon the Aſſize, becauſe they have all been ſollicited by Prayer and Requeſt to find the Pannel guilty; and that the Lord Johnſtoun has declared to ſundry, that if he were on his Aſſize, he could not but find him to be guilty: likewiſe, affirmed by Thorntoune, that as the Dittay is founded upon the Acts of Parliament, the Pannel muſt be guilty, and none can acquit him thereof; and that Weſtnisbet had affirmed in publick Conference, by his bewrayed Opinion, that he would file (convict) the Pannel, and do his Endeavour cauſe others file him of the Dittay. Whereupon the forenamed Perſons having by their Oaths denied the Premiſſes, the Juſtice thereupon having purged them of partial Counſel, admits them upon the Aſſize. Whereupon my Lord Advocat asked Inſtruments. Likewiſe admits my Lord of Traquair, notwithſtanding of the Declinator proponed againſt him verbo, by the Pannel's Procurators.

My Lord Advocat, for verifying of the Dittay, 1ſt, Repeats the Acts of Parliament whereupon the Dittay is founded, (viz.) the 10th Act of the 10th Parliament of his Majeſty's deareſt Father, King James the Sixth, holden at Linlithgow the 10th Day of December, 1585; the other Act being the 205th Act of his Majeſty's 14th Parliament, holden at Edinburgh upon the 8th Day of June, 1594.

2dly, Produces his Majeſty's Warrant or Letter, direct for examination of Mr. John Dunmure, whereof the Tenour follows:

CHARLES Rex.

RIGHT Reverend and Reverend Fathers in God, our Truſty and Well-beloved Counſellors, Right Truſty and Right Well-beloved Couſins and Counſellors, and Truſty and Well-beloved Counſellors; We greet you well. Having ſeen the Copy of a Petition, which hath been in the Hands of Mr. Peter Hay of Naughtoun: And he being required by us to declare from whom he had the ſaid Petition, hath done the ſame by naming one Dunmure, dwelling in Dundee, a Notary there: It is our Pleaſure, that you call them before you; and having received the ſaid Mr. Peter Hay his Information, and examined the ſaid Dunmure concerning the Author of that Petition, and who may be any wiſe acceſſary unto it, you inform your ſelf ſo far as you can in all things concerning it, and certify us what ye find thereanent, that we may cauſe take ſuch further Order with theſe that ſhall be found to have had hand therein, as we ſhall think fitting. And for your ſo doing, theſe Preſents ſhall be your ſufficient Warrant. From our Court at New-Mercat, the 3d Day of March, 1634.

3dly, Repeats the infamous Libel produced by Mr. John Dunmure before the Lords of the Committee upon the 14th Day of March 1634, with his Depoſition made in preſence of the Committee that ſame Day; which infamous Libel, with his ſaid Depoſition, is produced by his Majeſty's Advocat upon the 3d Day of December 1634, before my Lord Juſtice, and is regiſtrat in this Proceſs that Day.

4thly, Produced the Double (Copy) of the infamous Libel, interlined by the Pannel, whereof the Tenour follows.

[This is exactly the Double of the former, only with the Addition of the Pannel's Interlinings, which are theſe; Firſt, at Letter A, on the 14*th Page* (or 288 of this Vol.) there is interlined by his Lordſhip theſe Words, which are not mentioned in the former Double, viz. In ſuch a Caſe as this, it hath not been unworthy to have repreſented to your Majeſty's Obſervation, that. And at this Mark alſo theſe Words are wanting in this Double, which the former has, viz. Which bleſſed King James would never have confounded. And betwixt Letter B and C, on the ſame Page thus, B of Religion C, is interlined in this Double. And the laſt interlined Words in this Double are to come in as marked on the Page, betwixt C and D, theſe Words, viz. To ſuffer to be introduced.]

Item, Produces Mr. John Dunmure's two Depoſitions, made the 15th of March 1634, and the 7th of June after, whereof the Tenour follows:

I Mr. John Dunmure confeſs and declare, That the Copy of the Petition, remonſtrat to the King's moſt ſacred Majeſty, to have been delivered by me to Mr. Peter Hay of Naughtoun, was intruſted by me to him upon his Faith and Promiſe never to have been imparted or divulged to any other, and that he ſhould redeliver to me the ſame, after the Reading and Conſideration thereof: And that I extracted the ſaid Copy with my own Hand againſt the Direction, and by (without) the Knowledge of him from whom I had the firſt Copy and Warrant thereof. So help me God. And this for Amplification of my Confeſſion of the ſaid Matter, made in Preſence of the Lords Commiſſioners, Receivers thereof, the 14th of March inſtant, by thir Preſents written and ſubſcrived with my Hand at Edinburgh the 15th of March, 1634.

THE which Day Mr. John Dunmure, being deeply ſworn upon his Knees, ratified and approved his former Depoſition of the Date the 15th of March 1634; and declares, That at the time he received the ſaid Supplication of my Lord Balmerino, the ſaid Lord Balmerino deſired him that he would take it, and give him his Opinion thereof; and as he loved his Credit, he would keep it, and ſhew it to no Man living, but only give his own Opinion there-anent: And declares that there was nothing ſpoken about the copying thereof; but is perſuaded, if that my Lord Balmerino had known that he would have copied it, he would never have given the ſame out of his hand. And depones, after the Receipt thereof he abode three Days in Edinburgh, and during that time copied the ſame, and did return the ſame to my Lord Balmerino; but no ways told him that he copied the ſame. And depones he ſhewed the ſame to no Perſon, nor had no purpoſe to divulge it, but did take it home with him to Dundee, and did keep it cloſe and ſecret by himſelf by the ſpace of ſix Weeks, till the Laird of Naughtoun came to him in his own Chamber in Dundee of purpoſe to ask his Advice in ſome Affairs, in reſpect he was his ordinary Writer, as his Cuſtom was: And depones, that after ſome Conference with the Laird of Naughtoun, he took the ſame out of his Pouch (Pocket), and ſaid to the Laird, He knew that he was a Man of Judgment, and well-acquainted with the Affairs of the Kingdom; and ſaid, Here is a Paper whereof he would be glad to have his Judgment, providing he would keep it ſecret, and return the ſame back again: Which the Laird faithfully promiſed. Whereupon the Deponer gave the ſaid Paper to the Laird. Whereupon he began to read: And before he had ended it, he ſaid to the Deponer, Mr. John, I intreat you heartily that I may have this Paper to Naughtoun, that I may read it, and conſider it at leiſure. To the which the Deponer anſwered he would, providing he would keep it ſecret, and ſhew it to no Man, as he had promiſed; which the Laird of Naughtoun faithfully promiſed to do. And declares upon his great Oath, That if he had known the Laird would not have keeped it ſecret, he would not have given it for all the World. As alſo depones, That within a Month or five Weeks after the Deponer went to the Laird of Naughtoun's Houſe, as he was going through Fife, and craved the Paper back with great Earneſtneſs; who anſwered, Tritle, tratle, ye need not be ſo curious; that there was a Gentleman at his own Table told him that there was three Copies thereof going through Fife, and my Lord Balmerino had given one thereof to Mr. William Scot, another to Mr. Alexander Henderſon, and the third that the Gentleman would not name. And the Deponer declares, After that time he met Naughtoun divers time in Dundee, and asked the Paper back, which he ever ſhunned. And declares, About October laſt Naughtoun came to the Deponer's Chambers in Dundee, and told him that he had given the Paper to my Lord St. Andrews; at which the Deponer was mightily moved. Item, depones, After his firſt Declaration he went to my Lord Balmerino, who, after Conference with him, my Lord Balmerino deſired him to go to the Earl of Traquair, and tell him that better Men nor my Lord Balmerino himſelf would ſet their Faces thereto.

THE which Day John Lord Balmerino being examined upon his great Oath, depones as after follows: Imprimis, depones, That the Libel produced is the juſt Copy of the Libel given by him to Mr. John Dunmure, ſo far as he remembers. Item, Being interrogat to what uſe he gave him the the ſame, and upon what occaſion, depones, That Mr. John Dunmure having given to him the Copy of my Lord Brechin his Sermon preached at his Majeſty's Coronation, and Mr. John having ſeen the Paper, he gave it to him to look upon, but to keep it to himſelf alone, and to ſhow it to no other, as he reſpected his Lordſhip's Credit: And depones, That he never knew that Mr. John Dunmure had copied the ſame. Item, Being interrogat from whom he had the Paper he gave to Mr. John Dunmure, depones, As he remembers he received the principal of the ſame from Mr. William Haig. Item, Being interrogat who was Author and Penner of the ſaid Libel, depones, That it was Mr. William Haig who gave it him, and, as he thinks, was the Author thereof. Item, Being interrogat to what uſe Mr. William Haig gave his Lordſhip that Paper, depones, That Mr. William Haig ſaid he thought it a fit Supplication to be preſented to his Majeſty; which he had made out of ſome Collections which he had gathered upon ſome Conferences which he had with ſundry Perſons the time of the Parliament. Item, Being interrogat what he did with the Paper which he received from Mr. William Haig, depones, He received two of them from Mr. William Haig, whereof one was to be preſented to the King, if it had been thought expedient, which he delivered to my Lord of Rothes; and the other he cauſed his Man Mr. Robert Dalgleiſh copy; and gave Mr. Haig his own back again, which he thinks he deſtroyed. And the Paper which he ſhewed Mr. John Dunmure, was it which his Man wrote, as he remembers. Item, Being interrogat if Mr. William Haig had any Warrand or Command to draw up the ſaid Supplication, or if my Lord or any of his knowledge was at the penning thereof, depones, That he had no Warrand from him, nor knew of any Warrand given to him, nor that any was preſent at the forming thereof. Item, Declares that the Earl of Rothes and the Deponer having read the Supplication, thought it no ways fit to be preſented to his Majeſty, but to be abſolutely ſuppreſt. Item, Being interrogat if he had any of the ſaids Copies, declares, After the receipt of Mr. John Dunmure his Copy, he caſt the ſamen in the fire; and for the other, he did diligence to ſeek the ſamen out and find it, and exhibit the ſamen to the Lords: and declared, that he had no more concerning that purpoſe. Item, Being interrogat if he gave any Copies of the ſaid Supplication, or ſhew it to any Perſon, depones, That he neither gave Copies thereof, nor ſhewed it to any except to the Earl of Rothes and Mr. John Dunmure.

And being inquired what theſe were that he meaned of, depones, That it was the Earl of Rothes, to whom he delivered the Supplication, conform to the former Depoſition. Item, Being inquired whether he had interlined ſome Lines in the ſaid Libel which was exhibited by him to the Lords, and whether he did the ſame before he ſhewed it to Mr. John Dunmure, or to the Earl of Rothes, depones, That it was the Earl of Rothes to whom he delivered the Supplication, conform to his former Depoſition. Item, Being inquired whether he had interlined ſome Lines in the ſaid Libel which was exhibited by him to the Lords, and whether he did the ſame before he ſhewed it to Mr. John Dunmure or to the ſaid Earl of Rothes, depones, That Mr. John Dunmure never ſaw this interlined Libel, but only the Copy which was caſt in the fire after the redelivery thereof: And depones, That the Copy interlined lying before the Lords was the Copy delivered by him to the Earl of Rothes, but was not interlined while the Earl of Rothes's redelivery thereof to him; and depones, That never any ſaw it ſince the interlining thereof.

And laſt grants he received a Letter from Camphire the 27th of June, which he received from Mr. Robert Bruce; which he exhibits, and which Letter bears Mr. Haig has granted that he was the Penner of the ſaid Supplication, and therefore proteſts that the ſame may be delivered

Thereafter Mr. William Haig told him that he was the Penner thereof, and took out the Paper and read it over to him, and ſaid that Rothes and Balmerino knew the Paper, becauſe it ſhould have been preſented to the King. Item, Being asked if he knew of Mr. Haig's away going, depones, That upon Sunday the eighth of June the Deponer being in Newbottle Kirk at the Communion, Mr. Haig ſent a Boy to him before the ending of the Sermon in the Afternoon, and deſired him to come out to him; who came out and met with him in the Hall of Newbottle, but ſpake nothing with him there. And then they went out together to the Green of Newbottle, where he told the Deponer that he was to go to the South Country, and that he had received for his comprizing of Maxwellheugh, diſponed by him to the Earl of Roxburgh, the Sum of Twenty Thouſand Marks, which he had paid to Mr. John Sharp and others; and that there reſted yet Eight Thouſand Four Hundred and ſome odd Marks: And that he had taken the Deponer his Name to the Bond thereof to his own uſe, and that he would truſt him with it till his Return; and then delivered to him the Bond thereof, and ſaid to him that he would return ſhortly. Item, Depones, that he received a Letter from Mr. William Haig from Yarmouth, in which there was incloſed a Letter direct from Mr. William Haig to Thomas Haliburton, which he ſent to the ſaid Thomas: And the Contents of the Letter to himſelf was, that he deſired the Deponer to aſſiſt his Nephew, the ſaid Thomas Haliburton, to get a Trunk carried to Holland by the Addreſs of Mr. Robert Bruce; and that he ſhould make the ſaid Thomas forbear to do it, if I ſhould find by Sir Lewis Stewart the appearance of the quitting of this Service. And depones, That he ſhewed this Letter to Thomas Haliburton, who was then preſent in Edinburgh, and declared to the ſaid Thomas, that he would not ſpeak the ſaid Sir Lewis Stewart in ſuch a buſineſs; and rave (tore) out ſo much of the Letter as concerned Sir Lewis Stewart, and deſired the ſaid Thomas that he would take it to him, becauſe Sir Lewis knew Mr. Haig his Hand-writing: which the ſaid Thomas refuſed, and ſaid that Sir Lewis would believe him but (i. e. without) the Letter: And immediately after he read the hail Letter in preſence of the ſaid Thomas. Item, Remembers that the Letter did bear that he was preſently going aboard. Item, Remembers that he received from Mr. William Haig ſince his parting in all three Letters, whereof the ſaid Letter was one, and the other two which he exhibited to the Lords.

And the Deponer grants he received the Key of the Trunk from William Frier, incloſed in a Letter from London written by the ſaid William Frier, and dated before Mr. Haig's going away out of the Country. Item, The Deponer remembers, that Mr. Haig told him that the Pamphlet was written by a Man employed by the Lady Limplum for that effect.

8thly, Produces four Letters from Mr. Haig to the Pannel, dated 27 June, 1 July, 10 July, and 1 Auguſt, 1634. Of the which four Letters, the Tenour follows.

To the Right Honourable my ſingular good Lord my Lord Balmerino, Theſe, at Barnetown; to be ſent to him by Mr. George Lawſon, or Adam Watt Writer in Edinburgh.

My Lord,

NOW that it has pleaſed God to bring me ſafely through the Seas, though ſlowly, (in three Days and three Nights from Yarmouth) to this place, I begin with theſe to pray your Lordſhip either to uſe your Talent to get me home otherwiſe, or to give vigour to that way I wrote to your Lordſhip from Yarmouth. I thought it fit to be taken, to get a compendious way to an end of my Troubles by their means, who for private reſpects have given the name of a Crime to that Supplication, which tho I cannot deny the penning of, yet would not have brought to me any Inconvenience, if it had either been uſed as once intended, or, after changed of purpoſe, kept from thoſe baſe Bodies that put it into the hands of ſuch, as have been able to make hard Conſtructions of it. And ſeeing for whatſoever I now ſuffer in my private Fortune, in my weak Body, or in my Name, by the Contrivance or Knavery of Mr. John Dunmure, I may juſtly blame your Lordſhip; I do here adjure your Lordſhip, by the Perſuaſion I have of your own Integrity, of your honourable Mind and Good-will to me-wards, and by your Knowledge of the Pains I have been ever willing to take for an ingenuous Furtherance of all that concerns my Lord of Somerſet amongſt us; even to take pains to obtain to me a Remiſſion, for doing that which is termed a Crime, and that by means of theſe that have termed it ſo; and make them ſenſible, that it ſhall be more for their credit ſo to make ane end of the buſineſs, than to drive me to ſuch Defences and Apologies as the publiſhing of will gall them, more than the blazing of the Supplication. Withal it may pleaſe your Lordſhip to repreſent to my Lord of Rothes, and ſuch other honeſt Men, as I know did once approve that Supplication, that ſince a hard Character is made of it by theſe that have wreſted in the King's Ire the Senſe of it, they ſhould do right both to themſelves, their Prince, and Country, by another Petition to repreſent that whereas they intended to have delivered to his Majeſty the foreſaid Supplication by ſuch as did diſ-aſſent to that Church-Article, and changed purpoſe, becauſe the Paper could not hold all their Subſcriptions, and other good Reſpects, very compatible with their moſt humble Duties to his Majeſty; yet ſince the foreſaid Supplication has come to his Majeſty's hands by ſuch as have made wrong Conſtructions of it, therefore to conclude craving humbly that his Majeſty would give them leave to be Interpreters of their own Language, and the Deſire of their Petition, (for the Reaſons it containeth) which is, that no private Reſpect, but mere Affection to his Majeſty, did rule their whole Carriage in the late Parliament. But in this I ſubmit my Deſire to your Lordſhip, and their Judgment and Pleaſure. Howſoever, ſince I ſuffer for that which truly had their allowance, I think they are in honour bound to uſe diſcreet means to relieve me off this Croſs, at leaſt to help my poor Eſtate in ſome meaſure to bear out the burden of it. I ſuffer enough in the Toil of my Body, and Wounds given to my Name, though your Lordſhips amongſt you free me of all the Charges that will be inevitable to me in this Courſe: a little Help from each honeſt Man that will poſſibly pity me, would do this buſineſs. Thus your Lordſhip may ſee there lieth a heavy Burden on my Stomach, when it is brought ſo low as to beg; yet I ſhall rather ſtarve than diſcover ſo much to any other than your Lordſhip, to whom only I can lay open the ſilly and low Thoughts that Miſery, and the Fear of it, may bring to,

My Lord,
Your Lordſhip's moſt Reſpecting Servant,
William Haig.

Camphire, 27 June, 1634.

Poſtſcript. Whatſomever Bonds are in Moneys to my behoof, I do not think one Groat thereof mine, till my Lord Yeaſter be ſatisfied; which will be eaſily done, (upon the grounds I have ſent a Note of to Mark Caſs) if your Lordſhip move him to a Submiſſion, (wherein Mark Caſs and Thomas Haliburton ſhall take burden for me) but we will never end otherwiſe. Pray my Lord of Rothes to help your Lordſhip to induce him to a Submiſſion to any that your Lordſhip and he can condeſcend upon; and tell him of his old Letter to my Lord of Anchram, That he ſhould ſettle with me at any Man's ſight I liked. But get him to a Submiſſion in writing for his good as well as mine; for if God pleaſe to call me, he will find that he ſhall not make ſo good a Condition, as he may do now.

The

The second Letter.

My Lord,

JUST as I had done closing of my Letters written to your Lordship with others at Camphire, the Conservator newly arrived here from London came to my Chamber in ane Inn kept by his Mother-in Law; and hearing I was arrived there from Scotland, was very curious to ask News. And because I could tell him nothing, at last wondering, asked me by way of question, If I heard nothing of a Petition, which a number (35) said he of Lords had resolved to give to the King, craving a Relief of the Act made in the Church-business, and a Discharge of any further Payment and Taxations. I laughed, and told him that I durst assure him there was no such matter. That cannot be, said he, for I have this from such as has best Intelligence about the Court; and have seen a Letter, bearing under the hand of one of the Commissioners, That they had had my Lord Balmerino that day before them, who had behaved himself very modestly, and was to be before them the next day, where they hoped to get good Satisfaction in all they were about. Then I answered, I heard your Lordship was called for by some of the Council, but had not learned, nor so much as asked for what: and that the Council might have many things ado with your Lordship that I was ignorant of, and could not in good manners inquire. I protest, said he, that is a business in all Mens mouths about Court; and I wonder, said he, you have not heard of it. I have not truly, said I: And so we left that Theme, and drunk together, and within a quarter ane hour after I left that Town, and to one Alexander Speir, a Factor in it, a Packet to Mr. Robert Bruce; under whose Cover there is a Letter of the 27th of June to your Lordship, the Contents whereof I will not repeat here, but beseech your Lordship to have respect unto it, as well in so far as it beseecheth your Lordship to use your Talent for shortning my Troubles, as in the care I humbly beseech your Lordship to take to induce my Lord Yeaster to a Submission, without which there is no hope of any Conclusion with him. I will long to hear from your Lordship what posture this business works itself unto, and what success I may expect in the way I am contented be taken to end my Troubles, by their means that has occasioned them. Thus having nothing to say but what I have formerly written, and beseeching your Lordship not to be swear (slow) in writing to me, (under Cover to my Lord of Auton, James Howstoun or James Wright Merchants in Amsterdam, or to Alexander Speir in Camphire, or to William Murehead by the way of London) I crave leave, and rest,

My Lord,

Amsterdam, 1 July 1634. Your Lordship's most Respecting Servant,
William Haig.

The third Letter.

My Lord,

I Know that Repetition of my Desires expresst in my Letters to your Lordship from Yarmouth, Camphire, and Amsterdam, were enough to accuse me of Distrust of your Lordship's either Memory or Good-will to me-wards. Wherefore these are only to beseech your Lordship to let me know what posture that business is in, which occasioned my Voyage hither; and what Issue I may expect by your Lordship's means, and such others as I have written unto there, as well of the Troubles I am now under, as of that Business I prayed your Lordship to manage with my Lord Yeaster. I intend to fix about Delft before the 27th Instant, and stick there till I hear from Scotland or England what I may expect. So your Lordship may put all you write to me under Cover to Mr. John Forbes a Minister (tho now silenced by Order from Canterbury) of the English that are about their Staple in that place, Mr. Robert Bruce, or Mr. Alexander Colvill, by David Junken's means; and otherwise also will get them sent to Mr. Forbes, and he will make them find me: so will William Murehead, if your Lordship please write that way too.

My Lord,

Croning, 10 July 1634. Your Lordship's most Respecting Servant,
William Haig.

The fourth Letter.

My Lord,

I Send here to your Lordship my Lord Jedburgh's Discharge for the Crop 1633, and his Daughter Mary's Receipt for 100 l. with a Protection for my Lord Jedburgh, to be made use of, as your Lordship has occasion. His Lady was speaking to me to procure her a House near Newbottle, called Bryankirk; which cannot be, because my Lord of Lothian has lent it to his Uncle Sir John Murray. But I intend to speak to Mark Cass, and try if he can spare Cockpen; which being near Coal, and out of Tiviotdale way, I think were very convenient for my Lord Jedburgh, since he suits some House in Lothian, to be free of the Importunity of his Tiviotdale Creditors, and other Inconveniencies his dwelling at Jedburgh makes him obnoxious unto. There is also within this Packet Mr. Lewis his Discharge of 600 Marks to my Lord Jedburgh, and a Note of Mr. Lewis his Writings, with an Assignation to be subscrived by my Lord Jedburgh, for Recovery of some Moneys he paid for Mr. John Home: I intended it for Mrs. Ann's help, before your Lordship and I went to Tiviotdale; and when his Brother Captain Home was assisting his Chief's Process, and was likely to have adventured to pay that Sum for Mr. John, if he had found him pressed (being then in Edinburgh) by some good Caption. It shall be well done to make the best use of it yet that can be. I have also inclosed in this Packet Mr. Cornelius Aneslie's Discharge for 200 Marks for the Interest of his Mony preceding Whitsunday last: I was not able to pay the Principal till the 7th of June, and then he refused; I hope to do it honestly at Mertimas, before which time I hope to return armed against all Inconveniencies that Cost or Power shall be able to put upon me, by evil interpreting what was well meaned. I have left to my Nephew Thomas Haliburton the Key of my Chamber and Trunks, with direction to be given to your Lordship to be made use of during my absence; whereof I shall write to your Lordship the reason at more length by the first occasion. I rest,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's most Affectionate and Respecting Servant, William Haig.

After the Production whereof, his Majeſty's Advocat affirms, That the Writs now produced for Verification of the Dittay, the ſaid Dittay is thereby verified in the hail Points thereof, referred to the Aſſize; and in reſpect thereof proteſts, if they cleange (clear) upon ſo clear Probation, for wilful Error.

Thereafter it was alledged by the Pannel, That the Earl of Rothes's Depoſition ought to be produced and read.

To the which it is anſwered by my Lord Advocat, That he uſes not the ſame as a Point of his Probation.

To the whilk it is duplyed, That it will ſerve (being read and produced) for clearing of the Pannel's Innocency; and that by Interloquitor of before, the ſaid Depoſition was by the Juſtice's Interloquitor produced and given up to the Pannel; and therefore it is moſt neceſſary to be produced to the Aſſize, and cognoſced by them.

Thereafter my Lord Advocat, for eſchewing of Delay, did produce the Earl of Rothes his Depoſition, with this Proteſtation, That he uſes not the ſamen as a Verification of the Dittay, but only for ſatisfying of the Interloquitor given out by the Juſtice before, and to cut off all occaſion of Clamour that any part of the Proceſs were withdrawn; and when the Pannel ſhall found any Alleadgance or Objection thereupon, he ſhall have a ſufficient Anſwer. Of the which Depoſition the Tenour follows.

At Edinburgh, the 3d of July, 1634.

THE which Day John Earl of Rothes, being ſworn upon his great Oath, and the Libel being ſhewn to him, grants that this is the Libel that was ſhewn to him by or from my Lord Balmerino; which he took and read till about twenty Lines in the beginning, and no farder, in preſence of the Earl of Caſſilles and the Lord Yeaſter, being with him in Coach, going to Dalkeith: who finding it of ſuch a Strain, and having told them that his Majeſty had given him an expreſs Command to ſurpreſs all that was of that nature, the Deponer and they, all in one Voice, thought it ſhould be ſuppreſs'd; and the Deponer did put it in his Pocket. And having occaſion that ſame Day to meet his Majeſty at Dalkeith, and his Majeſty falling in Conference with him anent Information made to his Majeſty againſt him, he purged himſelf clearly to his Majeſty; and having received from his Majeſty of before ſtrait Commandment for ſupreſſing all Petitions of the nature of that which was moved in the time of the Parliament, he ſhewed to his Majeſty that he had faithfully done the ſame ever ſince, and added thir Words; Sir, there is a Petition given me preſently to be looked upon and conſidered, which I have in my Pocket, which I have according to your Majeſty's Command ſuppreſs'd; if your Majeſty be pleaſed to look upon it. Which his Majeſty anſwered, It is no matter: I have no leiſure: I am going to the Park. And declares, that it remained in his Pocket unlooked upon by him, or any other, by the ſpace of eight Days, or thereabouts: After the which he returned the ſame back again, incloſed in a Paper, which was ſealed, to my Lord Balmerino, to whom before he had told his Judgment of it, that it was altogether to be ſuppreſs'd. And depones upon his great Oath, That he neither ſhewed it to any, nor gave any Copy thereof to any; but remembers before he ſent it to my Lord Balmerino, he cauſed copy it by his own Servant, which is yet extant, uncommunicated to any, and whereof he had no memory at all, till he heard that Mr. Peter Hay of Naughtoun had ſhewn it to others; and then he ſearched the ſame, and found it out. Item, Being interrogat if he knew the Hand-writ of the Libel, or who was the Author or Penner thereof; depones, he knows not the Writer thereof, and knew not certainly who was the Author and Penner thereof, till he heard that Mr. William Haig was bruited, (i. e. named,) for the penning thereof, of whom he had ever Suſpicion, becauſe he has ever been buſy upon ſuch idle and fooliſh Toys. And being asked if he gave his Advice anent the penning thereof to Mr. William Haig, or any other; depones upon his great Oath, that he neither gave his Advice to him, or any other, anent the penning thereof, but ever thought it fit to be ſuppreſt; and declares, that he never knew any Conſultation either before or after anent the ſame. And the ſaid Earl of Rothes promiſed with all diligence to ſend the Copy which he has incloſed to the Lords; and promiſed upon his Oath and Honour not to copy the ſame.

Sic ſubſ. Rothes.

My Lord Advocat declares that he uſes not the laſt Part of Mark Caſs his Depoſition.

It is objected and alledged by Mr. Alex. Pearſon againſt the Probation of the Dittay adduced, Firſt, To the Probation of the firſt Part thereof againſt the Pannel, as Author, Conſulter, &c. that the Pannel's alledged Interlining does not prove him to be Conſulter with Mr. Haig in the penning and firſt drawing up thereof, becauſe the alledged Interlining is long after, yea, after the Offer made thereof to his Majeſty, to whom no Subject can be preſumed to preſent a Supplication interlined. And oppones to that Point of Dittay, the Pannel's Depoſition the 16th of June, which bears the Interlining not to have been made while after the Earl of Rothes's Redelivery of the Writing to the Pannel, which was more than ſix or ſeven Months after. Oppones alſo the other Copy of the Writing quarrelled, produced by my Lord Advocat, which wants the Interlining, and which evinces the Interlining not to have been at the penning and forming thereof, and conſequently the alledged Interlining proves not the Pannel's Advice in the penning and firſt drawing up thereof.

Item, The alledged Interlining proves not the Pannel to be Conſulter anent the ſcandalous Libel, becauſe the ſaid alledged Interlining is not of any matter of Reproach or Scandal, whereupon the ſaid Libel is now challenged, or can be challenged, and ſo has no Acceſſion thereto as ſcandalous; and therefore proves not the Pannel's Advice anent the ſcandalous Libel.

Item, The alledged Interlining proves not that Point of the Dittay, becauſe by the Pannel's Depoſition, 16 June, never Man ſaw it ſince the Interlining thereof; and therefore nothing can be inforced or concluded thereupon, and is alike as if the ſame had never been interlined: For even an infamous Libel found with a Party in ſecret, who did ſuppreſs the ſame, and never manifeſt it to another, does not make or prove him guilty of the infamous Libel.

That part of the Dittay, bearing, That by Letters ſent by Mr. Haig to the Pannel, it is affirmed by Mr. Haig that he had the Allowance of the Pannel to the penning of the Writ quarrelled, is no ways proven by the miſſive Letter, nor by any of them. And where the ſaid Miſſives, or any of them may ſeem to concern any purpoſe of Allowance of the Writing quarrelled, that is no ways of the Pannel's Allowance, nor can be ſo expounded; for the Letter from Camphire, dated 27 June, directed to the Pannel himſelf, and which ſpeaks of their Allowance in the third Perſon, extends not to the Pannel, and makes not the Allowance therein mentioned (if any be) to be the Pannel's Allowance.

Farder, Altho the ſaid Miſſive affirmed as the Dittay bears, yet the ſame can no ways be reſpected, nor make Faith againſt the Pannel for his Conviction; becauſe Mr. Haig being guilty as Author, his alledged Declaration, if any be, (no ways granting the ſame) can be no Probation at all againſt the Pannel; becauſe it is an undoubted Maxim in Law, Quod ſocius aut particeps Criminis adverſus alium fidem non facit: Accomplice in a Crime's Declaration cannot make Probation againſt any other whom he alledges to be guilty.

To the firſt Part of the Dittay, and Probation thereof, oppones the Dittay it ſelf, which bears Mr. Haig to be Author, and which makes point of Dittay againſt the Pannel for not apprehending of Mr. Haig, Author thereof. Oppones alſo Mr. Haig's Grant that he was Author and Penner thereof, contained in his miſſive Letter, 27 June. Oppones alſo Mr. Haig his fleeing furth of the Country for the ſame Cauſe; and ſince his Flight, his intreating of his Friends for procuring to him a Remiſſion for it, as is proported in the Pannel's Depoſitions the 1ſt of Auguſt. Oppones alſo the Pannel's Oath and Declaration the 9th of June, wherein he has deponed, That Mr. Haig had no warrant from him, and that he knew nothing of the forming of it. Oppones alſo Mark Caſs his Depoſition, which bears Mr. Haig to have confeſſed to him that he was the Penner thereof.

It is alledged by Mr. John Nisbet againſt the Verification of the Dittay, That the Pannel's Depoſitions cannot be uſed to verify the Dittay, inferring capital Guilt and Puniſhment upon the Pannel, becauſe the Pannel was induced to depone under Promiſe and Aſſurance of Impunity: And in Law, a Confeſſion elicit upon Promiſe of Impunity, cannot inforce capital Guilt, as is abundantly aſtructed in the Diſpute. It is likewiſe alledged by him that Dunmure's Depoſition, Dalgleiſh's Depoſitions, and Haig's Letters, cannot be uſed againſt the Pannel, becauſe they being all involved in the ſame Acts whereupon the Pannel is indicted, they cannot prove againſt the Pannel to disburden themſelves; ſeeing in Law theſe with whom ſcandalous Pieces are found are preſumed to be Authors, unleſs they condeſcend upon the Author or Deliverer of theſe Pieces to them.

It is alledged by Mr. Alexander Pearſon, That the ſecond Part of the Dittay againſt the Pannel, as guilty of hearing, concealing, not apprehending, divulging of ane infamous Libel, &c. is not proven, becauſe there is nothing adduced againſt the Pannel, to prove the Pannel's Knowledge of the Writing quarrelled to be ſcandalous or ſeditious, without which the Pannel is not, nor cannot be counted guilty of the Crimes libelled. And oppones thereto the juſt and probable Cauſe contained in the ſecond Exception, and remanent Defences proponed for the Pannel, which the Pannel had moving him to think otherwiſe of the Writing quarrelled; to wit, The Writing it ſelf in Title, Form, Strain, Beginning, and Ending, and in all, an humble Supplication; the ſame being firſt delivered to the Pannel as a Supplication to be preſented to his Majeſty. [The Pannel's Depoſition, 9 June.] Next was delivered by the Pannel to the Earl of Rothes of purpoſe to be preſented to his Majeſty. [The Pannel's Depoſition foreſaid; and alſo affirmed by the Dittay it ſelf.] Laſt it was offered by my Lord of Rothes to his Majeſty; as the Earl of Rothes's Depoſition bears, 3 July: Whilk Offer of my Lord of Rothes to his Majeſty is acknowledged by my Lord Advocat, conform to his Lordſhip's Anſwer in the Defences proponed for the Pannel. Oppones alſo the Pannel's Quality, Life, and Converſation, which is in ſuch a far diſtance from the Crimes libelled, that it excludes all Preſumption and Probability thereof againſt the Pannel.

To that Point of the Dittay aggravating the Pannel's not apprehending Mr. Haig, by the Pannel's ſhewing to him the Warrant of his Citation before the Committee, and thereby giving him occaſion to eſcape; oppones the Pannel's Depoſition of the 16th of June, which bears that the Pannel knew nothing of Mr. Haig his going off the Country before the third Day after Mr. Haig's Eſcape.

That Part of the Dittay bearing the Pannel to be guilty of divulging and diſperſing of the alledged infamous Libel, is not proven. 1ſt, The Pannel his cauſing Mr. Robert Dalgleiſh his Servant copy the ſame, proves not the Pannel's diſperſing thereof in publick; Mr. Robert Dalgleiſh being the Pannel's Houſhold Servant, and he having copied the ſame infra privatos parietes, which proves not diſperſing in publick. 2dly, The Delivery of the Writ quarrelled to the Earl of Rothes of purpoſe to be preſented to his Majeſty, proves no ways divulging of a ſcandalous Libel: But the Delivery thereof, qualified as ſaid is, and followed with ane real Offer thereof made to his Majeſty, cuts away its being offered as a ſcandalous Libel, and divulging thereof; both becauſe of his Majeſty's ſacred Perſon, which is far tranſcendent above all preſumed Injuries, and alſo quia calumnia eſt adverſus abſentem. Farder, ſince in Law and Reaſon, Intention of Law and Reaſon differences Crimes by the Purpoſe of the Party, let the Purpoſe of the Pannel difference now this his Act, which does make the ſame to be preſentation of a Supplication, and not divulging of an infamous Libel. 3ly, The Delivery of the Writ by the Pannel to Mr. Dunmure proves not divulging; and oppones thereto the Pannel's Depoſition of the 9th of June, which bears that the Pannel gave the Writ to Dunmure to look upon to himſelf alone, and to ſhew it to no other, and that he never knew that Dunmure had copied the ſame, till Dunmure was called in queſtion for it. Oppones likewiſe Mr. Dunmure's Depoſition, which bears in this ſame manner. Oppones alſo the Law Quod in maleficiis voluntas ſpectatur, non exitus; and that the Pannel's purpoſe is declared by his Depoſition foreſaid.

It is anſwered by my Lord Advocat, That the Interlining is not found relevant per ſe, but with the remanent Circumſtances; and ſo far as Interlining lining is libelled, (which is indefinitely, without reſpect of time, whether before or after ſhewing of it to Dunmure) it is clearly proven by the Pannel's own Depoſition, and by ocular Inſpection of the ſcandalous Libel produced by the Pannel, which is interlined with his own Hand in two divers Places. And for proving the Pannel to be Author, Adviſer, &c. his receiving it immediately from Haig, delivering it to the Earl of Rothes, interlining of it quocunq; tempore, diſperſing of it to Dunmure, and giving the Power of it to Dalgleiſh his own Man, is ſufficient to verify that part of the Dittay. To the whilk is added Haig his Confeſſion in his Letter, which in two Paſſages thereof bears, that it was allowed by them in whoſe Name the ſame was framed, of the which Number the Pannel was one. Where it is alledged that the not apprehending is not verified, or concealing of Haig, &c. becauſe it is not proven that the Pannel had Knowledge that it was a ſcandalous Libel; it is anſwered, That the Pannel knew Haig to be Author, which is proven by his Depoſitions; and the Juſtice by Interloquitor has found it to be a ſcandalous Libel, and there is no neceſſity to prove his Knowledge. And as to divulging, it is not found relevant ſolo, but being conjoined with any part of the Dittay; and it is proven in terminis, as it is libelled by the Pannel's Depoſitions. And as to the Pannel's Intention, it is not a Part of the Dittay, the Pannel being verified to have been Author or Deviſer, not Apprehender of Haig, or Concealer of him, or Divulger of the ſcandalous Libel; which is clearly proven by the Writs produced. And therefore alledges that the Aſſize, notwithſtanding of thir Objections proponed, ought to find the Dittay clearly proven; otherwiſe, proteſts for wilful Error and Remeid of Law.

It is duplyed by Mr. John Nisbet for the Pannel, Whereas it is replied by my Lord Advocat, that the Receipt of the Piece from the Author immediately after compiling of it, joined with Interlineation, and the Author's Teſtimony of the Pannel's approving of it, verifies the Pannel's Concourſe with the Author in framing the Piece found ſcandalous; we oppone the Pannel's reiterat Depoſitions, bearing that he had no Acceſſion in the framing, and gave no previous Warrant to the Framer, and diſclaming Knowledge of the framing of it, which muſt elide all the Preſumptions adduced by my Lord Advocat; ſeeing it is incontraverted in Law, that a qualified Confeſſion cannot be disjoined, as is clearly proven in my Diſpute, chiefly ſince the Pannel has deponed ſo ingenuouſly, without any Obligation in Law, and upon Aſſurance foreſaid.

Whereas it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That the Pannel intruſting of his Man Mr. Robert Dalgleiſh with the Piece, his imparting of it to Dunmure, and to my Lord of Rothes, verifies divulging; oppones our Diſpute, and the Authorities of the Laws cited by us, requiring a publick Expoſing, and a fraudulent Intention to defame. And we oppone the Condition of the Pannel's Delivery of it to Dunmure, that it ſhould be illi ſoli; Dunmure's copying of it without the Pannel's Knowledge; then of the Pannel's Delivery of it to Dunmure, to found his Opinion in Judgment; all clearly verified by Dunmure's Depoſition.

Where it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That Haig's Evaſion, the Pannel's Knowledge that he was Author of the Piece now found ſcandalous, verifies the Point of not apprehending the Author; and that it is not neceſſar to prove the Pannel's Knowledge of the Piece: It is duplied, That we oppone the uncontraverted Practick of all Countries where apprehending of Parties is enjoined, and reſetting is prohibit; that Declarator ſhould precede, as in Authors of Heretical Books, forbidden to be received by the Law; becauſe every Man is not able to diſcern thoſe Pieces, which are debated and contraverted amongſt the learnedeſt. And we oppone the Pannel's own Depoſitions, bearing that he knew not aſſuredly Haig to be Author thereof, but thought only he was Author; and therefore not obliged to apprehend ſummarly and abruptly. In reſpect qhereof the Aſſize can no ways find the Pannel guilty of the Dittay, and alledged Crime ſpecified therein.

The Aſſize, by Plurality of Votes, elects and choiſes John Earl of Traquair Chancellor, (Foreman.)

Whilks Perſons of Aſſize being received, ſworn, and admitted, after Accuſation of the ſaid John Lord Balmerino by Dittay of the Crimes foreſaids, mentioned and ſet down therein, and Production, and reading judicially of the Writs, and Probation uſed and produced by his Majeſty's Advocat for verifying thereof, they removed all together furth of Court to the Council-Houſe of Edinburgh; where firſt, by Plurality of Votes, they elected and chuſed the ſaid John Earl of Traquair Chancellor. Thereafter received and voted upon the haill Points of the ſaid Dittay; and being riply and at length adviſed therewith, and with the Writs and Probation uſed and produced by his Majeſty's Advocat for inſtructing of the ſame, and with the Objections made by the Pannel and his Procurators thereagainſt, and Anſwers made by his Majeſty's Advocat to the ſaid Objections, all read in their Preſence, and Audience re-enter'd again in Court; where they by Report and judicial Declaration of the ſaid John Earl of Traquair, Chancellor of the ſaid Aſſize, found, pronounced, and declared the ſaid John Lord of Balmerino to be cleared and acquit of the firſt part of the ſaid Dittay, wherein he is indicted as Author, Deviſer, Conſulter, Adviſer, Airt and Part of the forming and penning of the infamous or ſcandalous Libel mentioned thereintil: As alſo of not apprehending of Mr. William Haig, whom he affirms in his Depoſition to have been Author of the ſaid Libel: And likewiſe to be cleared, aſſoilzed, and acquit of the divulging and diſperſing of the ſaid ſcandalous Libel amongſt our ſovereign Lord's Subjects, in manner ſpecified in the ſaid Dittay. And laſt, found, pronounced, and declared the ſaid John Lord of Balmerino to be allenarly filed and convict of the Hearing of the ſaid infamous Libel, Concealing and not Revealing of the ſaid Mr. William Haig, affirmed by him to be the Author thereof.

The Juſtice-General upon conſideration of the ſaid John Lord Balmerino his Conviction by the fore-named Perſons of Aſſize of the foreſaid Point of Dittay, anent the Hearing of the infamous Libel therein contained, Concealing and not Revealing of Mr. William Haig, Author and Penner thereof, found and declared, by Advice of his Lordſhip's Aſſeſſors, That the ſaid John Lord of Balmerino has therethrough incurred the Pain of Death contained in the Acts of Parliament; ſuſpending always the Execution thereof, until the Time

Time his Majeſty's gracious Will and Pleaſure be ſhown and declared thereanent: to whoſe Sacred Majeſty the Manner, Time, and Place of the Execution of the ſaid Sentence is remitted by the Juſtice: And the ſaid John Lord of Balmerino ordained in the mean time to be returned to Ward within the Caſtle of Edinburgh, to remain therein while his Majeſty's Pleaſure be ſignified.

The Tryal of THOMAS Earl of STRAFFORD, and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland: who was Impeach'd of High Treaſon by Mr. Pym at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, on the 11*th Day of* November 1640, and brought to his Tryal the 22*d of* March in the ſame Year.

Articles of the Commons aſſembled in Parliament againſt Thomas Earl of Strafford, in maintenance of the Accuſation, whereby he ſtands charged of High Treaſon.

I. THAT he the ſaid Thomas Earl of Strafford hath traitorouſly endeavoured to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws and Government of the Realms of England and Ireland, and inſtead thereof, to introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government againſt Law; which he hath declared by traitorous Words, Counſels, and Actions, and by giving his Majeſty Advice by Force of Arms to compel his loyal Subjects to ſubmit thereunto.

II. That he hath traitorouſly aſſumed to himſelf Regal Power over the Lives, Liberties, Perſons, Lands, and Goods of his Majeſty's Subjects in England and Ireland; and hath exerciſed the ſame tyrannically, to the ſubverſion and undoing of many, both of Peers and others of his Majeſty's liege People.

III. That the better to enrich and enable himſelf to go through with his traitorous Deſigns, he hath detained a great part of his Majeſty's Revenue, without giving legal Account; and hath taken great Sums out of the Exchequer, converting them to his own Uſe, when his Majeſty wanted Money for his own urgent Occaſions, and his Army had been a long time unpaid.

IV. That he hath traitorouſly abuſed the Power and Authority of his Government, to the increaſing, countenancing, and encouraging of Papiſts; that ſo he might ſettle a mutual Dependance and Confidence betwixt himſelf and that Party, and by their help proſecute and accompliſh his malicious and tyrannical Deſigns.

V. That he hath maliciouſly endeavoured to ſtir up Enmity and Hoſtility between his Majeſty's Subjects of England and thoſe of Scotland.

VI. That he hath traitorouſly broke the great Truſt repoſed in him by his Majeſty, of Lieutenant-General of his Army, by wilful betraying divers of his Majeſty's Subjects to Death, his Army to a diſhonourable Defeat by the Scots at Newborne, and the Town of Newcaſtle into their hands; to the end, that by the Effuſion of Blood, by Diſhonour, and ſo great a Loſs as that of Newcaſtle, his Majeſty's Realm of England might be engaged in a national and irreconcilable Quarrel with the Scots.

VII. That to preſerve himſelf from being queſtioned for thoſe and other his traitorous Courſes, he laboured to ſubvert the Right of Parliaments, and the antient Courſe of Parliamentary Proceedings; and by falſe and malicious Slanders to incenſe his Majeſty againſt Parliaments. By which Words, Counſels, and Actions, he hath traitorouſly, and contrary to his Allegiance, laboured to alienate the Hearts of the King's liege People from his Majeſty, to ſet a Diviſion between them, and to ruin and deſtroy his Majeſty's Kingdoms: for which they impeach him of High Treaſon againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

VIII. And he the ſaid Earl of Strafford was Lord-Deputy of Ireland, and Lieutenant-General of the Army of his moſt Excellent Majeſty, for his Kingdoms both of England and Ireland, and the Lord Preſident of the North, during the time that all and every the Crimes and Offences before ſet forth were done and committed; and he the ſaid Earl was Lieutenant-General of all his Majeſty's Army in the North Parts of England, during the time that the Crimes and Offences in the fifth and ſixth Articles ſet forth were done and committed.

IX. That the ſaid Commons, by Proteſtations ſaving to themſelves the liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any other Accuſation or Impeachment againſt the ſaid Earl; and alſo of replying to the Anſwers that he the ſaid Earl ſhall make unto the ſaid Articles, or to any of them, and of offering Proofs; alſo of the Premiſes, or any of them; or any other Impeachment or Accuſation that ſhall be exhibited by them, as the Cauſe ſhall, according to the Courſe of Parliament, require: do pray that the ſaid Earl may be put to anſwer for all and every of the Premiſes, that ſuch Proceedings, Examinations, Tryals and Judgments may may be upon every of them had and uſed, as is agreeable to Law and Juſtice.

Articles of the Commons aſſembled in Parliament againſt Thomas Earl of Strafford, in maintenance of their Accuſation, whereby he ſtands charged with High Treaſon.

WHEREAS the ſaid Commons have already exhibited Articles againſt the ſaid Earl, in hæc verba, now the ſaid Commons do further impeach the ſaid Earl as followeth: (That is to ſay)

I. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford the 21ſt Day of March, in the eighth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, was Preſident of the King's Council in the Northern Parts of England.

That the ſaid Earl being Preſident of the ſaid Council, on the 21ſt of March a Commiſſion under the Great Seal of England, with certain Schedules of Inſtructions thereunto annexed, was directed to the ſaid Earl, and others the Commiſſioners therein named, whereby, among other things, Power and Authority is limited to the ſaid Earl and others the Commiſſioners therein named, to hear and determine all Offences, and Miſdemeanours, Suits, Debates, Controverſies, and Demands, Cauſes, Things and Matters whatſoever therein contained, and within certain Precincts in the ſaid Northern Parts therein ſpecified, and in ſuch manner as by the ſaid Schedule is limited and appointed.

That, amongſt other things in the ſaid Inſtructions, it is directed, that the ſaid Preſident, and others therein appointed, ſhall hear and determine according to the Courſe of Proceedings in the Court of Star-Chamber, divers Offences, Deceits and Falſities, therein mentioned, whether the ſame be provided for by Acts of Parliament or not; ſo that the Fines impoſed be not leſs than by the Act or Acts of Parliament provided againſt thoſe Offences is appointed.

That alſo, amongſt other things in the ſaid Inſtructions, it is directed, that the ſaid Preſident, and others therein appointed, have power to examine, hear, and determine, according to the Courſe of Proceedings in the Court of Chancery, all manner of Complaints, for any Matter within the ſaid Precincts; as well concerning Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, either Free-hold, Cuſtomary, or Copy-hold, as Leaſes, and other things therein mentioned; and to ſtay Proceedings in the Court of Common Law by Injunction, or otherwiſe, by all ways and means, as is uſed in the Court of Chancery.

And although the former Preſidents of the ſaid Council had never put in practice ſuch Inſtructions, nor had they any ſuch Inſtructions; yet the ſaid Earl in the Month of May in the ſaid eighth Year, and divers Years following, did put in practice, exerciſe and uſe, and cauſed to be uſed and put in practice the ſaid Commiſſion and Inſtructions; and did direct and exerciſe an exorbitant and unlawful Power and Juriſdiction over the Perſons and Eſtates of his Majeſty's Subjects in thoſe parts, and did diſinherit divers of his Majeſty's Subjects in thoſe parts of their Inheritances, ſequeſtred their Poſſeſſions, and did fine, ranſom, puniſh and impriſon them; and cauſed them to be fined, ranſomed, puniſhed, and impriſoned, to their Ruin and Deſtruction: and namely, Sir Coniers Darcy, Sir John Bourcher, and divers others, againſt the Laws, and in ſubverſion of the ſame. And the ſaid Commiſſion and Inſtructions were procured and iſſued by Advice of the ſaid Earl.

And he the ſaid Earl, to the intent that ſuch illegal and unjuſt Power might be exerciſed with the greater Licence and Will, did adviſe, counſel, and procure further Directions; in and by the ſaid Inſtructions to be given, that no Prohibition be granted at all, but in Caſes where the ſaid Council ſhall exceed the Limits of the ſaid Inſtructions: And that if any Writ of Habeas Corpus be granted, the Party be not diſcharged till the Party perform the Decree and Order of the ſaid Council.

And the ſaid Earl, in the 13th Year of his Majeſty's Reign, did procure a new Commiſſion to himſelf, and others therein appointed, with the ſaid Inſtructions, and other unlawful Additions.

That the ſaid Commiſſion and Inſtructions were procured by the Sollicitation and Advice of the ſaid Earl of Strafford.

II. That ſhortly after the obtaining of the ſaid Commiſſion, dated the 21ſt of March, in the eighth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, to wit, the laſt Day of Auguſt then next following, he the ſaid Earl (to bring his Majeſty's liege People into a diſlike of his Majeſty, and of his Government, and to terrify the Juſtices of the Peace from executing of the Laws; he the ſaid Earl being then Preſident, as aforeſaid, and a Juſtice of Peace) did publickly at the Aſſizes held for the County of York, in the City of York, in and upon the ſaid laſt Day of Auguſt, declare and publiſh before the People there attending for the Adminiſtration of Juſtice according to Law, (and in the preſence of Juſtices ſitting) that ſome of the Juſtices were all for Law, and nothing would pleaſe them but Law; but they ſhould find that the King's Little-finger ſhould be heavier than the Loins of the Law.

III. That the Realm of Ireland having been time out of mind annexed to the Imperial Crown of this his Majeſty's Realm of England, and governed by the ſame Laws; the ſaid Earl being Lord-Deputy of that Realm, to bring his Majeſty's liege Subjects of that Kingdom likewiſe into diſlike of his Majeſty's Government, and intending the Subverſion of the fundamental Laws and ſettled Government of that Realm, and the Deſtruction of his Majeſty's liege People there, did upon the 30th Day of September, in the ninth Year of his now Majeſty's Reign, in the City of Dublin, (the chief City of that Realm, where his Majeſty's Privy-Council and Courts of Juſtice do ordinarily reſide, and whither the Nobility and Gentry of that Realm do uſually reſort for Juſtice) in a publick Speech before divers of the Nobility and Gentry of that Kingdom, and before the Mayor, Aldermen, and Recorder, and many Citizens of Dublin, and other his Majeſty's liege People, declare and publiſh, That Ireland was a conquered Nation, and that the King might do with them what he pleaſed. And ſpeaking of the Charters of former Kings of England made to that City, he further then ſaid, That their Charters were nothing worth, and did bind the King no further than he pleaſed.

IV. That Richard Earl of Cork having ſued out Proceſs in Courſe of Law, for Recovery of his Poſſeſſions, from which he was put by colour of an Order made by the ſaid Earl of Strafford, and the Council-Table of the ſaid Realm of Ireland, upon a Paper-Petition, without legal Proceeding, did the 20th Day of February, in the 11th Year of his now Majeſty's Reign, threaten the ſaid Earl, (being (being then a Peer of the ſaid Realm) to impriſon him, unleſs he would ſurceaſe his Suit; and ſaid, That he would have neither Law nor Lawyers diſpute or queſtion his Orders. And the 20th Day of March in the ſaid 11th Year, the ſaid Earl of Strafford, ſpeaking of an Order of the ſaid Council-Table of that Realm, made in the time of King James, which concerned a Leaſe which the ſaid Earl of Cork claimed in certain Rectories or Tythes, which the ſaid Earl of Cork alledged to be of no force, ſaid, That he would make the ſaid Earl and all Ireland know, that ſo long as he had the Government there, any Act of State there made, or to be made, ſhould be as binding to the Subjects of that Kingdom, as an Act of Parliament. And did queſtion the ſaid Earl of Cork in the Caſtle-Chamber there, upon pretence of Breach of the ſaid Order of Council-Table: and did ſundry other times, and upon ſundry other occaſions, by his Words and Speeches, arrogate to himſelf a Power above the Fundamental Laws and Eſtabliſhed Government of that Kingdom; and ſcorned the ſaid Laws and Eſtabliſhed Government.

V. That according to ſuch his Declarations and Speeches, the ſaid Earl of Strafford did uſe and exerciſe a Power above, and againſt, and to the ſubverſion of the ſaid Fundamental Laws and Eſtabliſhed Government of the ſaid Realm of Ireland; extending ſuch his Power to the Goods, Freeholds, Inheritances, Liberties, and Lives of his Majeſty's Subjects of the ſaid Realm: and namely, the ſaid Earl of Strafford, the 12th Day of December, 1635. in the time of full Peace, did in the ſaid Realm of Ireland give, and procure to be given, againſt the Lord Mountnorris, (then and yet a Peer of the ſaid Realm of Ireland, and then Vice-Treaſurer and Receiver-General of the Realm of Ireland, and Treaſurer at War, and one of the principal Secretaries of State, and Keeper of the Privy Signet of the ſaid Kingdom) a Sentence of Death by a Council of War, called together by the ſaid Earl of Strafford without any Warrant or Authority of Law, or Offence deſerving any ſuch Puniſhment. And he the ſaid Earl did alſo at Dublin, within the ſaid Realm of Ireland, in the Month of March, in the fourteenth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, without any legal or due Proceedings or Tryal, give, and cauſe to be given, a Sentence of Death againſt one other of his Majeſty's Subjects, whoſe Name is yet unknown; and cauſed him to be put to death in execution of the ſame Sentence.

VI. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford, without any legal Proceedings, and upon a Paper Petition of Richard Rolſton, did cauſe the ſaid Lord Mountnorris to be diſſeized, and put out of poſſeſſion of his Freehold and Inheritance of his Mannor of Tymore in the County of Armagh, in the Kingdom of Ireland, the ſaid Lord Mountnorris having been eighteen Years before in quiet poſſeſſion thereof.

VII. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford, in the Term of Holy Trinity, in the thirteenth Year of his now Majeſty's Reign, did cauſe a Caſe, commonly called The Caſe of Tenures upon defective Titles, to be made and drawn up without any Jury or Tryal, or other legal Proceſs, and without the Conſent of Parties; and did then procure the Judges of the ſaid Realm of Ireland, to deliver their Opinions and Reſolutions to that Caſe: and by colour of ſuch Opinion, did without any legal Proceeding cauſe Thomas Lord Dillon, a Peer of the ſaid Realm of Ireland, to be put out of the Poſſeſſion of divers Lands and Tenements, being his Freehold, in the Counties of Mayo and Roſcommon, in the ſaid Kingdom: And divers other of his Majeſty's Subjects to be put out of Poſſeſſion, and diſſeized of their Freehold, by colour of the ſame Reſolution, without legal Proceedings; whereby many hundreds of his Majeſty's Subjects were undone, and their Families utterly ruinated.

VIII. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford, upon a Petition of Sir John Gifford Knight, the firſt Day of February, in the ſaid thirteenth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, without any legal Proceſs, made a Decree or Order againſt Adam Viſcount Loftus of Ely, a Peer of the ſaid Realm of Ireland, and Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and did cauſe the ſaid Viſcount to be impriſoned, and kept cloſe Priſoner, on pretence of Diſobedience to the ſaid Decree or Order.

And the ſaid Earl, without any Authority, and contrary to his Commiſſion, required and commanded the ſaid Lord Viſcount to yield up unto him the great Seal of the Realm of Ireland, which was then in his cuſtody by his Majeſty's Command, and impriſoned the ſaid Chancellor for not obeying ſuch his Command.

And without any legal Proceeding, did in the ſame thirteenth Year impriſon George Earl of Kildare, a Peer of Ireland, againſt Law, thereby to enforce him to ſubmit his Title to the Mannor and Lordſhip of Caſtleleigh in the Queen's County, (being of great yearly Value) to the ſaid Earl of Strafford's Will and Pleaſure, and kept him a year Priſoner for the ſaid cauſe; two months whereof he kept him cloſe Priſoner, and refuſed to enlarge him, notwithſtanding his Majeſty's Letters for his Enlargement, to the ſaid Earl of Strafford directed.

And upon a Petition exhibited in October, Anno Domini 1635, by Thomas Hibbots, againſt Dame Mary Hibbots Widow, to him the ſaid Earl of Strafford; the ſaid Earl of Strafford recommended the ſaid Petition to the Council-Table of Ireland, where the moſt part of the Council gave their Vote and Opinion for the ſaid Lady: but the ſaid Earl finding fault herewith, cauſed an Order to be entred againſt the ſaid Lady, and threatned her that if ſhe refuſed to ſubmit thereunto, he would impriſon her, and fine her Five Hundred Pounds; that if ſhe continued obſtinate, he would continue her Impriſonment, and double her Fine every month. By means whereof ſhe was enforced to relinquiſh her Eſtate in the Lands queſtioned in the ſaid Petition, which ſhortly after were conveyed to Sir Robert Meredith, to the uſe of the ſaid Earl of Strafford.

And the ſaid Earl in like manner did impriſon divers others of his Majeſty's Subjects, upon pretence of Diſobedience to his Orders, Decrees, and other illegal Commands by him made for pretended Debts, Titles of Lands, and other Cauſes, in an arbitrary and extrajudicial Courſe, upon Paper-Petitions to him preferred, and no Cauſe legally depending.

IX. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford, the ſixteenth Day of February, in the twelfth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, aſſuming to himſelf a Power above and againſt Law, took upon him by a general Warrant under his Hand, to give power to the Lord Biſhop of Downe and Connor, his Chancellor or Chancellors, and their ſeveral Officers thereto to be appointed, to attach and arreſt the Bodies of all ſuch of the meaner and poorer ſort, who after Citation ſhould either refuſe to appear before them, or appearing, ſhould omit or deny to perform, or undergo all lawful Decrees, Sentences, and Orders, iſſued, impoſed, or given out againſt them, and them to commit, and keep in the next Goal, until they ſhould either perform ſuch Sentences, or put in ſufficient Bail, to ſhew ſome reaſon before the Council-Table, of ſuch their Contempt and Neglect. And the ſaid Earl, the Day and Year laſt mentioned, ſigned and iſſued a Warrant to that effect; and made the like Warrants to ſeveral other Biſhops, and their Chancellors, in the ſaid Realm of Ireland, to the ſame effect.

X. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford being Lord Lieutenant, or Deputy of Ireland, procured the Cuſtoms of the Merchandize exported out, and imported into that Realm, to be farmed to his own uſe.

And in the ninth Year of his now Majeſty's Reign, he having then Intereſt in the ſaid Cuſtoms, (to advance his own Gain and Lucre) did cauſe and procure the native Commodities of Ireland to be rated in the Book of Rates for the Cuſtoms (according to which the Cuſtoms were uſually gathered) at far greater Values and Prices than in truth they were worth; that is to ſay, every Hide at twenty Shillings, which in truth was worth but five Shillings; every Stone of Wool at thirteen Shillings four Pence, though the ſame were really worth but five Shillings, at the utmoſt nine Shillings: by which means the Cuſtom, which before was but a twentieth part of the true Value of the Commodity, was enhanced ſometimes a fifth part, and ſometimes to a fourth, and ſometimes to a third part of the true Value, to the great Oppreſſion of the Subjects, and Decay of Merchandize.

XI. That the ſaid Earl, in the ninth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, did by his own Will and Pleaſure, and for his own Lucre, reſtrain the Exportation of the Commodities of that Kingdom without his Licence; as namely, Pipe-ſtaves, and other Commodities: and then raiſed great Sums of Money for Licences of Exportation of thoſe Commodities, and Diſpenſation of the ſaid Reſtraints impoſed on them; by which means the Pipe-ſtaves were raiſed from four Pound ten Shillings, or Five Pound per Thouſand, to ten Pound, and ſometimes eleven Pound per. Thouſand. And other Commodities were enhanced in the like proportion, and by the ſame means, by him the ſaid Earl.

XII. That the ſaid Earl, being Lord Deputy of Ireland, on the ninth Day of January, in the thirteenth Year of his now Majeſty's Reign, did then under colour to regulate the Importation of Tobacco into the ſaid Realm of Ireland, iſſue a Proclamation in his Majeſty's Name, prohibiting the Importation of Tobacco, without Licence of him and the Council there, from and after the firſt Day of May, Anno Dom. 1638. After which Reſtraint, the ſaid Earl, notwithſtanding the ſaid Reſtraint, cauſed divers great quantities of Tobacco to be imported to his own uſe, and fraughted divers Ships with Tobacco, which he imported to his own uſe: and that if any Ship brought Tobacco into any Port there, the ſaid Earl, and his Agents, uſed to buy the ſame to his own uſe, at their own price; and if that the Owners refuſed to let him have the ſame at Under-values, then they were not permitted to vent the ſame there. By which undue means, the ſaid Earl having gotten the whole Trade of Tobacco into his own hands, he ſold it at great and exceſſive Prices, ſuch as he liſt to impoſe for his own profit.

And the more to aſſure the ſaid Monopoly of Tobacco, he the ſaid Earl, on the three and twentieth Day of February, in the thirteenth Year aforeſaid, did iſſue another Proclamation, commanding that none ſhould put to ſale any Tobacco by wholeſale, from and after the laſt Day of May then next following, but what ſhould be made up into Rolls, and the ſame ſealed with two Seals by himſelf appointed, one at each end of the Roll. And ſuch as was not ſealed, to be ſeized, appointing Sixpence the Pound for a Reward to ſuch Perſons as ſhould ſeize the ſame; and the Perſons in whoſe cuſtody the unſealed Tobacco ſhould be found, to be committed to Goal: which laſt Proclamation was coloured by a Pretence for the reſtraining of the Sale of unwholeſome Tobacco, but it was truly to advance the ſaid Monopoly.

Which Proclamation the ſaid Earl did rigorouſly put in execution, by ſeizing the Goods, fining, impriſoning, whipping, and putting the Offenders againſt the ſame Proclamation on the Pillory; as namely, Barnaby Hubbard, Edward Cavena, John Tumen, and divers others: and made the Officers of State, and Juſtices of Peace, and other Officers, to ſerve him in the compaſſing and executing theſe unjuſt and undue Courſes. By which Cruelties, and unjuſt Monopolies, the ſaid Earl raiſed 100000 l. per annum Gain to himſelf. And yet the ſaid Earl, though he enhanced the Cuſtoms, where it concerned the Merchants in general, yet drew down the Impoſt formerly taken on Tobacco from Sixpence the Pound to Threepence the Pound; it being for his own profit ſo to do.

And the ſaid Earl, by the ſame, and other rigorous and undue means, raiſed ſeveral other Monopolies and unlawful Exactions for his own Gain, viz. on Starch, Iron Pots, Glaſſes, Tobacco-Pipes, and ſeveral other Commodities.

XIII. That Flax being one of the principal and native Commodities of that Kingdom of Ireland, the ſaid Earl having gotten great quantities thereof into his hands, and growing on his own Lands, did iſſue out ſeveral Proclamations, viz. the one dated the one and thirtieth of May, in the twelfth of his Majeſty's Reign; and the other dated the one and thirtieth of January, in the ſame Year: thereby preſcribing and enjoining the working of Flax into Yarn and Thred, and the ordering of the ſame in ſuch ways, wherein the Natives of that Kingdom were unpractiſed and unskilful. Which Proclamations ſo iſſued, were, by his Commands and Warrants to his Majeſty's Juſtices of Peace, and other Officers, and by other rigorous means, put in execution; and the Flax wrought, or ordered in other manner than as the ſaid Proclamation preſcribed, was ſeized and employed to the Uſe of him and his Agents: and thereby the ſaid Earl endeavoured to gain, and did gain in effect, the ſole Sale of that native Commodity.

XIV. That the ſaid Earl, by Proclamation dated the ſixteenth of October, in the fourteenth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, did impoſe upon the Owners, Maſters, Purſers, and Boatſwains of every Ship, a new and unlawful Oath, viz. That they (or two or more of them) immediately after the Arrival of any Ship within any Port or Creek in the ſaid Kingdom of Ireland, ſhould give in a true Invoice of the outward Bulk of Wares and Merchandizes firſt laden aboard them, together with the ſeveral Marks and Number of Goods, and the Qualities and Condition of the ſaid Goods, as far as to them ſhould be known; the Names of the ſeveral Merchants Proprietors of the ſaid Goods, and the Place from whence they were fraughted, and whither they were bound to diſcharge: which Proclamation was accordingly put in execution, and ſundry Perſons enforced to take the ſaid unlawful Oath.

XV. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford traitorouſly and wickedly deviſed and contrived, by Force of Arms, and in a warlike manner, to ſubdue the Subjects of the ſaid Realm of Ireland, and to bring them under his tyrannical Power and Will; and in purſuance of his wicked and traitorous Purpoſes aforeſaid, the ſaid Earl of Strafford, in the eighth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, did, by his own Authority, without any Warrant or Colour of Law, tax and impoſe great Sums of Money upon the Towns of Baltimore, Baudenbridge, Talowe, and divers other Towns and Places in the ſaid Realm of Ireland; and did cauſe the ſame to be levied upon the Inhabitants of thoſe Towns by Troops of Soldiers, with Force and Arms, in a warlike manner. And on the ninth Day of March, in the twelfth Year of his now Majeſty's Reign, traitorouſly did give Authority unto Robert Savile, a Serjeant at Arms, and to the Captains of the Companies of Soldiers in ſeveral parts of that Realm, to ſend ſuch numbers of Soldiers to lie on the Lands and Houſes of ſuch as would not conform to his Orders, until they ſhould render obedience to his ſaid Orders and Warrants; and after ſuch Submiſſion, (and not before) the ſaid Soldiers to return to their Gariſons. And did alſo iſſue the like Warrants unto divers others, which Warrants were in warlike manner, with Force and Arms, put in execution accordingly; and by ſuch warlike means did force divers of his Majeſty's Subjects of that Realm, to ſubmit themſelves to his unlawful Commands.

And in the ſaid twelfth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, the ſaid Earl of Strafford did traitorouſly cauſe certain Troops of Horſe and Foot, armed in warlike Manner, and in warlike Array, with Force and Arms, to expel Richard Butler from the Poſſeſſion of the Mannor of Caſtle-Cumber, in the Territory of Idough, in the ſaid Realm of Ireland; and did likewiſe, and in like warlike manner, expel divers of his Majeſty's Subjects from their Houſes, Families, and Poſſeſſions; as namely, Edward O-Brenman, Owen Oberman, John Brenman, Patrick Oberman, Sir Cyprian Horſefield, and divers others, to the number of about an hundred Families; and took and impriſoned them and their Wives, and carried them Priſoners to Dublin, and there detained, until they did yield up, ſurrender, or releaſe their reſpective Eſtates and Rights.

And the ſaid Earl, in like warlike manner, hath during his Government of the ſaid Kingdom of Ireland, ſubdued divers others of his Majeſty's Subjects there to his Will; and thereby, and by the means aforeſaid, hath levied War within the ſaid Realm againſt his Majeſty and his liege People of that Kingdom.

XVI. That the Earl of Strafford, the two and twentieth of February, in the ſeventh Year of his Majeſty's Reign, intending to oppreſs the ſaid Subjects of Ireland, did make a Propoſition, and obtained from his Majeſty an Allowance thereof, That no Complaint of Injuſtice or Oppreſſion done in Ireland, ſhould be received in England againſt any, unleſs it appeared that the Party made firſt his Addreſs to him the ſaid Earl: and the ſaid Earl having by ſuch uſurped, tyrannical, and exorbitant Power, expreſſed in the former Articles, deſtroyed and oppreſſed the Peers, and other Subjects of that Kingdom of Ireland, in their Lives, Conſciences, Lands, Liberties and Eſtates; the ſaid Earl, to the intent the better to maintain and ſtrengthen his ſaid Power, and to bring the People into a Diſaffection of his Majeſty, as aforeſaid, did uſe his Majeſty's Name in the Execution of the ſaid Power.

And to prevent the Subjects of that Realm of all means of Complaints to his Majeſty, and of Redreſs againſt him and his Agents, did iſſue a Proclamation, bearing date the ſeventeenth Day of September, in the eleventh Year of his Majeſty's Reign, thereby commanding all the Nobility, Undertakers, and others who held Eſtates and Offices in the ſaid Kingdom, (except ſuch as were employed in his Majeſty's Service, or attending in England by his ſpecial Command) to make their perſonal Reſidence in the ſaid Kingdom of Ireland, and not to depart thence without Licence of himſelf.

And the ſaid Earl hath ſince iſſued other Proclamations to the ſame purpoſe, by means whereof the Subjects of the ſaid Realm are reſtrained from ſeeking Relief againſt the Oppreſſions of the ſaid Earl, without his Licence; which Proclamations the ſaid Earl hath by ſeveral rigorous ways, as by Fine, Impriſonment, and otherwiſe, put in execution on his Majeſty's Subjects; as namely, one —— Parry, and others, who came over only to complain of the Exorbitances and Oppreſſions of the ſaid Earl.

XVII. That the ſaid Earl having, by ſuch means as aforeſaid, ſubverted the Government and Laws of the Kingdom of Ireland, did, in March, in the ſixteenth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, in ſcandal of his Majeſty's Government of all his Kingdoms, and in further execution of his wicked Purpoſes aforeſaid, ſpeaking of the Army in Ireland, declare, That his Majeſty was ſo well pleaſed with the Army of Ireland, and the Conſequences thereof, that his Majeſty would certainly make the ſame a Pattern for all his three Kingdoms.

XVIII. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford, for the better effecting of his traitorous Deſigns and wicked Purpoſes, did endeavour to draw a Dependency upon himſelf of the Papiſts in both Kingdoms of England and Ireland; and to that end, during the time of his Government in Ireland, he reſtored divers Fryeries and Maſs-Houſes (which had been formerly ſuppreſſed by the precedent Deputies of that Kingdom; two of which Houſes are in the City of Dublin, and had been aſſigned to the Uſe of the Univerſity there) to the pretended Owners thereof, who have ſince employed the ſame to the Exerciſe of the Popiſh Religion.

And in the Months of May and June laſt, the ſaid Earl did raiſe an Army in the ſaid Realm, conſiſting of 8000 Foot, all of which, except one, or thereabouts, were Papiſts; and the ſaid one thouſand were drawn out of the old Army there, conſiſting of two thouſand Foot, and in their places Places there were a thouſand Papiſts, or thereabouts, put into the ſaid old Army by the ſaid Earl.

And the more to engage and tie the ſaid new Army of Papiſts to himſelf, and to encourage them, and to diſcourage and weary out the ſaid old Army, the ſaid Earl did ſo provide, that the ſaid new Army of Papiſts were duly paid, and had all Neceſſaries provided for them, and permitted the Exerciſe of their Religion; but the ſaid old Army were for the ſpace of one whole Year and upwards unpaid.

And the ſaid Earl being appointed a Commiſſioner within eleven ſeveral Counties of the Northern Parts of England, for compounding with Recuſants for their Forfeitures due to his Majeſty, which Commiſſion beareth Date the 8th Day of July, in the fifth Year of his Majeſty's Reign that now is; and being alſo Receiver of the Compoſition-Money thereby ariſing, and of other Debts, Duties, and Penalties, by reaſon of Recuſancy within the ſaid Counties, for his Majeſty's Uſe, by Letters Patents dated the 9th Day of the ſame July; he, to engage the ſaid Recuſants to him, did compound with them at low and under Rates, and provided that they ſhould be diſcharged of all Proceedings againſt them in all his Majeſty's Courts, both Temporal and Eccleſiaſtical, in manifeſt breach of, and contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, in that behalf eſtabliſhed.

XIX. That the ſaid Earl having taxed and levied the ſaid Impoſitions, and raiſed the ſaid Monopolies, and committed the ſaid other Oppreſſions in his Majeſty's Name, and as by his Majeſty's Royal Command; he, the ſaid Earl, in May, the fifteenth Year of his Majeſty's Reign, did of his own Authority contrive and frame a new and unuſual Oath, by the Purport whereof, among many other Things, the Party taking the ſaid Oath was to ſwear, That he ſhould not proteſt againſt any his Majeſty's Royal Commands, but ſubmit himſelf in all due Obedience thereunto. Which Oath he ſo contrived, to inforce the ſame on the Subjects of the Scotiſh Nation inhabiting in Ireland; and out of a Hatred to the ſaid Nation, and to put them to a Diſcontent with his Majeſty and his Government there; and compelled divers of his Majeſty's ſaid Subjects there to take the ſaid Oath againſt their Wills; and of ſuch as refuſed to take the ſaid Oath, ſome he grievouſly fined and impriſoned, and others he deſtroyed and exiled; and namely, the 10th of October, Anno Dom. 1639, he fined Henry Steward and his Wife, who refuſed to take the ſaid Oath, 5000 l. a-piece, and their two Daughters and James Gray 3000 l. a-piece, and impriſoned them for not paying the ſaid Fines: the ſaid Henry Steward, his Wife, and Daughters, and James Gray, being the King's liege People of the Scotiſh Nation. And divers others he uſed in like manner. And the ſaid Earl upon that occaſion did declare, That the ſaid Oath did not only oblige them in point of Allegiance to his Majeſty, and Acknowledgment of his Supremacy only, but to the Ceremonies and Government of the Church eſtabliſhed, and to be eſtabliſhed by his Majeſty's Royal Authority; and ſaid, That the Refuſers to obey he would proſecute to the Blood.

XX. That the ſaid Earl hath in the 15th and 16th Years of his Majeſty's Reign, and divers Years paſt, laboured and endeavoured to breed in his Majeſty an ill Opinion of his Subjects, namely, of thoſe of the Scotiſh Nation; and divers and ſundry times, and eſpecially ſince the Pacification made by his Majeſty with his ſaid Subjects of Scotland in Summer, in the 15th Year of his Majeſty's Reign, he the ſaid Earl did labour and endeavour to perſuade, incite, and provoke his Majeſty to an offenſive War againſt his ſaid Subjects of the Scotiſh Nation. And the ſaid Earl, by his Counſels, Actions, and Endeavours, hath been and is a principal and chief Incendiary of the War and Diſcord between his Majeſty and his Subjects of England and the ſaid Subjects of Scotland; and hath declared and adviſed his Majeſty, that the Demands made by the Scots, in their Parliament, were a ſufficient Cauſe of War againſt them.

The ſaid Earl having formerly expreſſed the Height and Rancour of his Mind towards his Majeſty's Subjects of the Scotiſh Nation, viz. the 10th Day of October, in the 15th Year of his Majeſty's Reign, he ſaid, That the Nation of the Scots were Rebels and Traytors; and he being then about to come to England, he then further ſaid, That if it pleaſed his Maſter (meaning his Majeſty) to ſend him back again, he would root out of the ſaid Kingdom (meaning the ſaid Kingdom of Ireland) the Scotiſh Nation both Root and Branch, ſome Lords and others, who had taken the ſaid Oath in the precedent Article, only excepted: And the ſaid Earl hath cauſed divers of the Ships and Goods of the Scots to be ſtayed, ſeized, and moleſted, to the intent to ſet on the ſaid War.

XXI. That the ſaid Earl of Strafford, ſhortly after his Speeches mentioned in the laſt precedent Articles, to wit, in the 15th Year of his Majeſty's Reign, came into this Realm of England, and was made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and continued his Government of that Kingdom by a Deputy; at his arrival here, finding that his Majeſty with much Wiſdom and Goodneſs had compoſed the Troubles in the North, and had a Pacification with his Subjects of Scotland, he laboured by all means to procure his Majeſty to break that Pacification, incenſing his Majeſty againſt his Subjects of that Kingdom, and the Proceeding of the Parliament there.

And having incited his Majeſty to an offenſive War againſt his Subjects of Scotland by Sea and Land; and by Pretext thereof, to raiſe Forces for the Maintenance of that War; he counſelled his Majeſty to call a Parliament in England: yet the ſaid Earl intended, that if the ſaid Proceedings of that Parliament ſhould not be ſuch as would ſtand with the ſaid Earl of Strafford's miſchievous Deſigns, he would then procure his Majeſty to break the ſame, and by ways of Force and Power to raiſe Moneys upon the Subjects of this Kingdom. And for the Encouragement of his Majeſty to hearken to his Advice, he did before his Majeſty and his Privy-Council, then ſitting in Council, make large Declaration, That he would ſerve his Majeſty in any other Way, in caſe the Parliament ſhould not ſupply him.

XXII. That in the Month of March, before the beginning of the laſt Parliament, the ſaid Earl of Strafford went into Ireland, and procured the Parliament of that Kingdom to declare their Aſſiſtance in a War againſt the Scots, and gave Directions for the raiſing of an Army there, conſiſting of 8000 Foot, and 1000 Horſe, being for the moſt part Papiſts. And confederating with one Sir George Ratcliffe, did, together with him the ſaid Sir George, traitorously conspire to employ the said Army for the Ruin and Destruction of the Kingdom of England, and of his Majesty's Subjects, and of altering and subverting of the fundamental Laws and established Government of this Kingdom.

And shortly after the said Earl of Strafford returned into England, and to sundry Person declared his Opinion to be, That his Majesty should first try the Parliament here; and if that did not supply him according to his Occasions, he might use then his Prerogative as he pleased, to levy what he needed; and that he should be acquitted both of God and Man, if he took some other Courses to supply himself, though it were against the Wills of his Subjects.

XXIII. That upon the 13th Day of April last the Parliament of England met, and the Commons House (then being the Representative Body of all the Commons in the Kingdom) did, according to the Trust reposed in them, enter into Debate and Consideration of the great Grievances of this Kingdom, both in respect of Religion and the publick Liberty of the Kingdom; and his Majesty referring chiefly to the said Earl of Strafford and the Archbishop of Canterbury the ordering and disposing of all Matters concerning the Parliament; he the said Earl of Strafford, with the Assistance of the said Archbishop, did procure his Majesty by sundry Speeches and Messages to urge the said Commons House to enter into some Resolution for his Majesty's Supply, for maintenance of his War against his Subjects of Scotland, before any course taken for the Relief of the great and pressing Grievances wherewith this Kingdom was then afflicted. Whereupon a Demand was then made from his Majesty of twelve Subsidies, for the Release of Ship-Money only. And while the said Commons then assembled (with Expression of great Affection to his Majesty and his Service) were in Debate and Consideration concerning some Supply, before any Resolution by them made, he the said Earl of Strafford, with the Help and Assistance of the said Archbishop, did procure his Majesty to dissolve the said Parliament upon the 5th Day of May last. And upon the same Day the said Earl of Strafford did treacherously, falsly, and maliciously endeavour to incense his Majesty against his loving and faithful Subjects, who had been Members of the said House of Commons, by telling his Majesty they had denied to supply him. And afterwards, upon the same Day, did traitorously and wickedly counsel and advise his Majesty to this effect, viz. That having tried the Affections of his People, he was loose and absolved from all Rules of Government, and that he was to do every thing that Power would admit; and that his Majesty had tried all Ways, and was refused, and should be acquitted towards God and Man; and that he had an Army in Ireland, (meaning the Army above mentioned, consisting of Papists, his Dependants, as is aforesaid) which he might imploy to reduce this Kingdom.

XXIV. That in the same Month of May he, the said Earl of Strafford, falsly, traitorously, and maliciously published and declared before others of his Majesty's Privy-Council, That the Parliament of England had forsaken the King; and that in denying to supply the King, they had given him advantage to supply himself by other ways. And several other times he did maliciously, wickedly, and falsly publish and declare, That seeing the Parliament had refused to supply his Majesty in the ordinary and usual way, the King might provide for the Kingdom in such ways as he should hold fit; and that he was not to suffer himself to be master'd by the Frowardness and Undutifulness of the People. And having so maliciously slandered the said late House of Commons, he did, with the Help and Advice of the said Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Lord Finch, late Lord-Keeper of the Great-Seal of England, cause to be printed and published in his Majesty's Name a false and scandalous Book, entituled, His Majesty's Declaration of the Causes that moved him to dissolve the last Parliament, full of bitter and malicious Invectives, and false and scandalous Aspersions against the said House of Commons.

XXV. That not long after the Dissolution of the said last Parliament (viz. in the Months of May and June) he, the said Earl of Strafford, did advise the King to go on vigorously in levying the Ship-Money, and did procure the Sheriffs of several Counties to be sent for, for not levying the Ship-Money, divers of which were threaten'd by him to be sued in the Star-Chamber; and afterwards, by his Advice, they were sued in Star-Chamber for not levying the same; and divers of his Majesty's loving Subjects were sent for and imprisoned, by his Advice, for that and other illegal Payments.

And a great Loan of a hundred thousand Pounds was demanded of the City of London; and the Lord Mayor, and Sheriffs, and Aldermen of the said City were often sent for, by his Advice, to the Council-Table, to give an Account of their Proceedings in raising of Ship-Money, and furthering of that Loan; and were required to certify the Names of such Inhabitants of the said City as were fit to lend: which they with much Humility refusing to do, he, the said Earl of Strafford, did use these and the like Speeches, viz. That they deserved to be put to Fine and Ransom; and that no Good would be done with them till an Example were made of them, and that they were laid by the Heels, and some of the Aldermen hanged up.

XXVI. That the said Earl, by his wicked Counsels, having brought his Majesty into excessive Charge, without any just Cause, he did in the Month of July last (for the Support of the said great Charges) counsel and approve two dangerous and wicked Projects, viz.

To seize upon the Bullion and the Money in the Mint:

And to imbase his Majesty's Coin with the Mixtures of Brass.

And accordingly, he procured one hundred and thirty thousand Pounds which was then in the Mint, and belonged to divers Merchants, Strangers, and others, to be seized on and stayed to his Majesty's Use. And when divers Merchants of London, Owners of the said Bullion and Money, came to his House to let him understand the great Mischief that Course would produce here and in other Parts, and what Prejudice it would be to the Kingdom, by discrediting the Mint, and hindring the Importation of Bullion; he, the said Earl, told them, That the City of London dealt undutifully and unthankfully with his Majesty; and that they were more ready to help the Rebels than to help his Majesty; and that if any Hurt came to them, they may thank themselves; and that it was the Course of other Princes to make use of such Moneys to serve their Occasions.

And

And when in the ſame Month of July the Officers of his Majeſty's Mint came to him, and gave him divers Reaſons againſt the imbaſing the ſaid Money, he told them, That the French King did uſe to ſend Commiſſaries of Horſe with Commiſſion to ſearch into Mens Eſtates, and to peruſe their Accounts, that ſo they may know what to levy of them by Force, which they did accordingly levy. And turning to the Lord Cottington, then preſent, ſaid, That this was a Point worthy of his Lordſhip's Conſideration: Meaning this Courſe of the French King to raiſe Moneys by Force, was a Point worthy of his Lordſhip's Conſideration.

XXVII. That in or about the Month of Auguſt laſt he was made Lieutenant-General of all his Majeſty's Forces in the North, prepared againſt the Scots; and being at York, did then in the Month of September, by his own Authority, and without any lawful Warrant, impoſe a Tax on his Majeſty's Subjects in the County of York of Eight-pence per diem, for Maintenance of every Soldier of the Trained Bands of that County, which Sums of Money he cauſed to be levied by Force. And to the end to compel his Majeſty's Subjects out of Fear and Terror to yield to the Payment of the ſame, he did declare, That he would commit them that refuſed the Payment thereof, and the Soldiers ſhould be ſatisfied out of their Eſtates; and they that refuſed it, were in very little better Condition than of High Treaſon.

XXVIII. That in the Months of September and October laſt, he the ſaid Earl of Strafford being certified of the Scotiſh Army coming into the Kingdom, and he the ſaid Earl of Strafford being Lieutenant-General of his Majeſty's Army, he did not provide for the Defence of the Town of Newcaſtle, as he ought to have done, but ſuffered the ſame to be loſt, that ſo he might the more incenſe the Engliſh againſt the Scots.

And for the ſame wicked Purpoſe, and out of a malicious Deſire to engage the Kingdoms of England and Scotland in a National and Bloody War, he did write to the Lord Conway, the General of the Horſe, and under the ſaid Earl's Command, That he ſhould fight with the Scotiſh Army at the Paſſage over the Tine, whatſoever ſhould follow; notwithſtanding that the ſaid Lord Conway had formerly by Letters informed the ſaid Earl, that his Majeſty's Army, then under his Command, was not of Force ſufficient to encounter the Scots: by which Advice of his he did, contrary to the Duty of his Place, betray his Majeſty's Army, then under his Command, to apparent Danger and Loſs.

All and every which Words, Counſels, and Actions of the ſaid Earl of Strafford were ſpoken, given, and done by him, the ſaid Earl of Strafford, traitorouſly, and contrary to his Allegiance to our Sovereign Lord the King, and with an Intention and Endeavour to alienate and withdraw the Hearts and Affections of the King's liege People of all his Realms from his Majeſty, and to ſet Diviſion between them, and to ruin and deſtroy his Majeſty, and his Majeſty's ſaid Kingdoms; for which they do further impeach him the ſaid Thomas Earl of Strafford of High-Treaſon againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. And he, the ſaid Earl of Strafford, was Lord Deputy of Ireland, or Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and Lieutenant-General of the Army there under his moſt excellent Majeſty, and a ſworn Privy-Counſellor to his Majeſty for his Kingdoms, both of England and Ireland, and Lord Preſident of the North, during the Time that all and every the Crimes and Offences, before ſet forth, were done and committed; and he, the ſaid Earl, was Lieutenant-General of his Majeſty's Army in the North Parts of England during the Time that the Crimes and Offences, in the 27th and 28th Articles ſet forth, were done and committed.

Anſwer to the Twenty Eight Special Articles.

TO the Firſt Article, he ſaith, He conceives that the Commiſſion and Inſtruction differ not from thoſe formerly granted, but refers to them; and that ſuch Alterations and Additions as were made, were (for ought he knoweth) rather for the explanation, than for the enlarging of the Juriſdiction: the Care whereof was left to the Secretary of that Council, and to the King's Learned Counſel, to be paſſed for the Good of the King's Service, and the publick Welfare of that Province. For the Legality of the Proceedings, divers eminent Lawyers were joined with the Preſident, who, for the Legal Parts, was by them to be directed. He did not adviſe or procure the Enlargement of the Commiſſion and Inſtructions, and he believeth nothing hath been practiſed ſince, that was not in former Times contained in former Commiſſions, under general words. He believeth Sir Conyers Darcy was lawfully fined for Miſdemeanours, as a Juſtice of Peace; and hath heard, he being in Ireland, that Sir John Boucher was fined for ſome great Abuſe at the King's being at York, going into Scotland to be crowned: to the Proceedings he refers himſelf. He denies that he hath done any thing by that Commiſſion or Inſtruction, other than he conceived he might by virtue thereof lawfully do.

To the Second Article, He denieth the ſpeaking of thoſe words: but ſaith, That 30, 40 l. or more, being returned as Iſſues out of the Exchequer, againſt ſome that had compounded for Knighthood for 10 l. or 30 l. ſo as the Iſſues far exceeded the Compoſition, and yet would next time have been increaſed; the ſaid Earl upon this occaſion ſaid, That now they might ſee, that the Little-finger of the Law was heavier than the King's Loins; which he ſpake to nouriſh good Affections in them towards his Majeſty, and not to threaten or terrify any, as the Article ſuppoſed.

To the Third Article, he ſaith, Ireland is not governed by the ſame Laws that this Kingdom is, unleſs it be meant by the Common Laws; their Cuſtoms, Statutes, Execution of Martial Laws, Proceedings at Council-Board very much differ; they ſpake not the words in the Article to any ſuch intent. He ſaith, It might be fit enough for him to remember them of the great Obligation they had to the King and his Progenitors, that ſuffered them, being a conquered Nation, to enjoy Freedom and Laws, as their own People of this Kingdom: and it might be that upon ſome ſuch occaſion, he ſaid to thoſe of Dublin, That ſome of their Charters were void and nothing worth, and did not bind his Majeſty farther than he pleaſed; which he believes to be true, having been formerly ſo informed by his Majeſty's Learned Counſel upon ſundry occaſions.

To

To the Fourth, he ſaith, That the legal and ordinary Proceedings at Council-Table are, and time out of mind have been by Petition, Anſwers, Examination of Witneſſes, as in other Courts of Juſtice concerning Britiſh Plantations, the Church and Caſes hence recommended by the King for the time being, and in Appeals from other Courts there; and the Council-Board have always puniſhed Contempts to Orders there made, to Proclamations, and Acts of State, by Fine and Impriſonment. He ſaith, That it might be he told the Earl of Cork, that he would impriſon him if he diſobeyed the Orders of the Council-Table, and that he would not have Lawyers diſpute or queſtion thoſe Orders, and that they ſhould bind; but remembreth not the Compariſon of Acts of Parliament: and he hath been ſo far from ſcorning the Laws, that he hath endeavoured to maintain them. The Suit againſt the Earl in the Caſtle-Chamber, was concerning the Poſſeſſions of the College of Youghall, worth 6 or 700 l. which he had endeavoured to get, by cauſing of unlawful Oaths to be taken, and very undue means: the matter proceeded to Examination and Publication of Witneſſes; and after, upon the Earl of Cork's humble Suit, and Payment of 15000 l. to his Majeſty, and his Acknowledgment of his Miſdemeanours, obtained a Pardon, and the Bill and Proceedings were taken off the Files: and he remembers not any Suit for breach of any Order made at Council-Table.

To the Fifth, he ſaith, The Deputies and Generals of the Army have always executed Martial Law, which is neceſſary there; and the Army, and the Members thereof, have been long time governed by printed Orders, according to which, divers, by Sentence of the Council of War, have formerly been put to death, as well in the time of Peace as War. The Lord Mountnorris being a Captain of a Company in the Army, for mutinous words againſt the ſaid Earl, General of that Army, and upon two of thoſe antient Orders was proceeded againſt by a Council of War, being the principal Officers of the Army, about twenty in number, and by them, upon clear Evidence, ſentenced to death: wherein the ſaid Earl was no Judge, but laboured ſo effectually with his Majeſty, that he obtained the Lord Mountnorris's Pardon; who, by that Sentence, ſuffered no perſonal Hurt or Damage, ſave about two days Impriſonment. And as to the other Perſons, he can make no Anſwer thereunto, no Particulars being deſcribed.

To the Sixth, he ſaith, The Suit had depended many Years in Chancery; and the Plaintiff complaining of that Delay, the ſaid Earl upon a Petition, (as in ſuch Caſes hath been uſual) calling to him the then Maſter of the Rolls, the now Lord Chancellor, and the Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, upon the Proofs in the Chancery, decreed for the Plaintiff; to which he refers himſelf: and it may be the Lord Mountnorris was thereupon put out of his Poſſeſſion.

To the Seventh, he ſaith, His Majeſty being intitled to divers Lands, upon an Inquiſition found, Proclamation was made, That ſuch as claimed by Patent ſhould come in by a day, and have their Patents allowed, as if they had been found in the Inquiſition; and accordingly divers were allowed. The Lord Dillon produced his Patent, which being queſtionable, he conſented, and deſired that a Caſe might be drawn; which was drawn by Counſel, and argued, and the Judges delivered their Opinions: but the Lord Dillon, nor any other, were bound thereby, or put out of Poſſeſſion; but might have traverſed the Office, or otherwiſe legally have proceeded, that Caſe or Opinion notwithſtanding.

To the Eighth, he ſaith, That upon Sir John Gifford's Petition to the King, his Majeſty referred it to the Deputy and Council of Ireland, where the matter proceeded legally to a Decree againſt the Lord Loſtus; and upon his Appeal, that Decree, by his Majeſty and his Council of England, was confirmed: to which Decree and Order he refers himſelf, believing the Lord Loſtus was committed for diſobeying that Decree, and for Continuance in Contempt committed cloſe Priſoner. He ſaith, That the Lord Loſtus having committed divers Contempts, the Council by Warrant required him to appear at the Board, and to bring the Great Seal with him; which Order he diſobeyed, and was ſhortly after committed, and the Great Seal was delivered up by his Majeſty's expreſs Command, and not otherwiſe. And an Information was exhibited in the Star-Chamber, for grievous Oppreſſions done by the Lord Loſtus as Chancellor; whereof he was ſo far from juſtifying, as that he ſubmitted, deſiring to be an Object of his Majeſty's Mercy, and not of his Juſtice.

The E. of Kildare for not performing of an Award made by King James, and of an Award made in purſuance thereof by the ſaid Earl of Strafford, upon a Reference from his Majeſty, was by the Deputy and Council committed: and a Letter being unduly obtained, he did not thereupon enlarge him; but upon another Letter, and Submiſſion to the Orders, as by the King was directed, he was enlarged.

The Lady Hibbots, and one Hoy her Son, having upon a Petition, Anſwer, Examination of Witneſſes, and other Proceedings at Council-Board, been found to have committed foul Abuſes by Fraud and Circumvention, to have made a Bargain with the Petitioner Hibbots, for Lands of a great value, for a ſmall Sum of Money; was ordered to deliver up the Writing, no Aſſurances being perfected, or Money paid; and it's like he threatned her with Commitment if ſhe obeyed not that Order, but denieth that the Lands were after ſold to Sir Robert Meredith to his uſe, or that by any Order by himſelf made, any one hath been impriſoned concerning Freeholds, but for Debts and perſonal things, as ſome have been uſed by all his Predeceſſors in like Cauſes.

To the Ninth, he ſaith, Warrants to ſuch effects have been uſually granted to the Biſhops in Ireland, in the times of all former Deputies; but the Earl not ſatisfied with the Conveniency thereof, refuſed to give any ſuch Warrants in general to the Biſhops as had been formerly done: but being informed that divers in the Dioceſs of Downe gave not fitting Obedience, he granted a Warrant to that Biſhop, whereto he referreth, which was the only Warrant he granted of that nature; and hearing of ſome Complaints of the Execution thereof, he recalled it.

To the Tenth, he ſaith, The Lord Treaſurer Portland offered the Farm of the Cuſtoms for 13000 l.

13000 l. per annum in ſome particular Species, but the Earl of Strafford advanced the ſame Cuſtoms to 15500 l. per annum, and 8000 l. Fine; and by his Majeſty's Command became a Farmer at thoſe Rates propoſed, without addition to thoſe Rates, as by the printed Books 7 Car. Regis may appear. He diſſuaded the Advance of Rates lately propoſed by Sir Abraham Dawes, ſo as it was declined: the Rates of Hides and Wool are moderate, conſideration being had of their true Value, and of the Places whereto they are to be tranſported, and of the Statute made in the time of Queen Elizabeth, and there in force, prohibiting the Exportation of Wool, unleſs they pay to the Crown 5 s. the Stone. The Trade and Shipping of that Kingdom are exceedingly increaſed.

To the Eleventh, he ſaith, Pipe-ſtaves were prohibited in King James's time, and not exported but by Licence from the Lord Treaſurer of England, or Lord Deputy of Ireland, who had 6 s. 8 d. per 1000, and his Secretary 3 s. 4 d. for the Licence: but to reſtrain that Deſtruction of Timber, by Command of his Majeſty, and Advice of his Council, for his Revenue in Ireland, firſt 30 s. then 3 l. The Money was paid to his Majeſty, who hath thereby about 1500 l. per annum; and his Lordſhip loſt about 4 or 500 l. per annum, which his Predeceſſors had for ſuch Licences. This is paid by the Tranſporter, not by the Natives, whoſe Commodity nevertheleſs appears by the Article to be very much increaſed.

To the Twelfth, he ſaith, The Subſidies there are an Inheritance in the Crown by Act of Parliament; 6 d. was paid for Subſidy, and 1 s. 6 d. for Impoſt upon every Pound of Tobacco, and farmed 10 or 20 l. per annum. The Commons in Parliament, 10 Car. Regis, finding the Revenue to be ſhort of the Expence of that Kingdom 24000 l. per annum, petitioned thoſe Grants might be applied to increaſe his Majeſty's Revenue, without calling upon the Subject, but upon urgent Occaſions. Hereupon, upon the Advice of the Committee of the Revenue, and in conſideration of a Proclamation made in England, ſeveral Proclamations were made, and this ſettled in a way, till it could be confirmed by Parliament; for which purpoſe a Bill is tranſmitted, according to the deſire of the Commons, and the Impoſt of Tobacco is let to Contractors for eleven Years, at 5000 l. per annum for the firſt five Years, and 10000 l. per annum for the other ſix Years. And the Earl hath lent Money to forward the buſineſs, and by his Majeſty's Allowance is a Partner; but hath not as yet in two Years laſt paſt had any Accounts thereof, or made benefit thereby. He knoweth of no Whipping, or other Puniſhment; the Farms of the Cuſtoms are better than formerly 2000 l. per annum, five 8 parts whereof is yearly paid unto his Majeſty: the Prices of Tobacco exceed not 2 s. or 2 s. 4 d. the Pound; the ſettling of that Revenue, according to the Petition of the Commons; he hath not raiſed, or countenanced any Monopolies, but oppoſed the ſame.

To the thirteenth, he ſaith, He endeavoured to advance the Manufacture of Linen rather than of Woollen-Cloth, which might prejudice that Trade here: he bought Flax-Seed in the Low-Countries, and ſold it at the ſame rate to ſuch as deſired it; they making their Clothes not above a foot broad, and winding eight or ten Threds from ſeveral Bottoms together; the contrary was twined: their Flax, formerly not above a foot, became a yard in length, and that Soil is fit to bear it, and the People love ſuch eaſy Works. He hath ſet up many Looms, made much Cloth, and ſold it to the loſs of ſome Thouſands of Pounds; but when the State ſaw the Natives would not change their old Courſes for new and better, the Proclamation was declined. What he did was for the publick Good, and had nothing from them that was not fully paid for.

To the Fourteenth, he ſaith, He refers to the Oath and Proclamation, which was ſet forth by the ſaid Earl and Council of State there, at the inſtance of the Farmers of the Cuſtoms, towards the defrauding of the King's Duties being in France, whereof his Majeſty had five eight parts. He never heard any Complaint of the Oath, or of any that refuſed to take it; and conceived it to be lawful, divers of the Council approving it, being Learned Judges of the Law, to whoſe Judgment, for the Legality, he ſubmitted, as well in that, as to other matters of like nature.

To the Fifteenth, He denieth what is in the Article objected; but ſaith, That about the Year 1626, certain Agents authorized in Ireland were ſent into England, and offered and agreed to pay to his Majeſty 120000 l. in ſix Years, towards the maintenance of his Army; and a like Payment of 20000 l. per annum, was after agreed, and continued for three Years longer. The Aſſeſſments were made, and it was ſhortly after, by them and the Lord Faulkland then Deputy, agreed in Ireland, that the Money ſhould not be charged upon Record, but levied by Captains, by Paper-Aſſignments, upon Warrants from the Lord Deputy: and this Courſe was held four Years in the Lord Faulkland's time, and the four Years wherein the Lord Loſtus and the Earl of Cork were Lords Juſtices there; and it held for the remaining Year only, after the Earl of Strafford came thither. But the Earl of Cork having ſpared thoſe Towns, for the benefit of himſelf and Tenants, during the time of his being Juſtice; the Earl of Strafford reduced the Aſſeſſments to what it was made by the Lord Faulkland, and gave way that Sir William St. Lieger, Lord Preſident of Munſter, ſhould take the ſame Arrearages, in ſatisfaction of a Debt due unto him by his Majeſty: and he is confident no Force was uſed in levying the ſame. It hath been uſual to lay Soldiers to levy that Contribution, to ſend Soldiers to apprehend Contemners of Orders made at Council-Board, and the like; and when Out-laws and Rebels have been in the Woods, no Soldiers have in his time been laid, but by the Advice of the Council there. Touching the Caſtle-Chamber, it's a Parcel of the Territory of Idough, whereto the King was intitled by Inquiſition, and the Poſſeſſion eſtabliſhed in a legal way, when the ſaid Earl was in England; and no Soldiers were ſent, but only twelve at the intreaty of Mr. Wanesford, for the ſecurity of his Houſes and Plantations againſt Rebels that then were out, and burned and ſpoiled Houſes thereabouts: and neither Richard Butler's, nor any other Family, were thence expelled by the ſaid Earl from their Eſtates.

To the Sixteenth, he ſaith, There was ſuch a Propoſition, which was juſt, to prevent clamorous Complaints here, which there might be redreſſed; but conceives that by the Laws there, and the Articles ticles known ſince, (by the name of the Articles of Grace, made about fourteen Years ſince) none ought to depart that Kingdom without Licence.

Thereupon, by the Advice of the State, the Proclamations were ſet forth, but not with ſuch intent as in the Article.

He denied Licence only to three, the Earl of Cork, the Lord Mountnorris, and Sir Frederick Hamilton; to the two former, in regard of Criminal Suits then againſt them in the Caſtle-Chamber; to the other, by ſpecial Command from his Majeſty. But ſo ſoon as Sir Frederick ſaid he would complain of the Earl, he made ſuit to his Majeſty that Sir Frederick might come over; which was granted. He conceives ſuch Reſtraint to be neceſſary, and if that be not continued, it will prove of evil conſequence to that Kingdom.

Parry was queſtioned at the Council-Board for Miſdemeanours, and to avoid Sentence, ſecretly went out of the Kingdom; and at his return, for that and other Offences, was fined and impriſoned: to the Sentence thereof he refers, and knows of no other that were impriſoned, as by the Article is charged.

To the Seventeenth, he ſaith, It's like he might ſay, (for the better encouragement of the Officers and Soldiers of the old Iriſh Army, in diſcharge of their ſeveral Duties) that his Majeſty was ſo well ſatisfied in the way and pains they took in uſing and practiſing of their Arms, that in that point he would ſet them as a Pattern to be imitated: and conceives it would not be ill if they were ſo, they being in the opinion of thoſe that have ſeen them exerciſe, very able and expert Soldiers. He ſpake not other words, or to other purpoſe.

To the Eighteenth, he ſaith, When the Earl of Cork was one of the Lords Juſtices, he ſeized ſome Houſes in Dublin, pretending they belonged to Jeſuits and Fryars, without legal Proceedings; which, upon Suits proſecuted at Council-Board, were, according to Juſtice, reſtored to the Owners: but how ſince employed, the Earl of Strafford knoweth not, but endeavoured the utmoſt he could to maintain that Seizure. Touching the 8000 Men, he ſaith, They were raiſed according to the King's Warrant, and that the ſaid Earl left the Care thereof to the Earl of Ormond and others; and what number are Proteſtants, what Papiſts, he knoweth not, but believeth ſuch a Body cannot be there raiſed, without many Papiſts: the greateſt number of the Captains and Officers are Proteſtants, choſen by the ſaid Earl. The thouſand Men were drawn out of the old, to make Officers for the new Army; and believeth the thouſand put to the old Army are Proteſtants, in regard by his expreſs Order no Papiſt is to be admitted there a common Soldier. He never preferred any Captain, Lieutenant, or Enſign to be of that Army that was a Papiſt, and conceives they are duly paid; and believes thoſe newly raiſed exerciſe the Religion no otherwiſe than was practiſed before the Earl's coming thither. He was a Commiſſioner to compound with the Recuſants for their Forfeitures, and endeavoured to be informed of the utmoſt Value of their Eſtates: in four Years he brought that Revenue from 2300 l. to be between 11 and 12000 l. per annum, more than ever was raiſed formerly in ſo ſhort a time; by which faithful dealings for his Majeſty, he procured the hard Opinion of the Recuſants throughout the Kingdom: That out of thoſe Compoſitions he hath paid near 100000 l. into the Exchequer; and they had no other Privileges than what was exerciſed in the Commiſſion, and in former like Commiſſions, and as are in the preſent Commiſſion to the Lord Treaſurer and others.

To the Nineteenth, he ſaith, The laſt Summer was twelve months, when the Engliſh and Scotch lay in the fields near Berwick, the Earl and Council of Ireland having a general Notion thereof, were in fear that the Scots in Ulſter (being almoſt 100000 in number) might be drawn to ſide with the Covenanters; and adviſing how to ſecure that Kingdom, the Principal of the Nation of Scotland, living in Ireland, came to Dublin, and petitioned, That they might have an Oath whereby they might give Teſtimony of future Obedience to his Majeſty. Whereupon an Oath was by the Advice of the Council of State framed, and chearfully taken by thoſe Scotch Gentlemen, and generally by all the Nation in Ireland, as the Earl conceives to their Advantage, and the Satisfaction of others. He believes that ſome were ſentenced for refuſing it, but none were otherwiſe exiled. The Earl in his Vote ſaid, That he would endeavour that all of that Nation ſhould take that Oath, or leave the Kingdom. All which was done by his Majeſty's Direction and Approbation: And it was not contrived to the Intents of the Article charged, but to prevent their adhering to the Covenanters then in open Arms, and not concerning the Ceremony or Government of the Church.

To the Twentieth, he ſaith, That in the Year 1638, the Earl was in Ireland, when Preparations were made for War, and Summons ſent to the Nobility of this Kingdom. In the Year 1639, a General was appointed, and an Army drawn to the Field, and encamped near Berwick; whereby it appears he was not acquainted that the Article of Pacification had been broken on both ſides, and ſo diſtempered, that it was held fit an Army in England ſhould be raiſed to ſuppreſs the Covenanters, if the Buſineſs could not with Honour and Safety be otherwiſe compoſed. The ſaid Earl humbly adviſed his Majeſty to call a Parliament, and uſed many Motives thereunto. After the Parliament was called, and before the Sitting thereof, ten of the Lords, and other of the Council for foreign Affairs, being aſſembled, his Majeſty then preſent, an honourable Perſon related the Covenanters Demands. It was then voted by all, That they were ſuch as might not in Honour and Safety be condeſcended unto by his Majeſty; and if they could not be otherwiſe reduced, his Majeſty muſt be conſtrained to bring them to it by Force. The like Reſolution was after at the Council-Table by twenty of the Council. Whereupon his Majeſty appointed a Council of War; and it was held neceſſary to borrow 200000 l. upon good Security, till the Supplies by the Parliament might come in. He never ſaid the Scotch Nation were Rebels, but was ever perſuaded that many them were moſt Loyal Subjects.

Thoſe that raiſed Arms, when they were at ſuch a diſtance from his Majeſty, he might ſay they were no leſs than Rebels and Traytors. By Warrant from the Lord Admiral he cauſed divers Ships and Goods to be ſeized, but not with an Intent to ſet on the War, but, as much as in him lay, to bring all to fair Accommodations without Expence of Blood.

To the Twenty firſt, he ſaith, The Pacification was broken before he came over, as in the Anſwer to the former Article: he moved his Majeſty for a Parliament in England, but not with ſuch Intent as in the Article, but out of a Deſire to have ſettled a right Underſtanding between the King and his People. It may be he ſaid, (tho he remembreth it not) That if the Parliament would not ſupply his Majeſty, he would ſerve his Majeſty in any other lawful Way; being well aſſured that his Majeſty would not imploy him, nor any Man elſe, in any other kind.

To the Twenty ſecond, he ſaith, According to his Majeſty's Inſtructions, he did ſet forth to the Parliament of Ireland the State of the Affairs, as they then ſtood; and they freely gave four Subſidies, as an Acknowledgment of his Goodneſs and happy Government, as by the Act and Remonſtrance appears in Print. He, by his Majeſty's Direction, then gave Order for the raiſing of 8000 Men, who ſtill remain in the King's Pay, and were ſent into Ulſter to ſecure thoſe Parts, or to land in Scotland, to divert the Earl of Argyle, in caſe he joined with the Covenanters Army againſt the King. But it was mentioned in the King's Letter, 2 Martii 1639, he had purpoſely given out, That they ſhould join with the King's Army at Berwick, to colour other Deſigns: But the true Cauſe of their levying was made known to be as aforeſaid unto the Earl of Ormond, Sir John Burlace, and the Marquiſs of Hamilton, and the Earl of Northumberland, at the time of the writing the Letter. And he denies the Words charged in the Articles, or any other Words to ſuch Intent and Purpoſe.

To the Twenty third, he ſaith, The Matters of the Parliament were no otherwiſe referred to him than to the reſt of the Council: That coming ſick from Ireland about ten Days after the Parliament were ſet, and after the Treaty with the Earl of Dunfermline and Lord Lowdon, Scotch Commiſſioners, was broken off, and the Army preparing, and the Parliament not ſupplying Moneys as his Majeſty deſired, his Majeſty adviſed what might move them to prefer his Supply. In debate whereof, he humbly adviſed his Majeſty, by a Meſſage to the Houſe, to lay down Ship-Money, and promiſe never to demand it, and give way to reverſe the Judgment by a Writ of Error in Parliament, and to promiſe a Redreſs of Grievances when they ſhould be prepared. And ſecondly, That they would preſently agree upon ſuch Supply as ſhould maintain his Army for reducing the Scots to their Obedience, wherein their Safety and his Honour was concerned. His Majeſty aſſented conditionally, that he might have twelve Subſidies: The Earl beſought him that it might not paſs as a Condition, but to relinquiſh Ship-Money, and put himſelf upon their Affections; and drew up the Meſſage in Writing, and delivered it to Mr. Secretary Vane, to deliver to the Houſe of Commons. He deſired to know if his Majeſty would not take leſs than twelve. His Majeſty anſwered, He feared leſs would not ſerve his Occaſions. The Earl of Strafford beſought his Majeſty to accept of eight. So his Majeſty aſſented, and deſired Mr. Secretary to ſignify ſo much, as occaſion ſhould be offered: But whether he did ſo or not, the ſaid Earl knoweth not. The Houſe of Commons being in debate two Days, and not reſolving, his Majeſty about the 5th of May laſt called a Council at Seven of the clock in the Morning: The ſaid Earl being ſick, came late, and was told (as he remembreth) by the Earl of Berkſhire, the King had declared his Reſolution to diſſolve the Parliament. The Earl of Strafford beſought his Majeſty to hear the Advice of his Council, and firſt of thoſe that were Members of the Houſe of Commons, by whom the reſt might the better be guided. Mr. Secretary Windebank ſaid, He feared the Houſe would firſt be anſwered of their Grievances, and voted for a Breach of the Parliament. Mr. Secretary Vane, in oppoſite Terms, ſaid, That there was no hope that they would give the King a Penny, and therefore abſolutely voted for a Breach. And the Earl of Strafford conceiving his Majeſty's Pleaſure to have accepted eight Subſidies had been deliver'd to the Houſe of Commons by Mr. Secretary Vane, did in his Majeſty's Turn deliver his Vote for Breach of the Parliament, which otherwiſe he would not have done, it being contrary to what he reſolved when he came thither; and the like Opinion was delivered by the reſt of the Lords, being about twenty, except two or three at the moſt. The Parliament being diſſolved, his Majeſty deſired Advice of his Council how Money might be raiſed, affirming that the Scotch Army was ready to enter into the Kingdom: The ſaid Earl, in preſence of others in the Council, delivered his Opinion, That in a Caſe of abſolute and unavoidable Neceſſity, which neither would nor could be prevented by ordinary Remedies provided by the Laws, nor all his Majeſty's other means ſufficient to defend the Commonwealth, himſelf, or their Lives and Eſtates from an Enemy, without Force of Arms, either actually entred, or daily expected to invade the Realm; he conceived that his Majeſty was abſolved from ordinary Rules, and might uſe (in a moderate way the Neceſſity of the Cauſe would permit) all Ways and Means for defence of himſelf and Kingdom; for that he conceived in ſuch Extremity, Salus Populi was Suprema Lex, provided it were not colourable, nor any thing demanded imployed to other uſe, nor drawn into Example, when Law and Juſtice might take place: and that when Peace was ſettled, Reparation was to be given to particular Men, otherwiſe it would be unjuſt. This was not officiouſly declared, but in Council, forced by the Duty of the Oath of a Counſellor, which is, That he ſhall in all Things to be moved, treated, and debated in Council, faithfully and truly declare his Mind and Opinion according to his Heart and Conſcience: Which Oath the ſaid Earl took, and humbly prays their Lordſhip's Conſideration thereof. He denies the Words in the Article, or any Words to the Intent thereby expreſſed.

To the Twenty fourth, he ſaith, He delivered his Opinion with ſuch Cautions and Reſtrictions, as in the Anſwer to the precedent Article; and is well aſſured his Diſcourſe at all times hath been without ill Intentions to either of the Houſes of Parliament, which he ever did and ſhall ſpeak of with all Reverence. He denies that he knew of the publiſhing or printing of the Book, or who cauſed it to be printed or publiſhed; for at that time he was ſick in his Bed, more like to die than to live.

To the Twenty fifth, he ſaith, Ship-Money was levied, and adjudged to be due, before his coming over. Sheriffs were then called up as before, and not otherwiſe. If any were ſued in Star-Chamber, it was without any particular Endeavour of his.

It appearing at the Board that the Mayor and Sheriffs of London had been ſlow in collecting Ship-Money, he ſaid, They were but miniſterial, and ought to exact, and not diſpute the King's Writs; and that if through their Remiſſneſs the King ſhould be leſs able to provide for the publick Safety, when any foreign Army was ready to enter the Kingdom, they might deſerve to be fined and ranſomed: which he ſpake more to haſten them, than of purpoſe to adviſe any ſuch Proſecution. But denies the other Words, being, under favour, ſuch Expreſſions as he is not accuſtomed unto.

To the Twenty ſixth, he ſaith, He adviſed not either of thoſe Projects, (being then ſick in Bed:) But it being debated at the Council-Table whether it were better for the King to raiſe Gold and Silver, or coin baſe Money, he (for the Reaſons then given) delivered his Opinion for the latter. Sundry Merchants-Adventurers coming to his Houſe, deſired him to move his Majeſty, then at Oatlands, to releaſe the Bullion, or Money: He told them he knew of no ſuch Thing, and would not meddle with it; nor would his Health permit him to go abroad: and ſaid, That if by their denying the King in ſuch a publick Danger the Loan of 100000 l. upon good Security, the King were conſtrained for the Preſervation of the Land to ſtay the Bullion, they might thank themſelves; and the City receiving ſo great a Benefit by reſiding amongſt them, they made but an unthankful Acknowledgement in ſuch a Strait, to refuſe the Loan of that Sum. The Officers of the Mint came to the Council-Board, and the Earl then ſhewed a Letter he received from the Earl of Leiceſter, wherein was related, That the Cardinal had appointed Commiſſioners to go into the Merchants Houſes at Paris, to peruſe their Shop-Books and Accompts, and ceſs every Man according to his Ability towards the Payment of the King's Army; and then ſaid, That it was but juſt for us here in England to bleſs God for being under a King which could not think upon ſuch a preſſing upon the People. But the Words in the Article, or Words to any ſuch Intent, he did not ſpeak; and cannot ſufficiently bemoan himſelf to have been in all his Words ſo ill underſtood, or ſo untruly reported as he hath been.

To the Twenty ſeventh, he ſaith, He perſuaded the Gentry of that County to allow the Trained-Bands a Month's Pay; which they yielded, and his Majeſty graciouſly accepted. It was by Council of War (his Majeſty being preſent) thought fit the Trained-Bands ſhould return, ſave the two Regiments under the Command of Sir William Pennyman, and Sir Thomas Danby. It was aſſented unto by his Majeſty, and the great Council of Peers then aſſembled, That thoſe ſpared ſhould contribute; and the ſaid Earl was commanded by them to ſee it done. Which was done accordingly by Warrants from him, and from his Deputy-Lieutenants, which was much leſs Charge to the Countries than otherwiſe. And denies the other Particular in the Article mentioned.

To the Twenty eighth, he ſaith, He was Lieutenant-General to the Earl of Northumberland, about the 24th of Auguſt, of 10 or 12000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe, being at Newcaſtle, under the Command of the Lord Conway and Sir Jacob Aſtley, and the reſt of the Army at York. The ſaid Earl went from London on the 26th of Auguſt, notwithſtanding his extreme Weakneſs, and came to York. And having received a Letter from Sir Jacob Aſtley that Newcaſtle was fortified, and that they muſt be infamous Beaſts to loſe it, and that it was fully ſecured; and being acquainted with ſeveral Diſpatches ſent by Mr. Secretary Vane, by his Majeſty's Directions, to the Lord Conway, General of the Horſe, to oppoſe the Paſſage of the Scots over the River Tyne, the one dated 22 Auguſti, the other 23 Auguſti, another 24 Auguſti, another 26 Auguſti, the Subſtance of which Letters are particularly mentioned in the Anſwer to this Article: and to the ſame Letters the ſaid Earl referreth himſelf.

The ſaid Earl, upon ſight of this and Sir Jacob Aſtley's Letter, had reaſon to believe that all fitting Preparation was made; and then underſtanding that if the Scotiſh Army ſhould paſs the River, not only Newcaſtle, altogether unfortified on the ſouth part, would be loſt, but the ſaid Army of 11000 Foot and 2000 Horſe endangered; and hearing that the Scotiſh Army was diſtreſſed for want of Victuals, and knowing the Advantage that was in oppoſing the Paſſage of ſuch a River: Hereupon the ſaid Earl, by a Letter dated the 27th of Auguſt, adviſed the Lord Conway, with all the Horſe, and at leaſt 8000 Foot, and all the Cannon, to march and fight with them, upon the Paſſage of the River: At which time the ſaid Earl had no Charge of the Army. But the truth is, the Lord Conway having not with him all the Horſe, and not above 1500 Foot, and only ſome part of the Cannon, was in a poſture to fight for the Paſſage before the ſaid Letter of Advice came, which he received not half an hour before the Fight began, and proceeded according to his own Judgment, and his Majeſty's ſaid general Direction. And afterwards, that is, about the 30th of Auguſt, and not before, the ſaid Earl took upon him the Charge of the Army at Darlington, and brought it to York to be ſupplied with Neceſſaries that they wanted, and purpoſed to have ſtaid where they were quartered. But hearing from many hands that there was a purpoſe to queſtion him in Parliament, and his Majeſty having given him liberty of ſtaying there, or coming away, he left the Charge of the Army with the Lord Conway and other Officers, as his Majeſty had directed, and came to London on Monday the 9th; and the 11th of November was put under reſtraint, and ſo hath ever ſince remained. And ſaith, That the Town of Newcaſtle was no way under his care. And as to other Matters, whereto by Law he ought to anſwer, and hath not anſwered, he ſaith, He is not guilty of them, or any of them, in ſuch manner and form as in the ſaid Article is expreſſed; and humbly prayeth a convenient Time for making his Proofs, and to juſtify and maintain his Actions in Ireland by ſight of his Majeſty's Warrants, Records, and Witneſſes, in that Kingdom; and that if any Miſtake be in his Anſwer, it may be amended.

And this the ſaid Earl hopeth that, upon equal Conſtruction of his Words and Actions, he ſhall appear free from any great and heinous Offences wherewith he is charged: And howſoever it ſhall pleaſe God to diſpoſe of him, he ſhall ever pray that by their Lordſhips great Wiſdom and Prudence, the Affections of his Majeſty, and Duty of his Subjects, may this Parliament be ſo ſurely knit together, as may by God's Bleſſing laſtingly tend to the Proſperity and flouriſhing Eſtate both of King and People.

THE Place appointed for the Tryal was the great Hall in Weſtminſter, where there was a Throne erected for the King, on each ſide thereof a Cabinet encloſed about with Boards, and before with a Tarras. Before that, were the Seats for the Lords of the Upper Houſe, and Sacks of Wool for the Judges; before them, ten Stages of Seats, extending farther than the midſt of the Hall, for the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons: at the end of all was a Desk cloſed about, and ſet apart for the Lord-Lieutenant and his Counſel.

Monday Morning about ſeven of the clock he came from the Tower, accompanied with ſix Barges, wherein were one hundred Soldiers of the Tower, all with Partizans, for his Guard, and fifty Pair of Oars. At his landing at Weſtminſter, there he was attended with two hundred of the Trained-Bands; and went in, guarded by them, into the Hall. The Entries at White-hall, King-ſtreet, and Weſtminſter, were guarded by the Conſtables and Watchmen, from four of the clock in the Morning, to keep away all baſe and idle Perſons.

The King, Queen, and Prince, came to the Houſe about nine of the clock, but kept themſelves private within their Cloſets, only the Prince came out once or twice to the Cloth of State; ſo that the King ſaw and heard all that paſſed, but was ſeen of none. Some give the reaſon of this, from the received Practice of England in ſuch Caſes: Others ſay, that the Lords did intreat the King either to be abſent, or to be there privately, leſt Pretenſions might be made hereafter, that his being there was either to threaten, or ſome otherwiſe to interrupt the Courſe of Juſtice: A third ſort, That the King was not willing to be acceſſary to the Proceſs till it came to his part, but rather choſe to be preſent, that he might note and underſtand what Violence, Rigour, or Injuſtice happened.

When the Lieutenant entred the Hall, the Porter of the Hall (whoſe Office it is) asked Mr. Maxwel, whether the Ax ſhould be carried before him or no? who did anſwer, That the King had expreſly forbidden it: nor was it the Cuſtom of England to uſe that Ceremony, but only when the Party accuſed was to be put upon his Jury. Thoſe of the Upper Houſe did ſit with their Heads covered, thoſe of the Lower Houſe uncovered. The Biſhops upon the Saturday before did voluntarily decline the giving of their Suffrages in Matters Criminal, and of that nature, according to the Proviſion of the Canon Law, and Practice of the Kingdom to this day; and therefore would not be preſent: yet withal they gave in a Proteſtation, that their Abſence ſhould not prejudice them of that or any other Privilege competent to them, as the Lords Spiritual in Parliament, which was accepted.

The Earl of Arundel, as Lord High Steward of England, ſat apart by himſelf, and at the Lieutenant's Entry commanded the Houſe to proceed. Mr. Pym being Speaker of the Committee for his Accuſation, gave in the ſame Articles which were preſented at his laſt being before the Upper Houſe; which being read, his Replies were ſubjoined and read alſo, the very ſame which were preſented before in the Upper Houſe. Some give the reaſon of this, becauſe the Lower Houſe had not heard thoſe Accuſations in publick before; others, that the Formality of the Proceſs required no leſs: however, that Day was ſpent in that Exerciſe.

The Queen went from the Houſe about eleven of the clock, the King and Prince ſtaid till the Meeting was diſſolved, which was after two. The Lieutenant was ſent to the Tower by his Guard, and appointed to return upon Tueſday at nine of the clock in the Morning. The Croud of People was neither great nor troubleſome; all of them ſaluted him, and he them, with great Humility and Courteſy, both at his entrance and at his return: therefore let Fame pretend what it pleaſe about the Malice and Diſcontent of the Multitude, That if he paſs the Stroke of Juſtice, they will tear him in pieces; yet I ſee there is more in Rumour than in Sight and Appearance; and in this Report, as in all others of this nature, more is thruſt upon the Vulgar (who ſeem as well fearful of Puniſhment, as exempt from it, for all their great number) than they do juſtly deſerve.

On Tueſday in the Morning he came accompanied as before to Weſtminſter; and having ſtaid in the Exchequer-Chamber till nine of the clock, the King, Queen, and Prince came, as before upon the firſt Day.

Then Maſter Pym being called for, aggravated the Charge, which was given the day before, by a very ample Speech. It is impoſſible to call to mind all the Hyperboles, the Flaſhes, and ſuperlative Expreſſions that he uſed; the main Points were, That it was a Treaſon far beyond the reach of words, that he the Lieutenant, a native Subject and a Peer of England, the prime Governour of Ireland, the Commander of his Majeſty's Forces, and a Proteſtant in Religion, ſhould have in ſuch an impious and groſs manner recompenſed his Majeſty's Favours, abuſed his Goodneſs, and drawn all his Dominions into hazard and peril of their Religion, Lives, Goods, and Privileges; That one of theſe Faults alone had been enough, and too much, for the fulfilling of the Exorbitancy and Wickedneſs of any one Man; and that no Puniſhment could be thought upon, ſufficient to expiate Crimes of ſuch a tranſcendent nature.

The Lieutenant, with no leſs Moderation and Wiſdom than the other with Heat and Paſſion, ſpake to his own Defence; and that with ſuch a meaſure of Eloquence and Lively-hood, that his very Enemies were affected with it, and do marvellouſly report of it.

He modeſtly recounted his Services done to the King and Crown of England, his Endeavours for Advancement as well of the Honour as Commodity of both Kingdoms in general, but in particular that of Ireland; how he had engreatned and advanced the King's Revenues there, reſtored the Churches Maintenance, ſuppreſſed the Outlaws, eſtabliſhed Obedience to Royal Authority, and impedited the Tyranny and Uſurpation of Greater Ones over the Commons. And for the effecting of all theſe Actions, he mentioned himſelf the moſt weak and meaneſt Inſtrument, with a wonderful Prudence, in a middle way, betwixt the Affectation of Baſeneſs, or Dejectedneſs, and Allegiance.

Maſter Pym, after the Cloſe of his Speech, told him that there were three new Articles adjoined (by an After-ſearch) to his Charge; and deſired that he might preſently reply to the ſame.

Whereunto the Lieutenant anſwered, It was very ſtrange, that after the Cloſe of the Proceſs, and when matters were come to be ſcann'd, and examined by proof, that any new Charge ſhould be given in; yet leſt he ſhould ſeem to decline the Maintenance of his own Innocency, and the juſt

Defence of his Honour, he was moſt willing to hear them and have them alledged, provided that a convenient time might be aſſigned him to make his Replies againſt them, as he had done to the other given in before.

But Maſter Pym excepted againſt this, and told him that the Houſe did conceive it to be dangerous to grant any farther Prorogation.

Upon this, the Lords of the Upper Houſe (who did not think it fit as yet to voice any Particular in the Audience of the Houſe of Commons) did retire themſelves, and after a pretty time of ſtay, they returned and declared, that they had found the Lieutenant's Suit to be equitable, in deſiring of further time for anſwering; yet ſeeing the Articles themſelves, neither for number nor weight, ſeemed to be of that importance, but that he might furniſh out a preſent Anſwer, they thought it fitting to grant no delay.

The Lieutenant then (intreating them to paſs by and pardon the Weakneſſes of his extemporary Anſwers) deſired to hear the Articles read, which were theſe:

Firſt, That he had within theſe two Years withdrawn Forty Thouſand Pounds Sterling from the Exchequer in Ireland, and employed it to his own private Uſes.

Secondly, That in the beginning of his Government, the Gariſons in Ireland had been maintained by the Engliſh Treaſury.

Thirdly, That he had advanced Popiſh and Infamous Perſons, as the Biſhop of Waterford and others, to the prime Rooms in the Church of Ireland.

To the firſt he anſwer'd, That Thirty Thouſand Pounds were ſet apart for the King's late Service, at his own moſt ſpecial and moſt peremptory Commands; for which he produced the King's own Letter, already approved as his Acquittance at the Exchequer-Board in Ireland.

To the ſecond, That at the beginning of that Charge againſt him, as ever before his time, the Gariſons had been burdenſome to the Kingdom of England; but that he had ſo improved it, and ſettled the King's Revenue there, that the like is not to be heard in all the times that are by-paſt: for which (if the beſt Endeavours of a Subject may juſtly expect any Reward from his King and Country) he craved leave to think that he rather deſerved many Thanks, than the leaſt Puniſhment.

To the third, He atteſted all the Clergy in Ireland, if ever he had taken upon him any particular meddling in advancing their Churchmen, or whether he had done any thing concerning ſuch Affairs, but upon the ſpecial Advice and Deſire of the beſt and wiſeſt of their number. For his part, when he befriended the Biſhop of Waterford, he conceived of him as a Man of Integrity and Learning, fit for ſuch an Employment; nor was there then the leaſt Suſpicion of thoſe monſtrous Impieties, wherewith he was afterwards charged; that he had now juſtly ſuffered for the ſame, and that he hoped they would not lay a neceſſity upon him to propheſy and divine of the future Conditions and Deportments of Men. For others of the Church, ſuſpected of Popery, he knew none ſuch, but ſhould anſwer to the Particulars ſo far as they concerned him, when they ſhould happen to be alledged.

After this the Houſe diſſolved for that Night, the King's Majeſty and the Prince having ſtaid all the time; and the Lord-Lieutenant was appointed to come thither again on Wedneſday Morning: at which time they are to proceed to the firſt Article, to give an Oath to the Witneſſes, and to examine all the Proofs whereon the Proceſs was builded.

It will be a very hard matter for him to expect every Man's Teſtimony, and to give his Anſwers, either for full Satisfaction or Diminution of all Objections; which way of proceeding will ſpend at leaſt a Fortnight, if not a greater ſpace of time; yet it is thought the Lower Houſe are impatient of Delays. The Expectations are exceeding various and different about the Event of this great Action: ſome think it will be impoſſible to eſcape the many and great Accuſations laid to his charge; others, and that the greater number too, are of opinion that he will be in no hazard of his Life, and that it will not be poſſible to bring him into the compaſs of Treaſon; (quod tam miſere cupio ut non credam.) His adverſe Party is ſo great, and ſo far intereſted both in point of Safety and Honour againſt him, that flectere ſi nequeunt Superos, &c. nothing will be left unaſſay'd, that may accelerate his Ruin.

He hath all this time carried himſelf courageouſly, to the admiration (and withal ſo moderately, that it is to the great ſatisfaction) of his very Enemies; ſo that he ſeems neither dejected with Fear, nor to affect Boldneſs with Confidence, but to carry himſelf with that Conſtancy and Reſolution, which his Innocency and brave Parts do promiſe.

The Iriſh Commiſſioners here, have hitherto abſtained from giving in any Remonſtrance againſt the Lieutenant, and do ſtill plead to have an immediate Dependance from the King, and not from the Parliament of England. There was a Report that the Parliament of Ireland had ſent a Proteſtation againſt the Act made the laſt Year, for the King's Supply in his Expedition againſt the Scots, as a thing which was violently in part, and in part ſurreptitiouſly obtained from them: but I have learned this to be an Untruth. I had almoſt forgotten one Paſſage of Mr. Pym, who in the Aggravation of the Lieutenant's Faults, had this Expreſſion, That he was like the Whore in the Proverbs, He wiped his Mouth, and with a brazen Face ſaid he had done no Evil.

To this the Noble Lord replied, That he wiſhed his Innocence might not be taken for Impudence, that he hoped ſhortly to clear himſelf of all thoſe foul Aſperſions which his malicious Enemies had caſt upon him; and he was very confident that he ſhould give the Honourable Houſes full Satisfaction concerning his Life hitherto, and thought of nothing more hereafter than to retire himſelf from all publick Employments.

Mr. Pym gave at this a great Shout, and deſired the Houſe to take notice what an injury he had done to the Honourable Houſe of Commons, in calling them his malicious Enemies.

Whereupon the Lieutenant falling down upon his Knees, humbly beſought them that they would not miſtake him; and withal gave a large Panegyrick of their moſt juſt and moderate Proceedings, proteſting that if he himſelf had been one of the Houſe of Commons, (as he had the honour once to be) he would not have adviſed them to have done otherwiſe againſt his deareſt Friend: but withal told them, that he might juſtly ſay he had his own Un-friends, which he hoped in time to make known. Nor did he all this time ſpeak one bitter word againſt Mr. Pym, though juſtly incenſed; which hath infinitely advanced his Reputation.

I have been a daily Hearer of theſe Proceedings againſt this great Perſonage now upon the Stage, there-therefore do preſume I can give a reaſonable Account thereof. The Book of his Charge is extant in Print, ſo it ſhall be needful for me only to name the Articles, as they were canvaſſed; and thoſe deſigned by the Houſe of Commons to be his Accuſers, which were theſe that follow.

The Names of his Accuſers.

Pym, Glyn, Maynard, Whitlock, Lord Digby, St. John, Palmers, Sir Walter Earles, Stroud, Selden, Hampden, &c.

One of theſe began the Speech; the reſt, after their Collegue hath done, follow in their turn: ſo that he hath all of them to wreſtle againſt, and yet ſufficiently able for them all; though by his Agitation his Spirits are much exhauſted.

Mr. Glyn, after a large Flouriſh, on Wedneſday, told the Lords, That the Lord Strafford was impeached, not with ſimple, but accumulative Treaſon: For though in each particular Article, ſuch a monſtrous Crime could not be deprehended, yet when all was conceived in the Maſs, and under one View, he ſhould be undoubtedly found the moſt wicked and exorbitant Traytor that ever was arraigned at that Bar. He added, That his Charge was for intending to ſubvert and change the Fundamental Laws, Liberties, and Privileges of both the Kingdoms, and to introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Form of Government. This, he ſaid, could not appear but by the Fruits, which were either in Expreſſion or Action. The Expreſſions were four:

Firſt, That before ſeveral Witneſſes he had ſaid at York, That the King's Little-finger ſhould be heavier to them, than the Loins of the Law.

To this the Lieutenant replied, That having ſpoken ſufficiently before to his Juſtification in general, he would moreover add theſe few words, by their favours: That it did ſtrike him to the heart to be attached of ſuch a wicked Crime, by ſuch honourable Perſons; yea, that it wounded him deeper, in regard that ſuch Perſons who were the Companions of his Youth, and with whom he had ſpent the beſt of his days, ſhould now riſe up in Judgment againſt him: yet he thanked God for it, it was not Guilt, but Grief, that ſo much troubled him. He added, That it was a wonder how he had gotten ſtrength ſufficient in ſuch Infirmity of Body, and ſuch Anguiſh of Mind, to collect his Thoughts, and ſay any thing at all for himſelf; but the Almighty God, who knows him to be innocent, had furniſhed him with ſome Abilities to give Teſtimony to the Truth, and to a good Conſcience: He therefore intreated, that if either in Judgment or in Memory he ſhould at any time fail, it might be imputed to his great Weakneſs. And although the Gentlemen his Accuſers ſhould ſeem more ready in their Accuſations, than himſelf in his Defence, yet that might not prejudice his Cauſe; who, in very unequal Terms, had to do with learned and eloquent Lawyers, bred up a long time and enured to ſuch judiciary Pleadings, and whoſe Rhetorick, he doubted not, might preſent many things to their view in a Multiplying-Glaſs. He told them farther, That for theſe many years he had been weary of publick Service, and that now it was his Reſolution, after he had vindicated his Honour, to retire himſelf, and enjoy his much long'd-for Privacy: and yet he could not but tell them ſo much, that it had been his hearty Wiſh and Deſire, rather voluntarily to have reſigned his Places of Honour, like a ripe Fruit fallen from the Tree, than to be violently pulled from thence, as a fruitleſs and unprofitable withered Branch.

To the Charge of Treaſon, he ſaid, That under favour he conceived that although all the Articles contained in his Impeachment were verified againſt him, yet they would not all amount to Treaſon, neither ſimple nor accumulative: For (ſaid he) I do not underſtand by what Interpretation of Law, the Diverſion of Juſtice can be called a Subverſion of the ſame; or the exceeding of a Commiſſion, the Uſurpation of a new Power. To the Particular he replied, That his words were clearly inverted, for that his Expreſſion was, That the Little-finger of the Law (if not ſupported by the Regal Power, in granting Pardons for Penalties of the ſame) was heavier than the King's Loins. That this was his Expreſſion, he verified;

Firſt, By the Occaſion: for he ſpake the words a long time ſince, to ſome Men who had lain impriſoned at York, and were then by the King's Favour ſet at liberty; whom he incited to Thankfulneſs (by this Expreſſion) towards his Majeſty.

Secondly, By Witneſſes produced by him. In the Examination of their Witneſſes he convinced one of them of Untruth, by interrogating him where he was when the Speech was heard, and how far diſtant from him: when the Man replied, that he was twelve Yards from him; he anſwered, that it it was impoſſible for him to hear a Man three Yards off, by reaſon of a Deafneſs that had held him fourteen Years: which being found true, the Witneſs was rejected.

Another Witneſs (Sir David Foulis) was brought againſt him; againſt whom he excepted, as his known and profeſſed Enemy: 'twas told him, that he himſelf did not uſe to admit of Exceptions againſt Witneſſes, and therefore was to expect the ſame meaſure.

He replied, that Maſter Pym might one day perhaps be attached, for perſuading the Houſe of Commons to commit the ſame Crime that was laid upon him as a Charge of Treaſon. But for all this, the Witneſs was received, becauſe in matter of Treaſon a Man's Enemy may witneſs againſt him pro Domino noſtro Rege: though, I ſuppoſe, the King's Advice was never asked for the preſent. This was all that was done for that time.

On Thurſday he was charged with the ſecond Expreſſion; That he ſaid Ireland was a conquered Kingdom, and that the King might preſcribe them what Law he pleaſed.

This they aggravated as a prime Note of his Tyrannical Will and Affection, that would permit no Law to bound the Subject, but what himſelf, and ſuch as he, might draw up by ſiniſtrous Informations, from a gracious and well-meaning Prince: and if this were admitted, the whole Power and Liberty of the Republick would be utterly loſt.

To this he replied, That neither was the Expreſſion in thoſe words, nor in that ſenſe ſpoken or meant by him. The firſt part of it (ſaid he) cannot be denied: to the ſecond, that he had ſaid only, That the King was the Law-giver, which he hoped none could deny without incurring the Crime of Treaſon; and that the King's Sentence was a Law in matter not determined by Acts of Parliament, which all but diſloyal Subjects would grant. And that it had ever been his endeavour to have the Liberty of the Subject and the Royal Prerogative follow both in one Channel; if either of them croſſed other, we could expect nothing but a Subverſion of the Commonwealth, either by Tyranny or Rebellion:

bellion: That the Prerogative was like the firſt, the Liberty of the Subject like the ſecond Table; either both or neither can be preſerved. That in his Duty he ſtood obliged firſt to the King, as God's Anointed; then in the ſecond place to his Country, if it did not croſs the Regal Power. And therefore hoped, that what he had ſpoken was ſo far from being Treaſon, that he thought a thouſand ſuch Expreſſions would not make up one Felony.

On Friday the two other Expreſſions were followed; That he ſaid, He would not ſuffer his Ordinances to be diſputed by Lawyers, before inferiour Judicatories, and that he would make an Act of State equivalent to an Act of Parliament.

To the firſt he ſaid, That he had often ſaid (more than once) that he would not ſuffer his Ordinance to be contemned; becauſe, in him, his Maſter's Honour was wounded.

To the ſecond, He thought a proportionable Obedience was due to Acts of State, as well as to Acts of Parliament; otherwiſe they were made in vain, if that both did not bind in one kind.

The Lord Cork (though his mortal Enemy) was now examined, and admitted as a Witneſs; whom in his Depoſition he convinced of two ſhameful Overſights: for Cork had declared upon his Oath, that the Lieutenant had cauſed to be interlined an Ordinance againſt himſelf, and had cauſed ſome words to be ſcraped out; which words were notwithſtanding ſtill found to be in the Sentence, by an authentick Copy under the hand of Sir Paul Daviſon, Clerk to the Council-Board of Ireland.

Then Cork alledged, That he had advanced a Groom of his to be a Preacher; who by a Teſtimony from the Univerſity of Dublin he verified to have been a Maſter of Arts ten or twelve years before his Advancement: adding withal, that my Lord of Cork was an excellent Scholar, who was able to breed ſuch Grooms.

Upon Saturday, having done with his Expreſſions, they canvaſſed the firſt Article about his Actions:

Againſt the Lives of the King's Subjects, both in the Caſe of the Lord Mountnorris, and alſo of another of the King's Subjects, both of whom he had ſentenced to death by Martial Law, contrary to all Law, and to the manifeſt Subverſion of the Privileges of Subjects, Magna Charta, and the Petition of Right.

To the Lord Mountnorris's Caſe, he replied,

1. That though that Sentence had been unjuſtly given and rigorouſly proſecuted againſt him, yet the greateſt Crime that he could be charged withal, would but amount to Manſlaughter, or Felony at the moſt.

2. That he hoped (though this were true) to obtain a Pardon from his gracious Maſter the King's Majeſty, as well as Conway and Sir Jacob Aſtley had lately done, for exerciſing Martial Law in the Northern Army.

Then he replied to all the Parts of the Charge, which were four:

1. That he had exerciſed Martial Law in time of Peace.

To this he anſwered,

(1.) That all Armies have been, and muſt be, governed ever by Martial Law.

(2.) That there is a ſtanding Army in Ireland, and therefore the Caſe is all one in time of Peace or War; and that the Army might be undone, if they ſhould not uſe Martial Law, but were to expect Remedy for the ſettling of a Mutiny, or Aſſurance of Obedience, from the Common Law.

(3.) That it had ever been the Practice of the Deputies, particularly of Wilmot, Falkland, Chicheſter, yea Cork himſelf; and therefore was no new thing brought in by him. This he proved, both by the Production of the military Ordinances, and by divers Witneſſes who knew Sentences given in that kind by them.

(4.) That he had a particular Warrant in his Commiſſion for this Power.

(5.) That in the Lord Mountnorris's Caſe, he was commanded to exerciſe the ſame, by the King's particular Letter: both which he cauſed to be read.

The ſecond Charge was, That he was both Party and Judge in the Lord Mountnorris's Cauſe.

To this he replied, That he had ſitten in Judgment, becauſe he was one ſine quo non, the Judgment could not proceed without him: but that he was not Judge, but Party, appeared,

1. Becauſe he ſat diſcovered all the time.

2. Becauſe he refuſed to give his own Opinion.

3. Becauſe he did not give his Suffrage one way or other.

4. Becauſe he removed his Brother Sir George from having a hand in the Proceſs, in regard of Intereſt of Blood.

The third Charge was, That he proceeded ſummarily in the matter of the Lord Mountnorris.

He replied, Firſt, That he was not Judge in it, and that the Council of War was to be anſwerable in the Juſtification of their own Proceedings.

Secondly, That after a long Reaſoning he had heard them ſay, that no delay could ſafely be granted in Martial Courts.

The fourth Charge was, That he had not heard the Exceptions made by Mountnorris againſt his Witneſſes.

To this he anſwered, as before, That he was not Judge in the Caſe, and that he remembers no Exceptions made againſt any Witneſſes. To which he added, That as he had been regulated in his Proceedings, ſo he had been moderate in the Execution of that Sentence: for though the Lord Mountnorris juſtly deſerved to die, yet he had obtained him the King's Pardon, for the ſaving of his Life; and proteſted, that he intended nothing by that Sentence, but in ſome meaſure to repair his own Honour, and to give Mountnorris fair reproof, who was known to be of an exorbitant and licentious Tongue and Spirit. Adding, that if the Houſe of Commons would go on the ſame way with him, and aſſure him that the Iſſue of his Charge ſhould be nothing elſe but to admoniſh him for the time to come, he would thank them heartily for it, and ſtudy Amendment in all pretended Overſights. And whereas Mountnorris complained that he had jeeringly told him, when the Sentence was paſſed and pronounced againſt him, That e'er he loſt his Head, himſelf would loſe his Hand; he anſwered, That he had been thought to be very inſolent and haughty, yet he was never ſo impertinent to uſe this Expreſſion: If any fault were, it was for undervaluing himſelf, in ſaying, That e'er a Hair of Mountnorris's ſhould periſh, he would loſe his Hand. And truly (ſaid he) if Mountnorris would ſay ſo to me now, even in the worſt ſenſe that can be conceived, That e'er I died he would loſe his Hand, I would take it very kindly from him.

For the other Man, he avouched that he himſelf had voiced to hang him, both becauſe he was an an errant Thief, and alſo had fled from his Colours, which by the Common Law (and to this effect he cited a Statute 20 Hen. 6. and 7 Hen. 7.) is Felony. He concluded, That ſeeing he was not acceſſary to the Sentence againſt Mountnorris, had not ſat there as Judge, had a power to keep Martial Courts by his Commiſſion, had not exerciſed the ſame till a new Command came from his Majeſty, had done no more than ever was practiſed in Ireland before his time, and had at leaſt obtained Mountnorris's Pardon; he hoped there was nothing accuſable in him, but his too remiſs and too moderate Proceedings.

Maſter Glyn bitterly replied, That he knew the time when the Earl of Strafford was no leſs active and ſtirring to enlarge the Liberty of the Subject, and advance the Petition of Right, than now he is for extending his own Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government.

To this he replied, without the leaſt Semblance of Paſſion, That if at any time he had done the leaſt Service to the Houſe of Commons, he thought his whole Life well ſpent; nor could they ever ſo graciouſly reward him, as to give Commiſſion to that Gentleman to expreſs ſo much before that Honourable Aſſembly: But withal, if ever any ſuch thing was done by him, he intreated it might now be remembred, and might now ſerve to overballance ſome ſlight and mean Overſights committed by him; which he hoped ſhould never make him guilty of Treaſon, unleſs it were Treaſon for a Man to have no more Wit and Prudence than God and Nature had beſtowed upon him. And ſo much for Saturday.

Upon Monday he was charged with the ſixth Article; That he had uſed a Tyrannical Government, not only over the Lives (as appeared by the laſt) but alſo over the Lands and Goods of the King's Subjects, as appeared by this Article; wherein he was charged to have diſpoſſeſſed the Lord Mountnorris of a Tenure of Lands, by a Summary Proceſs before himſelf, contrary to all Law: and therefore had failed,

1. Againſt the Act 7 Hen. 6. which provides all Matters to be determined by the ordinary Judges.

2. Againſt the Cautions ſent to Ireland by King James, expreſly forbidding ſuch Power hereafter to be exerciſed.

3. Againſt the King's late Proclamation.

4. Againſt the Practice of all Deputies before that time.

Withal they added, That it was a Tyranny that could not be expreſſed, to exerciſe this Power over the Perſons of the Peers of the Land, and their Goods.

To this he replied, That for his part, in matter of Juſtice (under favour he ſpake it) he thought there was no diſtinction to be made betwixt a Peer of the Land and one of the Commons, except they did think that either Fear or Faction ſhould do ſomething, which had no place in him.

To the Particulars:

1. That the Act of Hen. 6. anſwered itſelf ſufficiently, both becauſe it excepted the Court of Requeſts (and that his Proceedings were nothing elſe in Ireland) and alſo makes an expreſs Reſervation of the King's Prerogative; which he ſaid was his Strength, becauſe he derived his Commiſſion from the King, and that the Act was the moſt expreſs Warrant in the world for him.

2. That he had not failed againſt the Cautions given by King James,

(1.) Becauſe they were not charged upon him.

(2.) Becauſe they were never obſerved, nor could be by the Deputies to whom they were given; which he proved both by Witneſſes and Writings.

(3.) Becauſe the Caution made rather for him than againſt him, in that it contained the word hereafter, which manifeſtly implied that the Power had been ſometimes before exerciſed in Ireland, and not only by himſelf; and therefore thanked them for that Teſtimony and Hint.

(4.) That though the Cautions had been given to him, yet he had received an expreſs Command from the King his Maſter to put that Power in uſe: cauſing the King's Letter, for that purpoſe, to be read; and profeſſing withal, That he was tender to exerciſe that Power, till the King (induced by the humble Remonſtrance of the meaner ſort of People) had moſt peremptorily, and upon moſt juſt Reaſons, commanded him.

3. That he could not obey the King's Proclamation five Years before it came out; and that he wiſhed from his heart, that they would but reſpect the King's Commands and Commiſſions with that Tenderneſs of Affection and Obedience, as he did his Proclamations.

4. He proved it to be the conſtant Practice of all Deputies that went before him.

It was objected, That other Deputies had indeed upon Suits of Equity determined themſelves, as to Matters of Debt, but never of Land.

He replied, Firſt, That the ſame Authority reacheth as well to the one as to the other. Secondly, That neither he nor they had ever given Sentence, or determined any thing concerning Matters of Inheritance; but only concerning violent Intruſion, which fell directly within a Suit of Equity. To which he added, Firſt, The Equity of that Court; that it proceeds upon the ſame Grounds and Evidences as that of the Common-Pleas, and that he had the aſſiſtance of two of the Learned Judges in deciding the Controverſy.

Secondly, The Profit of that Court, which diſpatcheth the Poor in a day or two; whereas the Common Law would keep them ſo many Years, which they are not able to ſuſtain.

Thirdly, The Neceſſity of that Court in that Kingdom, which hath been ever governed by that way, and therefore impoſſible to debar the Natives from it, without great inconvenience; for it would utterly undo them, and none is prejudiced by it but the Lawyers. And therefore ſeeing that he had done nothing but what was cuſtomary, neceſſary, and equitable, commanded to it, and the Sentence juſt; he hoped rather for Thanks from the State, than a Charge for his ill Deportment. Withal he ſhewed with what Extortion and Violence the Lord Mountnorris had taken ſeizure of that piece of Land, and made the playing of his Game to be very foul. And at laſt he added, That he had done no more in Ireland, than the Court of Requeſt in England uſually doth, and that the Chancery-Court in Ireland doth the ſame daily; and the laſt Chancellor was never charged (ſaid he) for ſuch Proceedings, though this his Power and Authority was leſs than mine: but the difference of the Perſon and his Authority (it ſeemeth) differeth the matter. And this was the Buſineſs on Monday.

On Tueſday they paſſed by the 7th Article, and the two firſt Parts of the 8th, about the Lady Hibbot's Land; That he had violently thruſt her from her Poſſeſſion by this ſummary way of Juſtice, and after-afterwards purchaſed the Land to his own uſe, by borrowing the Name of Sir Robert Meredith.

In this Probation, the Teſtimony of the Gentlewoman's own Son was uſed, of the Lord Cork, and the Lord Mountnorris, all his Back-friends, or profeſſed Enemies: And yet they proved very little, but what they took upon Hear-ſays. Their prime Allegation was, Firſt, That tho the major Part of the Council-Board had voted for the Lady, yet the Lord Lieutenant had given Decrees againſt her.

Secondly, That all was done to his own behoof.

To the Firſt, He produced the Sentence under the Hand of the Clerk of the Council-Board, ſubſcribed by the major Part.

To the Second, He atteſted that he had no Under-dealing with Meredith; for the Lady had got her own Lands back from the ſaid Sir Robert Meredith. He alſo declared at length with what Fraud and Deceit the Lady had come to her Lands, and upon what Reaſons they were reſtored.

After this Article they fell upon the 9th, about the giving of Commiſſion to the Biſhop of Downe and Connor, for apprehending all ſuch Perſons, and preſenting them before the Council-Board, as contemned the Eccleſiaſtical Ordinances.

This was aggravated as a Point mainly againſt the Liberty of the Subject.

To this he replied:

Firſt, He produced the Primate of Ireland's Teſtimony under his Hand, (he being himſelf ſick) that the ſame Courſe had been uſed in Ireland before; and that Biſhop Mountgomery, his Predeceſſor in the Biſhoprick of Meathe, had had the ſame.

Secondly, He ſhewed the Equity that ſuch Aſſiſtance ſhould be given to Churchmen, who otherwiſe, becauſe of Papiſts and Schiſmaticks, either to God or the King, would have no Reſpect or Obedience given them in that Kingdom.

Thirdly, He proved by two Witneſſes that ſuch Warrants were in uſe before his time.

Fourthly, He ſaid he had never granted any but that one, and had preſently, within ſome few Months, called the ſame in again. What (ſaid he) was the Biſhop of Downe's Carriage in it, he had no reaſon to anſwer for: But he preſumed the Biſhop could give a ſatisfactory Anſwer for himſelf, when he ſhould be called in queſtion. And ſo he concluded, that a Matter ſo juſt, ſo neceſſary, ſo cuſtomary and practical before, he hoped ſhould not be charged upon him as an Introduction of a new and tyrannical Form of Government; and therefore ſubmitted himſelf to the Mercy of God, and the Equity of his Peers in his Tryal. And this was the Work on Tueſday.

The Ability of this brave Gentleman raviſhed his Hearers with Admiration, tho he be infinitely ſpent both in Body and Mind by the continued and almoſt uninterrupted Agitation.

After the 9th Article was paſſed, againſt the Commiſſion iſſued in favour of the Biſhop of Downe and Connor; upon Wedneſday Mr. Glyn proceeded to the 10th Article. The Charge was, That the Earl of Strafford having eſtabliſhed an arbitrary and tyrannical Government over the Lives, Lands, and Liberties of the King's Subjects, his next Deſire was to make Intruſion upon the Crown it ſelf, that by applying to his own uſe the publick Revenues, he might be the more enabled to accompliſh his diſloyal and traitorous Intentions. To which end, having by a new Book of Rates enhaunced the Cuſtoms, he had gotten by Advantage of his Leaſe above twenty ſix thouſand Pound yearly. This (they added) was a Crime of a higher nature than thoſe contained in the preceding Articles, becauſe in thoſe there was ſome Colour or Pretext of Juſtice, here none; thoſe in particulars, this in general; thoſe againſt the Subject only, this againſt the King himſelf.

For the Proof of the Charge, they produced the Leaſe of the Duke of Buckingham.

Which was read and compared with that Leaſe to the Dutcheſs of Buckingham, (which the Lieutenant hath now by Aſſignment) and ſome Differences ſhewn, ariſing to the Sum of two thouſand Pounds in the Duke's Leaſe; only the Moiety of concealed and forfeited Goods were due to him, but the whole Goods to the Dutcheſs in her Leaſe. Again, the King's Ships of Prizes did not pay Cuſtom in the Duke's Leaſe; in the Dutcheſs's they did. Again, the Impoſt of the Wines (then belonging to the Earl of Carliſle) was not in the Duke's Leaſe; in the Dutcheſs's it was. Laſtly, Whereas the Earl of Strafford paid but fourteen thouſand Pounds per Annum for the Cuſtom, it was worth to him, as was apparent by the Books of the Exchequer, forty thouſand Pounds.

Witneſſes were examined.

Firſt, Sir James Hay, who depoſed, That the Earl of Carliſle had an Advantage of one thouſand ſix hundred Pounds per Annum by his Leaſe of Wines.

Secondly, The Lord Ranelaugh, who depoſed, That by the Inſpection of the Books of Accompts, he had found the Cuſtoms to be Anno 1636 thirty ſix thouſand Pounds, Anno 1637 thirty nine thouſand Pounds, Anno 1638 fifty four thouſand Pounds, Anno 1639 fifty nine thouſand Pounds.

With the Proof they concluded the Charge, That notwithſtanding the Lord Strafford pretended a great Meaſure of Zeal and Honeſty in his Majeſty's Service, yet it is evident he had abuſed the Truſt put upon him; and by withdrawing ſo great Sums of Money from the Crown, had weaken'd the King, prejudiced the Subjects of the Protection they were to expect from him, and had been the Cauſe that the extraordinary way of Impoſt and Monopolies had been undertaken for ſupplying of the Royal Neceſſity. And that this Act therefore ought to be enough to make the Charge and Impeachment of High Treaſon laid againſt him.

The Lieutenant's Reply was, That he conceived he had given full Satisfaction to all hitherto brought againſt him about that pretended arbitrary Government; nor would he ſpend Time in vain Repetitions: For the preſent Article, though in all its Parts it were granted to be true, yet he could not perceive by what Interpretation of Law it could imply the leaſt Act of Treaſon; and when it ſhould be directly charged upon him as a point of Miſdemeanour, Oppreſſion, or Felony, he made no doubt but he ſhould be very able to clear himſelf abundantly in that Point alſo; yet leſt any Prejudice might ſtick to his Honour by theſe bold Aſſertions, he was content to ſtep ſo far out of the way, as to give anſwer:

Firſt, That it concerned him nothing what Particulars in the Leaſe had paſt betwixt the King and the Dutcheſs of Buckingham, or whether ſhe had obtained a more eaſy Condition than the Duke her Husband, eſpecially ſeeing that ſame was granted ſome Years before his coming to that Government: yet thus much he could ſay, That the Dutcheſs had paid thirty thouſand Pound Fine; and and therefore no marvel her yearly Rent was the leſs.

Secondly, For the Book of Rates (wherein the chief Matter of Oppreſſion and Grievance ſeemed to reſt) the ſame was there eſtabliſhed by the Deputy Falkland, Anno 1628, three Years before his going into Ireland; and therefore it was exceeding ſtrange, in his Apprehenſion, how that could riſe up in Judgment againſt him.

Thirdly, That he had his Intereſt in the Cuſtoms by Aſſignation of a Leaſe from the Dutcheſs, which was given her before his Government: Nor did he ever hear it alledged as a Crime of Treaſon, for a Man to make a good Bargain for himſelf.

Fourthly, That not of his own Accord, but at the King's ſpecial Command, he had undergone that Charge, in hopes that upon the Enquiry into the Worth thereof, the Cuſtoms might be improved for the Benefit of the Crown, and the true Value thereof diſcovered. This he proved by the Lord Cottington and Sir Arthur Ingram.

Fifthly, That when a new Book of Rates was recommended to him by the Council-Board of England, in the time of his Leaſe, he ſo far preferred a Fear he had that the Trade of Ireland might thereby be diſcouraged before his own Commodity, as he preſumed, in all Humility, to refuſe the ſaid Book of Rates, and tendered his Reaſons thereof to the Kingdom and Council-Board of England.

Sixthly, That he never underſtood that the Cuſtoms could ariſe to thoſe great Sums alledged: But tho they ſhould, yet his Advantage was but ſmall. For firſt dividing the fourteen thouſand Pounds he paid to the King; then five parts of eight, which was yearly given in upon Oath (and that procured firſt by himſelf) at the Exchequer-Board; the other three parts divided amongſt four of them which were equal Sharers in the Leaſe, would not amount to any great Sum of Money. And therefore except it were Treaſon for him to have improved the King's Revenue, encouraged the Trade, and refuſed the new Book of Rates, he could in his own weak Judgment diſcern none there; nor could he think it a Crime for him to take an Aſſignation of a Leaſe granted before his time, and to inſiſt on the Book of Rates uſed before his coming over. And therefore was confident the Lords would rather take his Accuſation as an Exerciſe of Rhetorick in the Gentlemen his Adverſaries, than as a Thing ſpoken in good earneſt by them.

The ſame Day the 11th Article, concerning Tobacco, was charged on him by the ſame Man, Mr. Glyn, after this manner; That for the farther Advancement of his tyrannical and avaritious Deſigns, he had of himſelf eſtabliſhed a Monopoly for the Reſtraint of Tobacco in that Kingdom: where they offered five Particulars to the Proof;

1ſt, That he had reſtrained the Importation of Tobacco.

2dly, That in the mean time he had brought in a great Quantity himſelf, and ſold the ſame at exorbitant Prices.

3dly, That of Tobacco already imported, he had forbidden any to be ſold but what was firſt ſealed by his Officers.

4thly, That upon a pretended Diſobedience he had puniſhed a great Number of People by Seizures, Impriſonments, Fining, Whipping, Pillory, and ſuch like cruel and inhuman Uſages.

5thly, That by theſe means he had gained one hundred thouſand Pounds yearly.

For Proof hereof,

Firſt, The Proclamation for reſtraining Tobacco was read.

Secondly, The Proclamation about the ſealing of the ſame.

Thirdly, Some Witneſſes, who declared that Ships had been reſtrained from landing Tobacco.

Fourthly, Others, who had known ſome Tobacco ſeized on as forfeited.

Fifthly, The Remonſtrance of the Houſe of Commons in Ireland, declaring that the Earl had ſold 500 Tun of Tobacco, which, ſold at 2 s. 6 d. per Pound, amounts to 100000 l.

They concluded the Charge, That he had ſucked up the Blood, and eaten up the King's liege People; and had by this one Point of Oppreſſion raiſed greater Sums to himſelf, than all the King's Revenue in that Kingdom extended unto. And therefore was liable to the Crime of Treaſon, for troubling the Peace, and bereaving the People of their Goods, who were intruſted to his Care and Government.

The Lieutenant's Reply was,

That his moſt ſecret Thoughts were conſcious of nothing but a ſincere Intention and Endeavour to promote and advance the Welfare of that Kingdom: And withal, he conceived (by their leaves) that nothing in that Charge could have the leaſt reference to Treaſon; yet, as he ſaid before, for removing of all Prejudice, he was contented to anſwer:

Firſt, That long before his coming to Ireland the ſame Reſtraint had been of Tobacco, and the ſame Impoſt of eighteen Pence per Pound enjoined by King James.

Secondly, That at that time the Tradeſmen for this Commodity paid but twenty Pounds a Year to the Crown for the Impoſt, but now 400 l.

Thirdly, That the Parliament in Ireland, 1628, had petitioned to have this Impoſt ſettled by an Act of State for ever afterwards, as a part of the Revenue of the Crown.

Fourthly, That he had expreſs Command from the King for iſſuing thoſe Proclamations; and therefore could not imagine more danger in them, than in others for Monopolies in England, in the worſt Senſe.

Fifthly, That the Proclamations were not put forth by himſelf alone, but by the whole Council-Board of Ireland.

Sixthly, That for the Contract of Tobacco, he was ſo tender of it, that it was ſent over hither, and ſeen and approved of by the Council-Board of England before it was condeſcended to in Ireland.

For the Proclamations, he told them it was his own Opinion, (and if he failed in it, he humbly craved Pardon, and hoped that it ſhould not be Treaſon to have no more Judgment than God had beſtowed on him) that the King was endued by God with a Power to make temporary Laws, and cauſe the ſame to be promulgated for the Good of his People, upon ſudden emergent Occaſions; to which Laws Obedience is due, till they be abrogated by enſuing Parliaments. That he reſtrained no Man from importing Tobacco, who was willing to pay the appointed Impoſt. That for his part, he had never traffick'd in all his time in that kind, nor had any part with the Contractors: And if any Tobacco was ſeized on, it was upon contempt of the Proclamations. And if any Perſon were cenſured to the Pillory or Whipping, it was for known Perjury, the ordinary and uſual Puniſhment in ſuch a caſe. Concerning the Tobacco imported, (he ſaid) no Conſideration was taken of the Prices given for the Tobacco beyond Seas, of the King's Revenue of four thouſand Pound, of the Merchants Pains and Danger in bringing the ſame home. For his part, if any Advantage were made, ſurely it was not his; nor could he annul every Contract or Leaſe made by the King. And therefore, ſeeing his Intereſt was none, he had done nothing but at the King's Directions, and at the Advice of the Council-Board; ſeeing the ſame Impoſt was in King James's Time, and petitioned for by themſelves in Ireland; he hoped his Carriage in the Buſineſs ſhould be ſo far from a Crime of Treaſon, that it ſhould rather be thought no Crime at all. So much for Wedneſday.

Upon Thurſday he was charged with the 12th Article, concerning Flax, by Maſter Maynard, on this manner; That the Flax, being the native and principal Commodity of that Kingdom, was by him (the Lieutenant) reſtrained, and the Subjects put to that which was unknown, yea, impoſſible for the Iriſh to make the ſame into Yarn. Here they complained of three Things:

Firſt, That by Proclamation he had reſtrained ſelling of Flax.

Secondly, That he had ordered the making of Yarn of ſuch and ſuch Lengths and Numbers of Threds.

Thirdly, That the native Iriſh being unacquainted with ſuch Cuſtoms, upon pretended Diſobedience, had all their Flax and Yarn ſeized on to his uſe; whereby a great many Families were reduced to ſuch Penury, that they died by great Numbers in the Fields for want of Food.

For proof hereof, they brought;

Firſt, The Proclamation about the Reſtraint.

Secondly, The Warrant for ſeizing the forfeited Goods.

Thirdly, The Execution of the Warrant proved by Sir John Clotworthy, and Lord Ranelagh.

Fourthly, The Remonſtrance from the Houſe of Commons in Ireland, That upon the rigorous Courſe and Execution of this Warrant many Perſons died for want of Food. They concluded the Charge therefore, Though the Article did not individually imply Treaſon, yet it did make very much for the Accumulation of Treaſon.

The Lieutenant's Reply was,

That, as before, he would, and muſt ever repeat it, that nothing was in the Charge that contained Treaſon. To the Matter it ſelf he anſwered, Firſt, That the Proclamations iſſued forth were grounded not only upon Convenience, but upon Neceſſity; becauſe that, except ſome way had been taken for ordering of Yarn, the Merchants had abſolutely given over the Linen-Trade in that Kingdom.

Secondly, That the Council-Board was as liable to the Charge as himſelf, amongſt whom were at that time the Primate of Ireland, the Archbiſhop of Dublin, Chancellor Loftus, and the Lord Mountnorris, all Subſcribers to the Proclamation, Men to them of known Integrity and Judgment.

Thirdly, That nothing was more common than for the Council-Board of Ireland to give Orders for reducing the Natives to the Engliſh Cuſtoms, and to fine them for drawing their Horſes by the Tails, during their Corn, and ſuch like; and he conceived that to be a thing of the ſame nature.

Fourthly, That the ſpecial Thing inducing him to it was, becauſe he perceived the Trade of Wool to increaſe much in that Kingdom. He diſſuaded by all means the making of Woollen-Cloth, becauſe of the infinite Detriment that might happen thereby to the Kingdom of England; and therefore thought this the beſt way to encourage the wear of Linen-Cloth. For the Warrant to ſeize upon the Goods, he affirmed the ſame to be neceſſary, becauſe there ſhould be no Contempt to Proclamations: But that any part thereof did accrue to him, he flatly denied. If any Rigour was uſed in the Execution, he ſaid not he, but his Officers were to anſwer for it; for this might happen in the moſt juſt and neceſſary Commands; nor was there ever any Complaint preſented to him of any ſuch matter. For his part, he had loſt thirty thouſand Pound in the Manufacture, eſtabliſhed by himſelf for the Encouragement of others.

To that, that Perſons died by this means, he replied, That it was more than ever he heard, or could think poſſible; yea, that he was cleared by the Allegation it ſelf, which ſaith that the ſame happened ſince his coming from Ireland.

To the Remonſtrance of Ireland, he conceived, That a Charge was but a ſlender Proof of a Charge; and that eſpecially upon Interrogatories, not upon Oath, ſeeing that Privilege was not due to the Houſe of Commons neither here nor there; that he might ſay it in Truth and Modeſty, he deſerved much better of that People, and might take up that in the Goſpel, For which of all my good Deeds, &c. yet he hoped to be better underſtood ſhortly both here and there. And for his part, though his Purſuit had been very hot, yet God was his Witneſs he never intended to take the leaſt Impreſſion of Revenge for thoſe Diſcontents and Affronts which had been eagerly put upon him; or to carry any thing hence with him from that Bar, where ſo many foul Aſperſions had been unjuſtly thrown upon him, but only gratuitas cicatricis.

The ſame Day a freſh Man (Maſter Palmer) enter'd the Liſts againſt him; who having paſt by, for want of Proof, the thirteenth, fourteenth, and part of the fifteenth Articles, inſiſted only upon the ſecond part, for giving Warrant to Serjeant Savil for ſeizing and laying Soldiers upon the Subjects. He charged thus; That the Lord Strafford, having by a tyrannical Power inverted the ordinary Courſe of Juſtice, and given immediate Sentence upon the Lands and Goods of the King's Subjects, under pretence of Diſobedience, had uſed a military way for redreſſing of the Contempt, and laid Soldiers upon the Lands and Goods of the King's Subjects, to their utter Ruin. This Article (he ſaid) of it ſelf did contain an individual Treaſon; ſo that if there were no more than this, it were more than ſufficient to convince him of his Impeachment.

Here he offered two Things;

Firſt, The Proof of the Point.

Secondly, By what Statute this Act of Tyranny directly, and by it ſelf, implied Treaſon. For the firſt, Serjeant Savil was called, who produced the Copy of the Warrant upon which he had ſettled the Soldiers.

At this the Lieutenant roſe, and humbly intreated the Lords no Evidence ſhould be received againſt him upon an Article of ſuch Importance, but what might be thought authentick; and ſuch a one, under favour, he conceived that Copy not to be:

Firſt,

Firſt, Becauſe no Tranſcript, but the Original only, can make Faith before the King's-Bench in a Matter of Debt; therefore far be it from them to receive a moſt ſlender Teſtimony in Matter of Life and Death, before the ſupreme Judicatory of the Kingdom.

Secondly, If Copies be at any time received, they are ſuch as are given in upon Oath, to have been compared with the Originals, which are upon Record: ſuch an one was not that Copy.

It was replied by Maſter Glyn, (for all of them ſpake as occaſion ſerved) That the Houſe had but the day before admitted Copies as Evidences, much more ſhould they do this, when it was proſecuted by the Officer himſelf, who beſt knew it, having executed the ſame.

To this the Lieutenant anſwered, That all other Copies ought to be received upon Oath, to have been compared with the Original, as right Reaſon requireth; but that this was not ſo: and for the Officer himſelf producing it, that was the beſt Argument he could uſe, why it ſhould not be admitted. For (ſaid he) Maſter Savil may be charged with Treaſon, for ceſſing Men of War upon the King's Subjects; he hath nothing for his defence, but a pretended Warrant from me. Now what he ſwears to my prejudice, is to his own advantage; nor can a Man, by any Equity in the world, be admitted to teſtify againſt another, in ſuam juſtificationem.

The Point ſeemed exceeding weighty, and in effect was the Ground-work of the whole Article; which not proved, nothing could evince him to have been acceſſary to the Conſequence. The Upper Houſe therefore adjourned themſelves, and went up to their own Court; and after a very hot Conteſtation between the Factions, and above an hour's ſtay, they returned, and declared that the Lords, after mature Deliberation, had reſolved that the Copy ſhould not be admitted; and deſired them to proceed to other Proofs: which after a little pauſe they did.

Firſt, The Lord Ranelagh affirms, that he heard of ſuch a Warrant, and knew ſometimes three, ſometimes five Soldiers billeted by it.

Secondly, Maſter Clare declares the very ſame.

Thirdly, Another depoſeth he had ſeen ſuch a Warrant under the Deputy's Hand and Seal. And ſo much for the Proof.

For the Statute, they alledged one of Edward 3, 6. That whoſoever ſhould carry about with them Engliſh Enemies, Iriſh Rebels, or Hooded-Men, and ceſs them upon the Subject, ſhould be puniſhed as a Traytor. Another of Hen. 6, 7. That whoſoever ſhould ceſs Men of War in his Majeſty's Dominions, ſhould be thought to make war againſt the King, and puniſhed as a Traytor. They concluded, It was evident the Lord Strafford had incurred the Penalty and Breach of both the Statutes, and therefore deſired the Lords ſhould give out Judgment againſt him as a Traytor.

The Lord-Lieutenant's Reply was, That in all the Courſe of his Life he had intended nothing more than the Preſervation of the Lives, Goods, and Welfare of the King's Subjects; and that he dared profeſs, that under no Deputy, more than under himſelf, had there been a more free and uninterrupted Courſe of Juſtice.

To the Charge he anſwered, Firſt, That the Cuſtoms of Ireland differed exceedingly from the Cuſtoms of England, as was clear by Cook's Book; and therefore though ceſſing of Men might ſeem ſtrange here, yet not ſo there.

Secondly, That even in England he had known Soldiers preſſed upon Men by the Preſidents of York and Wales, in caſe of known and open Contempts; and that both in point of Outlawry and Rebellion, and alſo even for Sums of Debt between Party and Party, there is nothing more ordinary than theſe Ceſſings to this day in Scotland, whereby the chief Houſe of the Owner is ſeized upon.

Thirdly, That to this day there hath been nothing more ordinary in Ireland, than for the Governours to appoint Soldiers to put all manner of Sentences in execution; which he proved plainly to have been done frequently, and familiarly exerciſed in Grandiſon's, Falkland's, Chicheſter's, Wilmot's, Cork's, Evers's, and all preceding Deputies times; and had even for Outlawries, for the King's Debts in the Exchequer, of Collection, of Contribution-Money, and (which comes home to the point) for petit Sums of Money between Party and Party: ſo that he marvelled, qua fronte, or with what boldneſs it could be called an Arbitrary Government lately brought in by him.

To this the Lord Dillon, Sir Adam Loftus, and Sir Arthur Teringham depoſed; the laſt of whom told, that in Falkland's time he knew twenty Soldiers ceſſed upon a Man for refuſing to pay ſixteen Shillings Sterling.

Fourthly, That in his Inſtructions for executing his Commiſſions, he hath expreſs Warrant for the ſame, as were in the Inſtructions to the Lord Falkland before him; both of which were produced and read.

Fifthly, That although all theſe Precedents were not, yet it were not poſſible to govern the Kingdom of Ireland otherwiſe, which had been from all times accuſtomed to ſuch ſummary Proceedings.

Sixthly, That no Teſtimony brought againſt him can prove that ever he gave warrant to that effect; and for the Deeds of the Serjeant at Arms, he did conceive himſelf to be anſwerable for it.

As for the Acts of Parliament, he had reſerved them to the Diſpute of his Lawyers; but was content to ſay thus much for the preſent:

Firſt, That it is a Ground in the Civil Law, that where the King is not mentioned, there he cannot be included: But (with all deference to his ſacred Perſon be it ſpoken) he conceived himſelf to be in his Maſter the King's place (for ſo his Commiſſion did run) in that Kingdom of Ireland.

Secondly, The Words of the Statute are not applicable to him; for God knows, he never went about in perſon to lay Soldiers upon any of the King's Subjects.

Thirdly, That the King's own Soldiers, requiring in a cuſtomary way Obedience to his Orders, could in no conſtruction be called Iriſh Rebels, Engliſh Enemies, or Hooded-Men.

Fourthly, That the Uſe and Cuſtom of the Law was the beſt Interpreter thereof; and for that he had already ſpoken enough.

Fifthly, That it ſavoured more of Prejudice than Equity, to ſtart out ſuch an old Statute againſt him, and none others, though culpable of the ſame Fact, to the overthrow and ruin of him and his Poſterity.

Sixthly, That (under favour he conceived) for any Iriſh Cuſtom, or upon any Iriſh Statute, he was to be judged by the Peers of Ireland.

Seventhly, That Statute, of what force ſoever, was repealed;

1ſt, By the tenth of Henry VII. where it is expreſly declared, nothing ſhall be reputed Treaſon hereafter, but what is ſo declared by the preſent Statute: now not a word there of any ſuch Treaſon.

2dly, By the eleventh of Queen Elizabeth, where expreſly power is given to the Deputy of Ireland to ceſs and lay Soldiers, although the ſame be reputed Treaſon in any other.

To the Statute of Henry VI. he replied, That a ſlender Anſwer might ſerve: He hoped that no Man would think him ſo inconſiderate, to war againſt the King of Britain and Ireland, by the ceſſing of five Soldiers; that he had been charged by many for taking Arms for the King, but to that time never for taking Arms againſt him; and that he heartily wiſhed, that no Man in all his Majeſty's Dominions had more Practices with Rebels and rebellious Deſigns againſt the King than himſelf. So much for Thurſday.

At the Cloſe he deſired the Intermiſſion of a Day, that he might recollect his Spirits and Strength againſt the next Quarrel; and with ſome difficulty obtained Reſt till Saturday.

Upon Saturday Mr. Palmer proceeded to the ſixteenth Article, and charged thus; That the Lord Strafford having eſtabliſhed a Tyrannical and Independent Authority, by giving ſummary Decrees and Sentences, had deprived the Subject of all juſt Remedy; for in that Kingdom there was none ſupreme to himſelf, to whom they might appeal: and leſt their juſt Grievances might be made known to his Majeſty, he had obtained a Reſtraint, that no Complaint ſhould be made of Injuſtice or Oppreſſion done there, till the firſt Addreſs had been made to himſelf, and that no Perſon ſhould come out of that Kingdom but upon Licence obtained from himſelf.

For proof of this, Firſt, The Inſtructions were read, whereby that Reſtraint was permitted.

Secondly, The Proclamation, That all Noblemen, Gentlemen, Undertakers, Officers, or other Subjects that ſhould reſort into that Kingdom, ſhould not come from thence without a Licence from him.

Thirdly, That he had reſtrained the Earl of Deſmond, becauſe of a Suit in Law depending between the Earl and himſelf, till Publication of the ſame was paſſed.

Fourthly, That the Lord Roch being informed againſt before the Star-Chamber, he would not licence him to come into this Kingdom, till the Sentence was paſſed againſt him.

Fifthly, That one Marchatee having pretended a mind to travel, was denied a Licence.

Sixthly, That the whole Committee for the Parliament was reſtrained this laſt year by Deputy Wansford, which they ſaid might be interpreted to be his Fact, both becauſe they had ſuch Intelligence the one from the other, as alſo by the Proclamation iſſued by him before.

Seventhly, That one Parry, Servant to Chancellor Loftus, was fined Five Hundred Pounds at his Return, for departing Ireland without Licence.

Eighthly, That the Iriſh Remonſtrance complained of this, as the greateſt Innovation and Thraldom put upon them ſince the time of the Conqueſt.

They concluded the Charge, That by this means having taken off that Intelligence which ſhould be between the King and his People, and having deprived them of that Remedy which in reaſon they might expect from ſo juſt and ſo gracious a Prince, he had taken upon him a Royal and Independent Power, and had faulted highly both againſt King and State.

The Lieutenant's Reply was, That he hoped to make it clear, that he had done nothing in that particular, but what was uſual, neceſſary, and juſt; and that he ſhould be very well able (by the Grace of God) not only of that, but of all other his publick Actions, to give a reaſonable Account, though not free from much Weakneſs, yet certainly from all Malice and Treaſon.

To the Particulars:

Firſt, For Inſtructions laid upon him, he was not ſo much chargeable as thoſe of the Council of England, whereof there was a great many preſent who could witneſs their Commands; but leſt any thing ſhould ſeem unjuſtly enjoined by them, or embraced by him, he deſired that the Reaſons of their Inſtructions might be read: which were, That it were Injuſtice to complain of Injuries, of Oppreſſion done in that Kingdom, till firſt the Deputy's Judgment was informed, and tryal made of his Integrity; That it would much diſcourage the Miniſters of State there, and expend the Moneys of that Kingdom, if upon every trifling Buſineſs Complaints ſhould be admitted in England; and that if Juſtice were there denied by the Deputy, it ſhould be lawful for any Man to come over.

Secondly, For the Proclamation, that the ſame was builded upon the Statute of that Kingdom, the 25 Hen. 6. which contained the ſame Reſtraint verbatim.

Thirdly, That Anno 1628, the Agents for the Iriſh Nation had petitioned for the ſame from the King.

Fourthly, That the Deputy Falkland had ſet forth the ſame Proclamation.

Fifthly, That he had the King's expreſs Warrant for it, Anno 1634, which was read.

Sixthly, That he had received the Warrant in January, yet the Proclamation iſſued not out till September after.

Seventhly, That the whole Council-Board of Ireland had not only condeſcended, but alſo preſſed him to it.

Eighthly, The Neceſſity of the Kingdom required the ſame; for if the Gentlemen had the Ports open to go to Spain, and their Scholars to Doway, Rheimes, or St. Omers, it were likely that at their return they would put fire both in Church and State, and produce very ſad Events, by practiſing to diſtemper both.

Ninthly, He conceived that the King, as great Maſter of the Family, might reſtrain whom he pleaſed from departing his Kingdom without his privity: and here it was not lawful for any to go from England without Licence; how much more neceſſary was this from Ireland?

To the Proofs he anſwered, Firſt, For Deſmond, he granted he was reſtrained indeed, but not for any Suit of Law betwixt them, but becauſe at that time he ſtood charged with Treaſon before the Council in Ireland, for practiſing againſt the Life of one Sir Valentine Cooke.

Secondly, For the Lord Roch, he had oftentimes marvelled with what reaſon the Man at that time could ſeek a Licence, ſeeing he was a Priſoner for Debt in the Caſtle of Dublin; and if he had granted a Licence to him then, it had been a far more juſt Charge of Treaſon than now.

Thirdly, For Marchatee, he was afraid of his going to Spain; and if he had intended to go for England, and complain of himſelf, he would not have refuſed him Liberty, as he never did to any.

Fourthly,

Fourthly, That the Committee of Iriſh was not reſtrained by him, and therefore did not concern him at all.

Fifthly, That for Parry, he was fined indeed, but that it is expreſly ſaid in his Sentence, that it was not for coming over without Licence, (as is ſuggeſted) but for ſundry Contempts againſt the Council-Board in Ireland.

Sixthly, That he had replied in the laſt Article, a Remonſtrance was no proof at all. He concluded, that he hoped the leaſt Suſpicion of Treaſon could not accrue to him from the Article: For Oppreſſion or Miſdemeanour, when it was laid to his charge, he made no doubt but he ſhould be able to anſwer it.

The ſame day a new Man was hurried out againſt him, (Mr. Whitlock) who having paſs'd over the 17th and 18th Articles, reſteth on the 19th, about the Oath adminiſtred to the Scots in Ireland, and charged thus:

That it was the Height of his Tyranny, not only to domineer over the Bodies, but alſo over the Conſciences of Men; to which purpoſe he had enjoined an Oath to the Scots in Ireland: and becauſe ſome out of Tenderneſs of Conſcience did refuſe to take the ſame, he had fined them in great Sums of Money, baniſhed a great number from that Kingdom, called all that Nation Traytors and Rebels; and ſaid, if ever he returned home from England, he would root them out both Stock and Branch.

For Proof of this, Firſt, Sir Jammy Mountgomery was produced; who declared at large how that Oath was contrived.

Secondly, Sir Robert Maxwell of Orchiardon, who ſpake to the ſame purpoſe.

Thirdly, Sir John Clotworthy, who declared that a great number had fled the Kingdom for fear of that Oath.

Fourthly, One Mr. Samuel, who depoſed, that upon the tenth of October 1638, he heard the Deputy ſay theſe words, That if he returned, he would root them out Stock and Branch.

They concluded, That this was a Point of the moſt Tyrannical and Arbitrary Government, that before this time was ever heard of, not only to lord it over the Fortunes, but alſo over the Souls of Men: and that it reſted only in the Parliament, which hath the Legiſlative Power, to enjoin Oaths. And that therefore this was one of the chief Points he had done againſt the Privileges and Liberty of the Subject.

The Lieutenant replied, That every new Article acquainted him with a new Treaſon; that if he had done any thing in all his Life acceptable to the King and Country, he conceived it to be this.

To theſe Particulars; Firſt, He deſired the Lords would call to mind the Condition of thoſe Times; no Man (pointing to my Lord Steward) knows better than your Lordſhip, who had then the chiefeſt place in his Majeſty's Service. I would be very ſorry to rub (ſaid he) old Sores, eſpecially ſeeing I hope things are in a fair way to a firm Peace, and I wiſh that I may not be deceived, that is, that it may be ſo; only thus much I may ſay, we had then greater Fears and Apprehenſions in Ireland, leſt the Scots in the Kingdom (who were above one hundred thouſand Souls) might have joined with their Countrymen at home, for the diſturbance of our Peace: mean time we detected a Treaſon of betraying of the Caſtle of Knockfergus to a great Man in that Kingdom, (whoſe Name I now ſpare) by one Freeman, who upon the diſcovery was executed.

The Council-Board therefore in Ireland reſolved to preſcribe the Scots an Oath, whereby they might declare their Diſcontent at their Countrymens Proceedings, and oblige themſelves to the King's Service: but while we were about this, they of their own accord came to Dublin to petition for it, and took it with a wonderful Alacrity and Heartineſs; ſo that it is a marvellous Falſhood for any Man to ſay it was invented, or violently enjoined by me.

Secondly, About the ſame time the ſame Oath, verbum verbo, was by the Council of England preſcribed to the Scots, at London and elſewhere; which was no ſmall Encouragement to us in Ireland.

Thirdly, I had, (ſaid he) which I never ſhew'd, becauſe I had no need before this time, a ſpecial Warrant from the King, all written with his own Hand, to that effect: and when the King commands a matter not contrary to Law, truly I (ſaid he) do conceive it both contrary to Law and Conſcience not to yield him all due Obedience. For the Proof brought againſt him, there was nothing ſeemed to be of any moment but the words.

For the firſt words, That he had called all the Nation Rebels and Traytors, he ſaid there was no proof at all, nor indeed could there be any: for if I had ſaid it, (quoth he) I had been perfectly out of my wits; and, he thanked God, ſuch irrational Speeches uſed not to eſcape him. He honoured that Kingdom very much, becauſe it was the native Soil of our dread Sovereign, his gracious Maſter; and becauſe he knew a part, yea (he hoped) the greateſt part of them, had been, and ever will be, as loyal and dutiful to the King as any other of his Subjects: and of thoſe too who had ſubſcribed that unhappy Combination, he knew a great many had done it againſt their Hearts and Wills, and would be ever ready upon occaſion to remonſtrate the ſame, by adhering to the King's Service. So that this Accuſation was nothing but a wreſting and perverting his Words and Meaning, of purpoſe to make him odious, and irritate a whole Nation againſt him.

For the other words, they were proved only by one Witneſs, which could make no ſufficient Faith; and that Witneſs too he would evince, if not of Perjury, yet of a notable Miſtake: for he had ſworn poſitively that he had ſpoken theſe words the tenth of October, whereas he was come out of Ireland into England the twelfth of September before, and was at London the one and twentieth.

For thoſe that had fled the Kingdom becauſe of that Oath, he knew none ſuch; and if they did, they fled into Scotland, which might ſufficiently argue their Intentions and Reſolutions. For his part, if they were not willing to give that Teſtimony of their Loyalty to their Prince, although he had known of their Departure, he would have been very loth to have kept them againſt their wills, but ſhould have been gladly rid of them, and have made them a Bridge to be gone, rather than ſtay.

Upon Monday, Maſter Whitlock proceeded to the 20th Article, and told him, That becauſe the Matter was intervenient, & conſimili naturæ, they had reſolved to join the five next Articles together, becauſe all of them tended to one Point or Period; that is, to ſhew what bad Deſign he had, to have ſubdued the Kingdoms both of England and Scotland by Force of Arms, and to reduce them them to that Arbitrary Government he had lately introduced into Ireland.

The Lieutenant intreated that they would proceed according to the Order prescribed by the House, which was Article by Article: he said, five Articles were many, the Matter weighty, his Memory treacherous, his Judgment weak.

It was bitterly replied by Master Glyn, That it did not become the Prisoner at the Bar to prescribe them in what way they should give in their Evidences.

The Lieutenant modestly answered, That if he stood in his place, he would perhaps crave the like Favour, unless his Abilities did furnish him with more Strength than he could find in himself: for his part he was contented they should proceed any way, always provided they would grant him a competent time for replying.

Then Whitlock went on, and told the Lords, That something in those Articles concerned the Scotish, something the English Nation. That which concerned the Scotish, he reduced to five Heads:

First, That the Deputy had said at the Council-Board, That the Scots Demands contained sufficient Matter to persuade to an offensive War.

Secondly, That the same Demands did strike at the Root and Life of Monarchical Government, and were only to be answered by the Sword.

Thirdly, That he had caused some Scotish Goods and Ships to be seized on in Ireland.

Fourthly, That he had engaged the Irish Parliament, by their Declaration, in that War against the Scots.

Fifthly, That by all possible means he had put bad Thoughts and Suspicions into his Majesty against his Scotish Subjects, and laboured to make a National Quarrel between them and England; which, if the King's Piety, and the Prudence of better-affected Statesmen had not prevented, could not have been sodder'd up again without much Blood.

Concerning England, his Speeches were either before or after the Parliament.

First, Before his Creature and Bosom-Friend Sir George Ratcliff, he had said to Sir Robert King, when he was doubting how the King might have Moneys to pay his Armies, That the King had Four Hundred Thousand Pounds in his Purse, Thirty Thousand Men in the Field, and his Sword by his side; and if he wanted Money afterwards, who will pity him?

Secondly, That his Brother Sir George Wentworth had said to Sir Robert Barrington, upon the Dissolution of the last Parliament, That seeing the English would not grant Supply to the King, it seems they were weary of their Peace, and desired to be conquered a second time.

Thirdly, That he himself, upon a Discourse with the Primate of Ireland, had said, That he was much of the mind of those English Divines, who maintained it lawful for a King, having tried the Affection and Benevolence of his People, and then denied their Help, upon an inevitable Necessity and present Danger of the Kingdom, that he might use his Prerogative for his own Supply, and the Defence of his Subjects.

Fourthly, To the Lord Conway, in a Discourse, he had said, That if the Parliament (meaning the last Parliament) should not grant a competent Supply, that then the King was acquitted before God and Man, and might use the Authority put into his hands.

Fifthly, That he did say at the Council-Board, If the Parliament should deny to help the King, he would take any other way he could for his Majesty's Service and Assistance.

His Expressions after the Parliament were two:

First, That the Parliament had forsaken the King, and that the King should not suffer himself to be overmastered by the Frowardness, Obstinacy, and Stubbornness of his People.

Secondly, That if his Majesty pleased to employ Forces, he had some in Ireland that might serve to reduce this Kingdom.

The Proofs for the Scots Particulars, were these:

First, The Lord Traquair, who was indeed very favourable to the Lord-Lieutenant, and spake nothing to his disadvantage but what was skrewed from him: with much difficulty he told them, That when he gave in the Demands, he heard him say, That it was high time for the King to put himself into a posture of War; but that first all the Council of England said the same as well as he. 2dly, That it was a double Supposition: 1. That the Demands were truly given in. 2. That there was no other Remedy left but Arms, to reduce them.

Secondly, The Earl of Morton's Testimony (being sick himself) was produced, and it was one and the same with the Article.

Thirdly, Sir Henry Vane was examined, who declared, That he had heard the Lieutenant to advise the King to an Offensive War, when his own Judgment was for a Defensive.

Fourthly, The Testimony of the Earl of Northumberland was produced, which was the very same with Sir Henry Vane's.

Fifthly, The Treasurer of England deposed the same with Traquair.

Sixthly, One Beane, from Ireland, told, That he had known Ships seized on there; but by whose Procurement or Warrant, he knew not.

To the Articles about England;

First, Sir Robert King and the Lord Ranelagh deposed the same, That Sir Robert King and the Lord Ranelagh had heard Sir George Ratcliff speak those words in the Article.

Secondly, Sir Robert Barrington, of Sir George Wentworth.

Thirdly, The Primate's Testimony (who is sick) was the same with the Article.

Fourthly, The Lord Conway deposed the same with the Article.

Fifthly, Sir Henry Vane deposed, He had heard those words spoken at the Council-Board.

For the Words spoken after the Parliament:

To the first, Sir Tho. Jermyne, Lord Newburg, Earl of Bristol, Earl of Holland, were examined. Bristol did mince the matter, but Holland's Testimony was express, because of the exceeding great Love he carried to the Man.

For the last, which were the most dangerous Speeches, (about reducing of this Kingdom) there was only Sir Henry Vane's Testimony; who declared only thus, That he had heard either those words, or the like.

Here some of the Lieutenant's Friends shewed themselves:

1. The Lord Savil, who desired of Sir Henry Vane to know whether he said their, or this, or that Kingdom; and withal said, It was very hard to condemn a Man for Treason upon such petit Circumstances.

2. The Earl of Southampton desired to know, whether Sir Henry Vane would swear those words positively or not. Sir Henry Vane said, positively either them or the like. The Earl replied, That under favour those or the like could not be positive.

3. The

3. The Earl of Clare desired to know what could be meant by this Kingdom; for his part (he said) he thought it meant of the Kingdom of Scotland, to which the Word this might very well be relative, that Kingdom being only mentioned in the preceding Discourse: And that he was the more ready to be of that Opinion, because he could not see by what Grammatical Construction it could be gathered from his Words, that he meant to reduce England, which neither then was, neither is now (God be thanked) out of the way of Obedience, nor upon rebellious Courses.

They at last concluded the Charge, That the Words were so monstrous, that to aggravate them, was to allay them; and therefore they would simply leave them to the Judgment of the Lords.

The Lieutenant's Reply was;

That tho the heaping up of those Articles had put him to a great Confusion, yet he would endeavour to bring his Answer into the best Method he could; and first he would reply to the Proof, then add something in general for himself, in what a hard Taking and lamentable Condition he was to have his private Discourses, his most intimate and Bosom-Friends search'd and sifted to the least Circumstance, that he might seem guilty of that which, by God's assistance, he should never be.

To the Lord Traquair's, and the Deputy's Depositions, he thought their Proofs did not much stick upon him. For upon the Suppositions, First, That the Demands were true; Secondly, That they were not justifiable; Thirdly, That no other Course could prevail: He could not see what other Advice he could possibly give the King, than to put himself into a Posture of War, especially seeing then there were frequent Reports of the Scots invading or entring into England; nor was he of any other Mind than all the rest of the Council-Board.

For that of Morton's, he doth not positively remember the Words, but if the Demands were read, perhaps they would imply nothing less; and if so, how otherwise to be answered but by the Sword, all other Means being first essayed, which is ever to be supposed?

For Sir Henry Vane's and Northumberland's Testimony, about persuading of an Offensive War, he said, He remembred it very well, and thought it as free for him to give his Opinion for an Offensive, as they for a Defensive War: Opinions, said he, if they be attended with Obstinacy or Pertinacy, may make an Heretick, but that they ever made a Traytor, he never heard it till now; nor (under favour) should I be an Heretick either, (said he) for as I was then, so am I now, most willing to acknowledge my Weakness, and correct my Errors, whereof no Man hath more, or is more sensible of them, than I my self: yet if that Opinion of mine had been followed, it might perhaps have spared us some Money (said he) and some Reputation too, of which we have been prodigal enough.

For the last, about the Ships, it proves nothing: but he would willingly confess, that some Ships were there detained, and that by himself, and his own Direction, as Vice-Admiral of Connaught, but it was at the Command of the Lord Admiral the Earl of Northumberland; and produced his Letter to that purpose.

To the English Proof: He marvelled much how Sir George Ratcliff's Words could be put upon him; Sir George (though alledged to be his Bosom-Friend, yet) had Thoughts of his own, and might have some other Thoughts in his Bosom, and be to some other Expressions than Sir George Ratcliff: No Man (said he) can commit Treason by his Attorney; and should I, by my Friend Sir George, as by a Proxy?

For his Brother; He never knew him before so rash; but that was nothing to him, except they could prove a nearer Identity than Nature had instituted, and that his Brother's Words and his were all one: yet withal he conceived that his Brother's Words might be very well understood of the Scots conquering England, but not at all of the Irish; and so he wished with all his Heart, that he had not spoken something which is like a Prophecy.

To the Primate's Testimony (with all Reverence to his Integrity be it spoken) he is but one Witness, and in Law can prove nothing: Add to this, (said he) That it was a private Discourse between him and me, and perhaps spoken by me tentandi gratia; and how far this should be laid to a Man's Charge, let your Lordships judge.

Yea, this seems to me against Humanity it self, and will make the Society of Men so dangerous and loathsome to us, that our Dwelling-houses will be turned to Cells, and our Towns to Deserts: That which God and Nature (our Tongues) have bestowed upon us [for the greater Comfort of venting our own Conceptions, or craving the Advice of wiser and learneder Men] should become Snares and Burdens to us, by a curious and needless Fear; yet if my Words be taken, said he, with all that went before and followed after, I see no danger in it.

To the Lord Conway I may reply the same, with this Addition, That it is a very natural Motion for a Man to preserve himself; every Creature hath this Privilege, and shall we deny it to Monarchy, provided this be done in a lawful, though in an extraordinary way? This Grain of Salt must be added to season all my Discourse.

To that of Sir Henry Vane, of offering my Service to the King, I thank him for the Testimony, and think he hath done me much Honour thereby; but if he or any body else do suspect that his Majesty will employ me in unlawful Enterprizes, I shall think them more liable to the Charge of Treason than my self.

To the subsequent Testimonies, I shall not need to wrestle about them much, only the last of Sir Henry Vane's pinches, and lies sore upon me; but to that which the Earl of Clare (and I thank him for it) hath said already, give me leave to add this, That the Testimony of one Man is not a sufficient Witness, nor can a Man be accused, much less condemned, of Treason, upon this; and for that read the Stat. Hen. 7. 12. and of Edw. 6. 5.

Now my Lords (said he) to give you further Satisfaction, I shall desire all the Lords of the Council, which were then present (only to the Number of Eight) may be examined whether they heard these Words or not; for the Archbishop and Sir Francis Windebank they cannot be had: Sir Henry Vane gives the Testimony, I deny it; four only remain.

First, The Earl of Northumberland's Testimony, which was read, had declared expresly, that he had never heard those Words, nor any like them from the Lord Strafford, but he spake with great Honour and Regard to the Kingdom of England.

Secondly, The Marquiss Hamilton, who declared upon his Oath, that he had never heard such Words, Words, but that he had heard the Lieutenant often ſay, that the King was to rule his Royal Power candide & caſte; that it would never be well for this Kingdom, till the Prerogative of the Crown, and the Privilege of the Subject went in one pace together, and that Parliaments were the happieſt way to keep a Correſpondence between the King and People.

The very ſame was delivered by the Lord Treaſurer, and the Lord Cottington.

Now, my Lords, you may marvel how theſe Words reſted only on the Ears of Sir Henry Vane: but my Lords (ſaid he) that I may remove all Scruple from you, I will make it evident, that there was not the leaſt Intention that the Iriſh Army ſhould ſet a foot in England; and then, I hope, you will conceive that I had no Meaning to reduce this Kingdom.

This he made clear by the Teſtimony of Northumberland, the Oaths of Marquiſs Hamilton, Lord Cottington, Lord Treaſurer, Sir Thomas Lucas, who only were privy to that Matter.

For other of my Words, my Lords (ſaid he) I deſire you would not take them by halves; if ſo, who ſhould be free from Treaſon? Certainly, if ſuch a Precedent take footing, Weſtminſter-Hall ſhall be more troubled with Treaſon than with Common-Law; look therefore to the Antecedents and Conſequents of my Speeches, and you ſhall find the State of the Queſtion clearly altered: the Antecedents were upon an abſolute or inevitable Neceſſity, upon a preſent Invaſion, when the Remedy of a Parliament cannot be expected; the Conſequents, for the Defence of the Kingdom, which accompts afterward to the Parliament. The Qualifications too in a lawful, convenient, and ordinary Way, ſo far as the preſent Neceſſity can permit. Add but theſe, and which of you are not of my Mind? Is the King endowed with no Power from the Lord? Is he not publicus Inſpector Regni? Stands it not him in hand to do ſomething on preſent Neceſſities?

And that theſe were his Words, he often proved, over and over again, by the Marquiſs, by the Lord Treaſurer, Cottington, Sir Tho. Jermine.

My Lords, what I have kept to the laſt (ſaid he) is this, and I would intreat you ſeriouſly to think of it: If a Man's Table, his Bed, his Houſe, his Brother, his Friends (and that too after they have given an Oath of Secrecy) are to be rack'd to find out Treaſon againſt him, who never knew what it meant, what earthly Man ſhall paſs free from Treaſon? Let my Misfortune, my Lords, be your Advertiſement: your wiſe Anceſtors were glad to put Bands and Limits to this Lion, Treaſon; if you give him the large Scope of Words to range into, he will at laſt pull you or yours all to pieces.

But, my Lords, I did never think till now, that Matter of Opinion ſhould be objected as Matter of Treaſon.

For, Firſt, Opinions are free, and Men may argue both Pro and Con, in all Faculties, without any Stain of Reputation, otherwiſe all Conſultations would be vain.

Secondly, I may be of another Judgment than I declare my ſelf to be, of Opinion perhaps to gain better Arguments for the Maintenance of my own Grounds.

Thirdly, Many, and my ſelf. oftentimes, have propounded my Opinion; yet upon hearing better Judgments, have preſently changed it.

Fourthly, We uſe to ſtrain our Opinions too high ſometimes, that we may meet in a juſt Moderation with thoſe whom we conceive in the other Extremity to be too low.

Fifthly, It is expreſly commanded by the Stat. Hen. 6. 9. That though a Man ſhould ſay, the King is not lawful Heir to the Crown, and may be depoſed, yet he is not to be charged with Treaſon, but only with Felony; and I hope, my Lords, thoſe Words are of a more tranſcendent and ſuperlative nature, than any alledged by me to be ſpoken. But, my Lords (ſaid he) lay it to your Hearts, it muſt come to you, you and your Poſterity are they whom God and Nature, Birth and Education have fitted to beautify the Royal Throne, and to ſuſtain the weighty Affairs of the Kingdom; if to give your Opinions in Political Agitations ſhall be accounted Treaſon, who will be willing to ſerve the King, or what a Dilemma are you in? If, being ſworn Counſellors, you ſpeak not your Minds freely, you are convict of Perjury; if you do, perhaps of Treaſon. What Detriment, what Incommodity ſhall fall to King and Kingdom, if this be permitted? Which of you hereafter will adventure, yea dare adventure ſo much as to help by your Advice, unleſs you be weary of your Lives, your Eſtates, your Poſterity, yea your very Honour? Let me never live longer than to ſee this Confuſion; yea, I may ſay it, this Inhumanity in England. For my part (my Lords) I here confeſs my ſelf, I ever have, and ever ſhall ſpeak my Opinion freely in any thing that may concern the Honour and Safety, either of my gracious King, or my dear Country, though the Sword be two-edged; fearing rather him that killeth the Soul, than him whoſe Power reacheth only to the Body.

Nor do I ſee how I am culpable of Treaſon, unleſs it be Treaſon for not being infallible; and if it be ſo, my Lords, you have this Rag of Mortality before you, loaden with many Infirmities; though you pull this into Shreads, yet there is no great Loſs; yea, there may be a great Gain, if by the ſame I may ſeem to have dared too far, to give a Teſtimony to the World of an innocent Conſcience towards God, and a reſolute Loyalty towards my Prince, [which have ever been my only Pole-Stars in the whole Courſe of my Life:] and if by ſpilling of mine, there be not a Way found how to trace out the Blood of the Nobility (which I hope your Lordſhips will look to) there is no Diſadvantage at all ſuffered by the Loſs of me. (You have his very Words as near as I could recollect.)

Tueſday was a Day of Reſt.

Upon Wedneſday Whitlock charged thus; That the preceding Articles were of ſo high a Conſequence, and of ſo tranſcendent a Nature, that nothing wanted to make up the perfect Meaſure of the moſt horrid Treaſon, and monſtrous Attempt that ever, by a Native, was intended againſt his King and Country, but putting theſe deſigned Projects into execution; which had undoubtedly hapned to the Ruin and Subverſion both of Church and State, had not the Clemency and Goodneſs of the Prince, and the Piety and Carefulneſs of the well-affected Peers timouſly foreſeen and prevented the ſame: That ſtill the Principles of Tyranny and Oppreſſion had lodged within his Boſom, and therefore had burſt forth into theſe Expreſſions and Advices contained in the following Articles; where firſt, in the Twenty-fifth they charged him with three Things.

Firſt,

First, That he had adviſed the King to a rigorous and unlawful Exaction of Ship-Money.

Secondly, That he had given Counſel, That if the Sheriffs ſhould deny their beſt Endeavours and Aſſiſtances to that Effect, they ſhould be ſent for, and fined by the Star-Chamber, and Impriſonment.

Thirdly, That when the Aldermen of London had in all Humility repreſented the Cauſes why the Ship-Money could not be collected amongſt them, and had given in the Reaſons why they refuſed to give in a Liſt of their Names, within their City, who were able to afford the Loan-Money; he in a contemptuous and tyrannical manner, in the face of the Council-Board, had ſaid to the King: Sir, theſe Men, becauſe of their Obſtinacy and Frowardneſs, deſerved very well to be fined, ranſomed, and laid by the heels; and it will never go well with your Service, until ſome of them be hanged up for Examples to others.

The Proofs were theſe.

First, The Biſhop of London, Lord Treaſurer, who declared, That he remembred the Words very well, that the Lord Lieutenant had adviſed the King to cauſe the Ship-Money to be gathered in; but he remembred withal, that both himſelf and all the Council had done the like; and that it was upon a preſent Neceſſity, and Defect of Money for entertaining the Army, which (the Condition of the Times conſidered) they all conceived, was by any means to be kept on foot.

Secondly, Alderman Wiſeman declared, That upon an humble Remonſtrance made to the Council-Board, the City would take it ill, if a Tax-Roll ſhould be delivered of their Eſtates, who were thought able for the Loan-Money; the Lord Strafford ſaid, They ought to be fined, ranſomed, and laid by the heels: but for Words of hanging them up, he heard not at all.

Thirdly, The Earl of Berkſhire declared that the Lord Strafford had ſaid, That upon the Refuſal of ſuch a Service enjoined by the King's peremptory Command, it was his Opinion they might be fined.

Fourthly, Alderman Garway atteſted the preceding Words; and withal added, that the Lord Lieutenant, to his beſt Remembrance, had ſaid, It were well for the King's Service if ſome of them were hanged up.

They cloſed the Charge, That by ſuch undutiful Expreſſions he had injured the Propriety of the Subject, and had put ſuch Diſcontent upon the City, that they were the leſs willing upon any occaſion to concur for the Advantage of the King's Service.

The Lieutenant replied,

Firſt, That tho all the Charge were in the moſt ſtrict and rigid way or ſenſe verified againſt him, yet he could not conceive by what Interpretation of Law it could be reach'd home to High Treaſon; and to that common Objection, [That the Treaſon was not individual, but accumulative,] he replied, That, under favour, he thought, to that manner, were as much as to ſay, no Treaſon at all. Becauſe, 1ſt, That neither in Statute Law, Common Law, nor Practice, there was ever, till this Time, heard of ſuch a matter as accumulative Treaſon, or a Treaſon by way of Conſequence; but that it is a Word newly coined to attend a Charge newly invented, ſuch an one as never was before.

2dly, That Treaſon was a Thing of a ſimple and ſpecificative nature, and therefore could not be ſo by Accumulation; but either muſt be ſo in ſome or either of the Articles, or elſe could not be ſo at all.

3dly, He did conceive that it was againſt the firſt Principles of Nature, and falſe; therefore could not be ſo by Accumulation, but either muſt be ſo in ſome or each of the Articles, or elſe could not be ſo at all. That an Heap or Accumulation ſhould be, and not be, of homogeneous Things; and therefore that which in its firſt Being is not treaſonable, can never confer to make up an accumulative Treaſon. Cumulus, an Heap of Grain, ſo called, becauſe every, or at leaſt ſome of the Individuals, are Grain; if otherways, an Heap it may be, but not an Heap of Grain. Juſt ſo, perhaps, theſe Articles may make up an Heap of Felonies, Oppreſſions, Errors, Miſdemeanors, and ſuch like, (and to the Thing it ſelf I ſhall give an Anſwer, when under that Name they ſhall be charged againſt me;) but they can no ways confer to the making up of Treaſon, unleſs ſome, at the leaſt, be Treaſon in the individual.

Secondly, That the Teſtimonies brought againſt him were all of them ſingle, not two one way; and therefore could not make Faith in matter of Debt, much leſs in matter of Life and Death; yea, that it was againſt the Statute expreſly, to impeach a Man of High Treaſon under the Evidence of two famous Witneſſes, much leſs to adjudge and convince him upon Atteſtation of one.

Thirdly, To the Lord Treaſurer's Teſtimony, he did with all his Heart condeſcend unto it; but upon theſe Grounds only, That there was a preſent Neceſſity of Money; that all the Council-Board had ſo voiced with him, yea, before himſelf, and he always thought it Preſumption in a Man not to follow the wiſer and more judicious: and that there was then a Sentence of the Star-Chamber for the Right of paying Ship-Money. For his part, he would never be more prudent than his Teachers, nor give Judgment againſt the Judges. And therefore he thought it not far amiſs to adviſe the King for the collecting of that, which by Law was his own, in ſuch a preſent and urgent Neceſſity. And altho his Opinion (and it was no more) had been amiſs, he hoped that though, in caſe of Religion, being attended with Stubborneſs and Pertinacy, it might come home to Hereſy, yet in his caſe Opinion could not reach ſo far as Treaſon; unleſs it be Treaſon for a Man to ſpeak his Judgment freely, when he is upon his Oath to do the ſame.

Fourthly, For the Words about fining, he had already acknowledged them in his general Anſwers to be true; but with theſe Qualifications, That it was his Opinion only; that it was upon the Refuſal (as he conceived) of a juſt Service that he had ſpoken them, by no means to prejudice the Citizens, but to make them the more quick and active in the King's Service; that no ill Conſequence happen'd upon them; that they were Words might have been ſpared indeed, but innocently, tho ſuddenly ſpoken, which he hoped might proceed from a Man of ſuch a haſty and incircumſpect Humour as himſelf, (made ſo both by Nature and his much Infirmity of Body,) without any mind at all to Treaſon; and that if all cholerick Expreſſions of that nature ſhould be accounted treaſonable, there would be more Suits of that kind fly up and down Weſtminſter-Hall than Common-Law.

Fifthly, To thoſe Words atteſted by the Alderman, he poſitively denied them; and hoped they ſhould never riſe up againſt him in Judgment, becauſe the Teſtimony was ſingle, and not poſitive, but only to his beſt Remembrance; and that it was exceeding ſtrange that no Man, neither of the Council or other Aldermen, were ſo quick to obſerve them, but only Alderman Garway; which he thought ſufficient to nullify that ſingle Teſtimony, except he could demonſtrate himſelf to have ſome rare and ſingular Faculty of hearing.

In the cloſe, he deſired the Lords, from his Misfortune, to provide for their own Safety, and ſeriouſly to conſider what a Way was chalked out to ruin them both in their Lives and Eſtates, if for every Opinion given in Council, or Words ſuddenly or haſtily ſpoken, they (who are born to weild the great Affairs of the Kingdom) ſhould be arraigned and ſentenced as Traytors.

Then they went to the 26th Article, and charged thus:

That the Lord Strafford, having by his wicked Advices exhauſted the King's Treaſury, did alſo counſel him, Firſt, To imbaſe the Coin by an Allay of Copper-Money.

Secondly, To ſeize upon all the Bullion in the Mint.

Thirdly, That in Diſcourſe with ſome of the Aldermen about that Buſineſs, he had ſaid, The City was more ready to countenance and relieve the Rebels than the King; and that the King of France did uſe to manage ſuch Buſineſſes, not by Treaties or Requeſts, but by ſending forth his Commiſſaries to take account of Mens Eſtates, accompanied with Troops of Horſes.

The Proofs were;

Firſt, Sir Thomas Edwards, who declared, That in Diſcourſe with the Lord Strafford, having remonſtrated unto him that their Goods were ſeized on beyond Seas, becauſe of the Money taken out of the Mint, he told him, That if the Londoners ſuffered it, it was deſervedly, becauſe they had refuſed the King a ſmall Loan of Money upon good Security; and that he thought them more ready to help the Rebels than the King.

Secondly, Mr. Palmer declared that he ſpake ſomething about the King of France; but whether with relation to England, or not, he did not remember.

Thirdly, Sir William Parkiſe atteſted in the ſame Words; and withal, that the Lord Cottington was then preſent, and could declare the whole Buſineſs.

Fourthly, Sir Ralph Freeman declared, That in a Diſcourſe with the Lord Strafford he had ſaid that the Servants in the Mint-Houſe would refuſe to work the Copper-Money; and he replied, That then it were well to ſend thoſe Servants to the Houſe of Correction.

They cloſed the Charge, That by ſuch undutiful Counſel and Words, he had given more than ſufficient Proof of his Deſign and Purpoſe to ſubdue this Kingdom, and ſubvert the fundamental Laws and Privileges of the ſame.

The Lieutenant's Reply:

Firſt, That he expected ſome Proofs about the two firſt Particulars, but did hear of none; and that it was no ſmall Diſadvantage to him to be charged with a great many odious Crimes by a Book, printed and flying from hand to hand through the whole Kingdom, yet when they came to prove, there ſhould be no ſuch thing laid againſt him.

Secondly, About the Speeches: He ingenuouſly confeſſed that ſome ſuch thing might perhaps have eſcaped the Door of his Lips, when he ſaw their Backwardneſs to his Majeſty's Service; and as the Times were then conditioned, he did not think it much amiſs to call that Faction by the Name of Rebels; but yet he thought he had abundantly ſatisfied for that Over-ſight (if it was any) at York: For having underſtood there, that the City of London were willing to make a Loan of Money, he there, before the great Council of the Peers, expreſſed himſelf to this Senſe, That the Londoners had ſufficiently made up all their Delays hitherto by their Act; that the King was obliged to their Forwardneſs; and that he himſelf ſhould be as ready to ſerve them as any poor Gentleman in England. About the other Words, he ſaid, That being in Conference with ſome of the Londoners, there came at that time to his hands a Letter from the Earl of Leiceſter, then at Paris, wherein were the Gazettes incloſed, reporting that the Cardinal had given ſome ſuch Order, as to levy Money by Forces. This, he ſaid, he only told the Lord Cottington, ſtanding by, without the leaſt Application or Intention concerning the Engliſh Affairs. Cottington, being examined upon this, declared the ſame in the ſame manner.

Thirdly, To Sir Ralph Freeman, he ſaid, That his Teſtimony did not concern the Charge at all; nor did he think any thing amiſs in it, tho he had ſaid it: If the Servants of the Mint refuſed to work according to Directions, they did deſerve the Houſe of Correction; nor was it treaſonable to ſay the King might uſe that Houſe for the Correction of his Servants, as well as any Man in the City for theirs.

Fourthly, He ſaid that there was no great likelihood that he had committed real Acts of Treaſon, when his adverſe Party was content to trifle away ſo much Time about Words; neither was there any Treaſon in them, tho they had been fully verified: and therefore in that (as in all other Articles) he reſerved a Power for his Counſel to diſpute in Matter of Law.

They went to the 27th Article, and charged thus: That immediately after his Appointment to be Lord Lieutenant to the Army here in England, he ſhewed what Principles of Arbitrary Government lurked within his Boſom; for by his own immediate Authority, without and againſt Law, he had laid an Impoſt of Money upon the King's Subjects. Where they mention three Particulars:

Firſt, That he had impoſed 8 d. per diem upon the County of York, for entertaining the Train-Bands there one whole Month.

Secondly, That he had ſent out Warrants for collecting the ſame, and threaten'd to impriſon ſuch as ſhould refuſe to pay.

Thirdly, That he ſaid, That it was a Crime nigh to the Crime of High Treaſon, not to pay the ſame.

Fourthly, They added, That in his general Replies he had brought two Things for his Defence: 1ſt, That this Money was freely and voluntarily offered by thoſe in Yorkſhire. 2dly, That the great Council of the Peers had notice of the ſame.

To the firſt they anſwered, That a Petition was indeed preferred by the Yorkſhire Men, and a Month's Pay offered; but that the Lord Strafford had refuſed to preſent the ſame upon this Exception only, Becauſe in the ſame they had petitioned for a Parliament: Whereby he evidently declared what little Inclination he had to that way.

To the ſecond, They appeal'd to all the Lords preſent, whether any ſuch Order did paſs before the Council of the Peers at York.

The Proofs were;

Firſt, A Warrant iſſued by Colonel Pennyman for this Money, and another by Sir Edward Osborne.

Secondly,

Secondly, Mr. John Burrowes, who declared that he was Clerk to the great Council, but did remember of no Order; and withal added, that it might have paſſed at that time, when he attended at Rippon.

Thirdly, Mr. Dunſton, who declared that he had known that Money levied by ſome Muſqueteers.

Fourthly, By Sir William Ingram, who declared that he had heard the Lieutenant ſay, That to refuſe the ſame, came nigh to the Crime of High Treaſon.

They concluded the Charge, That by theſe Particulars it was more than evident what unhappy Purpoſes and traitorous Deſigns he had to ſubdue this Kingdom, and ſubvert the Fundamental Laws and Privileges.

The Earl replied, Firſt, To the Petition, That it was a true Petition, drawn up by the Yorkſhire Gentlemen; and as true, that he had refuſed to preſent the ſame, becauſe of that Clauſe about the Parliament. But the matter was thus: At his Majeſty's coming to York, it was thought neceſſary for the defence of that County to keep the Trained-Bands on foot, becauſe the Enemy was upon the Borders; and therefore the King directed him to write to all the Freeholders in Yorkſhire, to ſee what they would do for their own defence.

The Time and Place were deſigned by the King; but the night before the Meeting, a ſmall number convented, and in a private and factious way did draw up that Petition. Upon the morrow, at their appointed Dyet, in preſence of the whole number, the Petition was preſented to him; where he did adviſe them to leave out that Clauſe, and that becauſe he knew the King, out of his own gracious Diſpoſition, had intended to call a Parliament, which he deſired ſhould rather be freely done, than upon the conſtraint and importunity of Petitions: moreover, it would ſeem a mercenary thing in them, at one and the ſame time to offer a Benevolence, and withal to petition for his Favour. Upon this Remonſtrance, they were all willing to recall the Petition, and directed him by word of mouth to offer unto the King the Month's Pay in their names; which he did accordingly, in the preſence of forty of them, to their no ſmall advantage.

This he proved by Sir William Pennyman, Sir Paul Neale, Sir George Wentworth, Sir William Savil, Sir Thomas Danby, who all of them declared as much in ample Terms; and withal added, That nothing was done upon better Grounds of Neceſſity and Obedience than the Offer of that Money, and that they never had heard any Man grudge againſt it to this time.

For the Second, about the Council of Peers, he alledged that he never made mention of any Order of theirs; but he remembred very well it was twice propounded before them, that the King had approved it at that time a juſt and neceſſary Act, and none of the Council had contradicted it, which he conceived as a tacit Approbation, and an Order in Equivalence.

But though that had not been, yet there was nothing done in the Buſineſs, but at the ſpecial Deſires of the Gentlemen themſelves, and for their neceſſary Defence and Protection; yea, though he had done it by himſelf alone, yet he conceived he had ſo much Power by his Commiſſion, (cauſing the Commiſſion to that effect to be read) That albeit he ſhould miſtake his Commiſſion, and do ſome inferiour Act beyond it (becauſe military Proceedings are not always warranted by the Common Law) yet it ſhould not be imputed as an Act of Treaſon to him. (And to this effect read a Statute of the ſeventh of Henry the Second.)

To the Proofs; Firſt, Colonel Pennyman's Warrant, or Sir Edward Osborne's, it nothing concerned him; and he doubted not but theſe worthy Gentlemen could juſtify their own Act, and that he had enough to do to anſwer his own Miſdemeanours.

Secondly, For Sir John Burrowes, he was at Rippon when that Propoſition was made.

Thirdly, That as the Warrant, ſo neither the Execution, troubled him at all.

Fourthly, For Sir William Ingram, he was but a ſingle Teſtimony, and that ſuch an one too, as he could produce an Evidence to teſtify he had miſtaken himſelf in his Teſtimony upon Oath, if it were not to diſadvantage the Gentleman.

He concluded, That he had done nothing in that buſineſs but upon the Petition of that County, the King's ſpecial Command, the Connivance at leaſt of the Great Council, and upon a preſent Neceſſity, for the Defence and Safety of the County.

And ſo much for Wedneſday.

Upon Thurſday the Committee for the Charge declared that they had done with all the Articles, and were content to wave the laſt, for Reaſons beſt known to themſelves: only Sir Walter Earles added, That he had ſome Obſervations to bring forth upon the two and twentieth Article, which he conceived might do much to prove the Earl of Strafford's Deſigns for landing the Iriſh Forces in England.

And they were, Firſt, That in his Commiſſion he had power to land them in Wales, or in any part of England, or in Scotland; which were altogether ſuperfluous, unleſs there had been ſome Purpoſe for the ſame.

Secondly, That within two days before the Date of the Commiſſion, Letters were ſent to the Lord Bridgewater and Pembroke from Sir Francis Windebank, to aſſiſt the Earl of Worceſter in levying Forces for the King's Service; and theſe might be ſuppoſed to have intended a joining with the Iriſh.

Thirdly, That the Lord Ranelagh, at the raiſing of the Iriſh Army, did fear ſuch a Deſign as this.

Fourthly, That the Town of Ayre in Scotland, where the Lord Strafford pretended he would land thoſe Forces, was fortified with a Bulwark, a Gariſon, and Block-houſe, which would prohibit landing there; that the Earl of Argyle's Bounds were divided thence by the Sea, and that the Bar or Entry into the Town was very dangerous and ſhallow.

The Proofs were only the reading of the Commiſſion granted to the Lord Strafford.

The Lieutenant replied, Firſt, That his Commiſſion was the ſame verbatim with Northumberland's for England, and that it was drawn up by the Council-Board here, and ſent over unto him; ſo no more Deſign in him than in the Gentlemen of the Engliſh Army, nor no larger than that was put upon him.

Secondly, That this was the firſt time he heard of any ſuch Letters, nor did they concern him more than any of the Houſe.

Thirdly, That he was not bound to purge the Lord Ranelagh from all his Fears, and that he had his own Fears too, which God forbid ſhould be Evidence of Treaſon againſt any Man whatſoever.

Fourthly, That it ſeemed the Gentleman had better Information from that Kingdom than himſelf; yet he would be confident to ſay, at Ayre there was never ſuch a thing as a Block-houſe or Gariſon. But to remove all Scruples, (for indeed the Road or Landing-place is not there ſafe) he declared that it was his intention to have landed ſome miles above Ayre, and made only his Magazine of that Town.

To the Earl of Argyle's Bounds, he hoped the Gentleman knew they came not on foot out of Ireland, but had Ships to waft and tranſport themſelves, and that one of his prime Houſes (Roſneth) was within ſome few miles of the ſame Frith.

The Lord Digby finding Sir Walter Earles on ground, did handſomly bring him off, and told the Lords, That all their Proofs for that Article were not yet ready, and that this was a Superfœtation only of the Charge; and that in ſuch a buſineſs as the plotting of Treaſon, they muſt be content ſometimes with dark Probabilities.

Then Mr. Glyn deſired the Lieutenant to reſume his Defence, that they might give a Repetition of their Charge, and ſo cloſe the Proceſs ſo far as concerned the Matter of Fact.

He replied, That in his Caſe all Slackneſs is Speed enough; the Matter touched him narrowly, even in his Life and Eſtate, yea, in that which he eſteemed above them both, his Honour and Poſterity; and therefore he confeſſed he had no deſire to ride poſt in ſuch a buſineſs. That he knew the Gentlemen of the Bar, if they were in his Caſe, would think the time little enough, except their more able Judgments could ſooner diſpatch the matter in hand; and therefore he humbly intreated, that that day might be granted to him for ſtrengthening himſelf, and recollecting his Thought and Spirits, and to-morrow he would be ready with his laſt Replies for himſelf: which after a little Ceremony and Conteſtation, was condeſcended unto by the Houſe of Commons.

Upon Friday Morning, about Eight of the clock, the Lieutenant of the Tower, and my Lord's Chamber-Groom came to the Hall, and gave Information to the Houſe upon Oath, That the Lord Strafford was taken with an exceeding great Pain, and Fit of the Stone, and could not upon any conditions ſtir out of his Bed.

Mr. Glyn replied, That it was a token of his Wilfulneſs, not his Weakneſs, that he had not ſent a Doctor to teſtify the ſame.

The Lord Steward made anſwer, That a Doctor could not be had perhaps ſo ſoon in a Morning, nor was it poſſible for any Phyſician to give a certain Judgment concerning a Man's Diſability by the Stone, becauſe there is no outward Symptoms that appear.

Mr. Glyn excepted, That if he did not appear upon Saturday Morning, he ſhould loſe the privilege to ſpeak in his own defence afterwards, and they permitted to proceed.

The Lord Steward replied, That the Lords had apointed four of their number to go to the Tower, and learn the juſt Cauſe of his ſtay; and if by any means he were able, he ſhould be obliged to come then; if not, Humanity and common Equity would excuſe him.

In the Afternoon it was reported that he was dead, of which there can be no better reaſon given than the Humour and Genius of the Times, that dally with nothing oftner than Untruths and Calumnies: and certainly there are many Men of ſhallow Underſtandings and weak Affections, who either will not, or cannot underſtand the Gentleman's Worth; but out of fearful and needleſs Apprehenſions are ſo deſirous to hear of his Ruin any way, that their buſy Tongues will dare to anticipate the Stroke of Juſtice.

Mr. Glyn proffers new Proofs concerning the two and twentieth Article.

Upon Saturday Morning he preſented himſelf at the Bar, where he expected nothing but Repetitions of Charges and Defences; but mean while Mr. Glyn proffers ſome new Proofs concerning the two and twentieth Article, which the noble Lord refuſed, alledging the Proceſs was cloſed. Mr. Glyn anſwered, The Proceſs is not cloſed, as long as the Buſineſs ſtands unrepealed; and that it did not become a Priſoner at the Bar to preſcribe a Method of proceeding to the Houſe of Commons in England.

It was anſwered by the Lord-Lieutenant, That he thought it ſtood him in hand as nearly to maintain his Life, as it did any to purſue him for it; yet he was willing they ſhould bring in new Proofs, provided that he might have time to make new Replies, and withal uſe ſome new Witneſſes in ſome Articles that concern his Juſtification.

The Lord Newark, upon theſe Motions, deſired the Houſe might be adjourned: after two hours ſtay, and a hot Conflict upon the Lords, they returned, and the Lord Steward commanded the Order to be read, which conſiſted of two Articles:

Firſt, That as it was granted unto them to bring in Proofs concerning the two and twentieth Article; ſo it was to the Lord Strafford to make his Replies, and uſe his Witneſſes concerning the ſame.

Secondly, That if they went to no more Articles, no more ſhould the Lord Strafford; but if they did, that he might pitch upon any one Article as he pleaſed.

The Houſe of Commons preſently declined all other Articles, and conceived the Order expreſly for them, reſtraining him from all other Articles, except that only.

He conceived the Order was for him, and ſaid, That ſeeing they had pick'd out their Article, it was againſt all common Equity to tye up his hands, and not admit of a common Rule for them both. They replied, That when the Article was canvaſſed, they reſerved Witneſſes till another time. He anſwered, That he had done the ſame upon every Article. They replied, That the Houſe had refuſed his Reſervation. He anſwered, Nor had they paſſed an Order for theirs.

Upon this new Conteſtation the Houſe roſe again, and was adjourned. It is ſuppoſed that the Houſe of Commons had the better ground, becauſe they had particularly named their Witneſſes in their Reſervation, the Lord Strafford not ſo; they preſſed but one Article, he many. But ſuch was the Pleaſure of the Lords, that though the matter did not deſerve to be much ſtood upon, yet after two hours vehement Agitation of the Buſineſs in the Upper Houſe, they returned, and the Order was in his favour to this effect:

Firſt, That both of them ſhould wave their new Proofs, and go immediately to that which follows.

Secondly, If they would not do ſo, the Lords conceived themſelves common Judges to both, and therefore would not deny Strafford the liberty of pitching upon what Article he pleaſed, as they had done.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, That both of them ſhould name their Witneſſes at the Bar inſtantly.

The Commons were much grieved at this, yet deſired him to nominate his Witneſſes, if he would make any benefit of the Order. He anſwered, That he would nominate after them, becauſe they were firſt in order. They replied, That he knew their Article, they not his. He ſaid, He was to bring Proofs about the ſecond, fifth, thirteenth, and the fifteenth Articles, and did deſire them that they would now proceed to Nomination.

But they told him, they could not embrace the Order without Advice of the whole Houſe. Then on a ſudden a mighty Noiſe followed of the whole Houſe, Withdraw, Withdraw! and was in ſo uncouth and tumultuous a Confuſion, that it produced both Admiration and Fear in the Beholders, wherein we might eaſily feel the Pulſe of a diſtempered State. Both the Houſes brake up, not appointing ſo much as the next Dyet; each Man's Countenance ſpake Anger and Diſcontent, and nothing ſounded in our ears all Sunday but Terrors and Affrightments of a preſent Diviſion and Breach between the two Houſes; That the Houſe of Commons would declare him a Traytor, and all ſuch Lords too as were his Adherents; that he ſhould be no more heard in publick, that (though Parties, and not his Peers) they would vote in his Sentence, That a Bill of Attainder ſhould preſently be drawn up againſt him, and that nothing ſhould content them but preſent Execution.

Big words flew up and down all Monday. That whole Day was ſpent in a Conference betwixt the Houſes, without any meeting in the Hall; but the Lords (who had learned, as it ſeems, to foreſee their own Ruin by his Miſfortune, and now conceive that Monarchy and Nobility are of ſuch Identity, that one and the ſame is the diminution of both) kept faſt to their Concluſion, and would not paſs from their Order, notwithſtanding all the many Dangers repreſented: ſo that the Houſe of Commons were conſtrained at laſt to give way, and embrace the firſt part of the Order, by waving Witneſſes on both ſides.

This hath been no ſmall diſcouragement to his Enemies; for a more real Demonſtration of his Party amongſt the Lords could not have been ſhewn.

Upon Monday, ſome of the Lords went ſo high in their Heat, as to tell the Houſe of Commons, That it was an unnatural Motion, for the Head to be governed by the Tail; That they hated Rebellion as bad as Treaſon; That the ſame Blood that ennobled their Anceſtors, did move alſo in their Veins, and therefore they would never ſuffer themſelves to be ſuppreſſed by a popular Faction.

After a great deal of Storm, all was (as well as might be) ſodder'd up again, and Tueſday appointed to be the Day for the Lieutenant to reſume his Defences, and they their Charge, without any more Proof to be uſed on either ſide.

Upon Tueſday, the Lord Steward at the entry told them, the Lords had ordered that both their Teſtimonies ſhould be waved, that they ſhould proceed immediately to what followed, ſo that that Day might put an end to what concerned the Matter of Fact.

The Lord-Lieutenant replied, That in all Humility and Obedience he would ſubmit himſelf to that, or any other their Decrees whatſoever, tho it ſhould reach as far home unto him as his own Life; but withal humbly begged, That if hereafter he ſhould be troubled (for they were to ſpeak laſt) with new Matter, or with ſupplemental Proof, he might have leave to ſpeak ſomething in his own defence.

The Lord Steward anſwered, It was all the reaſon in the world.

The Lieutenant went on thus:

My Lords,

THIS day I ſtand before you charged with High Treaſon, the Burden is heavy, yet far the more, in that it hath borrowed the Patrociny of the Houſe of Commons; if they were not intereſted, I might expreſs a no leſs eaſy, than I do a ſafe Iſſue and good Succeſs to the buſineſs: But let neither my Weakneſs plead my Innocence, nor their Power my Guilt. If your Lordſhips will conceive of my Defences, as they are in themſelves, without reference to either, (and I ſhall endeavour ſo to preſent them) I hope to go away from hence as clearly juſtified, as I am now in the Teſtimony of a good Conſcience by myſelf. My Lords, I have all along my Charge watched to ſee that poiſoned Arrow of Treaſon, that ſome Men would fain have to be feathered in my Heart, and that deadly Cup of Wine, that hath ſo intoxicated ſome petty miſ-alledged Errors, as to put them in the Elevation of High Treaſon; but in truth it hath not been my Quickneſs to diſcern any ſuch Monſter yet within my Breaſt, though now perhaps, by a ſiniſtrous Information, ſticking to my Clothes. They tell me of a twofold Treaſon, one againſt the Statute, another by the Common Law; this direct, that conſecutive; this individual, that accumulative; this in itſelf, that by way of conſtruction.

For the firſt, I muſt and do acknowledge, that if I had the leaſt ſuſpicion of my own Guilt, I would ſpare your Lordſhips the pains, caſt the firſt Stone at myſelf, and paſs Sentence of Condemnation againſt myſelf: and whether it be ſo or not, I refer myſelf to your Lordſhips Judgment and Declaration. You, and only you, (under the favour and protection of my gracious Maſter) are my Judges; under favour, none of the Commons are my Peers, nor can they be my Judges. I ſhall ever celebrate the Providence and Wiſdom of your noble Anceſtors, who have put the Keys of Life and Death (ſo far as concerns you and your Poſterity) into your own hands, not into the hands of your Inferiours; none but your own ſelves know the Rate of your noble Blood, none but yourſelves muſt hold the Ballance in diſpenſing the ſame.

I ſhall proceed in repeating my Defences, as they are reducible to theſe two main Points of Treaſon: and for Treaſon againſt the Statute, (which is the only Treaſon in effect) nothing is alledged for that, but the fifteenth, two and twentieth, and twenty ſeventh Articles. [Here he brought the Sum of all his Replies made to theſe three Articles before, and almoſt in the ſame words as before; only that Teſtimony of Sir Henry Vane's, becauſe it ſeemed preſſing, he ſtood upon it, and alledged five Reaſons for the nullifying thereof.]

Firſt, That it was but a ſingle Teſtimony, and would not make Faith in a Matter of Debt, much leſs in a Matter of Life and Death; yea, that it was expreſly againſt the Statute to impeach (much leſs to condemn) him upon High Treaſon, under the Teſtimony of two famous Witneſſes.

Secondly,

Secondly, That he was dubious in it, and expreſs'd it with an as I do remember, and ſuch or ſuch-like Words.

Thirdly, That all the Council of eight, except himſelf, diſclaim the words; as if by a ſingular Providence they had taken hold of his Ears only.

Fourthly, That at that time the King had levied no Forces in Ireland, and therefore he could not be poſſibly ſo impudent as to ſay to the King, That he had an Army there, which he might employ for the reducing this Kingdom.

Fifthly, That he had proved by Witneſſes beyond all exceptions (Marquiſs Hamilton, the Lord Treaſurer, the Earl of Northumberland, Lord Cottington, Sir William Pennyman, and Sir Arthur Terringham) that there was never the leaſt Intention to land thoſe Forces in England.

[He went on:]

So much for the Articles that concern Individual Treaſon.

To make up the Conſtructive Treaſon, or Treaſon by way of Accumulation, many Articles are brought againſt me, as if in a heap of Felonies or Miſdemeanours (for in their conceit they reach no higher) ſome prolifical Seed, apt to produce what is treaſonable, could lurk. Here I am charged to have deſigned the Ruin and Overthrow both of Religion and State. The firſt ſeemeth rather to have been uſed to make me odious than guilty, for there is not the leaſt Proof alledged concerning my Confederacy with the Popiſh Faction, nor could there be any indeed; never a Servant in Authority beneath the King my Maſter was ever more hated and maligned by thoſe Men than myſelf, and that for an impartial and ſtrict executing of the Laws againſt them.

Here your Lordſhips may obſerve, that the greater number of the Witneſſes uſed againſt me, either from Ireland or from Yorkſhire, were Men of that Religion: But for my own Reſolution (I thank God) I am ready every hour of the day to ſeal my Diſaffection to the Church of Rome, with my deareſt Blood.

But, my Lords, give me leave here to pour forth the Grief of my Soul before you: theſe Proceedings againſt me ſeem to be exceeding rigorous, and to have more of Prejudice than Equity, that upon a ſuppoſed Charge of my Hypocriſy or Errors in Religion, I ſhould be made ſo monſtrouſly odious to three Kingdoms; a great many thouſand Eyes have ſeen my Accuſations, whoſe Ears ſhall never hear, that when it came to the upſhot I was never accuſed of them. Is this fair dealing amongſt Chriſtians? But I have loſt nothing by that: Popular Applauſe was ever nothing in my conceit; the Uprightneſs and Integrity of a good Conſcience was, and ever ſhall be, my continual Feaſt; and if I can be juſtified in your Lordſhips Judgments from this grand Imputation, (as I hope I now am, ſeeing theſe Gentlemen have thrown down the Bucklers) I ſhall account myſelf juſtified by the whole Kingdom, becauſe by you, who are the Epitome, the Better Part, yea the very Soul and Life of the Kingdom.

As for my Deſign againſt the State, I dare plead as much Innocency here, as in Matter of my Religion: I have ever admired the Wiſdom of our Anceſtors, who have ſo fixed the Pillars of this Monarchy, that each of them keep a due proportion and meaſure with the other, and have ſo handſomely tyed up the Nerves and Sinews of the State, that the ſtraining of any one may bring danger and ſorrow to the whole Oeconomy. The Prerogative of the Crown, and the Propriety of the Subject, have ſuch mutual Relations, this takes Protection from that, that Foundation and Nouriſhment from this: And as on the Lute, if any one String be too high or too lowly wound up, you have loſt the Harmony; ſo here the Exceſs of a Prerogative is Oppreſſion; of pretended Liberty in the Subject, Diſorder and Anarchy. The Prerogative muſt be uſed as God doth his Omnipotency, upon extraordinary Occaſions; the Laws (anſwerable to that Potentia ligata in Creaturis) muſt have place at other times. And yet there muſt be a Prerogative, if there muſt be extraordinary Occaſions; the Propriety of the Subject is ever to be maintained, if it go in equal pace with this: They are Fellows and Companions, that are and ever muſt be inſeparable in a well-governed Kingdom; and no way ſo fitting, ſo natural to nouriſh and entertain both, as the frequent Uſe of Parliaments: by thoſe a Commerce and Acquaintance is kept betwixt the King and Subject. Theſe Thoughts have gone along with me theſe fourteen Years of my publick Employments, and ſhall God willing to my Grave: God, his Majeſty, and my own Conſcience, yea, and all thoſe who have been moſt acceſſory to my inward Thoughts and Opinions, can bear me witneſs that I ever did inculcate this, That the Happineſs of a Kingdom conſiſts in a juſt Poize of the King's Prerogative and the Subject's Liberty; and that things would never go well, till they went hand in hand together.

I thank God for it, by my Maſter's Favour, and the Providence of my Anceſtors, I have an Eſtate, which ſo intereſteth me in the Commonwealth, that I have no great mind to be a Slave, but a Subject; nor could I wiſh the Cards to be ſhuffled over again, upon hopes to fall upon a better Set: nor did I ever nouriſh ſuch baſe mercenary Thoughts, as to become a Pander to the Tyranny and Ambition of the greateſt Man living. No, I have, and ever ſhall aim at a fair, but a bounded Liberty; remembring always that I am a Freeman, yet a Subject; that I have a Right, but under a Monarch. But it hath been my misfortune now, when I am grey-headed, to be charged by the Miſtakers of the Times, who are now ſo highly bent, that all appears to them to be in the extreme for Monarchy, which is not for themſelves. Hence it is, that Deſigns, Words, yea Intentions, are brought out for real Demonſtrations for my Miſdemeanours: ſuch a Multiplying-Glaſs is a prejudicate Opinion!

The Articles contain Expreſſions and Actions: my Expreſſions either in Ireland or England, my Actions either before or after theſe late Stirs.

[In this Order he went thro the whole Charge, from the firſt Article to the laſt, in an excellent Method, and repeated all the Sums and Heads of what was ſpoken by him before; only added in the twenty eighth Article, If that one Article had been proved againſt him, it contained more weighty Matter than all the Charge beſides: and it had not only been Treaſon in him, but alſo Villany, to have betrayed the Truſt of his Majeſty's Army. Yet becauſe the Gentlemen had been ſparing (by reaſon of the Times) to inſiſt upon that Article, though it might concern him much, he reſolved to keep the ſame Method, and not utter the leaſt Expreſſion that might ſeem to diſturb the happy Agreement intended, though he wiſhed the ſame might deceive his Expectation: Only thus much he admired, how himſelf, being an an Incendiary againſt the Scots in the twenty third Article, is now become their Confederate in the twenty eighth Article; or how he could be charged for betraying Newcaſtle, and for fighting with the Scots at Newborne too, ſeeing fighting with them was no poſſible means for betraying the Town, but to hinder their Paſſage thither.

That he never adviſed War farther, than (in his poor Judgment) concerned the very Life of the King's Authority, and the Safety and Honour of his Kingdoms: Nor ſaw he what advantage could be made by a War in Scotland, where nothing could be gained but many hard Blows. For his part, he honoured the Nation, but he wiſhed they might be ever under their own Climate, and had no deſire they ſhould be too well acquainted with the better Soil of England: But he thought that Article had been added in jeſt, or as a Supernumerary; and he very little ſuſpected to be reckoned a Confederate with the Scots, and wiſhed (as he hoped it was) that every Engliſhman were as free from that Imputation as himſelf: cloſing his Defence with this Speech.]

My Lords, You ſee what may be alledged for this Conſtructive, rather Deſtructive Treaſon. For my part, I have not the Judgment to conceive that ſuch a Treaſon is agreeable either with the fundamental Grounds of Reaſon or Law: not of Reaſon, for how can that be Treaſon in the Lump or Maſs, which is not ſo in any of the Parts? Or how can that make a thing treaſonable, which in itſelf is not ſo? Not of Law, ſince neither Statute, Common Law, nor Practice, hath from the beginning of this Government ever mentioned ſuch a thing: and where, my Lords, hath this Fire, without the leaſt appearance of any Smoke, lien hid ſo many hundred Years, and now breaks forth into a violent Flame to deſtroy me and my Poſterity from the Earth? My Lords, do we not live by Laws, and muſt we be puniſhed by Laws before they be made? Far better were it to live by no Laws at all, but to be governed by thoſe Characters of Diſcretion and Virtue, that Nature hath ſtamped in us, than to put this neceſſity of Divination upon a Man, and to accuſe him of the Breach of Law, before it be a Law at all. If a Waterman upon the Thames ſplit his Boat by grating upon an Anchor, and the ſame have a Buoy appending to it, he is to charge his own Inobſervance; but if it hath none, the Owner of the Anchor is to pay the Loſs.

My Lords, If this Crime, which they call Arbitrary Treaſon, had been marked by any Diſcerner of the Law, the Ignorance thereof ſhould be no Excuſe for me; but if it be no Law at all, how can it in rigour or ſtrictneſs itſelf condemn me? Beware you do not awake theſe ſleeping Lions, by the ſearching out ſome neglected moth-eaten Records, they may one day tear you and your Poſterity in pieces: It was your Anceſtors Care to chain them up within the Barricadoes of Statutes; be not you ambitious to be more skilful and curious than your Forefathers in the Art of killing.

My Lords, It is my preſent Misfortune, for ever yours; and it is not the ſmalleſt part of my Grief, that not the Crime of Treaſon, but my other Sins, (which are exceeding many) have preſented me before this Bar; and except your Lordſhips Wiſdoms provide for it, it may be, the ſhedding of my Blood may make way for the tracing of yours: you, your Eſtates, your Poſterities, lie at the ſtake. If ſuch learned Gentlemen as theſe, whoſe Tongues are well acquainted with ſuch Proceedings, ſhall be ſtarted out againſt you; if your Friends, your Counſel denied Acceſs unto you; if your profeſſed Enemies admitted to witneſs againſt you; if every Word, Intention, or Circumſtance of yours, be ſifted and alledged as treaſonable, not becauſe of a Statute, but becauſe of a Conſequence, or Conſtruction of Lawyers pieced up in a high Rhetorical Strain, and a number of ſuppoſed Probabilities; I leave it to your Lordſhips Conſideration, to foreſee what may be the Iſſue of ſuch dangerous and recent Precedents.

Theſe Gentlemen tell me they ſpeak in defence of the Commonwealth, againſt my Arbitrary Laws; give me leave to ſay it, I ſpeak in defence of the Commonwealth, againſt their Arbitrary Treaſon: for if this Latitude be admitted, what prejudice ſhall follow to King and Country, if you and your Poſterity be by the ſame diſenabled from the greateſt Affairs of the Kingdom? For my poor ſelf, were it not for your Lordſhips Intereſt, and the Intereſt of a Saint in Heaven, who hath left me here two Pledges on Earth, [At this his Breath ſtopt, and he ſhed Tears abundantly in mentioning his Wife, which moved his very Enemies to Compaſſion] I ſhould never take the pains to keep up this ruinous Cottage of mine; it is loaden with ſuch Infirmities, that in truth I have no great pleaſure to carry it about with me any longer: nor could I ever leave it in a better time than this, when I hope the better part of the World would perhaps think, that by this my Misfortune I had given a Teſtimony of my Integrity to God, my King, and Country. I thank God, I count not the Afflictions of this preſent Life comparable to that Glory, which is to be revealed in the time to come.

My Lords! my Lords! my Lords! Something more I had to ſay, but my Voice and Spirits fail me: only I do in all humility and ſubmiſſion caſt myſelf down before your Lordſhips feet, and deſire that I might be a Pharos to keep you from Shipwreck; do not put ſuch Rocks in your own way, which no Prudence, no Circumſpection, can eſchew or ſatisfy, but by your utter Ruin. And whether your Judgments in my Caſe (I wiſh it were not the Caſe of you all) be either for Life or Death, it ſhall be righteous in my eyes, and received with a Te Deum laudamus: (and then he lifted up his Eyes, and ſaid) In te Domine confido, ne confundar in æternum.

This he ſpake with an inimitable Life and Grace. You have his very Words as near as I can remember, only with ſo much loſs and detriment as hath periſhed by tranſcribing the Copy from his own mouth. But you deſire Impartiality, and indeed you have it, and with ſome grains too of allowance; for I was ſo afraid of my own Affection to the Gentleman, that I rather bowed to the other Extremity, and therefore have ſet down his Defences rather to his diſadvantage by my rude Pen, than in the native Colour, to his eternal Glory, and the Confuſion of his Enemies.

The Repetition of the Charge did not ſpend much time; they proceeded orderly Article by Article, in the very ſame Words and Matter as before: only there were ſome remarkable Flaſhes that paſſed from Mr. Glyn (who was the Man) in the time of their handling.

He told them, That he ſhould repreſent the Lord Strafford as cunning in his Replies, as he had been crafty in his Actions; that he waved all that was material, and insisted only upon the secondary Proofs; that it was more than evident throughout all his Charge, how he had endeavoured to bring in an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Form of Government over the Lives, Lands and Liberties of the King's Subjects; yea, had exercised a Tyranny over their Consciences too, by the Oath administred in Ireland: And though his malicious Designs had taken no effect, yet no Thanks to him, but to the Goodness of the King, and the Vigilancy of the Peers. Had they pleas'd, it had been too late to have punished him; for no Rule of Law had been left whereby to censure him, after the Death and Expiration of the Laws. And if the Intention of Guido Faux might be thought Treason, though the House was not blown up, then this Intention of his may admit the same Censure.

He closed; That throughout all his Defences he had pretended either Warrants from the King, or else the King's Prerogative: and what was this else but to draw up a Cloud, and exhale the Vapour for the eclipsing of the bright Sun, by the Jealousies or Repinings of his Subjects, if the strength of his Piety and Justice should not dispel all these Mists, and send them down to their Original? That the very standing and falling of these three Kingdoms stood upon this Process; all of which do conceive their Safety so far interested in his just Punishment, that no settling of their Peace or Quiet could be expected without this: That they hoped the Law should never protect him, who had gone about to subvert all Law; nor the Nobility (who had the same Blood moving in their Veins) by submitting themselves to his base Tyranny, lose that Privilege and Liberty, which their Ancestors had bought with their dearest Lives. Though there was no Statute for this Treason, was it the less monstrous? For there was none for so many hundreds of Years that durst ever venture upon such Insolencies, to occasion such a Statute: And were not the fundamental Grounds, Rules and Government sufficient to rise up in Judgment against him, without the making a particular Statute? This he said he left to the Dispute of the Law; and concluded, that seeing they had found out the Jonah, who these many Years had tossed and hazarded the Ship of the Commonwealth with continual Storms and Tempests, there could be no Calms expected, but by casting him out into the Seas; which, in all Justice, they must, and do expect from their Hands, who are intrusted by the Body of the Kingdom to do the same. The Aggravation of the Offence, he said, he had left to Mr. Pym, who here spake that Speech which is now in Print.

It was a Sport to see how Mr. Pym in his Speech was fearfully out, and constrained to pull out his Papers, and read with a great deal of Confusion and Disorder, before he could recollect himself; which failing of his Memory was no small Advantage to the Lieutenant: because by this means the House perceived it was a premeditated Flash, not grounded upon the Lieutenant's last Answer, but resolved on before, whatsoever he should say for his own Justification. But the Lieutenant was not suffered to reply a Word, either to Glyn or Pym, because the last Word must be theirs. And so with Tuesday ended the Matter of Fact.

On Thursday the Dispute in Law is expected.

Upon Wednesday we were big with Expectation for the Matter of Law, having done before with Matter of Fact; but it seems the House of Commons had perceived a great Defection of their Party, and a great Increase of the Lord Strafford's Friends in both the Houses, occasioned by his insinuating, honest, and witty Defences, and therefore resolved of no more hearing in publick: therefore it was thought upon by his Accusers to draw up a Bill of Attainder, and present the same to the Lords; whereby, First, the Matter of Fact should be declared to have been sufficiently proved; and then in the Matter of Law, that he had incurred the Censure of Treason, for intending to subvert the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom: For tho (said they) he cannot be charged by Letter of Statute of the Twenty-fifth of Edward the Third, yet he is within the Compass of the Salvo, whereby it is provided, That the King and Parliament hath Power to determine what is treasonable, and what not; and that they were confident the Lords would ratify and approve of this Bill of theirs, and give Judgment acccordingly.

The Motion was stoutly opposed by three great Lawyers, (all Members of the House) Selden, Holborn and Bridgeman, who made it manifest, that the Salvo of 25 Edward 3. was repealed, and that no Man could now be convicted of Treason, but by the Letter of that Statute: But being put to Voice, it was carried for the Bill, and a Committee appointed for to draw it up.

This gave occasion of much talk abroad, and they who were otherwise the Lord Strafford's Enemies, could not find Equity enough in the Bill of Attainder. Some could not conceive what difference imaginable was betwixt the Bill and the Charge presented before; for in the Charge he was accused of Treason, and the Bill (though they had no Legislative Power) seemed nothing but an Affirmation of the same. Others (who would have the Bill understood of a definitive Sentence, because it was consecutive to the Proofs) were not satisfied, but that it was against all Practice, that the Commons should give Sentence upon the Death of a Peer; and that it was against common Equity too, that the Party accusant should give the Judgment, if the Complainers were admitted to be Judges. A third sort gave it out, That this was no Sentence against the Lord Strafford, but only a passing of a new Act of Parliament, about a Matter not hitherto declared treasonable: But yet these doubted, that by declaring the Matter of Fact to be approved, and applying the Censure to it, in reference to the Lord Strafford, it would ever be thought a Sentence against him, to blemish his own Fame, and the Blood of his Posterity. Moreover, that if they were about to make a new Act, it were strange to punish a Man for the Breach of such a Statute as was not yet extant in rerum natura; which should in reason refer only to future Obedience: And (what is more strange) though there were a new Statute, yet by what Authority the Parliament hath, or could declare any individual or accumulative Act, which is already, to be treasonable; which must be Treason by virtue of a Statute, or else no Treason at all. Now there is none can be brought, except the Twenty-fifth of Edward the Third, whereof the Letter of that Statute cannot, by their own Confession, nor was not so much as once alledged against the Lord Strafford: And for the Salvo or Proviso (which they mainly insisted on) the same stands repealed by two posterior Acts of Parliament.

You have the Mutterings of all sorts of People.

The

The Lords fearing the Proceedings, as a beaten Path trodden out to the Ruin of their own Lives and Eſtates, told the Houſe of Commons in their Conference upon Thurſday, That they would go on the ſame way they did already; and, according to the Order of the Houſe, give full Audience to the Lord Strafford's Counſel in Matter of Law, and that they themſelves, as competent Judges, would by themſelves only give Sentence in the Cauſe; nor was there any other Courſe ſutable to the Practice and Statutes of the Kingdom, the Safety of the Nobility, or to Equity or common Juſtice.

It was replied by them of the Lower Houſe, That they were reſolved to go on with their Bill, and if the ſame ſhould be rejected by the Lords, they feared a Rupture and Diviſion might follow, to the utter Ruin and Deſolation of the whole Kingdom, that no Content would be given to the Subject, (and this was a ſtrong Argument indeed, yet better beſeeming Partiality and Violence, than the pretended Juſtice and Piety of the Times) unleſs the Man, who had ſo much intruded upon their Right, and diſcontented the People, might be puniſhed as a Traytor; and for the Practice of the Kingdom, that no Man had ever found ſuch a favourable Hearing; and that the Proceſs againſt Eſſex, Norfolk, Somerſet, were all of them cloſed up in one Day.

Upon Friday the Lords gave Anſwer, That they could expect nothing from the Houſe of Commons, but what ſhould tend to the Peace and Preſervation of the Kingdom: nor was there a more forcible way than to preſerve the Laws and Cuſtoms thereof, leſt Innovation, ſo much complained of by them, might unhappily be found among themſelves: That the Subjects ſhould have all that Juſtice could afford, but that an Act of Injuſtice would never give Satisfaction to the World, nor Safety to themſelves; the Eyes of all foreign States being fixed upon the Buſineſs now in agitation, and the Wiſdom of our Nation either to be much advanced or depreſſed by their Judgments in this Caſe: That the Proceſs againſt Norfolk and Eſſex (for Somerſet was convict only of Felony, and had not ſo much Animadverſion to ſave himſelf by his Book) were for direct and formal Treaſons, comprized in one or two individual Acts; but this againſt the Lord Strafford only arbitrary and accumulative, to be pick'd out of Twenty-eight Articles: And therefore that it was impoſſible to have a full Examination of them all, to give Sentence againſt him. And thoſe Noblemen were charged with ſome actual Breach of Statutes, formerly made; but here a new Statute was to be made, or elſe he to be found guiltleſs. They concluded, that they had given order for his Appearance on Saturday, and that in the great Hall at Weſtminſter, where the Houſe of Commons might, if they pleaſed, be preſent.

After ſome Deliberation with the Houſe, the Conferrers anſwered, That ſince the Lords had ſo reſolved, they would not deny to be there preſent, and to hear what his Counſel could ſay for him; but to reply any more in publick, they neither could nor would, becauſe of the Bill already paſt: only if the Lords ſhould take any ſcruple in the Matter of Law, they would be ready to give them Satisfaction by a private Conference, (ſo they willingly declined to do what indeed they could not poſſibly do) that is, to give publick Satisfaction in the Matter of Law.

Upon Saturday they convened in the great Hall, but they that were of the Committee for the great Charge, did not ſtand at the Bar, as before, but ſat promiſcuouſly with the reſt of their Fellows; ſo that a Mouth was not opened in the behalf of the Houſe of Commons all that Day. After they were ſat, the Lord Steward told the Lieutenant, That the Lords had reſolved to give him a fair Hearing in the Matter of Law, and therefore deſired that the Counſel might keep that Diſtance, Moderation and Reſpect to the Judicatory that was fitting, and not at all to meddle with the Matter of Fact.

The Lieutenant replied, That in all Humility he did acknowledge that Favour from the Lords; and that it was ſuch an one too, as he could not but expect from ſuch honourable Peers and juſt Perſons, in whoſe Integrity and Goodneſs (under that which he had placed above) he had repoſed his chiefeſt Confidence; for his Counſel, they knew much better than himſelf what concerned the Point of Diſcretion and Reverence; and that he doubted not but that they would give all Satisfaction and Obedience.

Then his Counſel were called to the Bar, Mr. Lane, the Prince's Attorney; Mr. Gardiner, Recorder of London; Mr. Loe, and Mr. Lightfoot. Mr. Lane ſpake, and much to this Senſe and Purpoſe:

My Lords, there is an heavy Charge lieth on me and my Fellows, nothing leſs than to defend the Life, the Eſtate, the Reputation, yea the Poſterity of this Honourable Perſon at the Bar; if therefore we ſhall be more preſſing, we hope your Lordſhips will interpret this our Forwardneſs to be for Honour and Conſcience-ſake, in a Matter that concerneth both ſo nearly: But it ſhall be our Endeavour to carry our ſelves with our beſt Reſpects to your Lordſhips, and with all Content and Satisfaction to the Honourable Houſe of Commons: and becauſe your Lordſhips mentioned the Matter of Fact, one thing I dare be bold to ſay, That all the time of this Noble Lord's Defences, he did not ſo much as crave any one of our Opinions; yea, or acquainted us with any thing that tended that way. And for the Matter of Law, thoſe Statutes cited by himſelf were none of our Stock, but taken up at his own adventure; nor do I ſpeak this to derogate from the Pertinency of thoſe Statutes (for they ſhall be the Subject of my Diſcourſe) but that the Nobleman be not diſappointed of your right Conceptions, and his own due Praiſe.

My Lords, it is your pleaſure we meddle not with Matter of Fact, and indeed we need not meddle at all with it, becauſe we hope it is already done, and that ſufficiently to our hands; yet the Matter of Law doth ſo naturally riſe out of the Matter of Fact, that of neceſſity (under your Lordſhips Favours) we muſt ſomewhat grate on this, if we ſpeak on that; nor do I conceive it poſſible for us to ſpeak advantageouſly enough for the Lord Strafford's juſt Defence, unleſs the whole Matter of Fact be determined, either as proved or not proved, or at leaſt ſome ſtates of Queſtions agreed upon, where we may fix and ſettle our Arguments. And therefore it is, my Lords, that I have choſen not at all to touch the Matter of Law (until your Lordſhips ſhall be pleaſed to chalk me out a way) unleſs it be to clear your Judgments in one Statute only, viz. 25 Edw. 3. Becauſe when the ſame was alledged by the Lord Strafford in his own Defence, that not being convicted of the Letter thereof, he could not be convicted of Treaſon; I remember the Salvo of that Statute was much inſiſted upon by thoſe from the Houſe of Commons, as much conducing to their own ends. My Lords, I will firſt ſpeak of the Statute it ſelf, and then of its Salvo or Proviſion. The Statute is, That if any Man ſhall intend the Death of the King, his Queen, their Children; kill the Chancellor, or Judge upon the Bench; imbaſe the King's Coin, or counterfeit the Broad-Seal, &c. he ſhall be convicted and puniſhed as a Traytor. That the Lord Strafford comes within the Letter of this Statute, is not ſo much as once alledged, nor indeed it cannot be with any reaſon: All that can be ſaid, is, That by Relation, or by Argument a minori ad majus, he may be drawn thither; yet that this cannot be, I humbly offer theſe Conſiderations.

Firſt, This is a Declarative Law, and ſuch are not to be taken by way of Conſequence, Equity, or Conſtruction, but by the Letter only; otherwiſe they ſhould imply a Contradiction to themſelves, and be no more Declarative Laws, but Laws of Conſtruction, or Conſtitutive.

Secondly, This is a Penal Law, and ſuch (if our Grounds, hitherto unqueſtioned, hold good) can admit of no Conſtructions or Inferences; for Penalties are to perſuade the keeping of known Laws, not of Laws conjectural, ambiguous, and by conſequence, which perhaps the moſt Learned may not in their Diſputes queſtion; much leſs the Subject (who is not obliged to interpret the Statute) doubt of in the Point of Obedience; yea rather without any Doubt, he is to obey the Letter of the Statute, and conceive, (and that truly) that he is not liable to the Penalty.

Thirdly, We have a notable Law, 13 Eliz. cap. 2. whereby it is declared, That the bringing in of Bulls from Rome, to ſtir up the Subject to Mutiny and Rebellion, ſhall be puniſhed as Treaſon. Now if by Interpretation, or by Conſequence, this Senſe might have been thruſt upon the preceding Statutes, the making of this had been ſuperfluous; yea, the Perſons then charged with that Crime, might have been impeached of Treaſon, even before the making of this Act.

Anno 21 of Ed. 3. we have a Statute declaring, That for a Servant to kill his Maſter, is an Act of Treaſon: And in the three and twentieth Year of the ſame King, a Proceſs of Treaſon was framed againſt a Man for killing his Father, grounded upon the ſame Argument, a minori ad majus: But it was found (and the Sentence is yet in the Records) that although in the one and twentieth Year of Edward the Third, that Argument might have been admitted; yet in the twenty-ſeventh it could not, by reaſon of the Declarative Law intervening in the twenty-fifth Year: And this Caſe comes very home to the Point in Law.

My Lords, I will not demand what kind of Offence it may be, for a Man to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws of a Kingdom; the Crime doubtleſs is unnatural and monſtrous, and the Puniſhment muſt keep the ſame Proportion: only I preſume to offer theſe few Things to your Lordſhips Conſiderations.

Firſt, That one or more Acts of Injuſtice, whether maliciouſly, or ignorantly done, can in no Senſe of Law be called the Subverſion of the Fundamental Laws; if ſo, as many Judges (perhaps) ſo many Traytors. It is very incident to Man's Nature to err; nor doth the Lord Strafford plead his Innocency in Over-ſights, but in Treaſon.

Secondly, I do remember the Caſe of John de la Poole, Duke of Suffolk: This Man, in the twenty-eighth of Henry the Sixth, was charged by the Houſe of Commons with Articles of Treaſon, and thoſe too very like to theſe againſt my Lord Strafford.

1. That he had given the King bad Advices.
2. That he had embaſed his Coin.
3. That he had ceſſed Men of War.
4. That he had given out ſummary Decrees.
5. That he had impoſed Taxes.
6. That he had corrupted the Fountain of Juſtice.
7. That he had perſuaded the King to unneceſſary War, and to the giving over of Anjou in France, Ovum Ovo.

And for all theſe, though he was charged with High Treaſon, for wronging the Right of the Subject, and ſubverting the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom; yet after a long Agitation, the Matter was found by the Lords of Parliament, not to imply Treaſon, but only Felony. Add to this another, who in the twenty-third of Henry the Eighth, was charged for ſubverting the Engliſh Laws, and yet no Treaſon charged upon him. Add to both the Charge of Richard Larks, pleaded at the Common-Pleas, who was charged with Treaſon for ſubverting the Law, but convicted only of Felony: By which you may ſee, my Lords, what to this time hath been ſubverting the Laws.

Thirdly, It is very conſiderable, that the Lord Strafford is not charged to have ſubverted, but only to have intended to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws: And this I conceive, if there were no more, might keep him free from that Statute of the twenty-fifth of Edward the Third. For although, as touching the King, his Queen and Children, Intention is Treaſonable; yet in all other things there mentioned, there muſt be Action beſide Intention: for it is not ſaid, If a Man do intend to kill a Chancellor, it ſhall be Treaſon; but only, if he do kill him; and if he doth actually counterfeit the Broad-Seal. And although a Man ſhould prepare a Furnace, make ready his Stamp, melt his Bullion, yet if he gives not the King's Impreſſion upon the Coin, all his Intentions, yea, his Preparations will not ſerve to make up a Treaſon.

And this (under favour) may ſerve to anſwer the Caſe of Guido Faux, lately objected; unleſs it be alledged, that the Lord Strafford had as real an Intention againſt the King's Life as Faux had: For though the Intention in that Caſe be Treaſon by the Statute, yet in all other things there is no Treaſon without the Action; ſo immenſe and vaſt a difference both is, and ought to be, betwixt a Project againſt the Royal Blood, and all things elſe of a lower and under Nature.

You ſee therefore, my Lords, that the Body of the Statute cannot ſtick againſt the Lord Strafford, neither in Letter, nor in Conſequence; this is not, that muſt not be: All that can be ſaid, is, That this Fact may be Treaſon by the Common Law. For my part I profeſs my Ignorance, who ever thought the Common Law might declare, but never make a Treaſon; that is, it might be preſuppoſed that there is a Statute whereupon to build a Declaration; and therefore to ſay there is no Statute for it, is to ſay it is no Treaſon at all. The Statute ever makes the Treaſon; and to be declared to be Treaſon, either by Common Law, or by Parliament, are but two different ways of Proceedings, and muſt both reſolve into one Principle:

ciple: yea, which comes home to the Point, in the one and twentieth of Edward the Third, to kill a Man imployed in the King's War, was Treaſon; and the twenty-third, To kill the King's Meſſenger, was Treaſon by Declaration of the Common Law, but always by reaſon of the Statute; yet none of theſe are now Treaſons, but Felonies only, by reaſon of the intervening Statute, the twenty-fifth of Edward the Third: ſuch hath ever been thought the Force of its Letter and Declaration. And ſo I will leave it, and ſpeak a Word or two of the Salvo, which is this; That becauſe all Particulars could not be then defined, therefore what the Parliament ſhould declare to be Treaſonable in time to come, ſhould be puniſhed as Treaſon.

And according to this Reſervation, in the eighth Year of Richard the Second, one who was charged before the King's-Bench, was afterwards referred to the Parliament; and there, though the Fact was not contained in the Body of the Statute, yet becauſe of the Proviſo afore-mentioned, it was adjudged Treaſon.

In the eleventh Year of the ſame King, the Duke of Ireland, and Nevil Archbiſhop of York, were impeached of High Treaſon by Glouceſter, Arundel and Warwick; and notwithſtanding the Statute, were convicted thereof by the Salvo. But in the one and twentieth of the ſame Richard the Second, the Tide turned, and the King had ſuch a hand with the Parliament, that the Sentence was recalled, and thoſe three Noblemen themſelves adjudged Traytors. Again, in the firſt of Henry the Fourth, his Succeſſor, that Revocation of the one and twentieth of Richard the Second was repealed, and the Sentence of the eleventh of his Reign eſtabliſhed. Such were the Toſſings to and fro of Treaſon, and all becauſe of that uncertain Proviſo.

Therefore it was, that in the ſame Parliament, the firſt of Henry the Fourth, a Petition was preferred by the Nobility to have Treaſon limited with ſome Statute; becauſe they knew not what to ſpeak, or what to do, for fear thereof. And in the tenth Chapter an Act was made upon this Petition, that the Salvo ſhould be holden repealed in all times to come, and nothing eſteemed Treaſon but what was literally contained in the Statute of the twenty-fifth of Edward the Third: And therefore it is ſaid in the Records, That there was great Joy at the making of this Act, in that the drawn Sword hanging over every Man's Head, by this ſlender Thread of a Conſequence, or Illation, was moved by that Act. Add to this, That in the firſt of Queen Mary, the firſt Chapter, the ſame is repeated, That no Man ſhall be puniſhed in Life or Eſtate as a Traytor, but for the Crime contained in the Statute 25 Edw. 3. without the leaſt Mention of a pretended Salvo.

The Earl of Northumberland's Caſe comes nigh to the Point; he was charged with Treaſon, the firſt of Henry the Fourth, and if the Statute of the fifth of Henry the Fourth, the firſt Chapter, whereby this Proviſo is repealed, had not intervened, no doubt he had been condemned of Treaſon: but he was only convict of Felony, and that becauſe he could not be drawn within the Letter of the Statute of the twenty-fifth of Edward the Third. And I dare confidently ſay it, That ſince that Act was made, the firſt of Henry the Fourth, the firſt Chapter, whereby the Proviſo is repealed, no Man hath ever been declared a Traytor, either by King or Parliament, except it were upon that, or ſome other Statute, literally and declaratively taken. Theſe two Things I do offer to your Lordſhips Conſiderations; That the Lord Strafford cannot be impeached of Treaſon by the Statute of the twenty-fifth of Edward the Third, and that the Salvo contained in the ſame ſtands repealed almoſt two hundred Years ago: And this is all I conceive to be neceſſary for that Statute which was alledged by the Lord Strafford in his Defence for Matter of Fact.

Then the Recorder ſpake ſome few Words to this purpoſe; That what was ſpoken upon the Statute, was becauſe it ſeemed inſeparable from the Matter of Fact, that they could proceed no farther, till a State were afforded them; that to do otherwiſe, they conceived, might be very prejudicial unto my Lord Strafford:

Firſt, In that they ſhould ſuppoſe that to be done, which is not proved to be.

Secondly, That the Matter of Law ariſeth ſo naturally from the Matter of Fact, that it will be impoſſible to ſeparate one from the other.

Thirdly, That it is the Courſe of all Judicatories, firſt to ſettle the Verdict, and upon that to fix the Arguments, otherwiſe he could conceive no poſſible way of Proceeding; and therefore, in the Lord Strafford's Name, he moſt humbly entreated, that the Lords would either wholly determine the Matter of Fact (or whether Treaſon or not; for then all other Proceedings in the Law were unneceſſary, but whether done or not done) or elſe to give them ſome States of the Queſtion whereunto they might confine themſelves.

Upon this Motion the Houſe was adjourned for that Day, nor hath it met ſince; for the Houſe of Commons are returned to their old Biaſs, and will hear of nothing but the Bill of Attainder; but the Lords ſeem to be more reſolute than before, becauſe they find that they have no Authority to declare a Treaſon in a Fact already paſt, the Salvo of the twenty-fifth of Edward the Third being repealed; withal, that if the Bill of Attainder ſhould proceed, the King hath as great Power to hinder that at the laſt Blow, as any other Statute: but I hope the Lords will disburden him of that Envy.

All the which ſtand obliged to the Lord Strafford, in Blood, Affection or Deſerving; and all who have been intereſted with him in the King's Service, and many too, who both hate his Perſon, and diſlike his Proceedings; will doubtleſs look upon it, and tender their own Safety, all of them in likelihood being ſubject to the Charge of Treaſon, if ever they chance to be called to do the King Service in any Place of Importance.

I cannot expreſs how much the Voice of the Multitude is now altered from what it was lately, nothing now talked of what ſhould be done, but only of what muſt be done: So that if the Lord Strafford dies, his very Enemies will confeſs, that it is done more for Neceſſity, than for Juſtice; and rather for the Satisfaction of rancorous Apprehenſions, than for any Guiltineſs in the Cauſe.

Thurſday laſt, viz. April 29. was deſigned for the Agitation of the long intermitted Buſineſs concerning the Lieutenant; and the way was this:

The Lords did meet at the great Hall at Weſtminſter about Nine of the Clock, not in their Robes, nor did the Lord Steward ſit upon his Sack, but with the reſt promiſcuouſly; nor did the Committee for the Houſe of Commons ſtand at the Bar, but ſat with the reſt of their Fellows; and the Earl of Strafford ſat behind the Place where he uſed to ſit before; the reaſon of theſe Changes was, becauſe the Dyet was appointed not for a Meeting, but for a Conference: ſo curious are we (and that's all) about Formalities. The King, Queen, and Prince were there, according to their Cuſtom: not a Man ſpake a word in the Houſe all the time, but only Mr. St. John, the King's Sollicitor, one of the Committee; whoſe Drift and Purpoſe was to furniſh the Lords with Reaſons, why the Houſe of Commons had proceeded with a Bill of Attainder: and withal, to reply to what the Lord Strafford had ſpoken, either by himſelf, or his Council, in Matter of Law. The Speech is in print.

Upon the Cloſe of Mr. St. John's Speech, the Houſe diſſolved; nor was there a word ſpoken but by Mr. St. John: only the Lord-Lieutenant uſed the laſt part of his Rhetorick, and by a dumb Eloquence, manibus ad ſydera tenſis, all along Mr. St. John's Speech, made his Replies with a deep Silence.

Upon Friday he petitioned the Lords to be heard again, and that becauſe his Lawyers had not fully ſpoken at their laſt Meeting; but this was denied him, becauſe the Houſe were to have the laſt Speech, nor were they content to ſpeak again.

Upon this Information, or what elſe is not known, the King (it ſeems, fearing the Inconſtancy of the Lords) came to the Houſe on Saturday at Ten of the clock, and having called for the Houſe of Commons, ſpake much to this effect.

The King's Speech to the Houſe of Commons.

'THAT he had ſincerely, without Affection or Partiality, endeavoured to inform himſelf concerning the Lieutenant's Charge; and had, at length, ſeriouſly pondered with himſelf, both concerning the Matter of Fact and the Matter of Law: and now it ſtood him in hand to clear their Judgments, then to exonerate his own Conſcience. For them, he had two things to declare:

'Firſt, That there was never ſuch a Project, nor had the Lord Strafford ever offered ſuch Advice, for the tranſporting of the Iriſh Army into England; ſo that in nothing the Lieutenant had been more miſunderſtood than in that: which Imputation did in no ſmall meaſure reflect on himſelf (the King) as if he had intended to make war upon his own good Subjects; which Thought (he ſaid) was far enough from his Breaſt, nor could any Man in probability think ſo unworthily of him, who had perceived how graciouſly he had dealt with his Subjects elſewhere, that had deſerved a great deal worſe.

'Secondly, That the Lieutenant had never adviſed him to eſtabliſh an Arbitrary Government; nor, if he had, ſhould he have eſcaped condign Puniſhment: nor would any of his good Subjects ever think otherwiſe, unleſs they conceived him either to be a Fool or a Tyrant; that he either could not, or would not diſcern ſuch Wickedneſs. He was well content (he ſaid) with that Authority and Power which God had put into his hands; nor ſhould he ever think it his Prerogative, to intrude upon the Propriety of the Subject.

'For himſelf, and his own Conſcience, (he ſaid) he was now to declare, That in his own Judgment there was nothing in the Proceſs againſt the Lieutenant that deſerved the Cenſure of Treaſon. Overſights and Miſdemeanours there were, in ſuch a meaſure, that he confeſſed the Lord Strafford was never worthy hereafter to bear any Office in his Kingdoms, no, not ſo much as of a Conſtable; but was to be anſwerable for all his Errors, when they were to be charged upon him; and to this none of them ſhould concur with greater alacrity than himſelf. That he hoped none of them would deny to give him the privilege of the firſt Voice, which was, That he would never, in Heart nor Hand, concur with them to puniſh this Man as a Traytor; and deſired therefore, that they would think of ſome other way how the Buſineſs might be compoſed: Nor ſhould it ever be leſs dear to him (though with the Loſs of his deareſt Blood) to protect the Innocent, than to puniſh the Guilty.'

Upon Saturday, May 8. the Bill againſt the Lord Strafford paſs'd the Lords; there were forty five preſent, of which nineteen voiced for him, and twenty ſix againſt him. The greateſt part of his Friends abſented themſelves upon pretence (whether true or ſuppoſititious) that they feared the Multitude; otherwiſe his Suffrages had more than counterpoiſed the Voters for his Death.

Sunday all the day the King was reſolute never to give way to the Bill againſt the Lord Strafford, telling them withal, That it ſeemed ſtrange to him that the Man could not die, unleſs he, and he only, by giving Sentence the King's legiſlative way, ſhould condemn him.

But after they had wreſtled him breathleſs, at laſt victus dedit manus; being overcome with ſuch unceſſant Importunities, he yielded. And about nine of the clock at Night the King promiſed to ſign both the Bills the next Morning; which was accordingly done, and a Commiſſion drawn up for his Execution.

An Act for Reverſing the Earl of Strafford's Attainder.

WHEREAS Thomas late Earl of Strafford was impeached of High Treaſon, upon pretence of endeavouring to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws, and called to a publick and ſolemn Arraignment and Tryal before the Peers in Parliament, where he made a particular Defence to every Article objected againſt him; inſomuch that the turbulent Party then ſeeing no hopes to effect their unjuſt Deſigns, by any ordinary Way and Method of Proceedings, did at laſt reſolve to attempt the Deſtruction and Attainder of the ſaid Earl, by an Act of Parliament, to be therefore purpoſely made, to condemn him upon Accumulative Treaſon, none of the pretended Crimes being Treaſon apart, and ſo could not be in the whole, if they had been proved, as they were not: and alſo judged him guilty of Conſtructive Treaſon, (that is, of levying War againſt the King) tho it was only the commanding an Order of the Council-Board in Ireland, to be executed by a Serjeant at Arms and three or four Soldiers, which was the conſtant Practice of the Deputies there for a long time. To the which end, they having firſt preſented a Bill for this intent to the Houſe of Commons, and finding finding there more Oppoſition than they expected, they cauſed a Multitude of tumultuous Perſons to come down to Weſtminſter, armed with Swords and Staves, and to fill both the Palace-Yards, and all the Approaches to both Houſes of Parliament, with Fury and Clamour, and to require Juſtice, ſpeedy Juſtice, againſt the Earl of Strafford; and having by thoſe and other undue Practices obtained that Bill to paſs the Houſe of Commons, they cauſed the Names of thoſe reſolute Gentlemen, who in a Caſe of innocent Blood had freely diſcharged their Conſciences, being Fifty Nine, to be poſted up in ſeveral places about the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and ſtiled them Straffordians, and Enemies to their Country; hoping thereby to deliver them up to the Fury of the People, whom they had endeavoured to incenſe againſt them. And then procured the ſaid Bill to be ſent up to the Houſe of Peers, where it having ſome time reſted under great deliberation; at laſt, in a time when a great part of the Peers were abſent by reaſon of the Tumults, and many of thoſe who were preſent proteſted againſt it, the ſaid Bill paſſed the Houſe of Peers: and at length his Majeſty, the late King Charles I. of glorious Memory, granted a Commiſſion for giving his Royal Aſſent thereunto; which nevertheleſs was done by his ſaid Majeſty with exceeding great Sorrow then, and ever remembred by him with unexpreſſible Grief of Heart; and out of his Majeſty's great Piety, he did publickly expreſs it, when his own Sacred Life was taken away, by the moſt deteſtable Traytors that ever were.

For all which Cauſes be it declared and enacted by the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, by and with the Advice and Conſent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, That the Act intitled, An Act for the Attainder of Thomas Earl of Strafford of High Treaſon, and all and every Clauſe and Article, and Thing therein contained, being obtained as aforeſaid, is now hereby repealed, revoked, and reverſed.

And to the end that Right be done to the Memory of the deceaſed Earl of Strafford aforeſaid, be it farther enacted, That all Records and Proceedings of Parliament, relating to the ſaid Attainder, be wholly cancelled and taken off the File, or otherwiſe defaced and obliterated; to the intent the ſame may not be viſible in After-Ages, or brought into example, to the prejudice of any Perſon whatſoever.

Provided, That this Act ſhall not extend to the future queſtioning of any Perſon or Perſons, however concerned in this Buſineſs; or who had any hand in the Tumults, or diſorderly procuring the Act aforeſaid; any thing herein contained to the contrary thereof notwithſtanding.

DEcember 18. 1640. being Friday. Upon this day, Mr. Denzil Hollis, ſecond Son to John Earl of Clare, by Order from the Houſe of Commons, came up to the Lords, and accuſed me of High Treaſon; and told the Lords, they would make proof thereof in convenient time: but deſired in the mean time, that I might be committed to ſafe Cuſtody. This was ſtrange News to my Innocency: for this I can ſay of myſelf, without Falſhood or Vanity, that to the uttermoſt of my Underſtanding I ſerved the King, my gracious Maſter, with all Duty and Faithfulneſs; and without any known or wilful Diſſervice to the State there-while. And this I did, with as true and free a Heart, as ever any Man did, that ſerved a King. And I thank God, my Care was ſuch for the Publick, that it is well known I much neglected my own private Fortunes there-while. The more was I amazed at the firſt Apprehenſion of this heavy and undeſerved Charge.

Upon this Charge, I was commanded to withdraw. But I firſt deſired leave to ſpeak a few words: and I ſpake to this effect, That I was heartily ſorry for the Offence taken againſt me; and that I was moſt unhappy, to have my Eyes open to ſee that Day, and mine Ears to hear ſuch a Charge: But humbly deſired their Lordſhips, to look upon the whole Courſe of my Life, which was ſuch, as that I did verily perſuade myſelf, not one Man in the Houſe of Commons did believe in his heart that I was a Traytor. Here my Lord the Earl of Eſſex interrupted me, and ſaid, That Speech of mine was a Scandal put upon the whole Houſe of Commons, that they ſhould * bring me up charged with ſo high a Crime, which themſelves did not believe. I humbly deſired then, that I might be proceeded with in the antient Parliamentary Way of England. This the Lord Say excepted againſt; as if I would preſcribe them how they ſhould proceed. So I withdrew, as I was commanded, and was preſently called in again to the Bar; and thence delivered to Mr. James Maxwell, the † Officer of the Black Rod, to be kept in ſafe Cuſtody, till the Houſe of Commons ſhould farther impeach me.

Here I humbly deſired leave, that I might go home to fetch ſome Papers, neceſſary for my Defence. This was granted me with ſome difficulty; and Mr. Maxwell was commanded to attend me all the while I ſhould ſtay. When I was gone to Lambeth, after ſome little diſcourſe (and ſad enough) with my Steward, and ſome private Friends, I went into my Chappel to Evening-Prayer. The * Pſalms for that day gave me much Comfort, and were obſerved by ſome Friends then preſent, as well as by myſelf. And upon the Comfort I then received, I have every day ſince (unleſs ſome urgent Buſineſs prevented me) read over both theſe Pſalms; and, God willing, purpoſe ſo to do every day of my Life. Prayers being ended, I went with Mr. Maxwell, as I was commanded; hundreds of my poor Neighbours ſtanding at my Gates to ſee me go, and praying heartily for my ſafe Return to my Houſe: for which, I bleſſed God, and them.

Upon Friday, Febr. 26. 1640. I had been full ten Weeks in reſtraint, at Mr. Maxwell's Houſe: and this Day, being St. Auguſtine's Day, my Charge in general Articles was brought up from the Houſe of Commons to the Lords, by (a) Sir Henry Vane the Younger. It conſiſted of fourteen Articles. Theſe Generals they craved time to prove in particular; and that I in the mean time might be kept ſafe. Upon this I was preſently ſent for to the Houſe, and the Articles were read to me at the Bar. When the Clerk of the Parliament had done reading, I humbly craved leave of the Lords to ſpeak a few words; which were to this effect:

'My Lords, this is a great and a heavy 'Charge, and I muſt be unworthy to live, if it 'can be made good againſt me: For it makes me 'againſt God, in point of Religion; againſt the 'King, in point of Allegiance; and againſt 'the Publick, in point of Safety, under the Juſ-'tice and Protection of Law. And though the 'King be little, if at all mentioned; yet I am 'bold to name him, becauſe I have ever been of 'opinion, that the King and his People are ſo 'joined together in one Civil and Politick Body, 'as that it is not poſſible for any Man to be true 'to the King, as King, that ſhall be found 'treacherous to the State eſtabliſhed by Law, 'and work to the Subverſion of the People: 'Though perhaps every one, that is ſo, is not 'able to ſee thorough all the Conſequences, by 'which one depends upon the other. So my 'Charge, my Lords, is exceeding heavy in it 'ſelf; though I, as yet, do not altogether feel 'the weight of it. For 'tis yet (as your Lord-'ſhips ſee) but in Generals; and Generals make 'a great noiſe, but no Proof: Whereas 'tis Proof 'upon Particulars that makes the weight of a 'Charge ſit cloſe upon any Man. Now, my Lords, 'tis an old and a true Rule, Errare contingit de-'ſcendendo, Error doth moſt often happen, and beſt 'appear, when Men deſcend to Particulars: 'And with them when I ſhall be charged, I 'hope my Innocence will furniſh me with a ſuf-'ficient Anſwer to any Error of mine, that ſhall 'be thought criminal, or any way worthy the 'Cognizance of this High and Honourable Court. 'As for human Frailties, as I cannot acquit my 'ſelf of them, ſo I preſume your Lordſhips will 'be favourable Judges of them: Since in the 'Tranſaction of ſo many Buſineſſes as paſſed my 'Hands, Men, far abler than ever I can be, have 'been ſubject to them; and, perhaps, to as many 'and as great. But for Corruption in the leaſt 'degree (I humbly praiſe God for it) I fear no 'Accuſer that will ſpeak Truth. But, my 'Lords, that which goes neareſt unto me among 'theſe Articles, is, That I ſhould be thought 'foul and falſe in the Profeſſion of my Religion: 'As if I ſhould profeſs with the Church of Eng-'land, and have my Heart at Rome, and labour 'by all cunning Ways to bring Romiſh Superſti-'tion in upon the Kingdom. This (my Lords) I 'confeſs, troubles me exceedingly: And if I 'ſhould forget my ſelf, and fall into Paſſion upon 'it, I ſhould but be in that caſe which St. Je-'rome confeſſed he was in, when he knew not 'how to be patient, when Falſhood in Religion 'was charged upon him. And yet that was no-'thing ſo high a Charge as this which is laid a-'gainſt me: Which is not only to be baſely falſe 'my ſelf, but withal, to labour to ſpread the 'ſame Falſhood over the whole Kingdom.'

And here I humbly beſought their Lordſhips, that I might a little inlarge my ſelf, and I did ſo. But becauſe I purpoſe here to ſet down the general Articles that were brought up againſt me, and that one of them comes home to this Point of Religion; I ſhall put it off till I come to * that Article, and there ſet it down at large, what I now ſaid. And this I do to avoid an uſeleſs and tedious Repetition. Here then follow the Articles themſelves, as they were that Day charged upon me.

Articles of the Commons aſſembled in Parliament, in Maintenance of their Accuſation againſt William Laud, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, whereby he ſtands charged with High Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanours. †

I. THAT he hath traytorouſly endeavoured to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws and Government of * the Kingdom; and inſtead thereof, to introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government againſt Law: And to that end hath wickedly and traytorouſly adviſed his Majeſty, that he might, at his own Will and Pleaſure, levy and take Money of his Subjects without their Conſent in Parliament. And this he affirmed, was warrantable by the Law of God.

II. He hath, for the better Accompliſhment of that his traytorous Deſign, adviſed and procured divers Sermons, and other Diſcourſes, to be preached, printed and publiſhed, in which the Authority of Parliaments, and the Force of the Laws of this Kingdom are denied; and an abſolute and unlimited Power over the Perſons and Eſtates of his Majeſty's Subjects is maintained and defended, not only in the King, but alſo in himſelf, and other Biſhops, above and againſt the Law. And he hath been a great Protector, Favourer and Promoter of the Publiſhers of ſuch falſe and pernicious Opinions.

III. He hath by Letters, Meſſages, Threats, Promiſes, and divers other ways, to Judges and other Miniſters of Juſtice, interrupted and perverted; and at other times, by the Means aforeſaid, hath endeavoured to interrupt and pervert the Courſe of Juſtice in his Majeſty's Courts at Weſtminſter, and other Courts, to the Subverſion of the Laws of this Kingdom; whereby ſundry of his Majeſty's Subjects have been ſtopped in their juſt Suits, and deprived of their lawful Rights, and ſubjected to his tyrannical Will, to their utter Ruin and Deſtruction.

IV. That the ſaid Archbiſhop hath traytorouſly and corruptly ſold Juſtice to thoſe that have had Cauſes depending before him, by colour of his Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, as Archbiſhop, High-Commiſſioner, Referree, or otherwiſe; and hath taken unlawful Gifts and Bribes of his Majeſty's Subjects: And hath, as much as in him lieth, endeavoured to corrupt other Courts of Juſtice, by adviſing [and procuring] his Majeſty to ſell Places of Judicature, and other Offices, [and procuring the Sale of them] contrary to the Laws and Statutes in that behalf.

V. He hath traytorouſly cauſed a Book of Canons to be compoſed and publiſhed, [and thoſe Canons to be put in execution] without any lawful Warrant and Authority in that behalf. In which pretended Canons many Matters are contained contrary to the King's Prerogative, to the Fundamental Laws and Statutes of this Realm, to the Right of Parliament, to the Propriety and Liberty of the Subjects; and Matters tending to Sedition, and of dangerous Conſequence; and to the Eſtabliſhment of a vaſt, unlawful and preſumptuous Power in himſelf and his Succeſſors: Many of the which Canons, by the Practice of the ſaid Archbiſhop, were ſurreptitiouſly paſſed in the laſt Convocation, without due Conſideration and Debate; others by Fear and Compulſion were ſubſcribed to by the Prelates and Clerks there aſſembled; which had never been voted and paſſed in the Convocation, as they ought to have been. And the ſaid Archbiſhop hath contrived and endeavoured to aſſure and confirm the unlawful and exorbitant Power which he hath uſurped and exerciſed over his Majeſty's Subjects, by a wicked and ungodly Oath, in one of the ſaid pretended Canons, enjoined to be taken by all the Clergy, and many of the Laity of this Kingdom.

VI. He hath traytorouſly aſſumed to himſelf a papal and tyrannical Power, both in Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal Matters, over his Majeſty's Subjects in this Realm of England, and other Places, to the Diſinheriſon of the Crown, Diſhonour of his Majeſty, and Derogation of his ſupreme Authority in Eccleſiaſtical Matters. And the ſaid Archbiſhop claims the King's Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, as incident to his Epiſcopal and Archiepiſcopal Office in this Kingdom; and doth deny the ſame to be derived from the Crown of England: which he hath accordingly exerciſed, to the high Contempt of his Royal Majeſty, and to the Deſtruction of [* divers of] the King's liege People in their Perſons and Eſtates.

VII. That he hath traiterouſly endeavoured to alter and ſubvert God's true Religion by Law eſtabliſhed in this Realm; and inſtead thereof to ſet up Popiſh Superſtition and Idolatry: and to that end hath declared and maintained in Speeches and printed Books divers Popiſh Doctrines and Opinions, contrary to the Articles of Religion eſtabliſhed [† by Law.] He hath urged and enjoined divers popiſh and ſuperſtitious Ceremonies, without any warrant of Law; and hath cruelly perſecuted thoſe who have oppoſed the ſame, by corporal Puniſhment and Impriſonment; and moſt unjuſtly vexed others who refuſed to conform thereto, by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures of Excommunication, Suſpenſion, Deprivation and Degradation, contrary to the Law of the Kingdom.

VIII. That for the better advancing of his Traytorous Purpoſe and Deſigns, he did abuſe the great Power and Truſt his Majeſty repoſed in him; and did intrude upon the Places of divers great Officers, and upon the Right of * divers of his Majeſty's Subjects: whereby he did procure to himſelf the Nomination of ſundry Perſons to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, Promotions and Benefices, belonging to his Majeſty, and divers of the Nobility, Clergy, and others; and hath taken upon him the † Nomination of Chaplains to the King; by which means he hath preferred to his Majeſty's Service, and to other great Promotions in the Church, ſuch as have been popiſhly affected, or otherwiſe unſound and corrupt both in Doctrine and Manners.

IX. He hath for the ſame traytorous and wicked Intent, choſen and employed ſuch Men to be his [* own Domeſtical] Chaplains, whom he knew to be notoriouſly diſaffected to the Reformed Religion, groſly addicted to popiſh Superſtition, and erroneous and unſound both in Judgment and Practice. And to them, or ſome of them, he hath committed Licenſing of Books to be printed; by which means divers falſe and ſuperſtitious Books have been publiſhed, to the great Scandal of Religion, and to the ſeducing of many of his Majeſty's Subjects.

* Pryn & Ruſhworth.

X. He hath traytorouſly and wickedly endeavoured to reconcile the Church of England with the Church of Rome: And for the effecting thereof, hath conſorted and confederated with divers Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits; and hath kept ſecret Intelligence with the Pope of Rome: And by himſelf, his Agents and Inſtruments, treated with ſuch as have from thence received Authority and Inſtruction. He hath permitted and countenanced a Popiſh Hierarchy or Eccleſiaſtical Government to be eſtabliſhed in this Kingdom. By all which traytorous and malicious Practices this Church and Kingdom have been exceedingly indangered, and like to fall under the Tyranny of the Roman See.

XI. He in his own Perſon, and his Suffragans, Viſitors, Commiſſaries, Chancellors, or other Officers, by his Command, have cauſed divers learned, pious, and orthodox Preachers of God's Word to be ſilenced, ſuſpended, deprived, degraded, excommunicated, or otherwiſe grieved and vexed, without any juſt and lawful Cauſe; whereby, and by divers other Means, he hath hindred the preaching of God's Word, cauſed divers of his Majeſty's Loyal Subjects to forſake the Kingdom, and increaſed and cheriſhed Ignorance and Prophaneneſs amongſt the People; that ſo he might the better facilitate the way to the effecting of his own wicked and traytorous † Deſigns of altering and corrupting the true Religion here eſtabliſhed.

XII. He hath traytorouſly endeavoured to cauſe Diviſion and Diſcord between the Church of England and other Reformed Churches; and to that end hath ſuppreſſed and abrogated the Privileges and Immunities, which have been by his Majeſty and his Royal Anceſtors granted to the French and Dutch Churches in this Kingdom: And divers other ways hath expreſſed his Malice and Diſaffection to theſe Churches, that ſo by ſuch * Diſunion the Papiſts might have more Advantage for the Overthrow and Extirpation of both.

* Diſtinction, Ruſhw. Diſunion, Pryn.

XIII. He hath maliciouſly and traytorouſly plotted and endeavoured to ſtir up War and Enmity betwixt his Majeſty's two Kingdoms of England and Scotland; and to that purpoſe hath laboured to introduce into the Kingdom of Scotland divers Innovations both in Religion and Government; all, or the moſt part, tending to Popery and Superſtition; to the great Grievance and Diſcontent of his Majeſty's Subjects of that Nation. And for their refuſing to ſubmit to ſuch Innovations, he did traytorouſly adviſe his Majeſty to ſubdue them by Force of Arms: And by his own Authority and Power, contrary to Law, did procure ſundry of his Majeſty's Subjects, and inforced the Clergy of this Kingdom, to contribute toward the Maintenance of that War. And when his Majeſty, with much Wiſdom and Juſtice, had made a Pacification betwixt the two Kingdoms, the ſaid Archbiſhop did preſumptuouſly cenſure that Pacification, as diſhonourable to his Majeſty; and [by his Counſel and Endeavours] ſo incenſed his Majeſty againſt his ſaid Subjects of Scotland, that he did thereupon, by Advice of the ſaid Archbiſhop, enter into an offenſive War againſt them, to the great Hazard of his Majeſty's Perſon, and his Subjects of both Kingdoms.

he hath laboured to ſubvert the Rights of Parliament, and the antient Courſe of Parliamentary Proceedings; and by falſe and malicious Slanders to incenſe his Majeſty againſt Parliaments. By which Words, Counſels, and Actions, he hath traytorouſly, and contrary to his Allegiance, laboured to alienate the Hearts of the King's liege People from his Majeſty, to ſet a Diviſion between them, and to ruin and deſtroy his Majeſty's Kingdoms. For which they do impeach him of High Treaſon againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

The ſaid Commons do farther aver, that the ſaid William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, during the time in which the * Treaſons and Offences afore-named were committed, hath been a Biſhop or Archbiſhop in this Realm of England, one of the King's Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Matters, and † of his Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council: And that he hath taken an Oath for his faithful Diſcharge of the ſaid Office of Counſellor, and hath likewiſe taken the Oath of Supremacy and Allegiance. And the ſaid Commons, by Proteſtation, ſaving to themſelves the Liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter, any other Accuſation or Impeachment againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop, and alſo of replying to the Anſwers that the ſaid Archbiſhop ſhall make unto the ſaid Articles, or to any of them; and of offering farther Proof alſo of the Premiſes, or any of them, [|| or of any other Impeachment or Accuſation that ſhall be exhibited by them] as the Caſe ſhall, according to the Courſe of Parliaments, require: do pray that the ſaid Archbiſhop may be put to anſwer to all and every the Premiſes; and that ſuch Proceedings, Examinations, Tryal and Judgment, may be upon every of them had and uſed, as is agreeable to Law and Juſtice.

When theſe Articles had been read unto me in the Upper Houſe, and I had ſpoken to the Lords, in a general Anſwer to them, what I thought fit, as is before expreſſed; I humbly deſired of the Lords (this being upon Friday Febr. 26. 1640.) that my going to the Tower might be put off till the Monday after, that ſo I might have time to be the better fitted for my Lodging. This, I humbly thank their Lordſhips, was granted. I returned to Mr. Maxwell's Cuſtody, and that Afternoon ſent my Steward to Sir William Balfore, then Lieutenant, that a Lodging might be had for me with as much Convenience as might be. On Monday, March 1. 1640. Mr. Maxwell carried me in his Coach to the Tower. St. George's Feaſt, having been formerly put off, was to begin that Evening. By this means Mr. Maxwell (whoſe Office tied him to Attendance upon that Solemnity) could not poſſibly go with me to the Tower at Evening, as I deſired. Therefore Noon, when the Citizens were at dinner, was choſen as the next fitteſt time for Privateneſs. All was well till I paſſed through Newgate Shambles, and entred into Cheapſide. There

And ſo they followed me with Clamour and Revilings, even beyond Barbarity itſelf; not giving over, till the Coach was entred in at the Tower-Gate.

On Tueſday, Octob. 24. an Order was brought me from the Lords, dated Octob. 23. with a Copy of ten Additional Articles, brought up by the Commons againſt me. This Order required me to make my Anſwer in writing by the 30th of the ſame Month. Theſe Articles charged me not with Treaſon only, as the former did, but with Treaſon, and other high Crimes and Miſdemeanours. I ſent inſtantly by the ſame Meſſenger a Petition for longer time; for Means out of my Eſtate to fee my Counſel, and bear the neceſſary Charge of my Tryal; for Counſel, and for a Sollicitor and ſome Servants to attend my Buſineſs. The Lords, I humbly thank them, gave me longer time, and aſſigned me (a) Mr. Hearn, Mr. Chute, Mr. Hales; and at my Petition added Mr. Gerrard. For Money, they referred me to the Committee of Sequeſtrations; but delayed their Anſwer concerning my Servants, and the Papers of my Defence, which Mr. Pryn took from me. For though he promiſed me a faithful Reſtitution of them within three or four days, yet to this day (being almoſt five Months after) I had received but three Bundles of the twenty and one which he had from me.

See the Articles and Order of the Lords made thereupon, apud Ruſhworth, par. 3. vol. 2. p. 817, 820. apud Pryn, p. 38—41. The ABp's Petition may be found in Ruſhworth, p. 820. Pryn, p. 41.

Friday, October 27. I petitioned again, that the Papers of my Defence being (as I was informed) in the hands of the Cloſe Committee, might be delivered unto me; and ſent my Petition, with the Order of the Lords annexed, to the Committee for Sequeſtrations. There many were very favourable, till Mr. Glyn was pleaſed to ſay, They were not to allow me Means, and there was a known Courſe in Law, which was, that I might go on in forma Pauperis; and ſo was left without any Allowance out of my Eſtate, to fee my Counſel, or ſupply other Wants. This ſucceeding ſo ill with me, I petitioned the Lords again on Saturday, October 28. 1643. and then Mr. Dell my Secretary was ' aſſigned me for my Sollicitor; and I was allowed two Servants more to go about my Buſineſs: and the Houſe of Commons by their Order agreed to the Lords, that I ſhould have Copies of any of the Papers taken from me, but it ſhould be at my own charge. Wonderful Favour this, and as much Juſtice! My Eſtate all taken from me, and my Goods ſold, before ever I came to Hearing; and then I may take Copies of my Papers at my own charge.

On Tueſday, October 31. I humbly * petitioned the Lords for Direction of my Counſel, how to carry themſelves towards me and my Defence; and that they would honourably be pleaſed, in regard the Articles charged me with Treaſon and Miſdemeanour, and were intermixed one with another, to diſtinguiſh which were for Treaſon, and which for Miſdemeanour; as alſo for longer time to put in my Anſwer. The Lords upon this gave an [1] Order, that I ſhould have time till November 13. but would declare no Opinion touching the Diſtinguiſhment of the Articles, but left me to my Counſel to adviſe as they pleaſed. My Counſel told me plainly, I were as good have no Counſel, if the Articles were not diſtinguiſhed; for they were ſo woven one within another, and ſo knit up together in the Concluſion, that they might refer all to Treaſon, and ſo they be ſuffered to give me no Counſel at all in Matter of Fact. Hereupon they drew me another Petition to the ſame effect, which I cauſed to be delivered Novemb. 6. But it received the ſame Anſwer. Then Novemb. 7. being Wedneſday, I petitioned the Houſe of Commons to the ſame purpoſe: and Novemb. 8. this my Petition was read in the Houſe of Commons; and after a ſhort Debate, the Reſolution was, That they being my Accuſers, would not meddle with any thing, but left all to the Order of the Lords, before whom the Buſineſs was, and my Counſel's own Judgment thereupon. This ſeemed very hard, not only to myſelf and my Counſel, but to all indifferent Men that heard it. In the mean time, I could reſort no whither but to Patience and God's Mercy.

[1] See the Order of the Lords, ibid. p. 822,42.

November 13. I appeared in the Parliament-Houſe according to the [2] Order, and was at the Bar. That which I ſpake to the Lords, was this: 'That I had no Skill to judge of the 'Streights into which I might fall by my Plea 'which I had reſolved on, being left without all 'Aſſiſtance of my Counſel, in regard of the Nature and Form of the Impeachment that was a-'gainſt me. That yet my Innocency prompted me 'to a ready Obedience of their Lordſhips Order, 'caſting myſelf wholly upon God's Mercy, their 'Lordſhips Juſtice, and my own Innocency.' Then I humbly deſired that their Lordſhips Order firſt, and the Impeachment after, might be read. This done, I put in my Anſwer in Writing, as I was ordered to do, and humbly prayed it might be entred. My (a) Anſwer was; All Advantages of Law againſt this Impeachment ſaved and reſerved to this Defendant, he pleads Not Guilty to all and every part of the Impeachment, in manner and form as 'tis charged in the Articles: And to this Anſwer I put my Hand.

[2] See the Order apud Ruſhworth, p. 822.

My Anſwer being thus put in, I humbly beſought their honourable Lordſhips, 'to take into their Con-'ſideration my great Years, being Threeſcore and 'Ten compleat, and my Memory, and other Fa-'culties, by Age and Affliction much decayed: 'my long Impriſonment, wanting very little of 'three whole Years, and this laſt Year little better 'than cloſe Impriſonment: my want of Skill and 'Knowledge in the Laws to defend myſelf: the 'Generality and Incertainty of almoſt all the Ar-'ticles, ſo that I cannot ſee any Particulars againſt 'which I may provide myſelf. In the next place, 'I did thankfully acknowledge their Lordſhips 'honourable Favour, in aſſigning me ſuch Coun-'ſel as I deſired: But I told their Lordſhips 'withal, that as my Counſel were moſt ready to 'obey their Lordſhips in all the Commands laid 'upon them, ſo there were certain Doubts ariſen 'in them, how far they might adviſe me without 'offence; conſidering the Charges againſt me were 'ſo interwoven, and left without all Diſtinguiſh-'ment, what is intended as a Charge of Treaſon, 'and what of Crime and Miſdemeanour: That 'to remove theſe Doubts, I had humbly beſought 'their Lordſhips twice for Diſtinguiſhment, by 'ſeveral Petitions: That their Lordſhips not 'thinking it fit to diſtinguiſh, I have without Ad-'vice of Counſel put in my Plea, as their Lord-'ſhips ſee. But do moſt humbly pray, that their 'Lordſhips will take me ſo far into Conſideration, 'as that I may not loſe the benefit of my Counſel 'for Law in all, or any; and for Law and Fact, 'in whatſoever is not charged as Treaſon, when 'it ſhall be diſtinguiſhed: As ſtill my Prayers 'were, that by their Lordſhips Wiſdom and ho-'nourable Direction, ſome way might be found to 'diſtinguiſh them; and that having (not without 'much difficulty) prevailed with my Counſel to 'attend, their Lordſhips would be pleaſed to hear 'them ſpeak in this perplexed Buſineſs.' While I was ſpeaking this, the Lords were very attentive, and two of them took Pen and Paper at the Table, and took Notes: And it was unanimouſly granted, that my Counſel ſhould be heard; and ſo they were. And the [3] Order then made upon their Hearing was, that they ſhould adviſe me, and be heard themſelves in all things concerning Matter of Law, and in all things, whether of Law or Fact, that [4] was not charged as Treaſon; and that they would think upon the Diſtinguiſhment in time convenient.

Wedneſday at Night, Jan. 3. 1643. I received an [5] Order for my Appearance, and to anſwer to the Impeachment againſt me, on the Monday following, Jan. 8. This Summons ſeemed ſudden, after ſo great an Intermiſſion: yet I could not petition for more Time, till Saturday, Jan. 6. becauſe (as the Meſſenger told me) the Houſe ſat not again till then. Then I [6] petitioned for more Time, in regard my Counſel were not in Town: and I had Time given till Tueſday, Jan. 16. and that Day ſet peremptorily. Notwithſtanding the ſhortneſs of this Time, my Counſel being out of Town, as not expecting it, I was on Sunday, Jan. 7. ordered again to appear in Mr. Smart's Suit the next day. The Warrant bare date a Fortnight before; yet partly to ſanctify the [7] Sabbath, and partly to ſhew his great Civility to me in giving me warning, I was not ſerved with it till Sunday Night at Seven of the clock. The next Morning I went to Weſtminſter, as I was commanded: but I was ſent back, and not ſo much as called upon. So, beſide the Charge I was at, that Day was loſt and taken from me and my Buſineſs, as ſhort time as I had given me.

Then

Then Tueſday came on, Jan. 16. And whereas I was ordered to appear at the Lords Houſe at Nine in the Morning, I was by another [1] Order put off to One of the Clock in the Afternoon. Then I appeared. The [2] Committee, that were to preſs the Evidence againſt me, began to proceed upon the former general Articles, as well as upon the latter. But to the firſt Articles I had never been called to anſwer, nor ever joined Iſſue. Upon this, there was much looking one upon another, as if they meant to ask where the Failure was. But by this means there could not then be any Proceeding. So I was there [3] peremptorily ordered to put in my Anſwer on Monday, Jan. 22. both to the original and to the additional Articles, and in Writing.

At this Day and Time I appeared, as I was ordered to do; but [4] could not obtain of the Lords either to take my former Anſwer off from the File, if I muſt put in another; nor to diſtinguiſh the Articles, which were Treaſon, and which Miſdemeanor; nor leave for my Counſel to ſpeak to the Generality and Uncertainty of the original Articles; which they profeſſed were ſuch, as no Man living could prepare Anſwer for. But I muſt put in my (a) Anſwer preſently, or be taken pro Confeſſo. So in theſe Streights I put in my Anſwer to both Articles; which follows in hæc verba.

[4] See the Archbiſhop's Petition made herein, Jan. 19. apud Ruſhw. p. 825. Pryn, p. 46.

The Humble Anſwer of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to the firſt and farther Articles of Impeachment brought up by the Honourable Houſe of Commons againſt him, and by Order of the Right Honourable the Lords in Parliament of the 16*th of this Inſtant directed to be put in.*

AS to the 13th Article of the ſaid firſt Articles, and the Matters therein charged, and all Matters or Things in the ſame, or any of the reſt of the ſaid Articles contained, which concern any Act of Hoſtility, whether between the King and his Subjects, or between Subject and Subject, or which may be conceived to ariſe upon the coming of any Engliſh Army againſt Scotland, or the coming of the Scotiſh Army into England; or upon any Action, Attempt, Aſſiſtance, Counſel, or Device, having relation thereunto, and falling out by the occaſion of the late Troubles, preceding the late Concluſion of the Treaty, and Return of the Scotiſh Army into Scotland: This Defendant ſaith, That it is enacted by an Act, made during the Sitting of this preſent Parliament, that the ſame, and whatſoever hath enſued thereupon, whether trenching upon the Laws and Liberties of the Church and Kingdom, or upon his Majeſty's Honour and Authority, in no time hereafter may be called in queſtion, or reſented as a Wrong, national or perſonal; and that no mention be made thereof in time coming, neither in Judgment, nor out of Judgment; but that it be held and reputed as tho never ſuch Things had been thought or wrought; as by the ſaid Act may more at large appear: With this, That this Defendant doth aver that he is none of the Perſons excepted by the ſaid Act, or the ſaid Offences charged upon this Defendant any of the Offences excepted by the ſaid Act.

And as to all the reſt of the ſaid firſt and farther Articles, this Defendant, ſaving to himſelf all Advantages of Exception to the ſaid Articles, humbly ſaith, He is not guilty of all, or any the Matters by the ſaid Articles charged, in ſuch Manner and Form as the ſame are by the ſaid Articles charged againſt him.

All February paſſed over, and Mr. Pryn not yet ready; he had not yet ſufficiently prepared his Witneſſes. But on Monday, March 4. an [5] Order paſſed to call me to the Houſe, to anſwer my Charge of High Treaſon on Tueſday March 12. following. And on Saturday, March 9. I received a Note from the Committee which were to preſs the Evidence againſt me, what Articles they meant to begin with; which had a Shew of ſome fair Reſpect. But the Generality and Uncertainty of the Articles was ſuch, as render'd it a bare Shew only; no Particular being charged, concerning which I might provide for any Witneſſes or Counter-proof.

And now being ready to enter upon the Hearing and the Tryal it ſelf, I hold it neceſſary for me to acquaint the Reader with ſome general Things before that begin: partly to the end he may ſee the Courſe of this Tryal, and the Carriage which hath been in it; and partly to avoid the often and tedious Repetition, which elſe muſt neceſſarily be of ſome of them; and eſpecially, that they may not be mingled either with the Evidence, or my Anſwers to it, to interrupt the Current, or make any thing more obſcure.

1. The Committee appointed by the Houſe of Commons, to manage and preſs the Evidence againſt me, were Serjeant Wilde, Mr. Browne, Mr. Maynard, Mr. Nichols, Mr. Hill. But none ſpake at the Bar but the firſt four. Mr. Hill was Conſul Bibulus: Mr. Pryn was truſted with the providing of all the Evidence.

2. Mr. Pryn took to him two young Men to help to turn his Papers, and aſſiſt him; Mr. Grice and Mr. Beck. Mr. Grice was Son to Mr. Tho. Grice, Fellow of St. John Bapt. College in my Time, and after beneficed near Stanes.

3. And though my Hopes, under God, were upon the Lords; yet when my Tryal did come on, it did ſomewhat trouble me to ſee ſo few Lords in that great Houſe: For at the greateſt Preſence that was any Day of my Hearing, there were not above fourteen, and uſually not above eleven or twelve. Of theſe one third part, at leaſt, each Day took or had occaſion to be gone before the Charge of the Day was half given. I never had any one Day the ſame Lords all preſent at my Defence in the Afternoon, that were at my Charge in the Morning; ſome leading Lords ſcarce preſent at my Charge four Days of all my long Tryal, nor three at my Defence; and which is moſt, no one Lord preſent at my whole Tryal but the Right Honourable the Lord Gray of Wark, the Speaker, without whoſe Preſence it could not be a Houſe. In this caſe I ſtood in regard of my Honourable Judges.

(a) This Anſwer was put in Jan. 22. being ſhort, and in general pleading Not guilty, and making only a ſhort particular Plea to the 13*th Article. The ſaid Anſwer may be found in* Ruſhw. p. 826. & Pryn, p. 47. I have tranſcribed it from Pryn, and cauſed it to be here inſerted. H. W.

4. When my Hearing came on, uſually my Charge was in giving till almoſt Two of the clock. Then I was commanded to withdraw: And upon my humble Petition for Time to anſwer, I had no more given me than till Four the ſame Afternoon; ſcarce Time enough adviſedly to peruſe the Evidence: My Counſel not ſuffer'd to come to me till I had made my Anſwer, nor any Friend elſe, but my Sollicitor Mr. Dell, to help to turn my Papers; and my Warder of the Tower to ſit by to look to this. And this was not the leaſt Cauſe why I was at firſt accuſed of no leſs than Treaſon, 'Ne quis neceſſariorum juvaret periclitantem Majeſtatis Crimina ſubdebantur; as it fell out in Silanus his Caſe, who had more Guilt about him (yet not of Treaſon) than (God be thanked) I have, but was proſecuted with like Malice, as appears in that Story. At Four a clock, or after, the Houſe ſat again, and I made my Anſwer: And if I produced any Witneſs, he was not ſuffered to be ſworn; ſo it was but like a Teſtimony at large, which the Lords might the more freely believe, or not believe, as they pleaſed. After my Anſwer, one or more of the Committee replyed upon me. By that time all was done, it was uſually half an hour paſt Seven. Then, in the Heat of the Year (when it overtook me) I was preſently to go by Water to the Tower, full of Wearineſs, and with a Shirt as wet to my Back with Sweat, as the Water could have made it, had I fallen in. Yet I humbly thank God for it, he ſo preſerved my Health, as that though I were weary and faint the Day after, yet I never had ſo much as half an hour's Head-ach, or other Infirmity, all the time of this comfortleſs and tedious Tryal.

' Tacit. L. 3. Annal.

5. Now for the Method, which I ſhall hold in this Hiſtory of my Tryal, it ſhall be this: I will ſet down the Evidence given on each Day by it ſelf, and my Anſwer to it. But whereas all the Evidence was given together, and ſo my whole Anſwer after, to avoid all looking back, and trouble of turning Leaves to compare the Anſwer with the Evidence, I will ſet down each particular Evidence and my Anſwer to it, and ſo all along, that the indifferent Reader may, without farther Trouble, ſee the Force of the one, and the Satisfaction given in the other, and how far every Particular is from Treaſon. And if I add any thing to my Anſwers in any place, either it is becauſe in the Shortneſs of Time then given me to make my Anſwer, it came not to my preſent Thoughts; or if it did, yet I forbare to ſpeak it with that Sharpneſs, holding it neither fit nor ſafe, in my Condition, to provoke either my Accuſers, or my Judges. And whatſoever is ſo added by me in either of theſe reſpects, the Reader ſhall find it thus ' marked in the Margent, as here it ſtands in this. (a)

6. Nor did I wrong Mr. Pryn, where I ſay, That for all the haſte to put in my Anſwer Jan. 22. he could not make this broken Buſineſs ſo ſoon ready againſt me: For 'tis well known he kept a kind of School of Inſtruction for ſuch of the Witneſſes as he durſt truſt, that they might be ſure to ſpeak home to the purpoſe he would have them. And this an Utter Barriſter, a Man of good Credit, knows; who, in the hearing of Men beyond Exception, ſaid, The Archbiſhop is a Stranger to me; but Mr. Pryn's tampering about the Witneſſes is ſo palpable and foul, that I cannot but pity him, and cry ſhame of it. When I heard this, I ſent to this Gentleman, to know if he tendered my Caſe ſo far as to witneſs it before the Lords. The Anſwer I received was, That the Thing was true, and that very Indignation of it made him ſpeak; but heartily prayed me I would not produce him as a Witneſs; for if I did, the Times were ſuch, he ſhould be utterly undone: And 'tis not hard to gueſs by whom. Upon this I conſulted ſome Friends; and upon regard of his Safety on the one ſide, and my own Doubt, leſt if forced to his undoing, he might through Fear blanch and mince the Truth to my own prejudice who produced him, I forbare the Buſineſs, and left Mr. Pryn to the Bar of Chriſt, whoſe Mercy give him Repentance, and amend him. But upon my Chriſtianity this Story is Truth.

The Firſt Day of my Hearing.

AND now I come to Tueſday, March 12. 1643. the Day appointed for my Tryal to begin: And begin it did. When I was come, and ſettled at the Bar, Serjeant Wilde made a ſolemn Speech for Introduction. I had a Character given me before of this Gentleman, which I will forbear to expreſs; but in this Speech of his, and his future Proceedings with me, I found it exactly true. His Speech my decayed Memory cannot give you at large; but a Skeleton of it I here preſent, according to ſuch Limbs as my brief Notes then taken, can now call to my Memory.

' See a Relation of what then paſſed before Wilde began his Speech, apud Ruſhw. p. 827. and Wilde's Speech entire, Ibid. p. 828, &c. and in Pryn's Compl. Hiſt. p. 51, &c.

' He began, and told the Lords, That the Children which I had travailed with, were now come to the Birth; and that my Actions were ſo foul, and my Treaſon ſo great, as that the like could not be read in any Hiſtory; nay, ſo great, as that, nullus Poeta fingere, no Poet could ever feign the like. And that if all Treaſon were loſt, and not to be found in any Author what it is, it might be recovered and found out in me and my Actions: with divers Pieces of Latin Sentences to this effect. [And though theſe high and loud Expreſſions troubled me much at the preſent, yet I could not but think, that in this Canto of his he was much like one of them which cry up and down the City, Have you any old Ends of Gold and Silver?]

After this, he proceeded to give Reaſons why I was not ſooner proceeded againſt, having now lain by it above three Years. The firſt Reaſon he gave was the Diſtractions of the Time. [And they indeed were now grown great; but the Diſtractions which were now, can be no Argument why I was not proceeded againſt at the Beginning of the Parliament, when Things were in ſome better

(a) Note, That where entire ſet Speeches were made by the Archbiſhop, although ſpoken by him at the Bar, the ſame Marks are put to them. But whereſoever thoſe Marks are found in the Hiſtory, from the ſecond to the laſt Day of the Tryal incluſive, the Words to which they are affixed were not ſpoken at the Bar at that time, but either added afterwards by the Archbiſhop at the Recapitulation of his Anſwer, or inſerted in writing the Hiſtory. H. W.

Quiet.] His ſecond Reaſon was the [1] Death of ſome Perſons. [But this could be no Reaſon at all: For if the Perſons he ſpeaks of were Witneſſes againſt me, more might die, but the Dead could not be made alive again by this Delay; unleſs Mr. Serjeant had ſome hope the Reſurrection might have been by this time, that ſo he might have produced them. And if the Perſons were Members of the Houſe of Commons, as all Men know Mr. Pym was in the Chair for Preparation of my Tryal; then this is known too, That Mr. Pym came up to the Committee of Lords full of great hopes to prove God knows what againſt me. The Perſons to be examined were William Lord Biſhop of London, and Matthew Lord Biſhop of Ely, my very worthy Friends, and Men like to know as much of me as any Men. A Lord then preſent told me, there were ſome eighteen or nineteen Interrogatories, upon which theſe Biſhops were to be examined againſt me, concerning my Intercourſe with Rome; but all were built upon the firſt, which was their Knowledge of the Man, who (it ſeems) was thought to be my chief Agent in that Secret. But both the Biſhops denying upon their Oaths that they, or either of them, ever knew any ſuch Man, all the reſt of the Interrogatories, what relations he had to me, and the like, muſt needs fall to nothing, as they did. And the Lord told me farther, he never ſaw Mr. Pym, and the reſt, ſo abaſhed at any thing in his Life. After this Mr. Pym (as 'tis well known) gave over that Chair, deſpairing to do that againſt me which was deſired.]

[1] The Death and Diſperſion of our Witneſſes, the Loſs of ſome of our Members, who have been employed and taken pains in this Buſineſs. So Wilde's Speech apud Pryn, p. 51.

His third Reaſon was a good large one, and that was [2] other Impediments. [And that's true, ſome Impediments there were, no doubt, or elſe I had come ſooner to hearing. And, as I conceive, a chief Impediment was, that there was not a Man whoſe Malice would make him diligent enough to ſearch into ſuch a forſaken Buſineſs, till Mr. Pryn offered himſelf to that Service. For I think I may be confident, that that honourable and great Houſe would not ſeek any Man out of their own Body for any ſuch Imployment, had not Suit, ſome way or other, been made for it.]

[2] The Multitude of Diverſions which we have had, and have daily. So Wilde's Speech, Ibid.

After theſe Reaſons given for the Delay of my Tryal, he fell upon me again as foul as at firſt; as that I was the Author of all the Extravagancies in the Government, and of all the Concuſſions in the State; That the Quality of my Perſon aggravated my Crime; That my Abilities and Gifts were great, but that I perverted them all; and that I was guilty of [3] Treaſon in the higheſt Altitude. [Theſe were the Liveries which he liberally gave me; but I had no mind to wear them: And yet I might not deſire him to wear this Cloth himſelf, conſidering where I then ſtood, and in what Condition.]

[3] Treaſon in the higheſt Pitch and Altitude. So Wilde's Speech, p. 52.

This Treaſon in the Altitude, he ſaid, was in my Endeavour to alter the Religion eſtabliſhed by Law, and to ſubvert the Laws themſelves: And that to effect theſe, I left no way unattempted. For Religion, he told the Lords, That I laboured a Reconciliation with Rome; That I maintained Popiſh and Arminian Opinions; That I ſuffered [1] Tranſubſtantiation, Juſtification by Merits, Purgatory, and what not, to be openly preached all over the Kingdom; That I induced ſuperſtitious Ceremonies, as [2] Conſecrations of Churches, and Chalices, and Pictures of Chriſt in Glaſs-Windows; That I gave liberty to the Prophanation of the Lord's-Day; That I held Intelligence with Cardinals and Prieſts, and endeavoured to aſcend to Papal Dignity; Offers being made me to be a Cardinal. [And for the Laws, he was altogether as wild in his Aſſertions, as he was before for Religion: And if he have no more true Senſe of Religion, than he hath Knowledge in the Law, (though it be his Profeſſion) I think he may offer both long enough to Sale, before he find a Chapman for either.] And here he told the Lords, That I held the ſame Method for this, which I did for Religion. [And ſurely that was to uphold both, had the Kingdom been ſo happy as to believe me.] But he affirmed (with great Confidence) [3] That I cauſed Sermons to be preached in Court to ſet the King's Prerogative above the Law, and Books to be printed to the ſame effect; That my Actions were according to theſe. Then he fell upon the Canons, and diſcharged them upon me. Then, that I might be guilty enough, [if his bare Word could make me ſo] he charged upon me the Benevolence, the Loan, the Ship-Money, the illegal pulling down of Buildings, Incloſures; ſaying, That as Antichriſt ſets himſelf above all that is called God; ſo I laboured to ſet the King above all that is called Law. And after a tedious Stir, he concluded his Speech with this, That I was like Naaman the Syrian, a great Perſon (he confeſſed) but a Leper. [So ended this Noble Celeuſtes.]

[1] Tranſubſtantiation is not mentioned in Wilde's Speech apud Pryn. p. 52.

[2] The particular Ceremonies, charged with Popery and Superſtition, are not named in Wilde's Speech. Ibid.

[3] None of the Particulars, which follow to the end (ſave the concluſive Sentence) are to be found in Wilde's Speech apud Pryn; but only ſome general Invectives and Accuſations to this purpoſe. H. W.

I was much troubled to ſee my ſelf, in ſuch an Honourable Aſſembly, made ſo vile: Yet ſeeing all Mens Eyes upon me, I recollected my ſelf, and humbly deſired of the Lords two Things: 'One, 'That they would expect Proof, before they give 'up their Belief to theſe loud, but looſe Aſſerti-'ons: Eſpecially ſince it is an eaſy thing for Men 'ſo reſolved, to conviciate, inſtead of accuſing; 'whenas the Rule given by Optatus, 'holds firm, Quum intenditur Crimen, 'when a Crime is objected, (eſpe-'cially ſo high a Crime, as this charg-'ed on me) 'tis neceſſary that the Proof be manifeſt, 'which yet againſt me is none at all. The other, 'That their Lordſhips would give me leave, not to 'anſwer this Gentleman's Particulars, (for that I 'ſhall defer till I hear his Proofs) but to ſpeak ſome 'few things concerning my ſelf, and this grievous 'Impeachment brought up againſt me.'

Which being yielded unto me, I then ſpake as follows.

'My Lords, my being in this Place, 'and in this Condition, recalls to 'my Memory that which I long 'ſince read in [4] Seneca; Tormentum eſt, etiamſi abſolutus quis fuerit, Cauſam dixiſſe: 'Tis not a Grief only, no, 'tis no leſs than a Torment, for an

'ingenuous Man to plead [a] Criminally, much more Capitally, at such 'a Bar as this; yea, though it should 'so fall out, that he be absolved. 'The great Truth of this, I find at 'present in my self: And so much the more, be'cause I am a Christian; and not that only, 'but in Holy Orders; and not so only, but by 'God's Grace and Goodness preferred to the 'greatest Place this Church affords: and yet now 'brought, Causam dicere, to plead, and for no less 'than Life, at this great Bar. And whatsoever 'the World thinks of me, (and they 'have been taught to think [b] more 'ill, than, I humbly thank Christ 'for it, I was ever acquainted 'with;) yet, my Lords, this I find Tormentum 'est; 'tis no less than Torment to me to appear 'in this Place to such an Accusation. Nay, my 'Lords, give me leave, I beseech you, to speak 'plain Truth: No Sentence that can justly pass 'upon me, (and other I will never fear from your 'Lordships) can go so near me as Causam dixisse, 'to have pleaded for my self, upon this Occasion, 'and in this Place. For, as for the Sentence (I 'thank God for it) I am at St. Paul's Ward; 'If I have committed any thing worthy of death, I 'refuse not to die, Acts 25. 11. For, I bless God, 'I have so spent my time, as that I am neither a'shamed to live, nor afraid to die. Nor can the 'World be more weary of me, than I of it: For 'seeing the Malignity which hath been raised a'gainst me by some Men, I have carried my Life 'in my hands these divers Years past. But yet, 'my Lords, if none of these Things, whereof 'these Men accuse me, merit Death by Law; tho 'I may not in this Case, and from this Bar ap'peal unto Cæsar, yet to your Lordships Justice 'and Integrity I both may and do appeal; not 'doubting but that God of his Goodness will 'preserve my Innocency. And as Job, in the 'midst of his Affliction, said to his mistaken 'Friends, so shall I to my Accusers; God for'bid I should justify you; till I die I will not remove 'my Integrity from me; I will hold it fast, and not 'let it go: my Heart shall not reproach me, as long as 'I live. Job 27. 5.

[a] Capitally or Criminally, Rushworth & Pryn.

[b] Much more, Rushw. & Pryn.

'My Lords, I see by the Articles, and have 'now heard from this Gentleman, that the Charge 'against me is divided into two 'main Heads; [c] the Laws of the 'Land, and the Religion by those 'Laws established.

[c] An Endeavour to subvert, Rush. & Pryn.

'For the Laws first; I think I may safely say, 'I have been, to my Understanding, as strict an 'Observer of them all the Days of my Life, so 'far as they concern me, as any Man hath; and 'since I came into Place, I have followed them, 'and been as much guided by them, as any Man 'that sat where I had the Honour to sit. And 'for this I am sorry I have lost the [d] Witness of the Lord Keeper Co'ventry, and of some other Persons 'of Honour, since dead. And the 'Learned Counsel at Law, which attended frequently at the Council-Table, can 'witness (some of them [e]) that in 'References to that Board, and in 'Debates arising at the Board, I 'was usually for that part of the Cause where 'I found Law to be: And if the Counsel de'sired to have their Clients Cause referred to 'the Law, (well I might move in some Cases for 'Charity or Conscience, to have admittance, but) 'to the Law I left them, if thither they would 'go. And how such a Carriage as this through 'the whole Course of my Life, in private and 'publick, can stand with an Intention; nay, a 'Practice to overthrow the Law, and to introduce an Arbitrary Government, which my Soul 'hath always hated, I cannot yet see. And 'tis 'now many Years since I learned of 'my great Master (in humanis) Aris'tole, Periculosum esse; that it is a ve'ry dangerous thing to trust to the Will 'of the Judge, rather than the written Law. And all 'Kingdoms and Commonwealths have followed 'his Judgment ever since; and the 'School-Disputes have not dissented 'from it. Nay more, I have ever 'been of Opinion, that human Laws 'bind the Conscience; and have accordingly made 'conscience of observing them. And this Doctrine 'I have constantly preached, as Occasion hath 'been offered me. And how is it possible I should 'seek to overthrow those Laws, which I held 'my self bound in Conscience to keep and ob'serve? Especially, since an Endeavour to over'throw Law, is a far greater Crime than to break 'or disobey any particular Law whatsoever; all 'Particulars being swept away in that General. 'And, my Lords, that this is my Judgment, both 'of Parliaments and Laws; I beseech your Lord'ships that I may read a short Passage in my 'Book against Fisher the Jesuit, which was printed 'and published to the World, before these Troubles 'fell on me, and before I could so much as suspect 'this Charge could come against me; and there'fore could not be purposely writ'ten to serve any Turn. [I had leave, and did read it; but, for Brevity-sake, refer the Reader to the Book it self.]

'As for Religion, I was born and 'bred up in and under the Church of England, 'as it yet stands established by Law. I have, 'by God's Blessing, and the Favour of my Prince, 'grown up in it to the Years which are now 'upon me, and to the Place of Pre'ferment which I [f] yet bear: And 'in this Church, by the Grace and 'Goodness of God, I resolve to die.

'I have ever since I understood ought in Divinity, 'kept one constant Tenor in this my Profession, 'without variation or shifting from one Opinion 'to another, for any worldly Ends: And if my 'Conscience would have suffered me to shift 'Tenets in Religion with Time and Occasion, 'I could easily have slid through all the Difficul'ties which have pressed upon me in this kind. 'But, of all Diseases, I have ever 'hated a Palsy in Religion; well 'knowing, that too often a Dead-Palsy ends that Disease in the fearful 'Forgetfulness of God and his Judg'ments. Ever since I came in place, I laboured no'thing more, than that the external 'publick Worship of God ([g] too 'much slighted in most Parts of this 'Kingdom) might be preserved, and 'that with as much Decency and Uniformity as 'might be; being still of opinion, that Unity 'cannot long continue in the Church, where Uni'formity is shut out at the Church-Door. And I 'evidently saw, that the publick Neglect of God's 'Service in the outward Face of it, and the nasty 'lying of many Places dedicated to that Service, [g] held a Palsy, &c. most dangerous, Rushw.

'had

'had almoſt caſt a damp upon the true and inward 'Worſhip of God; which while we live in the 'Body needs external Helps, and all little enough 'to keep it in any Vigour. And this I did to the 'uttermoſt of my Knowledge, according both to 'Law and Canon, and with the Conſent and 'Liking of the People: Nor did any Command 'iſſue out from me againſt the one, or without 'the other, that I know of.

'Farther, my Lords, give me 'leave, I beſeech you, to tell [1] you 'this alſo; That I have as little Ac- 'quaintance with Recuſants of any 'ſort, as I believe any Man of [2] Place 'in England hath: And for my Kin- 'dred, no one of them was ever a 'Recuſant, but Sir William Webb, 'Grandchild to my Uncle Sir Wil- 'liam Webb, ſometime Lord Mayor 'of London; and [3] him, with ſome 'of his Children, I reduced back a- 'gain to the Church of England, as is well known, 'and I as able to prove.

[1] acquaint you with, Ruſh. & Pryn.

[2] my Place hath or ever had ſince the Reformation, Ruſh. & Pryn.

[3] ſince which, Ruſh. & Pryn.

'One thing more I humbly deſire may be 'thought on; 'tis this: I am fallen into a great 'deal of Obloquy in Matter of Religion, and 'that ſo far, as that 'tis charged in the Articles, 'That I have endeavoured to advance and bring 'in Popery. Perhaps, my Lords, I am not igno- 'rant what Party of Men have raiſed this Scandal 'upon me, nor for what end, nor perhaps by 'whom ſet on: But howſoever, I would fain have 'a good Reaſon given me (if my 'Conſcience [4] led me that way, 'and that with my Conſcience I 'could ſubſcribe to the Church of 'Rome) what ſhould have kept me here (before 'my Impriſonment) to endure the '[5] Libels, and the Slanders, and the 'baſe Uſage in all kinds, which 'have been put upon me, and theſe 'to end in this Queſtion for my Life: I ſay, I 'would fain know a good Reaſon of this.

[4] ſtood, Ruſh. & Pryn.

[5] Libelling, Ruſh. & Pryn.

'For, Firſt, my Lords, Is it becauſe of any 'Pledges I have in the World to ſway me againſt 'my Conſcience? No ſure. For I have nor Wife 'nor Children, to cry out upon me to ſtay with 'them; and if I had, I hope the Call of my 'Conſcience ſhould be heard above them.

'Or Secondly, Is it becauſe I was loth to leave 'the Honour and the Profit of the Place I was 'riſen unto? Surely no: for I deſire your Lord- 'ſhips, and all the World elſe ſhould know, I do 'much ſcorn Honour and Profit, both the one and 'the other, in compariſon of my Conſcience. 'Beſides, it cannot be imagined by any reaſonable 'Man, but that if I could have complied with 'Rome, I ſhould not have wanted either Honour 'or Profit. And ſuppoſe I could not have ſo much 'of either, as here I had; yet ſure, would my 'Conſcience have ſerved me that way, leſs of either 'with my Conſcience would have prevailed with 'me, more than greater againſt my Conſcience.

'Or Thirdly, Is it becauſe I lived here at eaſe, 'and was loth to venture the Loſs of that? Not 'ſo neither: for whatſoever the World may be 'pleaſed to think of me, I have led a very painful 'Life, and ſuch as I could have been very well 'content to change, had I well 'known how. And had my Con- 'ſcience [1] led me that way, I am 'ſure I might have lived at far more 'eaſe; and either have avoided the barbarous Li- 'bellings, and other bitter and grievous Scorns, 'which I have here endured, or at the leaſt been 'out of the hearing of them. Nay, my Lords, 'I am as innocent in this Buſineſs of Religion, as 'free from all Practice, or ſo much as Thought of 'Practice for any Alteration to Popery, or any 'way blemiſhing the true Proteſtant Religion 'eſtabliſhed in the Church of England, as I was 'when my Mother firſt bare me into the World. 'And let nothing be ſpoken againſt me but Truth, 'and I do here challenge whatſoever is between 'Heaven and Hell, to ſay their worſt againſt me 'in point of my Religion: in which by God's 'Grace I have ever hated Diſſimulation; and had 'I not hated it, perhaps it might have been better 'with me for worldly Safety, than now it is. But 'it can no way become a Chriſtian Biſhop to halt 'with God.

'Laſtly, If I had any purpoſe to blaſt the true 'Religion eſtabliſhed in the Church of England, 'and to introduce Popery, ſure I took a very wrong 'way to it. For, my Lords, I have 'ſtaid [2] as many that were going to 'Rome, and reduced [3] as many that 'were already gone, as (I believe) 'any Biſhop or other Miniſter in this 'Kingdom hath done; and ſome of them Men 'of great Abilities, and ſome of 'them [4] Perſons of great Place. 'And is this the way, my Lords, to 'introduce Popery? I beſeech your 'Lordſhips conſider it well. For 'ſurely, if I had blemiſhed the true 'Proteſtant Religion, I could not 'have ſettled ſuch Men in it; and if 'I had [5] purpoſed to introduce Po- 'pery, I would never have reduced 'ſuch Men from it. And though it 'pleaſe the Author of the Popiſh Royal 'Favourite to ſay, That ſcarce one of 'the ſwaying Lord Prelates is able to ſay, 'that ever he converted one Papiſt to our 'Religion; yet how void of Charity 'this Speech of his is, and how full of Falſhood, 'ſhall appear by the number of thoſe Perſons, 'whom by God's Bleſſing upon my Labours I 'have ſettled in the true Proteſtant Religion eſta- 'bliſhed in England: And with your Lordſhips 'leave, I ſhall name them, that you may ſee both 'their Number and their Condition; though I 'cannot ſet them down in that Order of Time, 'in which I either converted or ſettled them.

And 'this I did, and God be thanked ſhe died very 'quietly and very religiouſly, and a good Pro-'teſtant: And my Lord Marquiſs told me, he 'had acknowledged this Service of mine to an 'Honourable Lord, whom I now ſee preſent.

'15. Mr. Chillingworth's (a) Learning and Abi-'lities are ſufficiently known to all your Lord-'ſhips. He was gone, and ſettled at Doway. 'My Letters brought him back; and he lived and 'died a Defender of the Church of England. 'And that this is ſo, your Lordſhips cannot but 'know: For Mr. Pryn took away my Letters, and 'all the Papers which concerned him, and they 'were examined at the Committee.

'16, 17. Mr. Digby was a Prieſt; 'and Mr. James[1] Gentleman, a School-'maſter in a Recuſant's Houſe. This 'latter was brought to me by a Mi-'niſter (as far as I remember) in Buckinghamſhire. 'I converted both of them, and they remain ſettled.

I got ſight of 'them, ſhew'd him wherein he was deceived, 'had God's Bleſſing to ſettle his Conſcience, and 'then cauſed an able Divine to anſwer his Mo-'tives, and give him the Copy.

'19. There were, beſide theſe, Mr. Chriſtopher 'Seburne, a Gentleman of an antient Family in 'Herefordſhire; and, 20. Sir William Spencer of 'Yarnton in Oxfordſhire. 21. The Sons 'and Heirs of[3] Mr. Wintchome and '[4] Mr. Williſcot, whom I ſent with 'their Friends good-liking to Wad-'ham-College in Oxford; and I re-'ceived a Certificate, Anno 1638, of their conti-'nuing in conformity to the Church of England: 'nor did ever any of theſe relapſe again to Rome, 'but only the old Counteſs of Buckingham, and 'Sir William Spencer, that ever I 'heard of'. And if any of your 'Lordſhips doubt of the Truth of 'any of theſe Particulars, I am able 'and ready to bring full proof of 'them all. And by this time I hope 'it appears, that one of the ſwaying 'Prelates of the time is able to ſay, he 'hath converted one Papiſt to the Pro-'teſtant Religion. And let any Cler-'gyman of England come forth, and 'give a better Account of his Zeal 'to this preſent Church.

Note, That the vulgar Copies of this Speech, printed in Ruſh. &c. are very different from this, being taken from the Archbiſhop's Mouth as he ſpoke; this from the Original, as he wrote it. H. W.

'And now, my Lords, with my 'moſt humble Thanks for your Lord-'ſhips Favour and Patience in hear-'ing me, I ſhall ceaſe to be farther 'troubleſom for the preſent; not 'doubting but I ſhall be able to an-'ſwer whatever ſhall be particularly objected a-'gainſt me.'

After I had ended this Speech, I was commanded to withdraw. As I went from the Bar, there was Alderman Hoyle of York, and ſome other which I knew not, very angry, and ſaying, it was a very ſtrange Converſion that I was like to make of them; with other Terms of Scorn. I went patiently into the little Committee-Chamber, at the entring into the Houſe. Thither Mr. Peters followed me in great haſte, and began to give me ill Language, and told me that he and other Miniſters were able to name Thouſands[6] that they had converted. I knew him not, as having never ſeen him (to my remembrance) in my Life, though I had heard enough of him. And as I was going to anſwer him, one of my Counſel, Mr. Hearn, ſeeing how violently he began, ſtept between us, and told him of his uncivil Carriage towards me in my Affliction: and indeed he came as if he would have ſtruck me. By this time, ſome Occaſion brought the Earl of Eſſex into that Room, and Mr. Hearn complained to him of Mr. Peters's Uſage of me; who very honourably checked him for it, and ſent him forth. Not long after, Mr. Hearn was ſet upon by Alderman Hoyle, and uſed as coarſly as Peters had uſed me, and (as far as I remember) only for being of Counſel with ſuch a one as I; though he was aſſigned to that Office by the Lords.

What put them into this Choler, I know not; unleſs they were angry to hear me ſay ſo much in my own defence: eſpecially for the Converſion of ſo many, which I think they little expected. For the next day a great Lord met a Friend of mine, and grew very angry with him about me; not forbearing to ask what I meant, to name the Particulars which I had mentioned in the end of my Speech, ſaying many Godly Miniſters had done more. And not long after this (the day I now remember not) Mr. Peters came and preached at Lambeth, and there told them in the Pulpit, that a great Prelate, their Neighbour, (or in words to that effect) had bragged in the Parliament-Houſe, that he had converted Two and Twenty; but that he had Wiſdom enough, not to tell how many Thouſands he had perverted: with much more Abuſe. God of his Mercy relieve me from theſe Reproaches, and lay not theſe Mens cauſeleſs Malice to their charge.

After a little ſtay, I received my Diſmiſſion for that time, and a Command to appear again the next day at Nine in the Morning: which was my uſual Hour to attend, though I was ſeldom called into the Houſe in two hours after.

The Second Day of my Hearing.

I Came as commanded, March 13. 1643. But here before the Charge begins, I ſhall ſet down the Articles, upon which, according to the Order of March 9. they which were intruſted with the Evidence meant this day to proceed. They were the Firſt and Second Original Articles, and the Second Additional Article: which follow in theſe words.

I. That he hath traytorouſly endeavoured to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws and Government of the Kingdom; and inſtead thereof, to introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government againſt Law: And to that end hath wickedly and traytorouſly adviſed his Majeſty, that he might, at his own Will and Pleaſure, levy and take Money of his Subjects without their Conſent in Parliament. And this he affirmed, was warrantable by the Law of God.

II. He hath, for the better Accompliſhment of that his traytorous Deſign, adviſed and procured divers Sermons, and other Diſcourſes, to be preached, printed and publiſhed, in which the Authority of Parliaments, and the Force of the Laws of the Kingdom are denied; and an abſolute and unlimited Power over the Perſons and Eſtates of his Majeſty's Subjects is maintained and defended, not only in the King, but alſo in himſelf, and other Biſhops, above and againſt the Law. And he hath been a great Protector, Favourer and Promoter of the Publiſhers of ſuch falſe and pernicious Opinions.

Second Additional Article.

II. That within the ſpace of ten Years laſt paſt, the ſaid Archbiſhop hath treacherouſly endeavoured to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws of this Realm; and to that end hath in like manner endeavoured to advance the Power of the Council-Table, the Canons of the Church, and the King's Prerogative, above the Laws and Statutes of the Realm. And for manifeſtation thereof, about ſix Years laſt paſt, being then a Privy-Counſellor to his Majeſty, and ſitting at the Council-Table, he ſaid, That as long as he ſat there, they ſhould know that an Order of that Board ſhould be of equal force with a Law or Act of Parliament. And at another time uſed theſe Words, That he hoped e'er long, that the Canons of the Church and the King's Prerogative ſhould be of as great power as an Act of Parliament. And at another time ſaid, That thoſe which would not yield to the King's Power, he would cruſh them to pieces.

Theſe three Articles they begun with; and the firſt Man appointed to begin, was Mr. Maynard: And after ſome general things againſt me, as if I were the moſt violent Man for all illegal Ways;

I. The Firſt Particular charged againſt me, was out of my Diary: the Words theſe, The King declared his Reſolution for a Parliament in caſe of the Scotiſh Rebellion. The firſt Movers of it were my Lord Deputy of Ireland, the Lord Marquiſs Hamilton, and myſelf; and a Reſolution voted at the Board, to aſſiſt the King in Extraordinary Ways, if the Parliament ſhould prove peeviſh, and refuſe, &c. The Time was December 5. 1639. That which was inforced from theſe Words, was, Firſt, that I beſtowed the Epithet Peeviſh upon the Parliament; and the Second, that this voting to aſſiſt the King in Extraordinary Ways, in caſe the Parliament refuſed, proceeded from my Counſel.

1. To this I replied: And firſt I humbly deſired once for all, that all things concerning Law may be ſaved intire unto me, and my Counſel to be heard in every ſuch Particular.

2. Secondly, that the Epithet Peeviſh was a very peeviſh Word, 'if written by me. I ſay, If: For 'I know into whoſe hands my Book is fallen; but 'what hath been done with it, I know not. This 'is to be ſeen, ſome Paſſages in that Book are half 'burnt out, whether purpoſely or by chance, God 'knows: and ſome other Papers taken by the ſame 'hand from me, are now wanting. Is it not poſſible 'therefore ſome Art may be uſed in this?' Beſides, if I did uſe the Word Peeviſh, it was in my private Pocket-Book, which I well hoped ſhould never be made publick; and then no Diſgrace thereby affix'd to the Parliament. And I hope, ſhould a Man forget himſelf in ſuch an Expreſſion of ſome Paſſage in ſome one Parliament, (and this was no more) it is far ſhort of any thing that can be called Treaſon. And yet farther, moſt manifeſt it is in the very Words themſelves, that I do not beſtow the Title upon that Parliament, in that Caſe; but ſay only, 'If it ſhould prove peeviſh: 'which is poſſible, doubtleſs, that in ſome Particulars a Parliament may; though for the Happineſs of this Kingdom, I would to God it were 'impoſſible. But ſuppoſe the word peeviſh had 'been abſolutely ſpoken by me, is it lawful upon 'Record to ſay the Parliament An. 42. 'Hen. 3. was Inſanum Parliamentum, a mad Parliament; and that in the 6 Hen. 4. Indoctum, an unlearned Parliament; and that in the 4 Hen. 6. a Parliament of Clubs? And ſhall it be High Treaſon in me, to ſay a Parliament in ſome one Particular was peeviſh? or but to ſuppoſe if it were? Can any Man think, that an unlearned, or a mad Parliament, or one of Clubs, did not

Sir Ed. Coke, Inſt. p. 3. c. 1.

' do ſomething peeviſhly? Might my ' Predeceſſor, ' Tho. Arundel, tell the ' Commons openly in Parliament that
' their Petitions were ſacrilegious?
' And may not I ſo much as ſuppoſe ſome one
' Action of a Parliament to be peeviſh, but it ſhall
' be Treaſon? May an ordinary Hiſtorian ſay of ' that unlearned Parliament, ' That
' the Commons were fit to enter
' Common with their Cattle, for any ' Vertue they had more than Brute-Beaſts? And ' may not I in my private Notes write the Word
' Peeviſh of them without Treaſon?

' Speed in H. 4. §. 42.

3. Thirdly, Whereas 'tis ſaid, That the voting at the Council-Table to aſſiſt the King in extraordinary Ways, if, &c. was by my Counſel; there is no ſuch thing in my Diary. There is, that I, with others, adviſed a Parliament; but there is not one Word, that the voting mentioned at the Council-Table proceeded from any Advice of mine. ' So there ' is no Proof from my Diary, and other Proof beſide
' that, was not ſo much as urged; which was not
' in favour, but becauſe they had it not: For had
' they had any other Proof, I ſee already it ſhould
' not have been loſt for want of urging.' Where I deſired their Lordſhips alſo to obſerve in what a Difficulty I have lived with ſome Men, who will needs make me a great Enemy to Parliaments, and yet are angry with me, that I was one, with others, who moved for that Parliament. So it ſeems, nothing that I do can content ſome Men: For a Parliament, or againſt it; nothing muſt be well, if the Counſel be mine.

4. Fourthly, For the voting of Aſſiſtance in extraordinary Ways, I was included in the general Vote of the Table; and therefore that cannot be called or accounted my Counſel.

5. Fifthly, It is expreſſed in my Diary, whence all this Proof is taken, that it was in and for the Scotiſh Buſineſs; and ſo is within the Act of Oblivion. ' And theſe Anſwers I gave to Mr. Brown,
' when, in the ſumming up of the Charge againſt me
' in the Honourable Houſe of Commons, he made
' this to be my Counſel to the King; and he began
' with it in his charging of the Points againſt Law.'

II. The ſecond Particular this Day charged againſt me, was, That after the ending of the late Parliament I did uſe theſe Words to the King, That now he might uſe his own Power, or Words to that effect. This was atteſted by Sir Henry Vane the elder, then a Counſellor, and preſent.

1. To this my Anſwer was, That I ſpake not theſe Words, either in Terms, or in Senſe, to the uttermoſt of my Knowledge.

2. Secondly, If I had ſpoken theſe Words, either they were ill adviſed Words, but no Treaſon, and then they come not home to the Charge; or they are treaſonable, and then I ought by ' Law to have been tryed within ſix
Months. ' Mr. Brown, in his Reply
' to me in the Houſe of Commons,
' ſaid, That this Statute expired with the Queen,
' becauſe it concerned none but her, and the Heirs
' of her Body. I had here urged
' Sir Edward Coke, as urging this
' Statute, and commending the Mo-
' deration of it: But I was therein
' miſtaken, for he ſpeaks of 1 Eliz. cap. 1. And ' that Statute is in force, and is for
' Tryal within ſix Months, for ſuch
' Crimes as are within that Statute.
' So it comes all to one for my Cauſe,
' ſo either of the Statutes be in force. And to this ' Charge in general, I gave the ſame Anſwers
' which are here.'

' 1 Eliz. c. 6. §. antepenult.

' Part 4. Inſt. c. 74.

' 1 Eliz. c. 1. & 1 Ed. 6. c. 12.

3. Thirdly, Sir Henry Vane is in this a ſingle Witneſs; whereas by Law, he that is accuſed of Treaſon muſt be convicted by two Witneſſes, or his own Confeſſion without Violence; neither of which is in this Caſe. And ſtrange it is to me, that at ſuch a full Table no Perſon of Honour ſhould remember ſuch a Speech, but Sir Henry Vane.

' 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. §. ult. & 1 El. c. 6. §. ult.

4. Fourthly, Both this and the former Charge relate to the Scotiſh Buſineſs; and ſo are within the Act of Oblivion, which I have pleaded.

' Beſides, here is nothing expreſſed in the Words
' charged, which favours of Practice, Conſpiracy,
' Combination, or Force, and cannot therefore
' poſſibly be adjudged Treaſon; eſpecially ſince
' there is no Expreſſion made in the Words witneſ-
' ſed, what Power is meant: For what ſhould
' hinder the King to uſe his own Power? But le' gal ſtill; ſince nothing is ſo properly a King's
' own Power, as that which is made or declared
' his own by Law. As for the Inference, That ' this was called his own in oppoſition to Law: Firſt,
' Sir Henry Vane is a Witneſs to the Words only,
' and not to any Inference; ſo the ' Words have but one Witneſs, and
' the Inference none. And per' haps it were as well for themſelves,
' as for Perſons queſtioned in great
' Courts, if they who are imploy-
' ed about the Evidence would be
' more ſparing of their ' Inferences,
' many Men laying hold of them
' without Reaſon or Proof.

' The dreadful Licence of Inferences among our Engliſh Pleaders in Caſes of Death. Speed in H. 7. §. 61.

' Laſtly, For the Honour of Sir Henry Vane, let ' me not forget this: He is a Man of ſome Years;
' and Memory is one of the firſt Powers of Man
' on which Age works; and yet his Memory ſo
' good, ſo freſh, that he alone can remember
' Words ſpoken at a full Council-Table, which no
' Perſon of Honour remembers but himſelf: Had ' any Man elſe remember'd ſuch Words, he could ' not have ſtood ſingle in this Teſtimony. But I ' would not have him brag of it: For
' I have read in St. Auguſtine, that qui-
' dam peſſimi, ſome, even the worſt
' of Men have great Memories, and ' are tanto pejores, ſo much the worſe for having ' them. God bleſs Sir Henry.'

Aug. l. 7. de Civ. Dei. c. 3.

I have ſtaid the longer upon theſe two, becauſe they were apprehended to be of more weight than moſt which follow.

III. The next was a Head containing my illegal Preſſures for Money, under which the next Particular was, That in the Caſe of Ship-Money I was very angry againſt one Samuel Sherman of Dedham in Eſſex: That I ſhould ſay Dedham was a Maritime Town; and that when the Sum demanded of him was named, I ſhould ſay a proper Sum; whereas the Diſtreſs came to eleven Subſidies.

To this I anſwered, Firſt, Here was no Proof but Sherman; and in his own Cauſe. Secondly, He himſelf ſays no more, than that he believes I was the Inſtrument of his Oppreſſion, (as he called it;) whereas his Cenſure was laid upon him by the Council-Table, not by me: Nor was I in any other Fault than that I was preſent, and gave my Vote with the reſt. So here's no Proof at all but his Belief. ' Laſtly, Here can be no Treaſon,
' but againſt Dedham or Sherman, that I can diſ-
' cover.'

IV. The

IV. The next to Sherman comes in my great Friend, Alderman Atkins; and he teſtifies, That when he was brought to the Council-Table, about the Ship-Money, none was ſo violent againſt him as I was; and that this Preſſure for Ship-Money was before the Judges had given ſentence for the King. And that at another time I preſſed him hard to lend Money, the King being preſent: At which time he conceived that I favoured Alderman Harriſon for Country-ſake; becauſe himſelf was committed, and not the other.

To this, I muſt confeſs, I did uſe to be ſerious and zealous too in his Majeſty's Service; but not with any the leaſt Intention to violate Law. And if this, here inſtanced, were before the Judgment given for the King; yet it was long after the Judges had put the Legality of it under their Hands. And I, for my part, could not conceive the Judges would put that under their Hands to be Law, which ſhould after be found unlawful. Therefore in this, as I erred with Honourable Company at the Council-Table, ſo both they and I had, as we thought, ſufficient Guides to lead us.

As for the Partiality which he puts upon me in preſerving my Countryman, Alderman Harriſon, from Priſon: Firſt, he himſelf durſt not affirm it upon his Oath, but ſays only, that he conceives I favoured him; but his Conceit is no Proof. Secondly, If I had favoured him, and done him that office, 'tis far ſhort of Treaſon. But the truth is, Alderman Harriſon gave a modeſt and a civil Anſwer; but this Man was rough, even to Unmannerlineſs: and, ſo far as I remember, was committed for that.

'And whereas he ſays, I preſſed him hard to 'lend Money, and that none was ſo violent as I; 'he is much miſtaken. For of all Men in that 'Fraternity, I durſt never preſs him hard for any 'thing, leaſt of all for Money. For I knew not 'what Stuffing might fly out of ſo full a Cuſhion, 'as afterwards 'tis ſaid did, when being a Colo-'nel he was preſſed, but not hard, in a little Skir-'miſhing in Finsbury-Fields.'

V. Then it was urged, That I aggravated a Crime againſt Alderman Chambers, and told him, That if the King had many ſuch Chambers, he would have never a Chamber to reſt in: That in the Caſe of Tunnage and Poundage, he laboured to take Bread from the King; and that I preſſed upon him in the Buſineſs of Coat and Conduct-Money.

To this I gave this Anſwer, That by the Affection Mr. Chambers then ſhewed the King, I had ſome reaſon to think, he deſired ſo many Chambers to his Uſe; that if the King had many ſuch Subjects, he might want a Chamber for himſelf; or to that effect. And the violence of his Carriage in that Honourable Aſſembly gave juſt Occaſion to other Men to think ſo. But as for the Buſineſs of Tunnage and Poundage, and of Coat and Conduct-Money, I conceived both were lawful on the King's part. And I was led into this Opinion by the expreſs Judgment of ſome Lords preſent, and the Silence of others in that behalf; none of the great Lawyers at the Table contradicting either: And no Witneſs to this, but Alderman Chambers himſelf.

VI. The ſixth Particular was, That I urged the Buſineſs of Ship-Money upon Alderman Adams.

To this my Anſwer was, That I never preſſed the Ship-Money, but as other Lords did at the Council-Table, nor upon other Grounds: Nor doth Alderman Adams ſay any more, than that he was preſſed to this Payment by me and others. And to me it ſeems ſtrange, and will, I hope, to all Men elſe, that this, and the like, ſhould be a common Act of the Lords at the Council-Table, but ſhould be High Treaſon in no body but in me. And howſoever, if it be Treaſon, 'tis againſt three Aldermen, Atkins, Chambers and Adams.

VII. The Seventh Particular was, That I was ſo violent about the ſlighting of the King's Proclamations, as that I ſaid, A Proclamation was of as great force, or equal to a Statute-Law; and that I compared the King to the Stone ſpoken of in the Goſpel; that whoſoever falls upon it, ſhall be broken; but upon whomſoever it falls, it will grind him to powder. S. Matth. 21. 44. And for this they brought three Witneſſes, Mr. Griffin, Tho. Wood and Rich. Hayles.

1. This was in the Caſe of the Soap-buſineſs, and * the two Witneſſes were Soap-boilers. They and their Company ſlighted all the Proclamations which the King ſet out; and all the Lords in the Star-Chamber were much offended, (as I conceived they had great reaſon to be) at the great and open Daring of that whole Company. And whatſoever Sentence paſſed upon them in that whole Buſineſs, was given by the Court of Star-Chamber, not by me.

For the Words: Firſt, theſe Men have good Memories, that can punctually, being plain ordinary Men, ſwear Words ſpoken full twelve Years ſince; and yet, as good as their Memory is, they ſwear doubtfully touching the time, as that the Words were ſpoken in May 1632, or 33.

2. Secondly, My Lords, 'tis impoſſible theſe Words ſhould be ſpoken by me. For I think no Man in this Honourable Preſence thinks me ſo ignorant, as that I ſhould not know the vaſt difference that is between an Act of Parliament and a Proclamation. Neither can theſe Gentlemen, which preſs the Evidence, think me ſo wilfully fooliſh ſo to ſpeak, conſidering they accuſe me here for a cunning Delinquent. 'So God forgive 'theſe Men the Falſhood and the Malice of this 'Oath.'

3. For the Words ſpoken of the Stone in Scripture, 'tis ſo long ſince, I cannot recall whether I ſaid it or no: Nor have I any great Reaſon to believe theſe angry Witneſſes in their own Cauſe. But if, by way of Alluſion, I did apply that Place to the King and them, 'tis far enough from Treaſon. 'And let them, and their like, take heed leſt it 'prove true upon themſelves: For ſeldom do Sub-'jects fall upon their King, but in the end they 'are broken; and if it ſo happen that he falls up-'on them, they are ground to powder.' And Solomon taught me this Anſwer, where he ſays, The Anger of a King is Death, Prov. 16. 14. And yet I would not be miſtaken: For I do not conceive this is ſpoken of a King and his natural Anger, (though it be good Wiſdom to ſtir as little Paſſion in Kings as may be;) but of his legal Anger: According to which, if the Stone roll ſtrictly, few Men can ſo live, but for ſomething or other they may be in danger of grinding.

4. And for theſe Soap-boilers, they have little cauſe to be ſo vehement againſt me. For if the Sentence paſſed againſt them in the Star-Chamber, were in any thing illegal, though it were done by that Court, and not by me; yet I alone, ſo ſoon as I heard but muttering of it, was the only means of reſettling them and their Trade, which none of all all the Lords elſe took care of. 'And the Sum 'of theſe Anſwers I gave to Mr. Brown, when he 'gave up the Sum of his Charge againſt me.'

VIII. The next Particular was about Depopulations. A Commiſſion of Grace, to compound with ſome Delinquents in that kind, was iſſued under the Broad-Seal, to ſome Lords, and other Perſons of Honour of the Council, of which I was one. One Mr. Talboys was called thither: And the Charge about this was, That when he pleaded, that by Statute 39 Eliz. he might convert ſome, to Paſture; I ſhould ſay, Do you plead Law here? Either abide the Order, or take your Tryal at the Star-Chamber: And that he was fined 50 l.

In this Particular Mr. Talboys is ſingle, and in his own Cauſe; but I was ſingle at no Sitting of that Commiſſion: Nor did I ever ſit, unleſs the Lord Privy-Seal and Mr. Secretary Coke were preſent, that we might have Direction from their Knowledge and Experience.

And for the Words (if ſpoken) they were not to derogate from the Law; but to ſhew, that we ſate not there as any Judges of the Law, but to offer his Majeſty's Grace to ſuch as would accept it.

As for the Fine mentioned, we impoſed none upon him or any other, but by the Conſent of the Parties themſelves. If any Man thought he was not faulty, and would not accept of the Favour ſhewed him, we left him to the Law. But the plain truth is, this Gentleman being Tenant to the Dean and Chapter of Chriſt-Church in Oxford, offered them (as they conceived) great wrong in the Land he held of them; inſomuch as they feared other their Tenants might follow his Example, and therefore complained of him. And becauſe I laid open his Uſage of his Landlords before the Commiſſioners, he comes here to vent his Spleen againſt me. 'And 'tis obſervable, that in all the buſineſs of 'Depopulations, in which ſo many appeared, no one 'complained either againſt me or any other Lord, 'but only this Talboys. Mr. Brown, when he preſſed the Sum of this Charge againſt me, added, 'That at the Council-Table I was for all illegal Pro'jects, as well as for theſe Incloſures. But, Firſt, 'I was neither for this nor any other, either longer 'or otherwiſe than I underſtood them to be law'ful. And, Secondly, I oppoſed there the Buſineſs 'of Salt and the baſe Money; and I alone took off 'that of the Malt and the Brewing: And three Gen'tlemen of Hertfordſhire (which County was princi'pally concerned in the Caſe of the Malt) came 'over to Lambeth to give me thanks for it.'

IX. Then was charged upon me the printing of Books, which aſſerted the King's Prerogative above Law, &c. The Inſtance was in Dr. Cowell's Book, Verbo [2] Rex: That this Book was decryed by Proclamation; That Complaint was made to me, that this Book was printing in a cloſe Houſe without Licence, and by Hodgkinſon, who was my Printer; That I referred them to Sir John Lamb; That they came to me again, and a third time, and I ſtill continued my Reference; which Sir John Lamb ſlighting, the Book came forth. The Witneſſes to this, were Hunt and Wallye, if I miſtook not their Names.

[2] No ſuch word there ſure, it ſhould be Prerogativa Regis. W. S. A. C.

1. For this Book of Dr. Cowell's, I never knew of it, till it was printed; or ſo far gone on in printing, that I could not ſtay it. And the Witneſſes ſay, it was in a cloſe Houſe, and without Licence; ſo that neither I nor my Chaplains could take notice of it.

2. They ſay, they informed me of it, but name no time, but only the Year 1638. But they confeſs I was then at Croydon: So being out of Town (as were almoſt all the High Commiſſioners) I required Sir John Lamb, who, being a High Commiſſioner, had in that Buſineſs as much Power as my ſelf, to look to it carefully, that the Book proceeded not; or if it were already printed, that it came not forth. If Sir John ſlighted his own Duty and my Command, (as themſelves ſay) he is living, and may anſwer for himſelf; and I hope your Lordſhips will not put his Neglect upon my Account.

3. As for Hodgkinſon, he was never my Printer; but Badger was the Man whom I employed, as is well known to all the Stationers. Nor was Hodgkinſon ever imployed by me in that kind or any other: Upon juſt Complaint I turned him out of a Place, but never put him into any. And therefore thoſe Terms which were put upon me, of my Hodgkinſon, and my Sir John Lamb, might have been ſpared. Sir John was indeed Dean of the Arches, and I imployed him, as other Archbiſhops did the Deans which were in their Times; otherwiſe no way mine. And Hodgkinſon had his whole dependance on Sir Henry Martin, and was a mere Stranger to me. 'And this Anſwer I gave to Mr. 'Brown, when he ſumm'd up the Charge. Nor 'could any Danger be in the printing of that Book 'to miſlead any Man; becauſe it was generally 'made known by Proclamation, that it was a Book 'condemned, and in ſuch Particulars; but for other 'things, the Book very uſeful.'

X. The next Charge was, That when Dr. Gill, School-Maſter of Paul's School in London, was warned out by the Mercers (to the Care of which Company that School ſomeway belongs) upon Dr. Gill's Petition to the King, there was a Reference to ſome other Lords and my ſelf to hear the Buſineſs. The Charge is, That at this Hearing I ſhould ſay the Mercers might not put out Dr. Gill without his Ordinary's Knowledge: And that upon mention made of an Act of Parliament, I ſhould reply, I ſee nothing will down with you but Acts of Parliament; no regard at all of the Canons of the Church: And that I ſhould farther add, That I would reſcind all Acts which were againſt the Canons; and that I hoped ſhortly to ſee the Canons and the King's Prerogative of equal force with an Act of Parliament.

To this I anſwer'd, That if all this Charge were true, yet this is but the ſingle Teſtimony of Samuel Bland, an Officer belonging to the Company of Mercers, and no ſmall Stickler againſt Dr. Gill, whoſe aged Reverend Father had done that Company great Service in that School for many Years together.

The Reference, he grants, was to me and others; ſo I neither thruſt my ſelf into the Buſineſs, nor was alone in it.

And as there is a Canon of this Church, (Can. 77.) That no Man may be allowed to teach School, but by the Biſhop of the Dioceſs; ſo à paritate rationis, it ſtands good, they may not turn him out, without the ſaid Biſhop's Knowledge and Approbation. And 'tis expreſſed in another Canon, (Can. 79.) That if any School-Maſter offend in any of the Premiſes (there ſpoken of) he ſhall be admoniſhed by his Ordinary; and if he do not amend upon that his Admonition, he ſhall then be ſuſpended from teaching: Which, I think, makes the Caſe plain, that the Mercers might not turn out Dr. Gill, without ſo much as the Knowledge of his Biſhop.

And

And for the Words, That I ſaw nothing would down with them but an Act of Parliament, and that no regard was had to the Canons; I humbly conceive there was no Offence in the Words. For though the Superiority by far in this Kingdom belongs to the Acts of Parliament; yet ſome Regard, doubtleſs, is or ought to be had to the Canons of the Church. 'And if nothing will down with Men 'but Acts of Parliament, the Government cannot 'be held up in many Particulars.'

For the other Words, God forgive this Witneſs; for I am well aſſured I neither did nor could ſpeak them. For is it ſo much as probable, that I ſhould ſay, I would reſcind all Acts that are againſt the Canons? What Power have I, or any particular Man, to reſcind Acts of Parliament? Nor do I think any Man that knows me, will believe I could be ſuch a Fool, as to ſay, That I hoped ſhortly to ſee the Canons and the King's Prerogative equal to Acts of Parliament; ſince I have lived to ſee (and that often) many Canons rejected, as contrary to the Cuſtom of the Place; as in Choice of Pariſh-Clerks, and about the Reparation of ſome Churches, and the King's Prerogative diſcuſſed and weighed by Law: Neither of which hath, or can be done, by any Judges, to an Act of Parliament. 'That 'there is Malice in this Man againſt me, appears 'plainly; but upon what 'tis grounded, I cannot 'tell: unleſs it be that in this Buſineſs of Dr. Gill, 'and in ſome other about placing Lecturers, (which 'in ſome Caſes this Company of the Mercers took 'on them to do) I oppoſing it ſo far as Law and 'Canon would give me leave, croſſed ſome way 'either his Opinion in Religion, or his Purſe-'Profit. I was (I confeſs) ſo much moved at 'the Unworthineſs of this Man's Teſtimony, that 'I thought to bind this Sin upon his Soul, not 'to be forgiven him till he did publickly ask me 'Forgiveneſs for this notorious publick Wrong 'done me. But by God's Goodneſs I maſter'd 'my ſelf; and I heartily deſire God to give him 'a ſenſe of this Sin againſt me his poor Servant, 'and forgive him.' And if theſe Words could poſſibly ſcape me, and be within the Danger of that Statute; then to that Statute which requires my Tryal within ſix Months, I refer my ſelf.

XI. The Eleventh Charge of this Day, was the Impriſonment of Mr. George Waker, about a Sermon of his preached to prove (as he ſaid) That 'tis Sin to obey the greateſt Monarchs in things which are againſt the Command of God; That I had Notes of his Sermons for four or five Years together, of purpoſe to intrap him; That I told his Majeſty he was factious; That Sir Dudly Carlton writ to keep him cloſe; That in this Affliction I proteſted to do him kindneſs, and yet did contrary.

My Anſwer was, That for the Scope of his Sermon, to obey God rather than Man, no Man doubts but it ought to be ſo, when the Commands are oppoſite. But his Sermon was viewed, and many factious Paſſages, and of high nature, found in it. And yet I did not tell the King he was factious, but that he was ſo complained of to me; and this was openly at the Council-Table.

And whereas he ſpeaks of Notes of his Sermons for divers Years, with a purpoſe to intrap him; all that he ſays, is, That he was told ſo, but produces not by whom. And truly I never had any ſuch Notes, nor ever uſed any ſuch Art againſt any Man in my Life. For his Commitment, it was done by the Council-Table; and after, upon ſome Miſcarriage of his there, by the Court of Star-Chamber, not by me; nor can that be imputed to me, which is done there by the major Part, and I having no Negative. And if Sir Dudly Carlton writ to keep him cloſe at his Brother's Houſe, contrary to the Lords Order, let him anſwer it: And if he ſuppoſes that was done by me, why is not Sir Dudly examined to try that Truth? As for the Proteſtation, which, he ſays, I made to his Wife and his Brother, that I complained not againſt him; it was no Denial of my Complaint made againſt him at the firſt, that I heard he was factious: but that after the time, in which I had ſeen the full Teſtimony of grave Miniſters in London, that he was not factious, I made no Complaint after that, but did my beſt to free him. And the Treaſon in theſe two Charges, is againſt the Company of the Mercers and Mr. Waker.

XII. The next Charge was, That Dr. Manwaring having been cenſured by the Lords in Parliament for a Sermon of his againſt the Liberty and Propriety of the Subject, was yet after this preferred by me, in contempt of the Parliament-Cenſure, both to the Deanery of Worceſter, and the Biſhoprick of St. Davids: And my own Diary witneſſes that I was complained of in Parliament for it; and that yet after this I did conſecrate him Biſhop.

1. To this I anſwered, That he was not preferred by me to either of theſe; and therefore that could not be done in contempt of the Parliament-Cenſure, which was not done at all. For as for St. Davids, 'tis confeſſed, Secretary Windebank ſignified the King's Pleaſure, not I. And whereas it was added, that this was by my means; that is only ſaid, but not proved. And for Worceſter, there is no Proof but the Docket-Book: Now, my Lords, 'tis well known in Court, that the Docket doth but ſignify the King's Pleaſure for ſuch a Bill to be drawn; it never mentions who procured the Preferment. So that the Docket can be no Proof at all againſt me; and other there is none.

2. For the Sermon, 'tis true, I was complained of in Parliament, that I had been the cauſe of Licenſing it to the Preſs; and 'tis as true, that upon that Complaint I was narrowly ſifted, and an Honourable Lord now preſent, and the Lord Biſhop of Lincoln, were ſent to Biſhop Mountain, who licenſed the Sermon, to examine and ſee whether any Warrant had come from me, or any Meſſage: But when nothing appeared, I was acquitted in open Parliament, to ſome body's no ſmall Grief. 'God forgive them, and their Malice againſt me; 'for to my knowledge my Ruin was then thirſted 'for. And as I anſwered Mr. Brown's ſummary 'Charge, when he preſſed this againſt me, could 'this have been proved, I had been undone long 'ſince; the Work had not been now to be done.'

That he was after conſecrated by me, is true likewiſe; and I hope, 'tis not expected I ſhould ruin my ſelf, and fall into a Præmunire, by refuſing the King's Royal Aſſent; and this for fear leſt it might be thought I procured his Preferment. 25 Hen. 8. c. 20. §. ult.

But the truth is, his Majeſty commanded me to put him in mind of him when Preferments fell; and I did ſo: But withal, I told his Majeſty of his Cenſure, and that I feared ill Conſtruction would be made of it.

To this it was replied, That I might have refuſed to conſecrate, the Cauſe why being ſufficient, and juſtifiable in Parliament, and excepted in that Law. 'But how ſufficient ſoever that Cauſe may 'be

'be in Parliament, if I had been in a Præmunire 'there-while, and loſt my Liberty, and all that I 'had beſide, for diſobeying the Royal Aſſent; I 'believe I ſhould have had but cold Comfort when 'the next Parliament had been ſummoned; no 'Exception againſt the Man being known to me, 'either for Life or Learning, but only this Cen-'ſure: nor is there any Exception which the 'Archbiſhop is by that Law allowed to make, if 'my Book be truly printed.'

XIII. Then followed the Charge of Dr. Heylin's Book againſt Mr. Burton; out of which it was urged, That an unlimited Power was preſſed very far; and out of p. 40. That a way was found to make the Subject free, and the King a Subject: that this Man was preferred by me; that Dr. Heylin confeſſed to a Committee, that I commanded him to anſwer Mr. Burton's Book; and that my Chaplain Dr. Braye licenſed it.

I anſwered as follows: I did not prefer Dr. Heylin to the King's Service; it was the Earl of Danby, who had taken honourable Care of him before in the Univerſity. His Preferments I did not procure: for it appears by what hath been urged againſt me, that the Lord Viſcount Dorcheſter procured him his Parſonage, and Mr. Secretary Coke his Prebend in Weſtminſter.

For his Anſwer to the Committee, that I commanded him to write againſt Burton, it was an ingenuous and a true Anſwer, and became him and his Calling well; for I did ſo. 'And neither I in 'commanding, nor he in obeying, did other than 'what we had good Precedent for in the Primi-'tive Church of Chriſt. For when ſome Monks 'had troubled the Church at Carthage, but not 'with half that danger which Mr. Burton's Book 'threatned to this; Aurelius, then Biſhop, com-'manded St. Auguſtine to write againſt 'it; and he did ſo. His words are, 'Aurelius ſcribere juſſit, & feci.' But though I did, as by my Place I might, command him to write an Anſwer; yet I did neither command nor adviſe him to inſert any thing unſound or unfit. If any ſuch thing be found in it, he muſt anſwer for himſelf, and the Licenſer for himſelf. For as for licenſing of Books, I held the ſame courſe which all my Predeceſſors had done: and when any Chaplain came new into my Houſe, I gave him a ſtrict Charge in that particular. And in all my Predeceſſors times, the Chaplains ſuffer'd for Faults committed, and not their Lords; though now all is heaped on me.

Aug. 2. Retract. c. 21.

'As for the particular Words urged out of 'Dr. Heylin's Book, p. 40. there is neither Expreſ-'ſion by them, nor Intention in them, againſt ei-'ther the Law, or any lawful Proceedings; but 'they are directed to Mr. Burton and his Doctrine 'only. The words are, You have found out a way '(not the Law, but you Mr. Burton) to make the 'Subject free, and the King a Subject. Whereas it 'would well have beſeem'd Mr. Burton, to have 'carried his Pen even at the leaſt, and left the King 'his Freedom, as well as the Subject his.'

XIV. From this they proceeded to another Charge; which was, That I preferred Chaplains to be about the King and the Prince, which were diſaffected to the publick Welfare of the Kingdom. The Inſtance was in Dr. Dove; and a Paſſage read out of his Book againſt Mr. Burton: and it was added, that the declaring of ſuch Diſaffection was the beſt Inducement or Bribe to procure them Preferment.

To this I then ſaid, and 'tis true, I did never knowingly prefer any Chaplain to the King or Prince, that was ill-affected to the Publick. And for Dr. Dove, if he uttered by Tongue or by Pen any ſuch wild Speech concerning any Members of the Honourable Houſe of Commons, as is urged, thereby to ſhew his Diſaffection to the Publick; he is living, and I humbly deſire he may anſwer it. But whereas it was ſaid, That this was the beſt Inducement or Bribe to get Preferment; this might have been ſpared, had it ſo pleaſed the Gentleman which ſpake it: but I know my Condition, and where I am, and will not loſe my Patience for Language.

And whereas 'tis urged, That after this he was named by me to be a Chaplain to the Prince his Highneſs; the thing was thus: His Majeſty had ſuit made to him, that the Prince might have Sermons in his own Chappel for his Family. Hereupon his Majeſty approving the Motion, commanded me to think upon the Names of ſome fit Men for that Service. I did ſo: but before any thing was done, I acquainted the Right Honourable the Lord Chamberlain, that then was, with it; my Lord knew moſt of the Men, and approved the Note, and delivered it to his Secretary Mr. Oldſworth, to ſwear them. This was the Fact; and at this time, when I put Dr. Dove's Name into the Liſt, I did not know of any ſuch Paſſage in his Book, nor indeed ever heard of it till now. For I had not read his Book, but here and there by ſnatches.

XV. I am now come (and 'tis time) to the laſt Particular of this Day. And this Charge was, The giving of Subſidies to the King in the Convocation, without Conſent in Parliament: That the Penalties for not paying were ſtrict, and without Appeal, as appears in the Act; where it is farther ſaid, that we do this according to the Duty which by Scripture we are bound unto; which reflects upon the Liberties of Parliaments in that behalf. But it was added, they would not meddle now with the late Canons for any thing elſe, till they came to their due place.

1. My Anſwer to this was, That this was not my ſingle Act, but the Act of the whole Convocation, and could not be appliable to me only.

2. That this Grant was no other, nor in any other way, mutatis mutandis, than was granted to Queen Elizabeth in Archbiſhop Whitgift's time. This Grant was alſo put in execution, as appeared by the Originals which we followed. Theſe Originals (among many other Records) were commanded away by the Honourable Houſe of Commons, and where they now are I know not; but for want of them, my Defence cannot be ſo full.

3. For the Circumſtances, as that the Penalties are without Appeal, and the like, 'tis uſual in all ſuch Grants. And that we did it according to our Duty and the Rules of Scripture, we conceived was a fitting Expreſſion for ourſelves, and Men of our Calling, without giving Law to others, or any Intention to violate the Law in the leaſt. For thus, I humbly conceive, lies the mutual Relation between the King and his People, by Rules of Conſcience: The Subjects are to ſupply a full and honourable Maintenance to the King; and the King (when Neceſſities call upon him) is to ask of his People, in ſuch a way as is, per pacta, by Law and Covenant agreed upon between them, which in this Kingdom is by Parliament: yet the Clergy ever granting their own at all times. And that this was my Judgment long before this, appeas pears by a Sermon of mine appointed to be preached at the opening of the Parliament, in the Year 1625. My Words are theſe; If you would have indeed a flouriſhing both State and Church, the King muſt truſt and indear his People, and the People muſt honour, obey, and ſupport their King, &c. This, I hope, is far enough from derogating from any Law: and if I ſhould privately have ſpoken any thing to him contrary to this, which I had both preached and printed, how could his Majeſty have truſted me in any thing?

My Sermon on Pſal. 75. 2, 3. p. 14.

This brought this tedious Day to an end. And I had an Order the ſame Day to appear again on Saturday, March 16. 1643. with a Note alſo from the Committee which were to charge me, that they meant then to proceed upon part of the ſecond Additional Article, and upon the third Original, and the third and fifth Additional Articles. The ſecond Additional Article is written down before: And here follow the reſt now mentioned to be next proceeded upon.

The Third Original is,

III. He hath by Letters, Meſſages, Threats, Promiſes, and divers other ways, to Judges and other Miniſters of Juſtice, interrupted and perverted, and at other times, by the Means aforeſaid, hath endeavoured to interrupt and pervert the Courſe of Juſtice in his Majeſty's Courts at Weſtminſter, and other Courts, to the Subverſion of the Laws of this Kingdom: whereby ſundry of his Majeſty's Subjects have been ſtopped in their juſt Suits, and deprived of their lawful Rights, and ſubjected to his tyrannical Will, to their utter Ruin and Deſtruction.

The Third and Fifth Additionals follow:

III. That the ſaid Archbiſhop, to advance the Canons of the Church and Power Eccleſiaſtical above the Law of the Land, and to pervert and hinder the Courſe of Juſtice, hath at divers times within the ſaid time, by his Letters and other undue Means, and Sollicitations uſed to Judges, oppoſed and ſtopped the granting of his Majeſty's Writs of Prohibition, where the ſame ought to have been granted for Stay of Proceedings in the Eccleſiaſtical Court; whereby Juſtice hath been delayed and hindered, and the Judges diverted from doing their Duties.

V. That the ſaid Archbiſhop about eight Years laſt paſt, being then alſo a Privy Counſellor to his Majeſty, for the End and Purpoſe aforeſaid, cauſed Sir John Corbet of Stoak in the County of Salop, Bart. then a Juſtice of Peace of the ſaid County, to be committed to the Priſon of the Fleet, where he continued Priſoner for the ſpace of half a year or more; for no other cauſe but for calling for the Petition of Right, and cauſing it to be read at the Seſſions of the Peace for that County, upon a juſt and neceſſary Occaſion. And during the time of his ſaid Impriſonment, the ſaid Archbiſhop, without any colour of Right, by a Writing under the Seal of his Archbiſhoprick, granted away Parcel of the Glebe-Land of the Church of Adderly in the ſaid County, whereof the ſaid Sir John Corbet was then Patron, unto Robert Viſcount Kilmurry, without the Conſent of the ſaid Sir John, or the then Incumbent of the ſaid Church: which ſaid Viſcount Kilmurry built a Chappel upon the ſaid Parcel of Glebe-Land, to the great prejudice of the ſaid Sir John Corbet, which hath cauſed great Suits and [1] Diſſenſions between them. And whereas the ſaid Sir John Corbet had a Judgment againſt Sir James Stonehouſe Knight, in an Action of Waſte in his Majeſty's Court of Common-Pleas at Weſtminſter, which was afterwards affirmed in a Writ of Error in the King's-Bench, and Execution thereupon awarded; yet the ſaid Sir John, by means of the ſaid Archbiſhop, could not have the Effect thereof, but was committed to Priſon by the ſaid Archbiſhop and others at the Council-Table, until he had ſubmitted himſelf unto the Order of the ſaid Table; whereby he loſt the Benefit of the ſaid Judgment and Execution.

The Third Day of my Hearing.

SAturday, March 16. 1643. In the interim between the 13th and this 16th of March, upon ſome ſtrict Charge to look to the Tower, my Sollicitor was not ſuffer'd to come in to me. Whereupon, ſo ſoon as I was ſettled at the Bar, before the Evidence began to be open'd, I ſpake to the Lords as follows.

My Lords, I ſtand not here to complain of any Thing, or any Man; but only am inforced to acquaint your Lordſhips with my ſad Condition. Your Lordſhips have appointed my Secretary to be my Sollicitor, and given him leave to aſſiſt me in the turning of my Papers, and to warn in ſuch Witneſſes, and to fetch me the Copies of ſuch Records as I ſhall have occaſion to uſe. And I humbly deſire your Lordſhips to conſider, that myſelf being impriſoned, and ſo utterly diſenabled to do theſe things myſelf; it will be abſolutely impoſſible for me to make any Defence, if my Sollicitor be denied to come to me, as now he is. [1] This was granted, and the Hearing adjourned till Monday following; and I humbly thank'd their Lordſhips for it.

[1] Here the Relation is imperfect. It ſeems he moved, that his Sollicitor might come to him, and in the mean time the Hearing put off.
W. S. A. C.

The Fourth Day of my Hearing.

THE fourth Day of my Hearing was Monday, March 18. and was only my Anſwer to the third Day's Charge, and the only time in which I was not put to anſwer the ſame Day.

I. The firſt Charge of this Day was about St. Paul's. And firſt out of my Diary, (where I confeſs it one of my Projects to repair that antient Fabrick;) and three ſtrict Orders of the Lords of the Council, for the demoliſhing of the Houſes built about that Church. One was November 21. 1634. the demoliſhing of the Houſes commanded by this before Jan. 6. for one, and for the reſt by Midſummer. Another was March 26. 1631. a Committee appointed, with Power to compound with the Tenants, and with Order to pull down, if they would not compound. The third was Mar. 2. 1631. which gives Power to the Sheriffs to pull down, if Obedience be not yielded.

To this I confeſs I did, when I came firſt to be Biſhop of London, project the Repair of that antient and famous Cathedral of St. Paul, ready to ſink into its own Ruins. And to this I held myſelf bound in general, as Biſhop of the Place; and in particular for the Body of the Church, the Repair pair of which is by the local Statutes laid upon the Biſhop. And the Biſhop was well able to do it, while he enjoyed thoſe Lands which he had, when that Burden was laid upon him. 'But what 'ſacrilegious Hands deſpoiled that Biſhoprick of 'them, 'tis to no purpoſe to tell.' And truly, my Lords, ſince I am in this preſent Condition, I humbly and heartily thank God, that St. Paul's comes into my Sufferings; and that God is pleaſed to think me worthy to ſuffer either for it, or with it any way: though I confeſs, I little thought to meet that here, or as a Charge any where elſe. And ſo God be pleaſed (as I hope in Chriſt he will) to pardon my other Sins, I hope I ſhall be able (Human Frailties always ſet aſide) to give an eaſy Account for this. But whereas I ſaid, the Repair of St. Paul's was a ſtrange piece of Treaſon; and they preſently replied, that they did not charge the Repair upon me, but the Manner of doing it, by demoliſhing of Mens Houſes: To that I anſwered as follows; with this firſt, That the Work hath coſt me above One Thouſand and Two Hundred Pounds out of my own Purſe, beſides all my Care and Pains, and now this heavy Charge to boot: no one Man offering to prove, that I have miſ-ſpent or diverted to other uſe, any one Penny given to that Work; or that I have done any thing about it, without the Knowledge, Approbation, and Order of his Majeſty, or the Lords of the Council, or both.

To the Particulars then. For the three Orders taken out of the Council-Books, I ſhall not need to repeat them. But what is the Myſtery, that theſe Orders are reckoned backward, the laſt firſt? Is it to aggravate, as if it roſe by ſteps? That cannot well be; becauſe the firſt Order is the ſoureſt, if I conceive it right. Beſides, here was real Compoſition allotted for them, and that by a Committee named by the Lords, not by me. And I think it was very real; for it coſt Eight or Nine Thouſand Pounds (as appears upon the Accounts) merely to take down the Houſes (which had no Right to ſtand there) before we could come at the Church to repair it.

And if any thing ſhould be amiſs in any of theſe, (which is more than I either know or believe) they were the Council's Orders, not mine. And ſhall that be urged as Treaſon againſt me, which is not imputed to them ſo much as a Miſdemeanour? Beſides, the Lords of the Council are in the antient Conſtitution of this Kingdom one Body; and whatſoever the major part of them concludes, is reputed the Act of the whole, not any one Man's. And this I muſt often inculcate, becauſe I ſee ſuch publick Acts like to be heaped upon my Particular.

1. The firſt Witneſs about this Buſineſs of St. Paul's is Mich. Burton, and 'tis charged that his Houſe was pulled down in King James's time; that he was promiſed Relief, but had none; that hereupon he got a Reference from his Majeſty that now is, and came with it to the Council, and was referred to the Committee: That Sir Hen. Martin told him, that the Archbiſhop was his hindrance; that he reſorted to me, and that I bid him go to King James for his Recompence.

To this my Anſwer was, That this Houſe, which he ſays was his, was (as is confeſſed by himſelf) taken down in King James's time, when an Attempt was made about the Repair of this Cathedral, but nothing done. If he deſired Satisfaction, he was to ſeek it of them who took down his Houſe, not of me. If his Majeſty that now is gave him a Reference, he was by the Lords of the Council, or by me (if to me it were referred) to be ſent to the Sub-Committee, becauſe Satisfaction for each Houſe was to be ordered by them. Nor had I any reaſon to take it on my Care, which was done ſo long before. He ſays, that Sir Henry Martin told him that I hindred him: but that's no proof that Sir Henry Martin told him ſo; for 'tis but his Report of Sir Henry Martin's Speech; and I hope Sir Henry neither did, nor would do me ſuch apparent Wrong. He was the third Man to whom I brake my Intentions touching the Repair, and the Difficulties which I foreſaw I was to meet with; and he gave me all Encouragement. And it may be, when nothing would ſatisfy the eager Old Man, I might bid him go to King James for Recompence: but 'tis more than I remember if I did ſo. And this Man is ſingle, and in his own Caſe; and where lies the Treaſon that is in it? Beſides, leaſt Conſideration was due to this Houſe: for not many Years before the demoliſhing of it, it was built at the Weſt End of St. Paul's for a Lottery, (it was ſaid to be the Houſe of one Wheatly;) and after the Lottery ended, finiſh'd up into a Dwelling-Houſe, to the great annoyance of that Church: the Biſhop, and Dean, and Chapter being aſleep while it was done.

2. The next Charge about St. Paul's was witneſſed by Mary Berry, That her Husband was fain to ſet up his Trade elſewhere, and that every Man reported the Biſhop was the cauſe of it.

Her Husband was forced by this Remove to ſet up his Trade elſewhere; ſo ſhe ſays: and perhaps in a better place, and with Satisfaction ſufficient to make him a better Stock: Where's the Wrong? Beſide, ſhe is ſingle, and in her own Cauſe, and no Proof, but that every Man reported the Biſhop was the means to remove him. And it is obſervable, that in King James's time, when the Commiſſion iſſued out for the demoliſhing of theſe very Houſes, the Work was highly applauded; and yet no Care taken for Satisfaction of any private Man's Intereſt: 'That now great 'Care hath been taken, and great Sums of Money 'expended about it, yet I muſt be a Traytor, 'and no leſs for doing it. This makes me think 'ſome Party of Men were heartily angry at the 'Repair itſelf, though for very ſhame it be turned 'off upon the demoliſhing of the Houſes.'

3. The next that came in, was Tho. Wheeler: He ſays that his Houſe was pulled down by the Committee, by my direction, above eleven Years ago; and that word was brought him of it.

His Houſe was pulled down; but himſelf confeſſes it was by the Committee. It was, he ſays, above eleven Years ago, and the Time limited in that Article is ſix Years. [1] He ſays, that word was brought him that I was the cauſe, or gave the direction. Word was brought him, but he names not by whom, nor from whom; ſo all this Proof is a ſingle Hearſay of he knows not whom: whereas I had the Broad Seal of England for all that was done. It was replied here, That for demoliſhing of theſe Houſes the King's Commiſſion was no full and legal Warrant; I ſhould have procured Authority from Parliament. I replied to this Interruption, That Houſes more remote from the Church of St. Paul's were pulled down by the King's Commiſſion only in King Edward the Third's time; and and humbly deſired a Salvo might be entered for me, till I might bring the Record: which was granted.

4. The laſt Inſtance for this Charge of St. Paul's, was the Houſe of W. Wakern; who witneſſed, that he had a Hundred Pound Recompence for his Houſe, but then was after fined in the High-Commiſſion-Court 100 l. for Profanation, of which he paid 30 l.

To this I gave this Anſwer, That his Charge is true; and that after he had received 100 l. Compoſition, the Cry of the Profanation brought him into the High-Commiſſion. It was thus: The Skulls of dead Men (perhaps better than himſelf) were tumbled out of their Graves into his Draught, and part of the Foundation of the Church (as appeared in the taking down of his Houſe) was broken, or pared away, to make room for the Uncleanneſs to paſs into the Vault: And ſurely were I to ſit again in the High-Commiſſion, I ſhould give my Vote to cenſure this Profanation. But himſelf confeſſes, he paid but Thirty Pound of it, which was too little for ſuch an Offence. And beſides, my Lords, this was the Act of the High-Commiſſion, and cannot be charged ſingly upon me.

And I cannot forbear to add thus much more, That the Biſhop, and Dean, and Chapter, whoever they were, did ill to give way to theſe Buildings, and to increaſe their Rents by a Sacrilegious Revenue; no Law, that I know, giving way to build upon conſecrated Ground, as that Church-Yard is. But howſoever, the preſent Tenants being not in dolo, I ever thought fit they ſhould have Recompence for their Eſtates, and they had it.

II. The next Charge was about the Shops of the Goldſmiths in Cheapſide and Lombardſtreet. An Order was made at the Council-Table, Novemb. 12. 1634. That within ſix Months the Goldſmiths ſhould provide themſelves Shops there, and no where elſe, till all thoſe Shops were furniſhed; and this under a Penalty, and to give Bond.

Theſe two were the antient Places for Goldſmiths only, time out of mind: and it was thought fit by the Lords, for the Beauty of the Place, and the Honour of the City, to have theſe Places furniſhed as they were wont, and not to have other Trades mixed among them. Beſide, it concerned all Mens Safety; for if any Plate were ſtoln, the Inquiry after it might be made with more eaſe and ſpeed: whereas if the Goldſmiths might dwell here and there, and keep their Shops in every By-place of the City, ſtoln Plate might eaſily be made off, and never heard of. But howſoever, if in this Order there were any thing amiſs, it was the Order of the Council-Table, not mine: and far enough off from Treaſon, as I conceive.

1. Upon this Charge there were two Inſtances. The firſt is Mr. Bartley; who ſaid, his Houſe was taken from him, by Order to the Lord Mayor, 1637. That my Hand was to the Order; That he was impriſoned ſix Months, and recovered 600 l. Damages of Sir Ed. Bromfield; That after this he was committed to Flamſted, a Meſſenger belonging to the High-Commiſſion, about Dr. Baſtwick's and Mr. Burton's Books; That after this he was ſent for to the Council, and there heard my Voice only; That when he deſired ſome help, Sir Thomas Ailsbury's Man told him, he were as good take a Bear by the Tooth; That all this was for his entertaining a Man that came out of Scotland: and laſtly, That Dr. Haywood, my Chaplain, had licenſed a Popiſh Book.

To which I gave this Anſwer; That if the Lord Mayor put him from his Houſe, by Order from the Lords, (being a Stationer among the Goldſmiths) then it was not done by me: and though my Hand were to the Order, yet not mine alone; and I hope my Hand there ſubſcribed no more Treaſon than other Lords Hands did. And if he did recover 600 l. againſt Sir Ed. Bromfield, who (I think) was the Lord Mayor ſpoken of, ſurely he was a Gainer by the buſineſs. And whereas he ſays, he was after ſeized again, and committed to Flamſted about the Books named; if he were (as was informed) a great Vender of thoſe and ſuch-like Books, leſs could not be done to him than to call him to anſwer. He ſays farther, that he was ſent for to the Council-Table, and there he heard my Voice only againſt him. It may be ſo, and without all fault of mine: for that heavy Office was uſually put upon me and the Lord Keeper, to deliver the Senſe of the Board to ſuch as were called thither, and examined there; and by this means, if any four or diſpleaſing Sentence paſſed, (how juſt ſoever, it mattered not) it was taken as our own, and the Envy of it fell on us. And that this was ſo, many Lords here preſent know well. He adds what Sir Thomas Ailsbury's Man ſaid, when he would have petitioned again: but ſince Mr. Bartley is ſingle here, and in his own Cauſe, why doth he reſt upon a Hearſay of Sir Thomas Ailsbury's Man? Why was not this Man examined, to make out the Proof? And if this Man did ſo far abuſe me, as to ſpeak ſuch words of me, ſhall I be abuſed firſt, and then have that Abuſe made a Charge? That he was troubled thus for a Scotchman's coming to him, is nothing ſo, nor is any Proof offered; though then the Troubles were begun in Scotland: and therefore if this had any relation to that Buſineſs, I pleaded again the Act of Oblivion. For that of Dr. Haywood, I ſhall give my Anſwer in a more proper place; for 'tis objected again.

2. The ſecond Inſtance was in Mr. Manning's Caſe. He ſpeaks alſo of the Order of the Council, November 12. 1634. That the Goldſmiths in their Book make an Order upon it, June 15. 1635. That they which obey not, ſhould be ſuſpended, (I think 'tis meant from Uſe of their Trade;) That when ſome intreated them to Obedience, I ſhould ſay, This Board is not ſo weak, but that it can command; or to that effect.

For the Council's Order, it was theirs, not mine. For the Order which the Company of Goldſmiths made upon it, it was their own Act, I had nothing to do with it. For the Words, if I did ſpeak them (which is more than I remember) he is ſingle that ſwears them, and in his own Cauſe. But, my Lords, I muſt needs ſay, whether I ſpake it then or not, moſt true it is, that the Council-Table is very weak indeed, if it cannot command in things of Decency, and for Safety of the Subject, and where there is no Law to the contrary. And this was then my Anſwer.

III. The Third Charge of this Day was, That I forced Men to lend Money to the Church of St. Paul's: and Mrs. Moore was called upon. But this was deſerted.

IV. The next Charge was concerning a long and tedious Suit between Rich and Poole, about the Parſonage of North-Cerny in Glouceſter-ſhire: That

Rich

* See this Record twice referred to afterwards. In the latter place the uſeful Words of it are recited. So that, perhaps, it will not be neceſſary to print the whole Patent; but if it be, I have a Copy of it. W. S.
A. C.
This came not to my hands. H. W.

Rich was turned out, after three Years Poſſeſſion, by a Reference procured by Poole to my Lord Keeper Coventry and my ſelf; and that I did in a manner act the whole Buſineſs at the Reference: That Letters were ſent from the Council to Sir William Maſters, one of the Patrons, to ſee Poole inſtituted, and to impriſon Rich if he refuſed Obedience: That after, by the Lord Marſhal's Procurement, there was another Reference obtained to thirteen Lords, who awarded for Rich.

I was never more weary of any Buſineſs in my Life than I was of this Reference. And I was ſo far from acting the whole Buſineſs, as that I did nothing but as the Lord Keeper directed, the Cauſe was ſo entangled with Quare Impedits, and many other Buſineſſes of Law. Our Judgments upon full Hearing went with Poole, and we certified accordingly. And upon this (it may be) the Letters mentioned were ſent down for Poole. And if the Lord Keeper that now is, then his Majeſty's Sollicitor, could not or durſt not meddle, but gave back his Fee, (as was farther urged) his Lordſhip is living to tell the Cauſe himſelf; for here was none ſet down, though it were urged as if he did it becauſe I was a Referree. And in the mean time, this is but a bare Report concerning him. If the thirteen Lords, to whom it was after referred, were of another Opinion, that was nothing to us, who, without any Touch of Corruption, did as our Knowledge and Conſcience guided us. And, my Lords, it ſeems this Title was very doubtful; for after all this, it came into this Parliament, was referred to a Committee, where Mr. Rich was very willing to compound the Buſineſs. 'And well he 'might; for I was ſince certified by a Gentleman, 'a Lawyer, that underſtood well, and was at the 'Hearing of that Cauſe, that it was one of the 'fouleſt Cauſes, on Rich's ſide, that ever he heard. 'And out of this I took the Sum of my Anſwer, 'which I gave to Mr. Brown, when he ſummed up 'my Charge.'

The Witneſſes to this Charge were Mr. Rich his Brother, and my good Friend Mr. Talboys. But this latter witneſſes nothing but that he heard me ſay that Poole's Behaviour was unfit; ſo there I checked the one Party: And that upon ſome Words given me by Rich, I ſhould ſay, Do you throw Dirt in my Face? And why might I not ask this Queſtion, if his Words deſerved it? So upon the matter, here is Rich ſingle in his Brother's Caſe, and nothing throughout that looks like Treaſon.

Here I had Snap given me, That I ſlighted the Evidence: Whereas they (as 'twas ſaid) did not urge theſe Particulars as Treaſon, but as Things tending to the Violation of Law, and ſhould be found to make Treaſon in the Reſult. 'The truth 'is, I did then think within my ſelf, that ſuch 'Evidence might very well be ſlighted in an Accu'ſation of Treaſon. But I thought better to for'bear; and ſo in my continued Patience expected 'the next Charge.'

V. Which was Mr. Foxlie's Impriſonment about Popiſh Books. That he was tender'd the Oath ex Officio, then brought before the Council, and impriſoned again by a Warrant under my Hand and others, and my Hand firſt to the Warrant, his Wife not ſuffer'd to come to him till he was ſick; that the chief Cauſe of all this was the Impropriations, becauſe he deſired to name the Men for the Feoffment.

My Lords, this Man confeſſes he was called in queſtion about Popiſh Books; but expreſſing no more, I cannot tell what to make of it; nor can I tell how to accuſe him of Popiſh Books. 'For I 'cannot tell which is leaſt, his Underſtanding of 'them, or his Love to them.' And for tendring him the Oath ex Officio, that was the uſual Proceeding in that Court. When he was brought before the Lords of the Council, he ſays the Warrant for his Impriſonment was under my Hand, and others: This was according to Courſe; ſo the Commitment of him was by the Lords, not by me. But my Hand was firſt; ſo was it in all Things elſe, to which I was to ſet it. And the Reſtraint of his Wife from coming to him, was by the ſame Order of the Lords: And upon her Petition, when her Husband was ſick, both of them confeſs ſhe had Admittance. But whereas he ſays the chief Cauſe of his Commitment was the Feoffment, he is much miſtaken: Himſelf ſays before it was about Popiſh Books. This I am ſure of, the Feoffment was not ſo much as mentioned againſt him; though he freely confeſſes that he got twelve Men to undertake that Feoffment: which was a great deal more Power than he could take to himſelf by Law. And his Wife ſpeaks not one word to the Cauſe of his Impriſonment. So he is ſingle, and in his own Cauſe; and no Treaſon, unleſs it be againſt Mr. Foxlie.

VI. The next Charge of this Day was Mr. Vaſſal's Impriſonment: And to ſave Repetition, I ſhall weave all the Circumſtances of Aggravation and my Anſwer together.

Firſt, He is ſingle in all, both Subſtance and Circumſtance. Secondly, He ſays, That he conceives I was the cauſe of his Impriſonment. But his Conceit is no Proof. He ſays again, That I ſaid at the Council-Table, (whither he was called) Why ſit we here, if we be not able to judge? It may be, my Lords, I ſaid ſo; I remember not now: But if I did ſay ſo, it was of ſuch Things only as were fit and proper for that honourable Board to judge of. Then he charged me, that I ſhould there ſay, That he did eat the Bread out of the King's Childrens Mouths; and that if he were in another Country he would be hang'd for it. 'I doubt this Gentle'man has borrowed ſome of Sir Henry Vane's Me'mory: But I remember no ſuch thing.' Yet if I did ſay it, it was no Treaſon: For if I did ſay he might be hang'd for the like in ſome other Countries, it was becauſe the Laws and Cuſtoms of other Countries, and this of ours, differ in many Things. So that by this Speech he was to thank the Law of the Land for his Preſervation, notwithſtanding his Oppoſition againſt Majeſty; which, where the Laws were not ſo favourable to the Subject, would not be endured.

He ſays, He was fain to depoſite 300l. into the Hand of Sir Abra. Dawes, and that it was taken out the next Day: But he ſays withal, it was done by a Decree at the Council-Board; and I hope I ſhall not be held Author of all Decrees which paſſed there. He ſays that I called him Sirrah: A high Crime, if I did ſo! High Treaſon at leaſt! But ſure this Gentleman's Spleen ſwell'd up Sir into Sirrah: 'For that is no Language of mine to meaner 'Men than Mr. Vaſſal is. The main of this 'Charge is Words; and thoſe (if utter'd) haſty, 'not treaſonable. And as M. Lepidus 'ſpake in the Caſe of C. Lutorius Priſ- 'cus, Vana à ſceleſtis, dicta à maleſi- 'ciis differunt; Vain Things differ 'from wicked, and Words from malicious Deeds. 'And let any Man elſe be ſifted as I have been 'for all the time I have been a Biſhop, which is 'now upon the Point of twenty and three Years, 'and

' Tacit. L. 3. Annal.

'and I doubt not but as high Words as theſe will 'be heard fallen from him upon leſs occaſion, and 'of greater Perſonages than Mr. Vaſſal is. Be'ſides, Mr. Vaſſal, at the end of his Teſtimony, 'deſired the Lords he might have Reparation; 'which altogether in Law infirms that which he 'teſtified.'

VII. After this followed a Charge about a Grant paſſed from his Majeſty to one Mr. Smith. The Difference was between Mrs. Burrill and him. As far as I can recall, it was thus: The King had made a Grant to Mr. Burrill, in his Life-time, of a Wharf, or ſomething elſe belonging to the Thames. Mr. Smith conceals this, and gets a Grant from his Majeſty over the head of the Widow and her Children: And, as himſelf confeſſes, his Majeſty being informed that Mrs. Burrill was Siſter to the reverend Prelate Biſhop Andrews, being then dead, [a] ſhould ſay, That he would not have granted it to Mr. Smith, had he known ſo much. This was an honourable Memory of his faithful Servant, her worthy Brother. But whatſoever was done in this Buſineſs, was by Order of the Council-Board, and not by me; as was alſo the 250 l. which (he ſays) was paid in to Sir William Beecher, (by way of Depoſite, as I conceive.) In which, if he had any hard Meaſure, the Law was open for his Right. And in the whole Buſineſs he is ſingle, and in his own Cauſe.

VIII. The next Charge was Sir Jo. Corbet's; which becauſe it is expreſſed at large in the Article before recited, I ſhall not here repeat, but apply the Anſwer to it, which I then gave.

Sir John ſays he was ſent for about reading the Petition of Right at a Seſſions in the Country; and that the Earl of Bridgewater ſhould ſay he was diſaffected to the King. This concerns not me in any thing. He ſays, That for this he was committed, lay long in the Fleet, and was denied Bail. But he ſays it was denied by the whole Board. 'So, by his 'own Confeſſion, this was the Act of the Council, 'not mine. And this Anſwer I gave to Mr. Brown, 'when he put this part of the Charge into his 'Sum.'

In his Cauſe with Sir John Stonehouſe about a Waſte, I cannot recall the Particulars: But whatever was done therein, himſelf confeſſes was by Order at the Council-Table, and his Majeſty preſent, April 18. 1638.

For the Iſle built by the Lord Viſcount Kilmurry, the Grant which I made, was no more than is ordinary in all ſuch Caſes; and 'tis expreſſed in the Body of the Grant, Quantum in nobis eſt, & de jure poſſumus. So there is nothing at all done to the prejudice of Sir John's Inheritance: For if we cannot grant it by Law, then the Grant is voided by its own Words. And that the Grant was ſuch, and no other, I ſhew'd the Deeds ready atteſted out of the Office. Beſides, had I wronged him, there was an ordinary Remedy open by Appeal to the Delegates. And this was well known to him; for he did ſo appeal from a like Grant againſt him by the now Lord Biſhop of Dureſme, then of Litchfield, and Sir John's Dioceſan. And whereas 'tis alledged, That I made this Grant without the Conſent of him the Patron, or the then Incumbent; Sir John acknowledges, like a Gentleman, that I ſent unto him for his Conſent, if it might have been had. And this I foreſaw alſo, that if I had denied the Lord Viſcount that which was not unuſual, then the Complaint would have fallen more heavy on the other ſide, that I made Perſons of Quality in a manner Recuſants, by denying them that Conveniency which was in my power to grant. So I muſt be faulty, whatever I do.

IX. Then the Buſineſs of the Tythes of London was raiſed up in Judgment againſt me. And it was read out of my Diary, that I projected to give the Miniſters Aſſiſtance therein.

I had been much to blame, having been Biſhop of London, ſhould I have had other Thoughts: For their Caſe is very hard; all their Offerings being ſhrunk away into nothing but a poor Eaſter-Book. The Miniſters of London had often petitioned about ſome Relief long before my Time; and I did then, and do ſtill think it moſt juſt they ſhould have it. 'For they 'are now under the Task-Maſters of Egypt; (Exod. '5. 7.) the Tale of Brick muſt be made, they muſt 'preach twice a Sunday, get Straw where they can.' And yet I never thought of any thing contrary to Law, had all been done which I deſired: For that was no more than that the Citizens would voluntarily yield to ſome reaſonable Addition, where Right and Need appeared. And this, I am ſure, nor did nor could croſs with the Act of Parliament concerning the Tythes of London. And Mr. Moſs, who is their only Witneſs in this Particular, ſays no more againſt me, but that I preſſed this Buſineſs much and often. Which is moſt true I did; and held it my Duty ſo to do; but ſtill in the way before mentioned.

X. After this came the great Charge (as it was accounted) concerning the Cenſure of Mr. Pryn, and Burton, and Baſtwick, in the Star-Chamber, and their Baniſhment (as 'tis called) upon it. The Witneſſes produced in ſome Circumſtances of that Cauſe, were Mr. Cockſhott, Tho. Edwards, William Wickens, Mr. Burton, Mrs. Baſtwick, and Mr. Pryn himſelf. The Cenſure is known and urged to be againſt Law: But ſo far as any Particular is put upon me, my Anſwer is preſent to it.

1. And, Firſt, for Mr. Cockſhott, he ſays, Mr. Attorney Banks ſent him (being then his Servant) to give me an Account of that Buſineſs. Hence 'tis inferred that I took care of it. This might have had ſome ſhew of Proof, if I had ſent to Mr. Attorney to give me an Account of it. But there's no Word of any ſuch Proof. And yet, conſidering what relation their Cauſe had to the Church, if I had ſent and deſired ſome Account of the Proceedings, I humbly conceive (my Place in the Church conſidered) it could have been no great Crime.

2. Then were read certain Warrants, one Feb. 1. 1632. for Commitment, another of Feb. 2. 1636. to bar Acceſs to them. Theſe were Acts of the Lords ſitting in Star-Chamber, not mine. Then was read a third Order, after Sentence given, of May 13. 1634. for the ſeizing of his Books. But this, as the former, was an Act of the Court, not mine: And 'tis expreſſed in the Order (as the Charge it ſelf lays it down) for the Diſpoſal of the Books according to Law. Then the Warrant of their Commitment to the Iſlands, Aug. 27. 1637. This Commitment was no Device of mine; nor did I ever hear of it till it was ſpoken by others in the Star-Chamber. Nor do any one of theſe Warrants prove any thing that can be called my Act. And I humbly conceive that I ought not by Law, nor can by Uſage of Parliamentary Proceedings, be charged ſingle for thoſe Things which were done in publick Courts. The laſt Order was, Nov. 12. 1637. about the Aldermen of Coventry, and the Quo Warranto reſolved upon againſt the Charter of that City, only for ſuppoſed Favours ſhewed to Mr. Pryn in his Paſſage that way. Firſt, 'tis confeſſed in the Charge that this was an Act of the Lords. Secondly, That it was made at a full Board. Thirdly, 'Tis not urged that any one Man diſliked it. Fourthly, The Complaint which cauſed it, was, that both Aldermen and their Wives, and other Citizens, were not content to ſhew Mr. Pryn Kindneſs; but they both did and ſpake that which was diſgraceful to the Star-Chamber Sentence. But howſoever, there is no Particular in that Order that is or can be charged upon me.

3. This for the Warrants. The next Witneſs concerning this Charge was Tho. Edwards. He ſays, That three Hampers of Mr. Pryn's Books were taken out of his Houſe, (whither it ſeems they were conveyed for Safety) and no Warrant ſhewed to take them. The weaker Man he, to let his Friend's Books go ſo. But this Witneſs hath not one Word of me.

4. The next Witneſs was William Wickens. He ſays, He knew of no Warrant neither; but that Licence was given by the Sheriffs about ſix Years ſince. Here's never a Word concerning me: Nor am I to anſwer for the Sheriffs Act. And whereas it is an Aggravation in the Charge, That all Mr. Pryn's Books were ſold; Tho. Edwards ſays there were but three Hampers of them; and this Witneſs ſays he bought them for two and thirty Pounds. And theſe neither by Number nor Price could be half of Mr. Pryn's Books, if I have heard Truth of his Library.

5. After this Man's Teſtimony, comes Mr. Pryn himſelf in his own Cauſe. He made a long Relation of the Buſineſs, and full of Bitterneſs againſt me. This I doubt not was purpoſely done, to repreſent me as odious as he could to the Lords and the Hearers. But I ſhall aſſume nothing to my ſelf, that was done by Order of the Court of Star-Chamber: Whatſoever was done there by common Conſent, was their Act, not mine; and if any Treaſon be in it, they are as guilty as I; for Treaſon admits no Acceſſaries. Nor will I meddle with the Language: God forgive him that, and whatever elſe he hath done againſt me. Only I ſhall anſwer to all ſuch Particulars of his as ſeem to touch upon my ſelf.

(1.) Firſt then he ſays, He brought a Prohibition, An. 1629. and that was the Ground of my Hatred againſt him. For Prohibitions, I ſhall anſwer when they are charged: But as I remember not this, ſo I bare him no hatred; and bearing him none, it could not be for that cauſe: Nor doth he ſo much as offer to prove it was.

(2.) Next he ſays, I gave Direction to Mr. Attorney Noy, and that Dr. Heylin drew ſome Informations for him. Dr. Heylin was well acquainted with Mr. Attorney; but how long, or upon what Grounds, I know not: Nor did I give Mr. Attorney any Direction. What Dr. Heylin did, if he did any thing, is nothing to me, unleſs I ſet him on; which is not proved, nor ſworn.

(3.) He farther ſays, That Mr. Attorney read his Book twice over, and ſaid, that he found nothing amiſs in it. I know not what Mr. Attorney ſaid to him, nor what he may ſay of Mr. Attorney now he is dead: This I am ſure of, and 'tis well known to ſome of your Lordſhips, he ſaid far otherwiſe in open Court.

(4.) He ſays, That his Book was licenſed to the Preſs, and after that ſeized; and that the Meſſenger told him it was done by me. This was done by Warrant of the High Commiſſion, not by me: Nor doth he offer any Proof againſt me, but that the Meſſenger told him ſo; which is a bare Hearſay, and no Proof.

(5.) Then he ſays, That there was another Order given about his Buſineſs, and that I did it. But he brings no Proof for this, but that Mr. Ingram, the then Keeper of the Fleet, told him ſo. But this is as bare a Hearſay as the former, and Mr. Ingram not produced to make out the Proof.

(6.) Then he ſays, He writ me a Letter, and that I ſent it to Mr. Attorney, to have him yet farther proceeded againſt. 'Tis true, my Lords, he did write unto me; but whether it were a Letter, or a Libel, I leave other Men to judge. This Letter I did ſend to Mr. Attorney; but only to let him ſee how I was uſed, not to have any farther Proceeding againſt him. But Mr. Attorney was ſo moved at the ſight of it, that when he ſaw me next, he told me he would call him Ore tenus for it. Therefore, it ſeems, ſomewhat was very much amiſs in it, call the Writing what you will.

(7.) He ſays, Mr. Attorney thought he had not kept the Letter; but he was deceived, for he had it. But how was Mr. Attorney deceived? I'll tell your Lo[rdſhips] what himſelf told me. When Mr. Attorney [ſaw] I would not agree to any farther Proſecu[tion] he ſent for Mr. Pryn, ſhewed him the Letter, and thought, after he had read it, to give him ſome good Counſel, to deſiſt from that libelling Humour of his. But Mr. Pryn, after he had got the Letter into his hands, went to the Window, as if he meant to read it; [the] while Mr. Attorney was otherwiſe buſied, [tore] it to ſmall pieces, and threw it out at the W[indow] and then ſaid unto him, This ſhall never riſe [in] ment againſt me. Now he confeſſes he [had] Letter ſtill, and that Mr. Attorney was deceived: Belike he tare ſome other Paper for it, and put the Letter in his Pocket. 'But that you may ſee 'the Honeſty of this Man, and what Conſcience 'he makes of that which he ſpeaks upon his Oath; 'here he ſays he had the Letter ſtill, and that 'Mr. Attorney was deceived: And yet after 'this, when he ſets out his Breviate of my Life, he confeſſes, in an 'unſavoury marginal Note, That he 'tare it, Mr. Attorney having need of 'ſuch a Paper. And for this Breviate 'of his, if God lend me Life and Strength to end 'this firſt, I ſhall diſcover to the World the baſe 'and malicious Slanders with which it is fraught.'

W. Pryn's Breviate of the Archbiſhop's Life, p. 19.

(8.) He went on, and ſaid, There was an Order made againſt him when Term was done, ſo that he could have no Remedy. This is directly againſt the Court and their Order, not againſt me.

(9.) Then he cites out of the Epiſtle before my Speech in the Star-Chamber, That I cenſured him for having his Hand in the Pamphlets of thoſe times, and yet was doubtful of it. The Words are; For I doubt his Pen is in all the Pamphlets. But, Firſt, 'tis acknowledged I gave no Vote at all in his Cenſure; and if I did not judicially cenſure him, then ſure I was not doubtful, and yet cenſured. Secondly, He was cenſured upon his own Pamphlet: And his Hand was certainly in his own, what Doubt ſoever I might make of its being in theirs. And, Thirdly, if the Words be extended to their Pamphlets alſo, that's nothing to prove I doubted of the Juſtneſs of the Sentence. For the Words are not, I doubt his Pen is in all thoſe Pamphlets of Mr. Burton and Dr. Baſtwick; but in all the Pamphlets, whether their Libels, or any others: ſo I might be doubtful of the one, and yet certain enough of the other.

Paulo poſt medium.

(10.) And

(10.) And whereas he adds, That he was jointly charged with Dr. Baſtwick and Mr. Burton, yet could not be ſuffered to ſpeak together for a joint Anſwer; and that his Croſs-Bill was refuſed: All this was done by the Court of Star-Chamber, not by me. And your Lordſhips know well the Lord Keeper managed the Affairs of that Court, not I.

(11.) Then he ſays, That at laſt Mr. Holt came to him, but was threatened that very Afternoon for it. But he doth not tell your Lordſhips by whom; and for my part, more than civil giving him the time of the day, I never ſpake with him in all my Life.

(12.) He tells your Lordſhips next, how he paſſed through Coventry (to which I have ſpoken already) and how through Cheſter, and how ſome Cheſter Men were uſed concerning him and his Entertainment. But, my Lords, whatſoever was done in this, was by the High Commiſſion at York; and if any thing be therein amiſs, they muſt anſwer that did it.

(13.) Laſtly, He ſpake of Sir William Balfore to me, and ſome other l[illegible]rticulars. Of all which there is no Proof, bu[t] a bare Relation what Mr. Hungerford, Mr. Ingram, and Sir William Balfore ſaid; which is all Hearſay, and makes no Evidence, unleſs they were preſent to witneſs what was ſaid. 'And here give me leave to obſerve well, Mr. Pryn hath in this Charge wo- together all that he could ſay concerning [illegible] Cauſes, for which he was cenſured: For [illegible] the third Particular he ſpeaks of his Book, 'for which he was firſt cenſured; and in the 'ninth and tenth of his Croſs-Bill, and the like, 'which were in his ſecond Cauſe.'

6. The ſixth Witneſs was Mr. Burton, a Party too. For that which he ſaid agreeable to Mr. Pryn, it received the ſame Anſwer. And he added nothing new, but that his Wife was kept from him by Warrant from the Lords. And if it was by the Lords Order, then was it not by me. And when it was replied, That till he was ſentenced to Guernſey, his Wife had acceſs to him: Mr. Burton anſwered, Yea; but, my Lords, ſhe was not ſuffered to be with me at Nights. At which the Lords fell a laughing, and there ended his Charge.

7. The laſt Witneſs was Mrs. Baſtwick; and ſhe alſo ſaid nothing different from Mr. Pryn, but that ſhe was kept from her Husband, and that ſhe petitioned the Lords about it; but of me in particular, not one Word. 'And though Mr. 'Brown, in his laſt Reply upon me, ſaid, The 'Time of theſe Mens Cenſure, was the noted 'Time of the Oppreſſion of the Subjects Liber-'ty; yet I ſhall crave leave to ſay of theſe Men, 'as St. Auguſtine once ſaid of two great Donatiſts 'in his time, who (it ſeems) had received ſome 'Sentence, and afterwards a Return, not altoge-'ther unlike theſe Men: (they were Felicianus 'and Pretextatus) of thoſe thus St. Auguſtine; If theſe Men were innocent, why were they ſo condemned? And if they were guilty, why were they with ſuch Honour returned and received? This applies it ſelf. And here I am willing to put the Reader in mind too, That Mr. Brown drawing up an exact Sum of my Charge, and preſſing it hard againſt me, to my Remembrance (and I think my Notes could not have ſlipped it) paſſed by this Charge concerning Mr. Pryn; 'and I cannot but think he had ſome Reaſon 'for it.'

Si innocentes erant, quare ſic damnati ſunt? ſi ſcelerati, quare ſic recepti? Aug. Epiſt. 172.

XI. This tedious Charge being over, the World ran round, and I was brought back again to another Charge about demoliſhing the Houſes at St. Paul's; and here three Witneſſes more came againſt me.

1. The firſt was Mr. Bently: He ſaid, There were above ſixty Houſes pulled down. I anſwered, I know not the Number; but if there were ſo many, the Recompence given was ſufficient for more. He ſaid farther, That there was twenty Yards between the Church and ſome of the Houſes. There were very few, if any ſuch, (let him look to his Oath;) but then ſome were cloſe upon the Wall of the Church. And ſuppoſe all had been twenty Yards diſtant; that was not room enough to bring in, and lodge Materials for the Repair, and to turn the Carriages. And here again I made mention of my Salvo, before deſired, for the Record of Ed. 3. touching the like Buildings, and their Demolition.

2. The ſecond Witneſs was Mr. Goare. For the ſixty Houſes, as was before teſtified, I gave the ſame Anſwer; as alſo, that the Act of the Council-Table cannot be ſaid to be my Act. For St. Gregory's Church, they were not left without a Place for Divine Service, (as he would fain have it thought:) For they were aſſigned to a part of Chriſt-Church, till another Church might be built for them. And for the pulling down of St. Gregory's, 'tis well known to divers of that Pariſh, that I was not ſo much as one of the Referrees, to whoſe View and Conſideration it was referred. But the truth is, this Man rented the Parſonage-Houſe, and had a good Pennyworth of it to gain by his Under-Tenant. The going down of that Houſe troubles him, and not the Church.

3. The third Witneſs, Walter Biggs, ſays nothing different from the two former; but that I ſaid I was oppoſed for the pulling down of the Houſes. Whence it was inferred, that it was my Act; becauſe I was oppoſed. But, my Lords, I hope, I might ſay, [I was oppoſed] without any Offence, or without taking the Order of the Council-Table to my ſelf: For 'tis well known the Work of that Repair, under God, was mine; and I took no indirect, no oppreſſing way to it: nor can I now be aſhamed of that, which, in future times, in deſpite of the preſent Malice, will be my Honour. So that the Care of the Work lying upon me, I might well ſay I was oppoſed, though the Oppoſition went higher, againſt the Orders of the Lords.

XII. The laſt Charge of this Day, was about the putting down of two Brewers in Weſtminſter, becauſe the exceſſive and noiſome Smoke from thence much annoyed the King's Houſe, Gardens and Park at St. James's. Theſe two were Mr. Bond and Mr. Arnold.

1. For Mr. Bond, he begins with ſomewhat that I ſhould ſay at the Council-Table; as namely, that he muſt ſeal a Bond of two thouſand Pounds to brew no more with Sea-Coal. Now this argues, if I did ſo ſpeak, that it was in delivering to him the Senſe of the Board; which Office (as I have before expreſſed, and is well known) was uſually put upon me, if I were preſent. And your Lordſhips may here again ſee what Envy hath followed me upon that which I could not decline. He ſays farther, That upon this Mr. Attorney Banks proceeded againſt him in the Exchequer; That there, upon ſome Occaſion, the Lord Chief Baron ſhould ſay, ſay, Ye are wiſe Witneſſes for the King; That his Counſel were forbid to plead, and ſo a Verdict paſſed for the King. All this is nothing to me; I was neither Chief Baron nor Witneſs, nor one of the Jury that gave the Verdict. He ſays, He was informed, that there was an Order of Council made, that no Man ſhould put up a Petition for him: But himſelf doth not ſo much as mention, that this Order was procured by me: And it is but a Report that no Petition might be delivered for him; and none of them that told him ſo, produced for Proof. So he ſcandalizes the Lords by Hearſay.

Next he ſays, That the King graciouſly ſent him with a Reference to the Council for Satisfaction. Firſt, I muſt believe, if he were ſo ſent, the Wrong being only the King's, and he willing he ſhould have ſatisfaction however for his Loſs; 'That the 'Lords would never refuſe, in ſuch a caſe, what-'ſoever is here ſaid to the contrary. Secondly, 'It may be obſerved how gracious the King was 'to the Subject; that though the Annoyance 'was great to that Houſe of his Recreation and 'Retiring near the City, yet he would not have 'Mr. Bond ſuffer without Satisfaction: notwith-'ſtanding which Goodneſs of the King, he comes 'into this great Court; and ſo he may have a 'blow at me, blaſts (as much as in him lies) all 'the King's Proceedings, under the Name of Op-'preſſion, and that in a high degree.' He ſays alſo, That a Friend of his perſuaded him to come to me, and offer me ſomewhat to St. Paul's; and that he did come to me accordingly, and that I ſaid I muſt have of him a Thouſand Pounds to St. Paul's: That he was not unwilling to give it, becauſe his Brewing was worth twice as much to him. My Lords, I humbly deſire your Lordſhips to conſider this part of the Charge well. Firſt, what Friend of his this was, that came ſo to him, he ſays not, nor do I know, and ſo have no poſſibility to examine. Secondly, he ſays not that I ſent this Friend of his to him, thus to adviſe him; and then his coming no way concerns me. Thirdly, when he was come upon this Friend's perſuaſion, if he were willing to give a Thouſand Pounds to St. Paul's, in regard of his double Gain from his Brew-Houſe, as himſelf confeſſes; I do not ſee (under favour) what Crime or Oppreſſion is in it. Laſtly, I remember none of this, and let him well weigh his Oath with himſelf; for I cannot call to mind one Penny that he gave to St. Paul's: nor yet ſhall I ever think it a Sin, to take a Thouſand Pounds to ſuch a Work, from any rich and able Man that ſhall voluntarily offer it; eſpecially upon hope of gaining twice as much.

To make this Charge the heavier, he ſays, I ſent him to the Queen-Mother, who lay then at St. James's; and that there he was laboured by ſome about her to change his Religion, and then he ſhould have all Favour. This is a bold Oath; let him look to it, for I ſent him not. It may be I might tell him, that if the Queen-Mother were offended with the Annoyance from his Houſe, it would not be in my power to help him; which was true. And that about his Religion, was added, to make your Lordſhips think that I ſent him thither for that purpoſe: but God be thanked, this Witneſs ſays not any one word tending that way. And for the Queen-Mother, ſince ſhe is thus mentioned, I ſhall crave leave to ſay two things: the one, That I did both in open Council, and privately, oppoſe her coming into England, with all the ſtrength I had; though little to my own eaſe, as I after found: the other, That after ſhe was come, the Lords of the Council went in a Body to do their Duty to her; that time I could not but go; but never either before or after was I with her.

Then he concludes, That there was a Capias out for him, and that he was fain to make an eſcape by night; which he did to Alderman Pennington, who very nobly ſuccoured him privately in his Houſe. All which concerns me nothing.

2. The other Witneſs is Mr. Arnold; who told as long a Tale as this, to as little purpoſe. He ſpeaks of three Brew-Houſes in Weſtminſter, all to be put down, or not brew with Sea-Coal; that Secretary Windebank gave the Order. Thus far it concerns not me. He added, that I told him they burnt Sea-Coal: I ſaid indeed, I was informed they did; and that I hope was no offence. He ſays, That upon Sir John Banks's new Information, four Lords were appointed to view the Brew-Houſes, and what they burnt. But I was none of the four, nor did I make any Report, for or againſt. He ſays, Mr. Attorney Banks came one day over to him, and told him that his Houſe annoyed Lambeth, and that I ſent him over. The truth is this; Mr. Attorney came one day over to dine with me at Lambeth, and walking in the Garden before Dinner, we were very ſufficiently annoyed from a Brew-Houſe; the Wind bringing over ſo much Smoke, as made us leave the place. Upon this, Mr. Attorney asked me, why I would not ſhew myſelf more againſt thoſe Brew-Houſes, being more annoyed by them than any other? I replied, I would never be a means to undo any Man, or put him from his Trade, to free myſelf from Smoke. And this Witneſs doth after confeſs, that I ſaid the ſame words to himſelf. Mr. Attorney at our parting ſaid, he would call in at the Brew-Houſe: I left him to do as he pleaſed, but ſent him not. And I humbly deſire Mr. Attorney may be examined of the Truth of this.

He farther ſays, That he came over to me to Lambeth, and confeſſes the Words before-mention'd; and that he offered me Ten Pound yearly to St. Pauls, and that I ſaid he might give Twenty. He ſays, That I ſent him to Mr. Attorney; but withal told him, that if he found not ſuch Favour as I wiſhed him, it was a ſign he had more powerful Adverſaries than my Friendſhip could take off. In all this I cannot ſee what fault I have committed. And I foretold him Truth: for though the Buſineſs were after referred to Mr. Attorney and myſelf, (as himſelf ſays) yet we were not able to end it. Then he ſays, I would not ſuffer Sir Edw. Powell, Maſter of the Requeſts, to deliver his Petition to the King. But firſt, this is but Sir Edward Powell's Report, and ſo no Proof, unleſs he were produced to juſtify it. Secondly, the World knows I had no power in Sir Edward; he would then willingly have delivered Petition, or any thing elſe, that he thought might hurt me: and the Cauſe is known.

Laſtly, He ſays, Mr. Attorney ſent out a Capias for him; that the Sheriff came by force to take him, and what hard ſhift he made to eſcape: That after, upon his Petition, the Lords gave him ſix Months time to provide himſelf elſewhere; and that he was fain to give Five Hundred Pound Bond not to brew there. To all this I then ſaid, and ſay ſtill, Firſt, here's no one thing charged upon me in particular. Secondly, here's not a word of my Advice or Endeavour to ſet on Mr. Attorney, or to move the Lords to any thing againſt him. And whereas it hath been urged, that my Power was ſuch, that I ſway'd the Lords to go my way; this cannot be ſaid, without laying an Imputation upon the Lords, as if they could ſo eaſily be overwrought by any one Man, and that againſt Law: which is a moſt unworthy Aſperſion upon Men of Honour. And if all this were true, it is but Treaſon againſt a Brew-Houſe. Nor yet may this be called ſlighting of any Evidence, which is but to anſwer home in my own juſt Defence. 'And out of this I gave my Anſwer to 'Mr. Brown's ſummary Charge againſt me in the 'Houſe of Commons, for that which concerned 'theſe two Brewers.'

And here, before I cloſe this Day, give me leave, I beſeech your Lordſhips, to obſerve two things. Firſt, That here have been thirteen Witneſſes at leaſt produced in their own Cauſe. Secondly, That whereas here have been ſo many things urged this day about the Star-Chamber and the Council-Table; the Act made this Parliament, for the regulating of the one, and the taking away of the other, takes no notice of any thing paſt: and yet Acts paſt (and thoſe Joint-Acts of the Council, and not mine) are urged as treaſonable, or conducing to Treaſon, againſt me. Nay, the Act is ſo far from looking back, or making ſuch Offences Treaſon, as that if any offend in future, and that ſeveral times, yet the Act makes it but Miſdemeanour, and preſcribes Puniſhments accordingly.

The Fifth Day of my Hearing.

FRiday, March 22. 1643. The firſt Charge of this Day was concerning the Indictment of Mr. Newcommin, a Miniſter at Colcheſter, for refuſing to adminiſter the Sacrament, but at the Rails; and the Proſecution, which followed againſt Burrowes for this. The two Witneſſes of the Particulars, are Burrowes and Mr. Aske.

1. The Teſtimony which Burrowes gave, was, That Mr. Newcommin would not adminiſter the Communion, but at the Rail; That he indicted him for receiving it there; That the Foreman threw it out, &c. If Mr. Newcommin did this, Complaint might have been made of him; but howſoever here's no one word of any Command from me. And it ſeems the factious Malice of Burrowes was ſeen, that the Foreman at firſt threw away the Indictment. He ſays, That upon this he was called into the High Commiſſion; a Warrant from me; his Houſe beſet; Stockdall left the Warrant with the Mayor; a Habeas Corpus not obeyed. The Warrant, by which he was detained, was from the High Commiſſion, not from me: and himſelf ſays, there were ſix or ſeven Hands to the Warrant. But then he ſays, my Hand alone was to another Warrant; which is impoſſible, for there muſt be three Hands at the leaſt, or no Warrant can iſſue out. And all his Proof of this latter is, that he ſaw my Hand; which I hope he may do, though other Hands beſides mine were to it. For the Habeas Corpus, if the Mayor ſaid (for ſo Burrowes adds) he would obey my Warrant, rather than the King's Writ, becauſe it came firſt; he was extremely ill adviſed: but if a Mayor of a Town give an undiſcreet, or a worſe Anſwer, I hope that ſhall not be imputed to me. And if there be any thing in this Buſineſs, why is not Stockdall the Meſſenger produced, that knows thoſe Proceedings? Laſtly, he ſpeaks of a Letter ſent to Judge Crawley, and ſhew'd to Judge Hutton. But firſt, he ſays not that Letter was ſent by me, or by my means. Secondly, he names not the Contents of the Letter; without which, no Man can tell whether it charge any thing upon me or not. And until the Letter be produced, or ſufficiently witneſſed, (neither of which is offer'd) 'tis but like a written Hearſay. And I humbly pray you to obſerve from himſelf, that the two Reverend Judges looking into the Buſineſs, ſaid, it was a mere Cheat for Money, and returned him back to Colcheſter: which is a Proof too, that the Habeas Corpus was obeyed; for if he were not brought up before them, how could he be returned by them?

2. Then Mr. Aske, the ſecond Witneſs, was produced. He ſaid, there came Players to Town, and that ſome, which ſaid they came from me, were taken in a Tavern upon Eaſter-Eve at unſeaſonable Hours. I know not of any that were ſent from me: but if any were, and kept any diſorder in the Town, eſpecially at ſuch a time, Mr. Aske did very well to queſtion them. He ſays, That upon the matter I referred him twice to Sir John Lambe, and that at the ſecond time he found the Plot was to make him an Inſtrument about the Rails, which he abſolutely refuſed. I did refer him (and it may be twice) to Sir John Lambe; but if Sir John ſpake to him about the Rails, he had no Commiſſion from me ſo to do. 'I under-'ſtood Mr. Aske too well, to offer to make him an 'Inſtrument in ſuch a Buſineſs. His 'Zeal would have ſet the Rails on 'fire, ſo ſoon as ever he had come 'near them.' Frigidius dictum. W. S. A. C.

Next he ſays, That Mr. Newcommin was indicted, as is afore ſaid, and that Indictment found: That Letters Miſſive were ſent for him and his Wife, by Stockdall. If Letters Miſſive by Stockdall, then they were ſent by the High Commiſſion, whoſe joint Act cannot be charged upon me: And if any thing can be proved, why is not Stockdall produced? He ſays, that he went into Holland to avoid the Oath ex Officio. The Oath ex Officio was then the common, and, for ought I yet know, then the legal Courſe of that Court: ſo I could not help the Tender of that Oath unto them, had they ſtaid and appeared. But the truth is, he was too guilty to appear; for his Wife was a Separatiſt, and himſelf confeſſes that ſhe came not to the Prayers of the Church. And as for him, I ever found him the great Maintainer of all wilful Oppoſition againſt the Church. He farther ſays, he came to me to Croydon, and that there I told him he might have put the Indictment againſt Mr. Newcommin in his Pocket. Indeed, my Lords, if I did ſay ſo, I think I ſpake it truly. For if he had borne any reſpect to the Reputation of the Clergy, I think he might have pocketed it for one Seſſions, without any prejudice at all to the Law, or any thing elſe. God knows, this is often done. And if thereupon I added, (as Mr. Aske ſays I did) That if he were ſo ſtrictly ſet againſt Churchmen in the Temporal Courts, he muſt look for as ſtrict Proceedings in the High Commiſſion; I ſee no great Crime in it: for we are as ſtrictly bound to proſecute in the one, as he was in the other. And if his Clerk (as he ſays) was attached, who read the Indictment; yet it is not ſaid by himſelf, that he was attached for reading it. 'And if it were 'ſo, that ſome Jurors were attached, and not 'Mr. Aske's Clerk only, (as Mr. Brown preſſed it 'in the Sum of his Charge) yet the Anſwer comes 'all to one. For no Witneſs ſays, theſe Jurors 'were

'were called into the High Commiſſion for being 'Jurors, or diſcharging that legal Duty. And 'then I hope a Man's being of a Jury 'ſhall not excuſe him 'for anſwering 'any Crime in any Court, that hath 'power to call him; provided he be not called 'off at the time of his Service, or while he is 'under the privilege of that Court, in which he 'is a Juror. And according to this, I gave 'Mr. Brown my Anſwer. And howſoever, the 'Attachment goes of courſe out from the Commiſ-'ſion, and not from me.'

II. The ſecond Charge of this Day was about the Cenſure which fell on the Inhabitants of Beckington in Somerſetſhire, about their refuſing to remove the Communion-Table according to the Order of their Dioceſan: About which were produced three Witneſſes, to whoſe Evidence I ſhall anſwer in order.

1. The firſt was William Longe, who ſays he was Foreman of the Jury, when theſe Men were indicted for a Riot; and that, as he conceives, the Parſon ſpake with the Judge about it, which cauſed a ſudden Verdict. The Parſon of the Place ſpake with the Judge, and he conceives that produced a ſudden Verdict: Firſt, he doth but conceive ſo, and that can make no Proof. If it did make Proof, 'tis only againſt the Parſon, not againſt me. And if the Parſon ſpeaking of it, did ſay, (as Mr. Longe affirms he did) That this Riot was like a Waldenſian or Swiſſerland Commotion; he muſt anſwer for his own diſtempered Language, me it cannot concern.

2. The ſecond Witneſs was George Longe. He ſays the Biſhop of Bath commanded the Communion-Table to be removed, and ſet at the upper end of the Chancel; that the Church-Wardens refuſing, were excommunicated: but he ſays withal, that they appealed to the Arches, and had remedy. Then he adds farther, That the Biſhop proceeded again, but the Church-Wardens would not remove it, ſaying it was an Innovation, and againſt Law. But, my Lords, 'tis neither: and therefore theſe Church-Wardens were in a great Contempt againſt their Biſhop, to the ill example of all that Country. And that it is no Innovation againſt Law, appears by the Injunctions of Queen Elizabeth, where it is commanded expreſly to be ſet there. The Words are;

Injunct. of Q. Eliz. fine. The Holy Table in every Church (not Cathedrals only) ſhall be decently made, and ſet in the place where the Altar ſtood.

Now all Men know, that with us in England the Altar ſtood North and South, at the upper end of the Chancel; and to ſet it Eaſt and Weſt, had been croſs the place where the Altar ſtood, and not in it. And this being Law in the beginning of the Reformation, cannot now be an Innovation.

When they came to me again, (as they ſay they did) if I then told them they deſerved to be laid by the heels for the Contempt of their Biſhop; under favour, my Lords, I ſpake Truth. And give me leave, I beſeech you, to tell you this: It began to be a general Complaint, not of the Biſhop of Bath only, but of other Biſhops alſo, that they could do little or no ſervice in their ſeveral Countries, by reaſon of the Inhibitions which iſſued out of my Courts to ſtay their Proceedings. And I wanted no good Friends in Court to tell the King as much, when any thing was complained of. By this I was brought into great Streights: deny Appeals, I might not; frequent granting in my Courts, deſtroyed in a manner the Biſhops Juriſdictions. In this difficulty, ſeeing the Wilfulneſs of theſe Men, and knowing they had received full benefit by their Appeal once already in the ſame Caſe; I did refuſe to hear any more of it, (unleſs there were new Matter) but yet left them free to appeal to the Delegates.

For Mr. Hughes, the Parſon there, if he gave ill Words, or laid violent hands on any of his Neighbours, it concerns not me; let him anſwer for what he hath ſaid or done. 'Tis farther ſaid, That Mr. Hughes was with me at Windſor, and had Letters from me to the Lord Chief Juſtice Finch. But this Witneſs delivers not this upon his own knowledge; I ſent no Letter by him, nor did he ſee me ſend by any other: ſo this is merely a Report, and he doth not ſo much as tell from whom. Yea, but then he ſays, That Mr. Morgan (a Man inward with the Judge) told him, that the Judge told him, that the little Man had put a Spoke in their Cart; and thereupon (as he conceives) the Petty-Jury was changed. Here are, if your Lordſhips mark them, two great Proofs. The one is the Witneſs's Report of Mr. Morgan's Report, that the Judge had ſaid ſo of me: But why is not Mr. Morgan produced to clear this? The other is not the Knowledge, but the Conceit only of the Witneſs: He conceives, which I am confident cannot ſway with your Lordſhips for a Proof. 'Beſides, were Mr. Morgan never ſo in-'ward with that Judge, yet it follows not, that 'he muſt know all. And if that Judge did mean 'me, (for name me he did not) he did me the 'more wrong. For I never deſired any thing of 'any Judge, him or other, but what was accor-'ding to Law. Nay, I ſo expreſſed myſelf, as 'that, if by miſtake or miſ-information I had 'deſired any thing which was not according to 'Law, I humbly deſired my Motion might be, as 'if it had never been made.'

3. The third Witneſs is Mr. Jo. Aſh. That which this Gentleman ſays, is, That Sir John Lambe told, that the Man which came about that Buſineſs, could have no Appeal admitted without me; and that if he would be ſo troubleſome, he ſhould be laid by the heels. I have given your Lordſhips an account, why he could not have an Appeal without me: he had had the benefit of an Appeal before in the ſame Cauſe. And for this Witneſs, he delivers no Knowledge of his own; but only he ſays, the Man employ'd related it to him: ſo 'tis a Relation, no Proof. He ſays, the Penance was enjoined them in three Churches. And truly, my Lords, their Diſobedience to their Biſhop was great; but if the Penance enjoined were too heavy, it was the Act of their own Biſhop, not mine. Then he ſays, That the Lord Finch told him, another powerful Hand was upon him; intimating me. Firſt, this is no Knowledge of the Witneſs, but a Speech of the Lord Finch. Secondly, if the Lord Finch did ſay ſo of a powerful Hand, he wronged me much, but himſelf more, to confeſs he could be drawn awry in Judgment. Thirdly, this Witneſs ſays not that he named me, but that he intimated me: I pray your Lordſhips Judgment, what a forward Witneſs this Man is, that can upon Oath deliver what is intimated, and of whom.

He ſays farther, That upon Petition to Sir William Portman for ſome Aſſiſtance, the Biſhop of Bath laid all upon me; and that when himſelf came to me at the Tower, ſince my Reſtraint, I told him the Biſhop of Bath did like an obedient Biſhop to his Metropolitan. For this, my Lords, here is no Proof, that the Biſhop laid this buſineſs upon me, but Sir William Portman's Report. Sir William is a worthy Gentleman, why is not he produced? Why is not the Biſhop, that is ſaid to lay all upon me, brought into the Court, that he may clear himſelf and me, if he had ſaid it not; or that I may make him aſhamed, if he ſaid it? For 'tis confeſſed, that in the firſt Buſineſs, the Church-Wardens had their Remedy by their Appeal to me; but that then the Biſhop began again, as the former Witneſs declared. Nor knew I any thing of this Buſineſs till the Appeal came. As for my Anſwer to himſelf, that, under favour, is quite miſtaken: For I did not ſay, That in this Particular, but that in his general Proceedings in his Dioceſs, the Biſhop of Bath carried himſelf like an obedient Biſhop to his Metropolitan. Nor can my Words be drawn to mean this Particular: For how could I ſay that in this Particular he carried himſelf like an obedient Biſhop to me, when after Remedy given to theſe Men by their firſt Appeal into my Court, he began with them again upon the ſame Cauſe? Beſides, my Lords, this is not the firſt time Mr. Aſh hath miſtaken me.

'Mr. Brown, in ſumming up this Charge againſt 'me, falls twice very heavily upon this Buſineſs of 'Beckington. Firſt, For the Point of Religion: 'And there he quoted a Paſſage out of my Speech 'in the Star-Chamber, where I do reſerve the In-'differency of the ſtanding of the Communion-'Table either way; and yet (ſaith he) they were 'thus heavily ſentenced for that which I my ſelf 'hold indifferent. But 1ſt, This Sentence was laid 'upon them by their own Biſhop, not by me. '2dly, The more indifferent the Thing was, the 'greater was their Contumacy to diſobey their 'Ordinary. And had it not been a Thing ſo 'indifferent, and without danger of advancing 'Popery, would Queen Elizabeth, who baniſhed 'Popery out of the Kingdom, have endured it in 'her own Chappel all her time? 3dly, The Heavi-'neſs of the Sentence, ſo much complained of, 'was but to confeſs their Contumacy in three 'Churches of the Dioceſs, to example other Mens 'Obedience. Secondly, For the ſame Point, as it 'contained Matter againſt Law, I anſwered Mr. 'Brown, as I had before anſwered the Lords.'

III. The third Charge was about certain Houſes given to St. Edmond's Lombard-Street, where old Mr. Pagett is Parſon. The Witneſſes are two.

1. The firſt is Mr. Symms, who ſays, That after a Verdict, Mr. Pagett the Incumbent, upon a pretence that theſe Tenements were Church-Land, got a Reference to the Lord Biſhop of London, then Lord Treaſurer, and my ſelf. My Lords, we procured not the Reference; but when it was brought to us under the King's Hand, we could not refuſe to ſit upon it. Upon full hearing, we were ſatisfied that the Cauſe was not rightly ſtated; and therefore we referred them to the Law again for another Tryal, and for Coſts to the Barons of that Court. 'And this was the Anſwer 'which I gave to Mr. Browne, when he inſtanced 'in this Caſe.' He ſays the Houſes were given to ſuperſtitious Uſes: But Poſſeſſions are not to be carried away for ſaying ſo. If Men may get Land from others by ſaying it was given to ſuperſtitious Uſes, they may get an eaſy Purchaſe. And Mr. Symms is here in his own Caſe. But whether the Houſes were given to ſuperſtitious Uſes, or not, is the Thing to be tried in Law, and not to be pleaded to us. He complains that I would not hear his Petition alone: And ſurely, my Lords, I had no reaſon, ſince it was referred to another with me. And yet I ſee, though I was not in the Reference alone, nor would hear it alone, yet I muſt be alone in the Treaſon. And here I deſired that Mr. Pagett, the Incumbent, might be heard.

2. The other Witneſs was Mr. Barnard: He ſays he was preſent at the Hearing; and that Mr. Symms ſaid he was undone, if he muſt go to a new Tryal. But, my Lords, ſo may Men ſay, that by their Troubleſomeneſs in Law-ſuits go about to undo others. He ſays that Mr. Pagett named his own Referees: If that be ſo, 'tis no Fault of mine. He ſays the Reference was made to us only to certify, not to make any Order in it: If this be ſo, here's no Proof ſo much as offered that we did not certify, as we were requir'd, and then had power given to order it; which we did. And he confeſſes the Counſel on both ſides had full hearing before ought was done.

IV. The fourth Charge of this Day was concerning the Impriſonment of one Grafton, an Upholſter in London. The Witneſſes three: Of which,

1. The firſt is Grafton, in his own Cauſe: And 'tis much if he cannot tell a plauſible Tale for himſelf. He ſays firſt, That twelve Years ago he was committed, and fined fifty Pounds by other Commiſſioners. By others, my Lords; therefore not by me: And an Act of the High Commiſſion, by his own Words, it appears to be. He ſays, He was continued in Priſon by my Procurement, as he verily believes. Firſt, (as he verily believes) is no Proof. And the ground of his Belief is as weak: For he gives no reaſon of it but this, That Dr. Ryves, the King's Advocate, ſpake with the Barons; but he doth not ſay about what, or from whom. He adds farther, That Mr. Ingram, Keeper of the Fleet, would not give way to his Releaſe, notwithſtanding the Barons Orders, till he heard from me. Here's no Man produced that heard Mr. Ingram ſay ſo; nor is Mr. Ingram himſelf brought to teſtify. Laſtly, he ſays, That he then made Means in Court, and ſo repaired to the Barons again, but all in vain; and that Baron Trevor cried out, O the Biſhop! O the Biſhop! Firſt, here's a Confeſſion of Means in Court made to the Judges: So belike they may have Means made to them, ſo it be not by me. For the Particular, I did humbly deſire the Baron, being then preſent, might be asked. He was asked: He bluſhed, and fumbled. The Lords laughed, and I could not hear what he ſaid.

2. The ſecond Witneſs was Mr. Lenthall. But he ſaid nothing, but that there was an Order for Grafton's Liberty; which is not denied.

3. The third was Mr. Rivett. He ſays, That Mr. Ingram ſaid that Grafton was a Browniſt, and muſt be brought into the Fleet again, becauſe he did much hurt among the King's Subjects. This is a bare Report of a Speech of Mr. Ingram; it no way concerns me. And a Separatiſt he is from the Church of England: But whether a Browniſt, or no, I cannot tell, there are ſo many Sects, (God help us.) And much harm he hath done among weak People: For moſt true it is, which St. Cyril obſerves, προετοιμάζει ὁ διάβολος τὰ σχίσματα τῶν λαῶν, ἵνα εὐπαρόδεκτος γένηται ὁ ἐρχόμενος, That the Devil prepares theſe ſchiſmatical Separations, that ſo much the more eaſily the Enemy may be received. As for this Man, he was in his way cunning enough; for under pretence that he ſuffer'd by me, he got Madam Vantlet, and other of the French, to negotiate with the Queen's Majeſty in his behalf. And this I found, that ſometimes, when her Majeſty knew not of it, they ſent to the Barons for Favour for him. 'And yet I never heard that Baron Trevor ever cried out, O the French! O the French! Nor can I tell what ſtopped his Mouth in this Cry, and opened it ſo wide in the other, when we moved to defend our ſelves and our Proceedings. Where, I humbly deſire, this Paſſage of the Law may be conſidered; in the caſe of depraving the Common-Prayer-Book, (ſo much ſcorned and vilified at this day) and for not coming to Church. The Words of the Law are, For due Examination hereof, the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty, the Lords Temporal, and all the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, do in God's Name earneſtly require and charge all the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Ordinaries, that they ſhall endeavour, to the uttermoſt of their Knowledge, that the due and true Execution hereof may be had throughout their Dioceſſes and Charges, as they will anſwer before God, &c. 1 Eliz. c. 2. Now, if I do not this, here's an apparent Breach of the Law: And if I do it againſt this common and great Depraver of this Book, then the Judge, who by this Law ſhould aſſiſt me, cries, O the Biſhop! And this Anſwer I gave Mr. Brown, when he ſumm'd his Charge againſt me.'

V. The fifth Charge of this Day was Mr. John Ward's Caſe, in a Suit about Simony in the High Commiſſion.

He ſays, (for he alſo is in his own Cauſe) That upon a pretence of a Lapſe by Simony, I procured a Preſentation from the King to the Church of Dinnington. His Majeſty truſted me with the Titles, which did accrue to him in that kind: And becauſe Simony had been ſo rife, commanded me to be careful I might not betray this Truſt. And therefore the Simony being offered to be proved, I procured his Majeſty's Preſentation for tryal of the Title. And this I conceive was no Offence; though this be that which he calls the Heavineſs of my Hand upon him. He farther ſays, That I ſent to the Biſhop of Norwich to admit the King's Clerk, the Church being void, 7 Junii 1638. Nor do I yet ſee, my Lords, what Crime it is in me, truſted eſpecially as before, to ſend to the Biſhop to admit when the Church is void: Many Lay Patrons do that, upon Allegation of Simony, before Proof. 'And Mr. Bland, produced as a Witneſs 'alſo, ſays, That the Lord Goring prevailed with 'the Lord Biſhop of Norwich not to admit. And 'I hope an Archbiſhop, and truſted therein by his 'Majeſty, may as lawfully write to the Ordinary 'for Admiſſion of the King's Clerk, as any Lay 'Lord may write againſt it.' But Mr. Ward ſays nothing to this of the Lord Goring; but adds, That Sir John Rowſe prevented this Admiſſion by a Ne Admittas, Junii 12. And that thereupon I ſaid, It was to no purpoſe for us to ſit there, if after a long Tryal, and Judgment given, all might be ſtopped. If I did ſay ſo, I think it is a manifeſt Truth that I ſpake: for it were far better not to have Simony tryed at all in Eccleſiaſtical Courts, than after a long Tryal to have it called off into Weſtminſter-Hall, 'to the double Charge and Trouble of the 'Subject. But if the Law will have it otherwiſe, 'we cannot help that. Nor is this Expreſſion of 'mine any Violation of the Law.'

Then he ſays, a Letter was directed from the Court of the High-Commiſſion to the Judges, to revoke the Ne Admittas; and that I was forward to have the Letter ſent. How forward ſoever I was, yet it is confeſſed the Letter was ſent by the Court, not by me: and let the Letter be produced, it ſhall therein appear, that it was not to revoke the Ne Admittas, but to deſire the Judges to conſider, whether it were not fit to be revoked, conſidering the Church was not void till Jun. 14. And it hath been uſual in that Court, to write or ſend ſome of their Body to the Temporal Judges, where they conceive there hath been a Miſinformation, or a Miſtake in the Cauſe; the Judges being ſtill free to judge according to Law, both for the one and the other. And here he confeſſes the Writ of Ne Admittas was revoked by three Judges, and therefore I think legally.

But here he hopes he hath found me in a Contradiction. For when I writ to the Biſhop of Norwich, Junii 7. 1638. I there ſaid the Church was void; whereas this Letter to the Judges ſays it was not void till Junii 14. But here is no Contradiction at all: For after the Tryal paſt, and the Simony proved, the Church is void to ſo much as the Biſhop's giving of Inſtitution; and ſo I writ Junii 7. But till the Sentence was pronounced in open Court, and read, the Church was not void, as touching thoſe Legalities, which (as I humbly conceive) do not till then take place in Weſtminſter-Hall: And the reading of the Sentence was not till Junii 14. However, if I were miſtaken in my own private Letter to the Biſhop, yet that was better thought on in the Letter from the High Commiſſion to the Judges. He ſays, laſtly, That upon a Quare Impedit, after taken forth, it was found that the King had no Right. Why, my Lords, if different Courts judge differently of Simony, I hope that ſhall not be imputed to me. In the Court where I ſat I judged according to my Conſcience, and the Law, and the Proof, as it appeared to me. And for Dr. Ryves's Letter, which he ſays was ſent to the Curſitor to ſtop the Ne Admittas, let Dr. Ryves anſwer it. The Witneſs himſelf confeſſes that Dr. Ryves ſays the Command to the Curſitor was from the Lord Keeper, not from me. 'And here ends the Treaſon againſt Mr. 'Ward; and till now I did not think any could 'have been committed againſt a Miniſter.'

VI. Then followed the Caſe of Ferdinando Adams his Excommunication, and the Suits which followed it: As it will appear in the Witneſſes following, which were four.

1. The firſt was Mr. Henry Dade, the Commiſſary then, before whom the Cauſe began. And he confeſſes, He did excommunicate Adams for not blotting out a Sentence of Scripture, which the ſaid Adams had cauſed to be written upon the Church-Wall, as in many Churches Sentences of Scripture are written. But he tells your Lordſhips too, that this Sentence was, [2] My Houſe ſhall be called a Houſe of Prayer; but ye have made it a Den of Thieves. The Commiſſary's Court was kept (as uſually it is) at or toward the Weſt-end of the Church; and juſt over the Court Adams had written this Sentence upon the Wall, merely to put a Scorn and a Scandal (though I hope an unjuſt one) upon that Court. 'He was commanded to blot it out: He would 'not, becauſe it was Scripture; as if a Man might 'not revile and ſlander, nay, ſpeak Treaſon too, '(if he will be ſo wicked) and all in Scripture-'Phraſe: Witneſs that leud Speech 'lately utter'd, [3] To your Tents, O Iſrael, &c.' Upon this he was excommunicated; and I cannot but think he well deſerved ſerved it. For the Suit which followed againſt Mr. Dade in the Star-Chamber; the Motion that Mr. Attorney would leave him to the common Proſecutor, and not follow it in his own Name, himſelf confeſſes, was made in open Court by Mr. Bierly, and that from me he had no Inſtructions at all.

2. The ſecond Witneſs is Adams in his own Cauſe. To the place of Scripture I have ſpoken already. And the next that he ſays, is, That Sir Nath. Brent, in my Viſitation, commanded the ſetting of the Communion-Table at the upper end of the Chancel; That upon his not blotting out the paſſage of Scripture, he had an Action; and that his Solicitor was committed by J. Jones, till he relinquiſhed his Suit. In all this there is not one word of any thing that I did. And for that which Sir Nath. Brent did about placing the Communion-Table, 'tis 'anſwered before. He ſays alſo, That when he ſaw he muſt proſecute his Suit againſt Commiſſary Dade in his own Name, he left the Kingdom. And ſurely, my Lords, if he would leave the Kingdom rather than proſecute his Cauſe in his own Name, 'tis more than a ſign, that his Cauſe was not very good.

' In the ſecond Charge of this Day.

3. The third Witneſs was Mr. Cockſhot, one of Mr. Attorney Banks's Servants. He ſays, That Adams moved him, and he Mr. Attorney; and that thereupon Mr. Attorney gave his Warrant againſt Dade. By which your Lordſhips may ſee how active Mr. Cockſhot was againſt a Church-Officer, and in ſo foul a Scandal. He ſays alſo, That Mr. Dade came to Mr. Attorney, and told him, that I did not think it fit, a Proſecution in ſuch a Cauſe ſhould be followed in Mr. Attorney's Name. Firſt, 'tis true, I did not think it fit; nor did Mr. Attorney himſelf, when, upon Mr. Bierly's Motion, he fully underſtood it. Secondly, The Cauſe being ſo ſcandalous to a Church-Officer, I conceive I might ſo ſay to Mr. Dade, or any other, without offence. But then, Thirdly, here's not one word that I ſent Mr. Dade to Mr. Attorney about it: He came and uſed my Name, ſo Mr. Cockſhot ſays; but not one word that I ſent him. Laſtly, He ſays, That Mr. Attorney told him, that I blamed him for the Buſineſs, and that thereupon he chid this Witneſs, and ſent him to me; and that I rebuked him for it: but he particularly remembers not what I ſaid. Nor truly, my Lords, do I remember any of this. But if I did blame Mr. Attorney for lending his Name in ſuch a ſcandalous Cauſe as this, I did (as I conceive) what became me. And if he chid his Man, he did what became him. And if I rebuked Mr. Cockſhot when he was ſent to me, ſure he deſerved it; and it ſeems it was with no great Sharpneſs, that he cannot remember any thing of it. 'And ſo I an-'ſwered Mr. Brown, when he inſtanced in this.'

4. The laſt Witneſs was Mr. Pryn, who ſays, No Appeal was left him. But that, under favour, cannot be: For if my Courts refuſed him (which is more than I know) he might have appealed to the Delegates. He ſays, That he adviſed Adams to an Action of the Caſe; that he blamed Lechford for deſerting the Suit, and that he adviſed him to go to Mr. Attorney. So here's no Aſſiſtance wanting to Adams, but the Church-Officer Mr. Dade muſt have none. Yet I blame not Mr. Pryn, becauſe he ſays he did it as his Counſel. He ſays farther, That when Adams was put to prefer his Bill in his own Name, that then the Excommunication was pleaded in Bar: But he doth not ſay it was pleaded by me, or my Advice; nor do I hear him ſay, it was unjuſtly pleaded. And had not Adams been wilful, he might have taken off the Excommunication, and then proceeded as it had pleaſed him.

VII. Then the Charge went on againſt me, about the Stop of Mr. Bagſhawe the Reader of the Middle-Temple. The Witneſſes are two Lawyers, who accompanied Mr. Bagſhawe to Lambeth, Mr. White and Mr. Pepys. They ſay, That Mr. Bagſhawe inſiſted upon theſe two Points; Firſt, That a Parliament might be held without Biſhops; and, Secondly, That Biſhops might not meddle in Civil Affairs. My Lords, theſe things are now ſettled by an Act of this Parliament, but then they were not. And I conceive, under favour, that Mr. Bagſhawe (the Crazineſs of theſe Times conſidered) might have beſtowed his time better upon ſome other Argument: And ſure no Man can think, that either my ſelf, or any Church-Governour, could approve his Judgment in that Particular. And whereas they ſay, That the Lord Keeper Finch, and the Lord Privy-Seal told them, that I was the Man that complained of it to the King and the Lords: 'Tis moſt true, I did ſo; and I think I had been much to blame if I had not done it. And if when they came over to Lambeth about it, they heard me tell Mr. Bagſhawe (as they alſo ſay they did) that he ſhould anſwer it in the High-Commiſſion Court next Term; I humbly conceive this no great Offence; but out of all queſtion no Treaſon to threaten the High-Commiſſion to a Reader of the Inns of Court.

VIII. The laſt Charge of this Day was concerning the Lord Chief Juſtice Richardſon, and what he ſuffered for putting down Wakes and other diſorderly Meetings in Somerſetſhire, at the Aſſizes there holden.

The ſingle Witneſs to this is Edward Richardſon, (a Kinſman of the Judge's, as I ſuppoſe.) He ſays, That Complaints were made to the Judge of Wakes and Feaſts of Dedication; That his Majeſty writ Letters about it to Sir Robert Philips and others. They certify a Command comes by the Lord Keeper to revoke the Order next Aſſizes. Firſt, 'Tis not done. Then by Command from the Lords of the Council, the Judge, upon that ſecond Command, revokes it; but as 'tis certified, not fitly. In all this here's not one Word that concerns me. Then he ſays, That upon this laſt Certificate, the buſineſs was referred to the Lord Marſhal and my ſelf, and the Judge put from that Circuit. I cannot now remember what Report we made: But whate'er it was, the Lord Marſhal agreed to it as well as I. Then a Letter of mine was produced of Octob. 4. 1633. But the Letter being openly read, nothing was found amiſs in it. And, under your Lordſhips favour, I am ſtill of Opinion, that there is no Reaſon the Feaſts ſhould be taken away for ſome Abuſes in them; and thoſe ſuch as every Juſtice of Peace is able by Law to remedy, if he will do his duty. 'Elſe by 'this kind of Proceeding, we may go back to the 'old Cure, and remedy Drunkenneſs by rooting 'out all the Vines; the Wine of whoſe Fruit 'cauſes it. As for the Pretences, which this 'Witneſs ſpake of; they were none of mine, as 'appears evidently by the Letter it ſelf.'

As an Appendix to theſe, was added a Letter of my Secretary Mr. Dell, to Sir John Bridgman, Chief Juſtice of Cheſter, in a Cauſe of one Ed. Morris. It was (as I think it appears) upon an Incroachment made in the Marches Court upon the Church; in which Caſe I conceive, by my Place, I may write to any Judge for Information: And there is nothing peremptory in the Letter. The Words are (If things be rightly ſuggeſted.) But howſoever, the Letter is Dell's; and if he have done amiſs in it, he is here preſent to anſwer. And it will be a hard buſineſs with Men of Honour, if, when any Lord ſhall command his Secretary to write, and give him Directions for the matter, he ſhall afterwards be anſwerable for every Slip of his Secretary's Pen; eſpecially in ſo high a way, as 'tis charged on me. But the beſt is, here's nothing amiſs that I know.

The Sixth Day of my Hearing.

I. THurſday, March 28. 1644. The firſt Charge of this Day concerned the Cenſure, Deprivation and Impriſonment of Mr. Huntly. The Witneſſes produced are four.

1. Mr. Merifield comes on firſt. He ſays, That himſelf was committed by the Lords of the Council; and that there I ſaid, That he the ſaid Merifield deſerved to be laid by the Heels, and to be called into the Star-Chamber. This Man was (as I take it) Mr. Huntly's Attorney; and if I did ſpeak thoſe Words concerning him, ſurely his Words and Carriage deſerved it; elſe I am confident the Lords would not have committed him for a naked, and an orderly following of his Client's Cauſe; eſpecially in the Preſence of two Judges, Juſtice Jones and Juſtice Crook, who, he ſays himſelf, were preſent. 'And this Anſwer I gave Mr. 'Brown; who, in the Sum of his Charge againſt 'me, omitted not this Caſe of Mr. Merifield; for 'ſo was this Attorney's Name.'

2. The next Witneſs is Mr. Huntly himſelf. He ſays, That I ſaid unto him, That he being an Eccleſiaſtical Perſon, and in an Eccleſiaſtical Cauſe, ought not to decline the Church-Cenſure. Then followed his Impriſonment, and his Action for falſe Impriſonment, and the reſt of his Proceedings. In all which the High-Commiſſion proceeded againſt him, and he proceeded againſt the High-Commiſſioners; nothing done by me, or againſt me, in particular. So nothing of his Charge falls upon me, but the Words; and for them, they are very far from offering to [1] exempt any Clergyman, him, or other, from the Temporal Laws, if things cognizable by them. But I humbly conceive, his Oath of Canonical Obedience conſidered, that he ought not to decline the Eccleſiaſtical Judicature, in Things merely Eccleſiaſtical. And if in this my Judgment I do err, yet it is Error without Crime; and ſurely, my Lords, no Treaſon.

3. The third Witneſs is John Dillingham. He ſays, That Mr. Huntly moved before the Lord Chief Juſtice Richardſon; and that the Judge replied, By his Faith he durſt not do him Juſtice. To this, my Lords, I anſwer: Here's never a Word that he durſt not do him Juſtice for fear of me; that's not ſaid by the Witneſs, and ought not, by Conjectures, be inforced againſt me. But howſoever, if he ſpake theſe words, the more ſhame for him. He is dead, and I will not rake into his Grave; but if he ſo ſpake, it ſeems he was none of thoſe Judges which Jethro adviſed Moſes to make for the eaſe of himſelf, and the good of the People, Exod. 18. 21. 'Mr. Brown, in ſum-'ming up of his Charge, preſſed this Speech of 'the Judge hard upon me; which inforces me to 'add thus much more, That this Witneſs lays it 'hard upon the Judge, not upon me: For no 'Proof is offered, that I did ſollicit him in that 'Cauſe: And if he wanted Courage to do Juſ-'tice, why ſat he there?'

4. The fourth Witneſs was Mr. Pit, a ſworn Officer; he ſays, the Order concerning Mr. Huntly was from the Council, and that there was then a full Board; ſo this was no ſingle Act of mine. He ſays farther, That he was not ſimply prohibited, but only till he had acquainted the Lord Keeper with it, or thoſe Judges whoſe Courts it concerned. And this was ſo ordered (as I conceive) to remedy the tedious and troubleſome Interpoſitions of Mr. Huntly. Where it is not unfit for me to inform your Lordſhips, that this Cauſe of Mr. Huntly's was in my Predeceſſor Archbiſhop Abbot's time; I had nothing to do in it, but as any other ordinary Commiſſioner then preſent had.

And here, at the entring upon my Anſwers this Day, I did in general put the Lords in mind, that nothing of late times was done, either in Star-Chamber, or at Council-Table, which was not done in King James and Queen Elizabeth's Times, before I was born; and that many Parliaments have been ſince, and no Man accuſed of Miſdemeanour for things done there, much leſs of Treaſon. Nor is there any one Witneſs that hath charged me, That that which I did, was to overthrow the Laws, or to introduce Arbitrary Government: 'That's only the Conſtruction made 'on't at the Bar; which, as it is without all Proof 'for any ſuch Intention, ſo I am confident they ſhall 'anſwer for it at another Bar, and for ſomething 'elſe in theſe Proceedings.'

II. Then followed the Charge about Prohibitions; in which are many Particulars, which I ſhall take in order, as the ſeveral Witneſſes charged them upon me.

1. The firſt is Mr. Pryn. He ſays, That in An. 4to Caroli he brought a Prohibition, and that thereupon I ſhould ſay, Doth the King give us Power, and then are we prohibited? Let us go and complain. Firſt, If this were Anno 4 Caroli, it was long before the Article; ſo that I could neither expect the Charge, nor provide the Anſwer. Secondly, I humbly conceive there's no Offence in the Words: For if a Prohibition be unjuſtly granted upon Miſinformation, or otherwiſe; or if we do probably conceive it is ill grounded, I hope 'tis no Sin to complain of it to the King, the Fountain of Juſtice in both Courts. Yea, but he ſays farther, That I ſaid I would lay him by the heels that brought the next: 2. And this Mr. Burton witneſſes with him. Firſt, If I did ſay ſo, they were but a few haſty Words; for upon ſecond thoughts it was not done. Next, I deſire your Lordſhips to conſider what manner of Witneſs Mr. Burton is; who confeſſes here before your Lordſhips, that he brought the next with a purpoſe to tempt me: You know whoſe Office that is; and ſo Mr. Burton hath abundantly ſhewed himſelf, and proclaimed his Religion.

3. As for Mr. [2] Comes, he ſays juſt the ſame with Mr. Pryn, and I give the ſame Anſwer.

Then about taking down of a Pew in a Church in London, (my Notes are uncertain for the Name) which Pew was ſet above the Communion-Table; That I required to have it pulled down; That they came to me to have an Order for it: and that there-thereupon I ſhould ſay, You deſire an Order of Court, that you may have it to ſhew, and get a Prohibition; but I will break the back of Prohibitions, or they ſhall break mine. 4, 5. And this is jointly witneſſed by Mr. Pocock and Mr. Langham: and this they ſay was thirteen or fourteen Years ago. Excellent Memories, that can punctually ſwear Words ſo long after! But, my Lords, I confeſs to your Lordſhips, I could never like, that Seats ſhould be ſet above the Communion-Table: if that be an Error in me, be it ſo. For the Words, I did not ſpeak them of Prohibitions in general, but of ſuch as I did conceive very illegal; as, for ought I yet know, this muſt have been. 'And this was the 'Anſwer which I gave Mr. Brown, when in ſum-'ming up the Charge he inſtanced in this againſt 'me.' 6. To theſe Rowland Tomſon adds new Words; That I wondered who durſt grant a Prohibition, the High-Commiſſion Court being above all. But he confeſſes, he knows not the time when this was ſpoken. Let him look to his Oath, for I am as confident he knows not the thing. And I farther believe, that neither he, nor any the reſt of my Accuſers think me ſo ignorant, as to ſay the High-Commiſſion Court was above all.

7. Francis Nicolas ſays, That about four Years ſince he delivered a Prohibition, and was committed for it. 8. To this, Quaterman comes in, and ſays more than Nicolas himſelf: for he ſays, he delivered it in upon a Stick, and was committed for it. Firſt, if he were committed, it was not for bringing the Prohibition, but for his unmannerly Delivery of it; and to reach it into the Court upon a Stick to call the People to ſee it, was no handſome way of Delivery. And one that brought a Prohibition (whether this Man or no, I cannot certainly ſay) threw it with that violent Scorn into the Court, that it bounded on the Table, and hit me on the Breaſt, as I ſat in Court. Howſoever, his Commitment was the Act of the Court, not mine: And for Quaterman, he is an exaſperated Man againſt me and that Court, as hath appeared to the World many ways.

9. Mr. Edwards was called up next; and he ſays, It was a common thing to lay them by the heels which brought Prohibitions. And they were commonly brought by bold impudent Men, picked out of purpoſe to affront the Court. And then if the Court made their Impriſonment as common as they their Rudeneſs, where's the fault? And I pray mark, this is ſtill the Act of the Court, not mine.

10. Mr. Welden ſays, That there was a Command given to lay hold of a Man, which brought a Prohibition: But more he ſays not. Nor did he offer to make himſelf Judge of the Juſtice of the Court in that behalf. And conſidering what Affronts have been put upon the Court of High Commiſſion by the Bringers of Prohibitions, I hope it ſhall not be accounted a Crime to ſtay him that brings it, till the Prohibition be ſeen and conſidered.

11. 'The next Witneſs is Mr. Ward; and he is 'an angry Witneſs, for his Cauſe before-men-'tioned about Simony.' That which he ſays, is, That Ann. 1638. he that brought a Prohibition in a Cauſe of Mr. Foetroughts, was laid by the heels: but he himſelf confeſſes, the Court then declared, that they were affronted by him; and then he was puniſhed for that Miſdemeanour in his Carriage, not for bringing the Prohibition. He ſays farther, That I directed ſome Commiſſioners to attend the Judges about it, and that the Party had no benefit by his Prohibition. For my directing Attendance upon the Judges, I think I did what well became me; for there came a Rule before the Prohibition, which required the Court ſo to do: 'And Mr. Pryn objected, becauſe this was 'not done; and now I am accuſed, becauſe I gave 'direction to do it.' And if the Party had no benefit by his Prohibition, it muſt needs follow, that either the Judges were ſatisfied by our Information of the Cauſe; or if not, that they did Mr. Foetroughts the wrong, and not we.

12. The laſt Witneſs about Prohibitions, was Mr. Wheeler. He ſays, that in a Sermon of mine long ſince, I uſed theſe words; They which grant Prohibitions to the diſturbance of the Church's Right, God will prohibit their Entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven: And he ſays he writ down the Words, that he might remember them. If this Gentleman will tell me what Text I then preached on, I will look upon my Sermon, (if that, with my other Papers, be not taken from me) and ſhew the place. In the mean time, with that Limitation with which he confeſſes I ſpake them, I conceive there is no fault at all in the words. For it will be found no ſmall fault in Judges to grant Prohibitions to the diſturbance of the Rights of the Church, which no Law of God or Man warrants them to do. So the words I ſpake, muſt needs be underſtood of illegal Prohibitions. For they which are legal, do only ſtop the Church from doing wrong, but do no wrong to the Church by diſturbing her Rights. 'Mr. Brown charged this 'Sermon-Note upon me alſo, and I gave him this 'Anſwer. Nevertheleſs, I cannot but be ſorry 'to hear it from Mr. Wheeler's own mouth, that 'he was ſo careful to write this Paſſage, and ſo 'ready to come to witneſs it againſt me, conſi-'dering how many Years I have known him, and 'how freely he hath often come to my Table, and 'been welcome to me; yet never told me, this 'Paſſage in my Sermon troubled him. It ſeems 'ſome Malignity or other laid it up againſt this 'wet Day.'

Here, having thus anſwered all Particulars, I humbly craved leave of their Lordſhips, to inform them ſome few things concerning Prohibitions. As Firſt, that there was a great Conteſtation about them, between my Predeceſſor, Archbiſhop Bancroft, and the then Judges, and this before King James and the Lords of the Council; and Mr. Attorney Hobart pleaded for the Church againſt them. Sir Henry Martin gave me Copies of all thoſe Papers on both ſides. No final End made, that I could ever hear of. This calling them all in queſtion, was far more than ever was done by me, or in my time; and yet no Accuſation at all, much leſs any of Treaſon, put up againſt Archbiſhop Bancroft for this. Secondly, I have here Papers atteſted of all the Prohibitions, which have been admitted in my Courts of Arches and Audience; and I find, there are as many (if not more) admitted in my ſeven Years time, as in any ſeven Years of my Predeceſſor Archbiſhop Abbot. And theſe Papers I delivered into the Court. As for the High-Commiſſion, the Records are all taken from us; elſe I make no doubt, but it would ſoon appear by them, that as many have been admitted there alſo. Thirdly, There is a great difference touching Prohibitions, and the ſending of them, ſince the Times of Reformation, and before. For before, the Biſhops Courts were kept under a foreign Power; and there were then then weighty Reaſons for Prohibitions, both in regard of the King's Power, and the Subjects Indemnity. But ſince the Reformation, all Power exerciſed in the Spiritual Courts is from the King, as well as the Temporal; ſo that now there neither is nor can be ſo much Cauſe as formerly was. And yet all that I did humbly and earneſtly deſire, was, that ſome known Bounds might be ſet to each Court, that the Subject might not, to his great Trouble and Expence, be hurried, as now he was, from one Court to another. And here I deſired a Salvo, till I might bring [1] Archbiſhop Parker's Book, to ſhew his Judgment in this Point, in the beginning of the Reformation, if it ſhall be thought needful. 'Accord-'ing to whoſe Judgment (and he proves it at 'large) there is open Wrong done to the Eccleſi-'aſtical Juriſdiction by Prohibitions.'

III. The next Charge is about my undue taking of Gifts: A Charge which I confeſs I did not think to meet here. And I muſt and do humbly deſire your Lordſhips to remember, that till this Day I have not been accuſed, in the leaſt, for doing any thing corruptly: And if I would have had any thing to do in the baſe dirty Buſineſs of Bribery, I needed not have been in ſuch Want as now I am. But my Innocency is far more to my Comfort, than any Wealth ſo gotten could have been: For I cannot forget that of Job, That [2] Fire ſhall conſume the Tabernacles of Bribery. 'And in the Roman Story, 'when [3] P. Rutilius, a Man Summâ 'Innocentiâ, of greateſt Integrity, was 'accuſed, condemned, and baniſhed, 'tis obſerved, by the Story, that he ſuffered all 'this not for Bribery, of which he was not guil-'ty, but ob Invidiam, for Envy; againſt which, 'when it rages, no Innocency, no Worth of any 'Man is able to ſtand.

1. But to come to the Particulars: The firſt is the Caſe of Sir Edward Greſham's Son, unhappily married againſt his Father's Will; a Suit in the High-Commiſſion about it; and that there he had but fifty Pounds Damages given him. That was no fault of mine: My Vote gave him more; but it was carried againſt me. The Bond of two hundred Pounds, which was taken according to [4] Courſe in the Court, was demanded of me by Sir Edward, to help himſelf that way; and 'tis confeſſed I granted it. But then 'tis charged, That in my Reference to Sir John Lambe, to deliver him the Bond, I required him to demand one half of the Forfeiture of the Bond toward the Repair of St. Paul's. 'Tis true, I did ſo: But, 1ſt, I deſire it may be conſidered, that it was wholly in my Power whether I would have delivered him the Bond, or not. 2dly, That upon this groſs Abuſe, I might have ſued the Bond in my own Name, and beſtowed the Money upon what charitable Uſes I had thought fit. 3dly, That I did nothing herein but what the Letters-Patent for Repair of St. Paul's gave me Power to do. 4thly, That this is the third time St. Paul's is urged againſt me: Which I am not ſorry for; becauſe I deſire (ſince 'tis once moved) it may be ſifted to the uttermoſt. And whereas, to make all Eccleſiaſtical Proceedings the more odious, it was urged, That the Rubrick in the Common-Prayer Book mentions no Licence, but Asking of Banes: That Rubrick is to be underſtood where no Licence is granted: For elſe no Licence at all for Marriage without Banes-asking can be good; which is againſt the Common both Law and Practice of the Kingdom. Can. 62. Ec. Ang.

2. The ſecond Particular was charged by one Mr. Stone, of London; who ſaid, He ſent into Lambeth two Butts of Sack, in a Cauſe of ſome Cheſter-Men, whom it was then in my Power to relieve, and mitigate their Fine ſet upon them in the High-Commiſſion at York, about Mr. Pryn's Entertainment, as he paſſed that way; and that this Sack was ſent in before my Compoſition with him what ſhould be mittigated, and ſo before my Return of the Fine mitigated into the Exchequer. The Buſineſs, my Lords, was thus: His Majeſty having taken the Repair of the Weſt-end of St. Paul's to himſelf, granted me to that end all the Fines in the High-Commiſſion Court, both here and at York, and left the Power of Mitigation in me. The Cheſter-Men, which this Witneſs ſpeaks of, were deeply ſentenced at York for ſome Miſdemeanours about Mr. Pryn, then lately ſentenced in the Star-Chamber. One or more of them were Debtors to this Mr. Stone, to the Value of near three thouſand Pounds, (as he ſaid.) Theſe Men, for fear of the Sentence, kept themſelves cloſe, and gave Mr. Stone to know how it was with them; and that if he could not get me to moderate the Fine, they would away, and ſave themſelves, (for they had now heard the Power was in me.) Upon this, Mr. Stone, to ſave his own Debt of three thouſand Pounds, ſends his Son-in-Law Mr. Wheat and Dr. Bailie, Men that were bred in the College of St. John under me, and had ever ſince good Intereſt in me, to deſire my Favour. I at firſt thought this a Pretence, and was willing to preſerve to St. Paul's as much as fairly I might. But at laſt, upon their earneſt pleading that the Men were not rich, and that Mr. Stone was like (without any fault of his) to be ſo much damnified, I mitigated their Fines, which were in all above a thouſand Pounds, to two hundred. I had great Thanks of all Hands; and was told from the Cheſter-Men, that they heartily wiſhed I had had the Hearing of their Cauſe from the beginning. While Mr. Wheat and his Brother Dr. Bailie were ſolliciting me for favour to Mr. Stone, he thinks upon ſending Sack into my Houſe, and comes to my Steward about it. My Steward acquaints me with it. I gave him abſolute Command not to receive it, nor any thing from any Man that had Buſineſs before me: So he refuſes to admit of any. Mr. Stone preſſes him again, and tells him he had no relation to the Cheſter-Mens Cauſe; but would give it for the great Favour I had always ſhew'd to his Son-in-Law. But ſtill I commanded my Steward to receive none. When Mr. Stone ſaw he could not faſten it, he watches a time when my Steward was out of Town, and my ſelf at Court, and brings in his Sack, and tells the Yeoman of my Wine-Cellar he had leave to lay it in. My Steward comes home, finds the Sack in the Cellar; tells me of it: I commanded it ſhould be taken out, and carried back. Then Mr. Stone comes, intreats he may not be ſo diſgraced; proteſts, as before, that he did it meerly for my great Favour to his Son-in-Law; and that he had no relation to the Cheſter-Mens Buſineſs: And ſo after he proteſted to my ſelf, meeting me in a Morning, as I was going over to the Star-Chamber. Yet afterwards this Religious Profeſſor (for ſo he carries himſelf) goes home, and puts the Price of the Sack upon the Cheſter-Men's Account. Hereupon they complain to the Houſe of Commons; and Stone is their Witneſs.

This

This is the Truth of this Buſineſs, as I ſhall anſwer it to God. 'And whether this do not 'look like a thing plotted by the Faction, ſo much 'imbittered againſt me, let underſtanding Men 'judge.' Mr. Wheat, his Son-in-Law, was preſent in Court, and there avowed that he tranſacted the Buſineſs with me, and that he went not out of Town till I had agreed to the Mitigation; that in all that time there was no Tender of Sack, or or any thing elſe, unto me; and he and Dr. Bailie the only Men with whom I tranſacted the whole Buſineſs. 'And ſo much could Dr. Bailie alſo witneſs, 'but that (as the Times are) I could not bring 'him from Oxford.' With Mr. Stone himſelf I never treated. For my Steward, he is dead three Years ſince, who could have been my Witneſs clean thorough the Buſineſs. And when I preſſed Mr. Stone at the Bar with the Proteſtation which he made to me, that he had no relation herein to the Cheſter-Men, he that remembred every Circumſtance elſe, ſaid he remembred not that. Then I offered to take my voluntary Oath of the Truth of it; but that was not admitted. Then it was preſſed, That this Bribe muſt needs be before the Agreement; for he ſays the Sack was ſent in to my Houſe--------, and the Mitigation of the Fine into the Exchequer not till -------. But that is nothing; for my Agreement was paſſed, and I meddled no more with it. Yea, but he ſays, That Mr. Holford my Servant had forty Pounds more than I agreed upon, before he would finiſh their Buſineſs. Mr. Holford was the King's Officer for thoſe Returns into the Exchequer: And if after my Agreement made, he either unduly delay'd their Buſineſs, or corruptly took any Money from them, he is living, and muſt anſwer for his own Fault: Me it cannot concern, who did not ſo much as know of it.

'Mr. Wheat, having thus teſtified in open Parliament, before the Lords, was within a Day or 'two called before the Committee; there re-examined in private, and very ſtrictly, touching the 'time of my Agreement made: Then (not without ſome Harſhneſs) commanded not to depart 'the Town, till he heard farther from them. This 'himſelf afterwards told me. Hereupon I reſolved to call him again for farther Evidence, and, 'if I ſaw cauſe, to acquaint the Lords with this 'Uſage. And I did call upon it divers times after; 'but one Delay or other was found, and I could 'never obtain it. And ſuch a kind of calling my 'Witneſſes to a private After-reckoning, is that 'which was never offered any Man in Parliament. 'And here Mr. Brown, in ſumming up my Charge, 'did me a great deal of Right: For neither to the 'Lords, nor in the Houſe of Commons, did he 'vouch ſafe ſomuch as to name this falſe, baſe, and 'unworthy Charge; of which my greateſt Enemies 'are ready to acquit me.'

3. The third Particular was charged by one Mr. Delbridge; who ſays, He was oppreſſed at the Council-Table by the Lord Keeper Finch; that he was adviſed by Mr. Watkins to give my Secretary Mr. Dell Money, to get my Hand to a Petition to the Lord Keeper, who, he ſaid, would not oppoſe me: That Dell took of him one hundred and fifty Pounds, and procured my Hand to his Petition. I remember nothing of this Buſineſs, and it lies wholly upon my Secretary; who being my Sollicitor, is here preſent in Court, and deſires he may anſwer the Scandal. There's no Touch at all upon me, but that (he ſays) my Secretary got my Hand to his Petition to the Lord Keeper. This Petition of his was either juſt or unjuſt: If juſt, I committed no Fault it ſetting my Hand to it; if unjuſt, he muſt confeſs himſelf a diſhoneſt Man, to offer to get my Hand to boulſter out his Injuſtice: And yet if the Injuſtice of it were varniſhed over with fair Pretences, and ſo kept from my Knowledge, the Crime is ſtill his own, and nothing mine, but an Error at moſt. As for Mr. Watkins, he did me much Wrong, if he ſent any Man to my Houſe on ſuch an Errand.

'Here my Secretary had leave to ſpeak; denied 'the whole Buſineſs; and produced Mr. Hollys, 'with whom it was ſaid the hundred and fifty 'Pounds before named ſhould be depoſited, who '(to my Remembrance) ſaid he knew of no ſuch 'Thing.'

4. The fourth Inſtance was a Bond for the Payment of Money as a Fine: The Bond found in Sir Jo. Lamb's Chamber, with a Note upon the Back of it, for one hundred Pound received, and Sir John by my Direction was to call for the reſt. And here it was ſaid, That I uſed the Name of St. Paul's in an illegal way to get Money; which might well have been ſpared. For (as is aforeſaid) I had a Broad-Seal, which gave me all Fines in the High Commiſſion Court to the repairing of the Weſt-end of St. Paul's, and with Power to mitigate. And the Fines are the King's, and he may give them by Law. The Broad-Seal is in the hands of Mr. Holford, who is thereby appointed Receiver of all ſuch Fines; but is upon Record to be ſeen: And if it be doubted, I humbly deſire a Salvo till the Record can be taken out, and ſhewed. But I preſume theſe Gentlemen have ſeen it. And Commutations for ſuch Crimes, as Sir James Price's was, are according to Law, and the antient Cuſtom and Practice in this Kingdom, eſpecially where Men of Quality are the Offenders. And the Power of commuting is as legal in that Court as any other: And if that be doubted, I humbly deſire my Counſel may argue it.

5. The fifth Inſtance was a Charge concerning a Leaſe in Lancaſhire, held in three Lives by Sir Ralph Aſhton. 'Tis ſaid by his Son Mr. Aſhton, (the only Witneſs in the Cauſe) That I by Power at Cheſter and York, and the High Commiſſion here, being Landlord in Right of my Archbiſhoprick, did violently wreſt this Leaſe of the Rectory of Whally in Lancaſhire out of his hands againſt Law, and made him take a Leaſe for Years, and pay a great Fine beſides, and other Fines beſides toward the Repair of St. Paul's, and raiſed the Rent ſixty Pound. Truly, my Lords, I am not any whit ſollicitous to anſwer this Charge. I challenged this Leaſe as void, and had great reaſon ſo to do, both for the Invalidity of the Leaſe it ſelf, and the Unworthineſs of the Tenant, both to me and my See. If in the Preparations for Tryal at Law, the Judge at Cheſter (altogether unknown to me, and unlaboured by me) did ſay, (as Mr. Aſhton ſays he did) That for higher Powers above he durſt not, he was the more unworthy. And for York, I needed no Power there; for I reſolved to have him called into the High Commiſſion here: which was after done.

This Gentleman his Son came to me about the Leaſe: I told him plainly, it was void in Law, and that I meant to overthrow it; That if his Father would ſurrender, I would renew it for Years at a reaſonable Rate; but if he put me to expence in Law, I would ſecure my ſelf, as well as legally I might. He replied, That Mr. Sollicitor Littleton (for ſo then he was) ſaid, he durſt not be againſt me. And there was good reaſon for it; he was my Counſel, and feed in that Particular. And what a poor Evaſion was this? Were there no other Lawyers for him, becauſe Mr. Sollicitor was for me? The truth is, all that ever I did in this Buſineſs, was not only with the Knowledge, but by the Advice of my Counſel, which were Mr. Sollicitor Littleton, and Mr. Herbert.

And at laſt this Gentleman ſubmitted himſelf and the Cauſe; and if (as he ſays) Dr. Eden perſuaded him to it, that's nothing to me. As for the Fine, I referred the Moderation of it wholly to my Counſel: they pitched upon Sixteen Hundred Pounds, and gave ſuch Days of Payment, as that a good part is yet unpaid: and this Sum was little above one Year's Rent; for the Parſonage is known to be well worth Thirteen Hundred Pounds a Year, if not more. And after the Buſineſs was ſettled, my Lord Wimbleton came to me, and gave me great thanks for preſerving this Gentleman, being (as he ſaid) his Kinſman, whom, he confeſſed, it was in my power to ruin.

For the raiſing of the Rent Sixty Pounds, it was to add Means to the ſeveral Curates to the Chappels of Eaſe: And I had no reaſon to ſuffer Sir Ralph Aſhton to go away with ſo much Profit, and leave the Curates both upon my Conſcience and my Purſe. And for his Fine to St. Paul's, I gave him all the eaſe I could. But ſince his Son will force it from me, he was accuſed of Adultery with divers Women, and confeſſed all: And whither that Fine went, and by what Authority, I have already ſhewed. And thus much more, my Lords, at Mr. Bridgman's Intreaty, I turned this Leaſe into Lives again without Fine: But ſince I have this Reward for it, I wiſh with all my heart I had not done it. For I am confident in ſuch a Caſe of Right, your Lordſhips would have left me to the Law, and more I wou'd not have asked. And I think this (though intreated into it) was my greateſt Error in the Buſineſs.

6. The laſt Inſtance was about the Converſion of ſome Money to St. Paul's, out of Adminiſtrations: By name, Two Thouſand Pounds taken out of Wimark's Eſtate, and Five Hundred out of Mr. Gray's. Firſt, whatſoever was done in this kind, I have the Broad-Seal to warrant it. And for Mr. Wimark's Eſtate, all was done according to Law, and all care taken for his Kindred. And if I had not ſtirred in the buſineſs, four Men, all Strangers to his Kindred, would have made themſelves, by a broken Will, Executors, and ſwept all away from the Kindred. Secondly, for Mr. Gray's Eſtate, after as odious an Expreſſion of it as could be made, and as void of Truth as need be, the Proceedings were confeſſed to be orderly and legal, and the Charge deſerted.

Then there was a fling at Sir Charles Cæſar's getting of the Maſterſhip of the Rolls for Money, and that I was his Means for it: And ſo it was thence inferred, That I ſold Places of Judicature, or helped to ſell them. For this they produced a Paper under my Hand: But when they had thrown all the Dirt they could upon me, they ſay, they did only ſhew what Probabilities they had for it, and what reaſon they had to lay it in the end of the Fourth Original Article; and ſo deſerted it. And well they might; for I never had more hand in this Buſineſs, than that when he came to me about it, I told him plainly, as things then ſtood, that Place was not like to go without more Money, than I thought any wiſe Man would give for it: Nor doth the Paper mentioned ſay any more, but that I informed the Lord Treaſurer what had paſſed between us.

This Day ended, I was ordered to appear again, April 4. 1644. and received a Note from the Committee, under Serjeant Wild's Hand, dated April 1. That they meant to proceed next upon the Fifth and Sixth Original Articles, and upon the Ninth Additional; which follow in hæc verba:

V. He hath traitorouſly cauſed a Book of Canons to be compoſed and publiſhed, and thoſe Canons to be put in execution, without any lawful Warrant and Authority in that behalf. In which pretended Canons many Matters are contained contrary to the King's Prerogative, to the Fundamental Laws and Statutes of this Realm, to the Right of Parliament, to the Propriety and Liberty of the Subjects; and Matters tending to Sedition, and of dangerous Conſequence; and to the Eſtabliſhment of a vaſt, unlawful and preſumptuous Power in himſelf and his Succeſſors: Many of the which Canons, by the Practice of the ſaid Archbiſhop, were ſurreptitiouſly paſſed in the late Convocation, without due Conſideration and Debate; others by Fear and Compulſion were ſubſcribed unto by the Prelates and Clerks there aſſembled, which had never been voted and paſſed in the Convocation, as they ought to have been. And the ſaid Archbiſhop hath contrived and endeavoured to aſſure and confirm the unlawful and exorbitant Power which he hath uſurped and exerciſed over his Majeſty's Subjects, by a wicked and ungodly Oath, in one of the ſaid pretended Canons, enjoined to be taken by all the Clergy, and many of the Laity of this Kingdom.

VI. He hath traitorouſly aſſumed to himſelf a Papal and Tyrannical Power, both in Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal Matters, over his Majeſty's Subjects in this Realm of England, and in other Places, to the Diſinheriſon of the Crown, Diſhonour of his Majeſty, and Derogation of his ſupreme Authority in Eccleſiaſtical Matters. And the ſaid Archbiſhop claims the King's Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, as incident to his Epiſcopal and Archiepiſcopal Office in this Kingdom; and doth deny the ſame to be derived from the Crown of England: which he hath accordingly exerciſed, to the high Contempt of his Royal Majeſty, and to the Deſtruction of divers of the King's liege People in their Perſons and Eſtates.

The Ninth Additional Article.

IX. That in and about the Month of May [a] 1641. preſently after the Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament, the ſaid Archbiſhop, for the ends and purpoſes aforeſaid, cauſed a Synod or Convocation of the Clergy to be held for the ſeveral Provinces of Canterbury and York; wherein were made and eſtabliſhed, by his Means and Procurement, divers Canons and Conſtitutions Eccleſiaſtical, contrary to the Laws of this Realm, the Rights and Privileges of Parliament, and Liberty and Property of the Subject; tending alſo to Sedition, and of dangerous Conſequence. And, amongſt other things, the ſaid Archbiſhop cauſed a moſt dangerous and illegal Oath to be therein made and contrived; the Tenor whereof followeth in theſe Words: That I A. B. do ſwear, that I do approve the Doctrine and Diſcipline or Government eſtabliſhed in the Church of England, as containing all things neceſſary to Salvation; and that I will not endeavour, by my ſelf or any other, directly or indirectly, to bring in any Popiſh Doctrine, contrary to that which is ſo eſtabliſhed: Nor will I ever give give my conſent to alter the Government of this Church by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, and Archdeacons, &c. as it ſtands now eſtabliſhed, and as by right it ought to ſtand; nor yet ever to ſubject it to the Uſurpations and Superſtitions of the See of Rome. And all theſe things I do plainly and ſincerely acknowledge and ſwear, according to the plain and common Senſe and Underſtanding of the ſame Words, without any Equivocation or mental Evaſion, or ſecret Reſervation whatſoever. And this I do heartily, willingly and truly, upon the Faith of a Chriſtian. So help me God in Jeſus Chriſt. Which Oath the ſaid Archbiſhop himſelf did take, and cauſed divers other Miniſters of the Church to take the ſame, upon pain of Suſpenſion and Deprivation of their Livings, and other ſevere Penalties: And did alſo cauſe Godfrey, then Biſhop of Glouceſter, to be committed to Priſon for refuſing to ſubſcribe to the ſaid Canons, and to take the ſaid Oath; and afterward the ſaid Biſhop ſubmitting himſelf to take the ſaid Oath, he was ſet at liberty.

On Thurſday April 4. 1644. I was again brought to the Houſe, made a ſufficient Scorn and Gazing-ſtock to the People; and after I had waited ſome Hours, was ſent back, by reaſon of other Buſineſs, unheard; but order'd to appear again on Monday April 8. Then I appeared again, and was uſed by the baſeſt of the People as before. I did not appear any Day but it coſt me ſix or ſeven Pounds: I grew into want. This made my Counſel and other Friends to perſuade me, the next time I had admittance to ſpeak, to move the Lords again for ſome neceſſary Allowance, notwithſtanding my former Petition had been rejected. This Advice I meant to have followed that Day: But after ſome Hours Attendance I was ſent back again unheard, and order'd to come again on Thurſday April 11. This Day I did not come to the Houſe; a Warrant being ſent to the Tower, which ſtayed me till Tueſday April 16.

The Seventh Day of my Hearing.

I. April 16. I appeared, and (as I remember) here Mr. Maynard left off, (ſave that now and then he interpoſed, both in the Reply, and otherwiſe) and Mr. Nicolas, a Man of another Temper, undertook the managing of the Evidence. And the firſt Charge was concerning the late Canons, [4] which, he ſaid, were againſt Law to ſit, the Parliament being diſſolved. No, my Lords, nothing againſt Law that I know: For we were called to ſit in Convocation by a different Writ from that which called us as Biſhops to the Parliament. And we could not riſe, till his Majeſty ſent us another Writ to diſcharge us: and this is well known to the Judges, and the other Lawyers here preſent. So we continued ſitting, though the Parliament roſe. Nor was this Sitting continued by any Advice or Deſire of mine: For I humbly deſired a Writ to diſſolve us. But the beſt Counſel then preſent, both of Judges, and other Lawyers, aſſured the King we might legally ſit. And here is a Copy atteſted under their Hands.

[4] I. for the making of which, he ſaid it was againſt Law for the Convocation.

Vide ſupra, poſt init.

Then he urged, out of my Diary, at May 29. 1640. That I acknowledged there were ſeventeen Canons made, which I did hope would be uſeful to the Church. 'Tis true, my Lords, I did hope ſo. And had I not hoped it, I would never have paſſed my Conſent unto them. And when I writ this, there was nothing done or ſaid againſt them. And if by any Inadvertency, or human Frailty, any thing erroneous or unfit, have ſlipped into thoſe Canons, I humbly beſeech your Lordſhips to remember, it is an Article of the Church of England, That General Councils may err (Art. 21.) and therefore this National Synod may miſtake. And that ſince (if any Error be) it is not wilful, it may be rectified, and in Charity paſſed by.

For the Biſhop of Glouceſter's refuſing to ſubſcribe the Canons, and take the Oath; which is here ſaid by the Counſel, but no Proof offered; the truth is this: He firſt pretended (to avoid his Subſcription) that we could not ſit, the Parliament riſen. He was ſatisfied in this by the Judges Hands. Then he pretended the Oath. But that which ſtuck in his ſtomach, was the Canon about ſuppreſſing of the Growth of Popery; (Can. 3.) For, coming over to me to Lambeth about that Buſineſs, he told me he would be torn with wild Horſes before he would ſubſcribe that Canon. I gave him the beſt Advice I could; but his Carriage was ſuch, when he came into the Convocation, that I was forced to charge him openly with it, and he as freely acknowledged it; as there is plentiful Proof of Biſhops and other Divines then preſent. And for his Lordſhip's being after put to take the Oath, (which was alſo urged) it was thus. I took my ſelf bound to acquaint his Majeſty with this Proceeding of my Lord of Glouceſter's, and did ſo. But all that was after done about his Commitment firſt, and his Releaſe after, when he had taken the Oath, was done openly at a full Council-Table, and his Majeſty preſent, and can no way be charged upon me, as my Act: For it was my Duty to let his Majeſty know it, to prevent farther Danger then alſo diſcovered. But I am here to defend my ſelf, not to accuſe any Man elſe.

Next he urged, That I had interlined the original Copy of the Canons with my own Hand. But this is clearly a Miſtake, if not a wilful one. For, peruſing the Place, I find the Interlining is not in my Hand, but my Hand is to it, as (I humbly conceive) it was fit it ſhould. And the Words are in the Ratification of the Canons, and therefore were neceſſarily to be in the Original, howſoever ſlipped in the writing of them.

As for the Oath ſo bitterly ſpoken of at the Bar, and in the Articles; either it was made according to Law, or elſe we were wholly miſled by Precedent, and that ſuch as was never excepted againſt. For in the Canons made in King James his Time, there was an Oath made againſt [5] Simony; and an Oath for [6] Church-Wardens; [7] and an Oath about [8] Licences and Marriages; and an Oath for [9] Judges in Eccleſiaſtical Courts: And ſome of theſe Oaths as dangerous as this is accounted to be. And all theſe eſtabliſhed by no other Authority than theſe late were.' And yet neither thoſe Canons, nor thoſe Oaths, were ever declared illegal by any enſuing Parliament, nor the Makers of them accuſed of any Crime, much leſs of Treaſon. So that we had in this Synod unblamed Precedent for what we did, as touching our Power of doing it.

[8] Can. 127.

But, after all this, he ſaid he would paſs theſe things by, (that is, when he had made them as odious as he could) and would charge nothing upon me but the Votes of both Houſes; namely, That theſe Canons contain Matters contrary to the King's Prerogative, to the Fundamental Laws of the Realm, to the Rights of Parliaments, to the Propriety and Liberty of the Subject, and Matters tending to Sedition, and of dangerous Conſequence. So theſe Votes of the Honourable Houſes made ſo long after, (and therefore cannot well be an Evidence againſt the making of that which was done ſo long before) is the Task lying now upon me to anſwer; which, with your Lordſhips Honourable Favour, I ſhall in all Humbleneſs addreſs my ſelf unto.

Before theſe Words were well out of my Mouth, Mr. Nicolas with much Earneſtneſs interpoſed; That he hoped their Lordſhips would not endure that the ſolemn Votes of both Houſes ſhould be called into queſtion by any Delinquent; and was ſure the Houſe of Commons would not endure it. Upon this the Lords preſently gave their Reſolution, that I might not ſpeak to any thing that was declared by Votes; but was to anſwer only to the Fact, whether I made the Canons or no. To this, with Leave humbly asked, I replied, That if I might not anſwer to the Votes, I muſt yield the Evidence, which I could not do; and that if I might anſwer, I muſt diſpute the Votes, which their Lordſhips reſolved I ſhould not do: That then I was in a Perplexity, and muſt neceſſarily offend either way; and therefore humbly beſought them to conſider not my Caſe only, but their own too. For I did conceive it would concern them in Honour, as much as me in Safety, That no Charge might be brought againſt me in that great Court, to which I ſhould not be ſuffered to make anſwer: or elſe that they in Honour would not judge me for that, to which my Anſwer is not ſuffered to be given. With this, that all theſe Canons were made in open and full Convocation, and are Acts of that Body, and cannot be aſcribed to me, though Preſident of that Synod, but are the joint Acts of the whole Body: So by me they were not made; which is my Anſwer.

'And according to this I framed my Anſwer to 'Mr. Brown's Summary of my Charge, both hinting the Canons in general, and concerning the 'Inſtance before given about the Biſhop of Glou-ceſter.

'But though I was not allowed there to make 'any farther Anſwer in defence of theſe Canons; 'nor can hold it fit to inſert here ſo long an An-'ſwer as theſe Votes require; I humbly deſire 'the courteous Reader, if he pleaſe, to look upon 'the Anſwer which I have made to 'a Speech [1] of Mr. Nathaniel Fynes, 'in the Houſe of Commons, againſt 'theſe Canons. In which Anſwer, 'I humbly conceive, I have ſatisfied 'whatſoever theſe Votes contain a-'gainſt them. Howſoever, I can-'not but obſerve this in preſent. The Words in 'the ſixth Original Article, are as they are above 'cited; That the late Canons contain Matters 'contrary to the King's Prerogative, the Laws, '&c. But in the ninth Additional all the reſt 'of the Exceptions are in againſt them, but 'theſe Words about the King's Prerogative are 'quite left out. I would fain know, if I could, 'what is the reaſon of this Omiſſion in theſe ad-'ded Articles: Is it for ſhame, becauſe there was 'a purpoſe to charge me (as Ser-'jeant Wild did in his Speech the 'firſt Day) That I laboured to ad-'vance the King's Prerogative above 'the Law? To advance it, and yet made con-'trary Canons againſt it; which is the way to 'deſtroy it. What pretty Nonſenſe is this? Or is 'it becauſe the Framers of theſe Additionals (whom 'I conceive were ſome Committee, with the help 'of Mr. Pryn) thought the time was come, or 'coming, in which the King ſhould have no more 'Prerogative? Or if there be a third Reaſon, let 'them give it themſelves.'

Et Art. 2. additionalis.

This was all concerning the Canons. Then followed the ſixth Original Article about my aſſuming of Papal Power; where Mr. Brown, in ſumming up of his Charge, was pleaſed to ſay, 'That no Pope 'claimed ſo much as I had done. But he was here-'in much miſtaken: For never any Pope claimed 'ſo little. For he that claimed leaſt, claimed it in 'his own Right, which was none; whereas I claim-'ed nothing but in the King's Right, and by 'virtue of his Conceſſion: between which there 'is a vaſt Latitude.' The firſt Proof upon this Article was read out of certain Letters ſent unto me by the Univerſity of Oxford, I being then their Chancellor. Which great Titles were urged to prove my aſſuming of Papal Power, becauſe I did not check them in my Anſwers to thoſe Letters.

(1.) The firſt Title was Sanctitas tua, which Mr. Nicolas ſaid, was the Pope's own Title; but he is deceived: for the Title was commonly given to other Biſhops alſo, clean through the Primitive Church, both Greek and Latin. 'He replied in 'great heat (as his manner it ſeems is) That 'tis 'Blaſphemy to give that Title (Sanctitas) in the 'Abſtract, to any but God. And though, by the 'Courſe of the Court I might not anſwer then to 'the Reply, yet now I may: And muſt tell Mr. 'Nicolas, that 'tis a great Preſumption for him, a 'Lawyer, and no ſtudied Divine, to charge Blaſ-'phemy upon all the Fathers of the 'Primitive Church. 'Tis given to [2] St. 'Auguſtine by Hilarius and Euodius, 'and in the Abſtract. And (which 'is the Charge laid to me) St. Auguſtine never 'checks at, or finds fault with the Title, nor 'with them for writing it. And '[3] St. Auguſtine himſelf gives that 'Title to Euodius, anſwering his 'Letters, which I was not to do to 'theirs: And after that to [4] Quintia-'nus. Neither is any thing more 'common, than this Stile among the Fathers, as 'all Learned Men know. And 'tis 'commonly given by [5] St. Gregory the 'Great to divers Biſhops; who be-'ing Pope himſelf, would not cer-'tainly have given away his own 'Title (had it been peculiar to him) 'to any other Biſhop. Nor would 'any of the Fathers have given this 'Epithet to their Brethren, had 'any Savour of Blaſphemy been about it.' But there is a two-fold Holineſs, the one Original, Abſolute and Eſſential, and that is in God only, and incommunicable to any Creature: * the other Derivative and Relative; and that is found

* The Managers againſt the Archbiſhop in another Place pretend, that this Title was never given to any Engliſh *Biſhop at leaſt: But herein they are much miſtaken; for it was often given to them. in the Creatures, both Things and Perſons; or elſe God ſhould have no Saints, no Holy Ones. For no Man can be ſaid to be Sanctus, Holy, but he who in ſome degree hath Sanctitatem, Holineſs, reſiding in him. And this I anſwered at the preſent. 'But, according to Mr. Nicolas his Divinity, 'we ſhall learn in time to deny the Immortality of 'the Soul: For Immortality, in the Abſtract, is 'applied to God only, 1 Tim. 6. 16. Who only 'hath Immortality. Therefore if it may not in an 'under and a qualified Senſe, by Participation, be 'applied to the Creature, the Soul of Man cannot 'be immortal.'

(2.) The ſecond Title is Spiritu Sancto effuſiſſime plenus. My Lords, I had ſent them many hundred Manuſcripts, and in many Languages. Upon this, in Alluſion to the Gift of Tongues, (and it was about Pentecoſt too that I ſent them) the luxuriant Pen of the Univerſity Orator ran upon theſe Phraſes; which I could neither foreſee before they were written, nor remedy after: And finding fault, could not remedy that which was paſt. Beſides, all theſe Letters were in anſwer to mine; I was to anſwer none of theirs: that might have made me work enough, had I wanted any.

(3.) The third Stile is Summus Pontifex. But this was in my Lord of London's Letters; and he muſt anſwer if any thing be amiſs. But Pontifex, and Summus too, is no unuſual Stile to and of the chief Prelate in any Nation.

(4.) The fourth Stile is Archangelus, & ne quid nimis. Yes ſure, the meaneſt of theſe Titles is multum nimis, far too much, applied to my Perſon and Unworthineſs: Yet a great ſign it is that I deſerved very well of that Univerſity in the Place I then bare, or elſe they would never have beſtowed ſuch Titles upon me. And if they did offend in giving ſuch an unworthy Man ſuch high Language, why are not they called in queſtion for their own Fault?

(5.) The laſt which I remember, is, Quo rectior non ſtat Regula, &c. And this is no more than an abſolute Hyperbole; a high one I confeſs; yet as high are found in all Rhetorical Authors: And what ſhould make that Blaſphemy in an Univerſity Orator, which is every where common, and not only allowed, but commendable, I know not: 'Eſpe-'cially ſince the Rule of the Interpretation of them 'is as well known as the Figure. Where the Words 'are not to be underſtood in their proper and 'literal Senſe, but as St. Auguſtine 'ſpeaks, when that which is ſpoken, '[1] longè eſt amplius, is far larger than 'that which is ſignified by it.' And if I had aſſumed any of theſe Titles to my ſelf, which I am, and ever ways far from doing; yet 'tis one thing to aſſume Papal Title, and another to aſſume Papal Power, (which is the thing charged) tho I thank God I did neither. 'If I have here omitted any Title, 'it is mere Forgetfulneſs; for one part or other of 'the Anſwers given will reach it, whate'er it be. 'And, as I told Mr. Brown, when he charged 'this on me, Dr. Strowd, the Univerſity Orator, 'who writ thoſe Letters, and gave thoſe Titles, 'was called up before a Committee of this Parliament, examined about them, acquitted, and diſmiſſed.'

[1] St. Aug. 16. Civ. Dei, c. 21.

(6.) Theſe Titles from the Letters being paſt, he quoted another, which he called a blaſphemous Speech too, out of my Book againſt Fiſher; where, he ſaid, I approved of [2] Anſelme, an Enemy to the Crown; and took on me to be Patriarch of this other World. Let any Man look into that place of my Book, and he ſhall find that I make uſe of that Paſſage only to prove that the Pope could not be appealed unto out of England, according to their own Doctrine: Which I hope is no Blaſphemy. And for St. Anſelme, howſoever he was ſwayed with the Corruptions of his Time, yet was he in other things worthy the Teſtimony which the Authors by me cited give him. 'And if any 'Man be angry that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury 'is called the Patriarch of this other World, he 'may be pleaſed to remember that St. Jerom gives 'St. Auguſtine, who was Biſhop of 'Hippo, and no Archbiſhop, a greater 'Title than that: For he writes [3] Beatiſſimo Papæ Auguſtino more than once, 'and again, as appears in his Epiſtles 'to St. Auguſtine.'

(7.) To theſe Sir Nathaniel Brent's Teſtimony is produced: Who ſays, That he over-heard me ſay to another, That I would not ſo eaſily quit the Plenitude of my Power, or to that effect. He confeſſes he was coming in, and finding me ſpeaking with another, made ſtay, and ſtood afar off, and knows not of what I ſpake, (for ſo he ſaid) but over-heard the Words. I beſeech your Lordſhips, obſerve this Witneſs: He confeſſes he knows not of what I ſpake, and yet comes here upon his Oath, to teſtify of Plenitude of Power in relation to my aſſuming Papal Power. If he meant not this, his Teſtimony is nothing; for Plenitude of Power may extend to many other Things; and I might juſtly ſay, (if I ſaid it) That I would not eaſily part with the Plenitude of my Power, in relation to other Biſhops of my Province, who by Law have not ſo full Power as I have. But if he did mean this, then his Teſtimony is worſe than nothing: Nothing, in regard he confeſſes he knows not of what I was ſpeaking; and worſe than nothing, that not knowing, he would give ſuch a Teſtimony upon Oath. '[(a) As for the Statutes 'themſelves, there was ſcarce one urged againſt 'me, but it was either a Statute or a Preſcription 'of that Univerſity long before I was born into the 'World, and could not therefore be of my new-ma-'king. And this was my Anſwer to Mr. Brown in 'the Houſe of Commons. And ſuch Bannition, Diſ-'commoning, and the like, are well known to be.']

II. The next Charge of this Day was, That I went about to exempt the Clergy from the Civil Magiſtrate.

1. The firſt Witneſs is Mr. Pincen. He ſays he heard me ſay at the High-Commiſſion, That the Clergy were now debaſed; that heretofore it was otherwiſe, and I hope to ſee it ſo again. Truly, my Lords, if I did ſay thus, (which is more than I can call to Memory) I ſpake Truth: They were debaſed; and I did hope to ſee it otherwiſe: For the debaſing of the Clergy will make their Office and their Doctrine baſe, as well as their Perſons. But here is not a word of freeing them from Laws or the Temporal Magiſtrate. It was replied, He did mention the Civil Magiſtrate. 'If he did, he mentions no 'time; by which I might be enabled to make 'Counter-proof. He is ſingle. They are Words, 'and if within the Statute, then triable by it with-

(a) Theſe ſix Lines are inſerted out of place, and belong clearly to his Defence of making new Statutes for the Univerſity, which followeth afterwards. W. S. A. C.

'in ſix Months. And I deſire this grave Gentleman to conſider his Oath: For if I ſpake of any 'ſuch Exemption, I muſt ſpeak againſt my Conſcience and Judgment; which, I humbly thank God, 'I uſed not to do. Nor is it altogether impoſſible 'for the Civil Magiſtrate ſometimes to oppreſs 'poor Clergymen. But a little will be thought too 'much of this And therefore to Mr. Brown's ſummary Charge, I gave the former Anſwer, That I 'ſpake of Exemption from Oppreſſion, not from 'Law.'

2. The ſecond Witneſs was Alderman Railton, about the carrying up of the Sword in the Church when he was Lord Mayor. He ſays I once ſent him word about it, but knows not by whom; and after heard no more of it, but refers himſelf to Mr. Marſh. He ſays, There was an Order of the Council-Table, May 3. 1633. concerning the ſubmitting of the Sword in time and place of Divine Service. If an Order of Council, then was it no Act of mine, as I have often pleaded, and muſt as often as it comes. He ſays farther, That I ſpake theſe Words, or to this effect, That the Church had been low for theſe hundred Years; but I hoped it would flouriſh again in another hundred. But here's no one Word of Exemption from Civil Magiſtracy. And I hope your Lordſhips will take Witneſſes as they ſpeak, not as Men ſhall infer and deſcant upon them. 'And then, my Lords, under favour, I ſee 'no harm in the Words.' Only I ſhall recall my Hope: For if I had then any hope to ſee it flouriſh in another hundred Years, 'tis that which I cannot hope for now. He ſays, There was a Reference to the Counſel on both ſides; and that under that Reference the Buſineſs died. And if it died then, what makes it here before the Reſurrection? Yea, but ſays Mr. Nicolas, Here's Agitation about the ſubmitting of the Sword, which is the Emblem of Temporal Power. But neither to foreign nor home Power, but only to God; and that in the place, and at the performance of his Holy Worſhip: At which time and place Chriſtian Kings ſubmit themſelves, and therefore cannot ſtand upon the Emblems of their Power. Nor would the Lords of the Council have made either Order or Reference, had there been any thing of danger, or againſt Law, in this kind of ſubmitting. Mr. Yorke was produced as another Witneſs, but ſaid juſt the ſame with Marſh; and ſo the ſame Anſwer ſerved him.

III. Then followed a Charge about the Charter of York to be renewed; and that I did labour to have the Archbiſhop of York, his Chancellor, and ſome of the Reſidentiaries, named in it to be Juſtices of Peace within the City. To prove this, Alderman Hoyle is produced; who ſays, There was an Order of the Council about this; but cannot ſay that I procured it. So far then this Proof reaches not me. For the Biſhop, his Chancellor, and ſome of the Reſidentiaries, to be Juſtices of Peace within the City; if I were of this Opinion, (as then adviſed) I am ſure there's no Treaſon in it, and I believe no Crime. And, under your Lordſhip's Favour, I could not but think it would have made much Peace, and done much Good in all the Cities of England where Cathedrals are. Laſtly, he ſays, There was a debauched Man committed about Breach of the Sabbath; and being caſually ſmother'd, I ſhould ſay, They deſerved to be hanged that killed him. Concerning this Man; he loſt his Life, that's confeſſed. His Debauchery; what it was, is not proved. And were he never ſo diſorderly, I am ſure he was not without legal Tryal to be ſhut up into a Houſe, and ſmother'd; that is againſt both Law and Conſcience: And the Officers then in being had reaſon to ſmother the Buſineſs as much as they could; and, it may be, deſerved ſomewhat, if not that which this Alderman ſays I ſaid, to his beſt Remembrance: For ſo, and with no more Certainty, he expreſſed it. This I am ſure I ſaid, That if the Biſhop, or any of the Church, had been then in their Charter, the poor Man's Life had not been loſt.

IV. The fourth Charge was juſt of the ſame nature, concerning the Charge of Shrewsbury. For this there were produced two Witneſſes, Mr. Lee and Mr. Mackworth. But they make up but one between them: For Mr. Lee could ſay nothing but what he acknowledges he heard from Mr. Mackworth. And Mr. Mackworth ſays firſt, That the School-Maſter's Buſineſs was referred to other Lords and my ſelf. That's no Crime: And, to my knowledge, that has been a troubleſome Buſineſs for theſe thirty Years. He ſays, I cauſed that there ſhould go a Quo Warranto againſt the Town. This is but as Mr. Owen informed him; ſo no Proof. Beſide, 'tis no Crime, being a Referee, if I gave legal Reaſon for it. Nor is it any Crime that the Biſhop and his Chancellor ſhould be Juſtices within the Town, as is aforeſaid in the Caſe of York; conſidering eſpecially, that then many Clergy-Men bare that Office in divers Counties of England. He adds, That an old Alderman gave fifty Pound to St. Paul's. But out of what Conſideration, I know not, nor doth he ſpeak. And if every Alderman in the Town would have given me as much to that uſe, I would have taken it, and thanked them for it. Then he ſays, There was an Order from all the Lords Referees, for ſettling all Things about their Charter. So, by his own Confeſſion, the whole Buſineſs was tranſacted publickly, and by Perſons of great Honour, and nothing charged upon my particular. If Mr. Owen ſent me in a Butt of Sack, and after put it upon the Town-Account, (for ſo he alſo ſays) Mr. Owen did ill in both; but I knew of neither. And this the Counſel, in their Reply, ſaid they urged not in that kind. Laſtly, The Charter it ſelf was read to both Points, of the Biſhop and his Chancellor being Juſtices of Peace within the Town, and the not bearing up of the Sword: To both which I have anſwer'd already. And I hope your Lordſhips cannot think his Majeſty would have paſſed ſuch a Charter, or that his Learned Counſel durſt have put it to him, had this thing been ſuch a Crime as 'tis here made.

V. The next Charge was out of my Diary, at March 5. 1635. The Words are; William Juxon, Lord Biſhop of London, made Lord High Treaſurer of England. No Churchman had it ſince Henry VII's Time. I pray God bleſs him, to carry it ſo, that the Church may have Honour, and the King and the State Service and Contentment by it. And now if the Church will not hold up themſelves, under God, I can do no more. I can ſee no Treaſon in this, nor Crime neither. And though that which I did to help on this Buſineſs was very little, yet Aim I had none in it, but the Service of the King, and the Good of the Church: And am confident it would have been both, had not ſuch troubleſome Times followed, as did.

VI. Then they inſtanced in the Caſe of Mr. Newcommin. But that Cauſe being handled before, they did only refer the Lords to their Notes: And ſo did I to my former Anſwers.

VII. Then followed the Caſe of Thorn and Middleton, which were fined in the High-Commiſſion, about ſome Clergy-Mens Buſineſs, Thorn being Conſtable. The Witneſſes in this Caſe are three.

1. The

1. The firſt is Huntford, (if I took his Name right:) And for the Cenſure of theſe Men, he confeſſes, it was in and by the High-Commiſſion; and ſo no Act of mine, (as I have often pleaded.) But then he ſays, that I there ſpake theſe words, That no Man of their Rank ſhould meddle with Men in Holy Orders. Firſt, he is in this part of the Charge ſingle, and neither of the other Witneſſes comes in to him. Secondly, I humbly deſire the Proceedings of the High-Commiſſion may be ſeen, (which are taken out of our hands.) For ſo far as I can remember any thing of this Cauſe, the Miniſter, Mr. Lewis, had hard meaſure. And perhaps thereupon I might ſay, That Men of their Rank ſhould not in ſuch ſort meddle with Men in Holy Orders. But to tax the Proceedings of a violent buſy Conſtable, was not to exempt the Clergy from Civil Magiſtracy.

Upon this, he falls juſt upon the ſame words, and ſays, That I utter'd them about their offering to turn out a Corrector from the Printing-Houſe. This Corrector was a Miniſter, and a well-deſerving Man. The Truſt of the Preſs was referred to the High-Commiſſion Court. And I hope your Lordſhips will not think, that not to ſuffer the Printers to turn out a deſerving Man at their pleaſure, is to exempt the Clergy from the Civil Magiſtrate. The Buſineſs, my Lords, was this: This Corrector was principally entertained for the Latin and Greek Preſs eſpecially, which I had then not without great Pains and ſome Coſt erected. They were deſirous to keep only one for the Engliſh, and him at the cheapeſt. Among them their Negligence was ſuch, as that there were found above a thouſand Faults in two Editions of the Bible and Common-Prayer-Book. And one which cauſed this Search was, that in Exod. 20. where they had ſhamefully printed, Thou ſhalt commit Adultery. For this the Maſters of the Printing-Houſe were called into the High-Commiſſion, and cenſured, as they well deſerved it. As for this Corrector, whom they would have heaved out, they never did ſo much as complain of him to any that had power over the Preſs, till this fell upon themſelves for ſo groſs an Abuſe. Nor did they after this proceed againſt him, to make him appear faulty; and till that were done, we could not puniſh. And for this Buſineſs of the Preſs, he is ſingle too. And I have told your Lordſhips that which is a known Truth. ' And Hunsford being bit in his Credit, ' and Purſe, and Friends, by that Cenſure, for ſo ' groſs an Abuſe of the Church and Religion, ' labours to faſten his Fangs upon me in this ' way.'

2. The ſecond Witneſs is Mr. Bland. But all that he ſays is, That there was once a Diſmiſſion of this Cauſe out of the Court, and that though I diſliked it, yet I gave way to it, becauſe all Parties were agreed. And no word of Proof, that I was any cauſe of bringing it back into the Court again. What's my fault in this?

3. The third Witneſs was Thorn in his own Cauſe: and 'tis plain, by his own words, that this Cauſe was depending in Court before my time. And I believe, were the Records of the Court here, Mr. Lewis would not be found ſo great an Offender as Mr. Thorn would make him. This I am ſure of, both the High-Commiſſion and myſelf have been quick enough againſt all Miniſters which have been proved to be debauched in their Life and Converſation. And he ſays nothing againſt me, but that I ſided with his Adverſaries; which is eaſy to ſay againſt any Judge that delivers his Sentence againſt any Man. But neither of theſe come home to Hunsford.

VIII. The next Charge is in the Caſe of one Mr. Tomkins, about the taxing of a Miniſter in a Caſe of Robbery, and Repayment by the Country.

To this Mr. Newdigate is produced; who ſays, as he remembers, that I ſhould ſpeak theſe words, That Miniſters were free from ſuch Taxes, and I hoped to ſee the Times in which they might be free again. Firſt, This Gentleman is ſingle. Secondly, He ſpeaks not poſitively, but as he remembers. Thirdly, This Tax, I do humbly conceive, is not by Law to be laid upon any Miniſter. For no Man is ſubject to this Tax, but they which are to keep Watch and Ward; which Miniſters in that kind are not bound unto. And this I learned of the Lord Keeper Coventry at the Council-Table. So I might well then hope to ſee Miniſters free from all ſuch Taxes, by the right Underſtanding and due Execution of our own Laws, without aſſuming any Papal Power.

IX. The laſt Inſtance of this Day was the bringing of Sir Rich. Samuel into the High-Commiſſion, for doing his Office as Juſtice of the Peace upon ſome Clergymen. Firſt, For this, this Gentleman is ſingle, and in his own Caſe. Secondly, Himſelf confeſſes, that his bringing into the High-Commiſſion was long after the Fact. Therefore in all probability not for that; nor doth he ſay that I cauſed his bringing in. He ſays farther, That one Article for which he was called into the Commiſſion, was, that he was an Enemy to the Clergy. But he doth not ſay, that I preferred theſe Articles againſt him: nor doth he tell, or can I remember, what the other Articles were, which with this may be bad enough to merit what was there laid againſt him. And whatſoever was done, appears by his own Narration to be the Act of the High-Commiſſion, or the Council-Table, and ſo not chargeable upon me alone. And whereas he ſays, I blamed him much at the Council-Table; let him tell why, and then I'll give him a farther Anſwer: And ſure if I did blame him, I had juſt cauſe ſo to do. Laſtly, he ſays, I did uſe the word baſe to him, when he came to me. Sure I cannot believe I did; it was not my Language to meaner Men. If it did ſlip from me, it was in relation to his Enmity to the Clergy, not to his Perſon or Quality. ' And I ' conceive 'tis no genteel part, for a Man of Place ' and Power in his Country, to oppreſs poor Cler- ' gymen which neighbour about him. In which ' kind this Gentleman, peſſime audiebat, heard ex- ' tremely ill.'

This Day thus ended, I was ordered to appear again on Monday, April 22. I came, and my former Anſwers having taken off the edge of many Men, (for ſo I was told by good Hands) the Scorns put upon me at my landing, and elſewhere, were ſomewhat abated, though when it was at beſt I ſuffered enough. After I had attended the Pleaſure of the Houſe ſome hours, I was remitted without hearing, and commanded to attend again upon Thurſday, April 25. but ſent back again then alſo, and ordered to appear on Tueſday, April 30. And when I came, I was ſent away once more unheard: no Conſideration had of myſelf, or the great Charge which this frequent coming put me to. I was then ordered to appear again on Saturday, May 4. Then I was heard again: and the Day proceeded as follows.

My

My Eighth Day of Hearing.

SAturday, May 4. 1644. To raiſe up Envy againſt me, Mr. Nicolas falls firſt to repeating the Titles which were given me in Letters from Oxford; to which I gave anſwer the day before. From thence he fell again upon the former Charge, my Endeavour to exempt the Clergy from the Civil Power. And very loud he was, and full of ſour Language upon me. To this General, I anſwered with another more true; That I never did attempt to bring the Temporal Power under the Clergy, nor to free the Clergy from being under it: But I do freely confeſs, I did labour all I could to preſerve poor Clergymen from ſome Laymens Oppreſſion, which lay heavy on them. And de Vi Laica hath been an old, and a great, and too juſt a Complaint. And this I took to be my Duty, doing it without wrong to any Man; as ſincerely I did to the beſt of my knowledge: And aſſuring myſelf, that God did not raiſe me to that Place of Eminency, to ſit ſtill, ſee his Service neglected, and his Miniſters diſcountenanced; nay, ſometimes little better than trampled on. 'And my ſtanding 'thus to the Clergy, and their juſt Grievances, is 'not the leaſt cauſe of my preſent Condition. In 'which my Caſe (though not my Abilities) is 'ſomewhat like Cicero's. For having now for ma-'ny Years defended the publick State of the 'Church, and the private of many Church-men, 'as he had done many Citizens; when he by pre-'vailing Factions came into danger 'himſelf, ejus Salutem defendit nemo, 'no Man took care to defend him 'that had defended ſo many: which 'yet I ſpeak not to impute any thing to Men of 'my own Calling, who, I preſume, would have 'lent me their juſt Defence, to their power, had 'not the ſame Storm which drove againſt my 'Life, driven them into Corners to preſerve themſelves.'

Patere. L. 2. Hiſt.

I. The firſt Inſtance was in Mr. Shervil's Caſe; in which Mr. John Steevens tells what I ſaid to the Counſel pleading in the Star-Chamber, which was, That they ſhould take care not to cauſe the Laws of the Church and the Kingdom to claſh one againſt another. I ſee, my Lords, nothing that I ſpake was let fall, nor can I remember every Speech that paſſed from me; he may be happy that can. But if I did ſpeak theſe words, I know no Crime in them: It was a good Caveat to the Counſel, for ought I know. For ſurely the Laws of Church and State in England would agree well enough together, if ſome did not ſet them at odds. And if I did farther ſay to the then Lord Keeper, (as 'tis charged) That ſome Clergy-men had ſat as high as he, and might again; which I do not believe I ſaid: yet if I did, 'tis a known Truth. For the Lord Coventry, then Lord Keeper, did immediately ſucceed the Lord Biſhop of Lincoln in that Office. But though I dare ſay, I ſaid not thus to the Lord Keeper, whoſe Moderation gave me no cauſe to be ſo round with him, yet to the Counſel at the Bar, I remember well, upon juſt occaſion given, that I ſpake to this effect; That they would forbear too much depreſſing of the Clergy, either in their Reputation or Maintenance, in regard it was not impoſſible that their Profeſſion, now as high as ours once was, may fall to be as low as ours now is; 'if the Profeſſors ſet themſelves againſt the 'Church, as ſome of late are known to have done: 'And that the ſinking of the Church would be 'found the ready way to it.'

II. The ſecond Inſtance was about calling ſome Juſtices of the Peace into the High-Commiſſion, about a Seſſions kept at Tewksbury.

1. The firſt Witneſs for this (for three were produced) was Mr. Jo. Steevens. He ſays, That the Iſle where the Seſſions were kept, was joined to the Church. If it were not now a part of the Church, yet doubtleſs being within the Churchyard, it was conſecrated Ground. He ſays, That Seſſions were kept there heretofore. And I ſay, the more often the worſe. He ſays, That I procured the calling of them into the High-Commiſſion. But he proves no one of theſe things, but by the Report of Sir Rob. Cook of Glouceſterſhire, a Party in this Cauſe. He ſays again, That they had the Biſhop's Licence to keep the Seſſions there. But the Proof of this alſo is no more than that Sir Rob. Cook told him ſo: ſo all this hitherto is Hearſay. Then he ſays, the 88th Canon of the Church of England was urged in the Commiſſion-Court, which ſeems to give leave in the cloſe of the Canon, that Temporal Courts or Leets may be kept in Church or Church-Yard. Firſt, that Clauſe in the end of the Canon is referred to the ringing of Bells, not to the Profanations mentioned in the former part of that Canon. Nor is it probable, the Miniſter and Church-Wardens ſhould have power to give ſuch leave, when no Canon gives ſuch power to the Biſhop himſelf. And were it ſo, here's no Proof offered, that the Miniſter and Church-Wardens did give leave: And ſuppoſe ſome Temporal Courts might upon urgent occaſion be kept in the Church with leave, yet that is no Warrant for Seſſions, where there may be Tryal for Blood. He ſays farther, That the Civilians quoted an old Canon of the Pope's, and that that prevailed againſt the Canon of our Church, and Sentence given againſt them. All thoſe Canons which the Civilians urged, are Law in England, where nothing is contrary to the Law of God, or the Law of the Land, or the King's Prerogative Royal: and to keep off Profanation from Churches, is none of theſe. Beſides, were all this true which is urged, the Act was the High-Commiſſion's, not mine. Nor is there any thing in it that looks toward Treaſon.

25 H. 8. c. 19. §. ult.

2. The ſecond Witneſs is Mr. Edward Steevens. He confeſſes that the Sentence was given by the High-Commiſſion, and that I had but my ſingle Vote in it. And for the Place itſelf, he ſays, the Place where the Seſſions were kept, was ſeparated from the Iſle of the Church by a Wall breaſt-high; which is an evident Proof that it was formerly a part of that Church, and continued yet under the ſame Roof.

3. The third Witneſs is Mr. Talboyes, (who, it ſeems, will not be out of any thing which may ſeem to hurt me.) He ſays, The Pariſh held it no part of the Church. Why are not ſome of them examined, but this Man's Report from them admitted? They thought no harm (he ſays) and got a Licence. But why did they get a Licence, if their own Conſcience did not prompt them that ſomething was irregular in that buſineſs? He ſays, he was informed the Seſſions had been twice kept there before. And I ſay, under your Lordſhips favour, the oftner the worſe. But why is not his Informer produced, that there might be Proof, and not Hearſay? Upon this, I ſaid, (ſo he concludes) That I would make a Precedent againſt keeping it any more. If I did ſay ſo, the Cauſe deſerved it; Men in this Age growing ſo bold with Churches, as if Profanation of them were no fault at all.

III. The third Inſtance concerned Sir Tho. Dacres, a Juſtice of Peace in Middleſex, and his Warrant for puniſhing ſome diſorderly Drinking. The Witneſſes the two Church-Wardens, Colliar and Wilſon; two plain Men, but of great Memories: for this Buſineſs was when I was Biſhop of London, and yet they agree in every Circumſtance, in every Word, though ſo many Years ſince. Well, what ſay they? It ſeems Dr. Duck, then my Chancellor, had cited theſe Church-Wardens into my Court; therefore either there was, or at leaſt to his Judgment there ſeemed to be ſomewhat done in that Buſineſs againſt the Juriſdiction of the Church. They ſay then, That the Court ended, Dr. Duck brought them to me. And what then? Here is a Cauſe, by their own confeſſion, depending in the Eccleſiaſtical Court; Dr. Duck in the King's Quarters, where I cannot fetch him to teſtify; no Means left me to know what the Proceedings were; and I have good cauſe to think, that were all the Merits of the Cauſe open before your Lordſhips, you would ſay, Sir Tho. Dacres did not all according to Law. But what is the Heart of this Charge? It is, ſay they, That I commanded Dr. Duck to proſecute them. And what fault was in this? For if it were juſt, why ſhould not Dr. Duck go on with his Proſecution? If Dr. Duck and I were both miſtaken in the Particular, 'twas eaſy getting a Prohibition. Yea, but they ſay I ſaid, If this muſt be ſo, Sir Thomas Dacres ſhall be Biſhop of London, and I'll be Sir Tho. Dacres. For ought I ſee in the Weight of it, this whole Charge was but to bring in this Speech. And truly, my Lords, my old decay'd Memory is not ſuch, as that I can recall a Speech thirteen or fourteen Years ſince. But if I did ſay it, I preſume 'tis not High Treaſon for a Biſhop of London to ſay ſo much of Sir Tho. Dacres. 'Mr. Brown, in the ſumming up 'the Charge againſt me, laid the Weight of the 'Charge in this, That theſe Church-Wardens were 'proſecuted for executing the Warrant of a Juſtice 'of Peace upon an Ale-houſe Keeper, for tipling 'on the Sabbath-Day, contrary to the Statutes 'Jac. 7. & Car. 3. To which I anſwered, That 'thoſe Statutes did concern the Ale-houſe Keepers 'only; nor were the Church-Wardens called in 'queſtion for that; but becauſe being Church-'Officers, and a Church-Man tipling there, they 'did not complain of that to the Chancellor of the 'Dioceſs. Mr. Brown replied, There was no Cler-'gy-Man there. I am glad I was ſo miſtaken. 'But that excuſeth not the Church-Wardens, who 'being Church-Officers, ſhould have been as rea-'dy to inform the Biſhop, as to obey the Juſtice 'of Peace.'

IV. The fourth Inſtance was about Marriages in the Tower, which I oppoſed againſt Law. The Witneſs Sir William Balfore, then Lieutenant of the Tower. He ſays, that I did oppoſe thoſe Marriages: And ſo ſay I. But I did it for the Subject of England's ſake: for many of their Sons and Daughters were there undone. Nor Banes, nor Licence, nor any Means of Fore-knowledge to prevent it. Was this ill? He ſays, That when he ſpake with me about it, I deſired him to ſpeak with his Majeſty about it, becauſe it was the King's Houſe. What could I do with more moderation? He confeſſes he did ſo, and that he moved the King that the Cauſe might be heard at the Council-Table, not at the High-Commiſſion. To this his Majeſty inclined, and I oppoſed nothing, ſo the general Abuſe might be rectified. Then he ſays, Mr. Attorney Noye ſaid at the Council-Table, it was the King's free Chappel, and that no Pope in thoſe times offer'd to inhibit there. Firſt, if Mr. Attorney did ſo ſay, he muſt have leave to ſpeak freely in the King's Cauſe. Secondly, (as I humbly conceive) the Chappel for ordinary Uſe of Priſoners and Inhabitants of the Tower, where theſe diſorderly Marriages are made, is not that which is called the King's free Chappel; but another, in the ſide of the white Tower by the King's Lodgings. Thirdly, if it be, yet I have herein not offended; for I did all that was done by the King's leave, not by any Aſſumption of Papal Power. Then he tells the Lords, That in a Diſcourſe of mine with him at Greenwich, about this Buſineſs, I let fall an Oath. I am ſorry for it, if I did: but that's no Treaſon. 'And I know 'whom the Deponent thinks to pleaſe by this In-'terpoſition: for to the matter it belongs not.' In concluſion, he ſays truly, That the King committed the Buſineſs to ſome Lords and Judges, that ſo an end might be put to it; and in the mean time ordered, that till it were ended, there ſhould be no more Marriages in the Tower. How this Buſineſs ended, I know not. It began, I am ſure, by Authority of his Majeſty's Grant of the High-Commiſſion, to queſtion and puniſh all ſuch Abuſes, tam in locis exemptis, quam non exemptis. And his Majeſty having graciouſly taken this Care for the Indemnity of the Subject, I troubled myſelf no more with it; my Aim being not to cut off any Privileges of that Place, but only to prevent the Abuſes of that lawleſs Cuſtom. 'And if cui 'bono be a conſiderable Circumſtance, as it uſes 'to be in all ſuch Buſineſſes, then it may be 'thought on too, that this Gentleman the Lieute-'nant had a conſiderable ſhare for his part out of 'the Fee of every Marriage. Which I believe 'was as dear to him as the Privilege.'

V. The next Inſtance is broke out of the Tower, and got as far as Oxford. The Witneſs, Alderman Nixon. He ſays, The Mayor, and the Watch ſet by him, were diſturbed by the Proctors of the Univerſity, and a Conſtable impriſoned. The Night-Walk, and the keeping of the Watch, is the antient, known, and conſtant Privilege of the Univerſity, for ſome hundred of Years; and ſo the Watch ſet by the Town (purpoſely to pick a Quarrel) was not according to Law. He adds, That when the Right Honourable the Earl of Berkſhire would have referred the Buſineſs to the King's Counſel Learned, I refuſed, and ſaid I would maintain it by my own Power, as Chancellor. If I did ſay this (which I neither remember nor believe) I might better refuſe Lawyers, (not the Law, but Lawyers) than they a ſworn Judge of their own Nomination, which they did.

The Caſe was briefly this. There were ſome five or ſix Particulars which had, for divers Years, bred much Trouble and Diſagreement between the Univerſity and the City; of which (to my beſt remembrance) this about the Night-Watch, and another about Felons Goods, were two of the chief. The Univerſity complained to me. I was ſo far from going any By-way, that I was reſolved upon a Tryal at Weſtminſter-Hall, thinking (as I after found) that nothing but a legal Tryal would ſet thoſe two Bodies at quiet. The Townſmen liked not this: Came ſome of the chief of them to London; prevailed with their Honourable Steward my Lord the Earl of Berkſhire, to come to me to Lambeth, and by his Lordſhip offer'd to have all ended without ſo great Charge at Law, by reference to any of the Judges. I ſaid I had no mind to wrong the Town, or put them to charge, but thought they would fly off from all Awards; and therefore ſtuck to have a legal Tryal. After this, ſome of the chief Aldermen came to me with my Lord, and offer'd me, That if the Univerſity would do the like, they would go down and bring it up under the Mayor and Aldermens Hands, that they would ſtand to ſuch end as Judge Jones, who rode that Circuit, ſhould, upon Hearing, make. They did ſo, and brought the Paper ſo ſubſcribed; (and therefore I think Alderman Nixon's Hand is to it as well as the reſt:) Upon this I gave way; the Univerſity accepted; the Judge heard and ſettled. And now when they ſaw my Troubles threatning me, they brake all, whiſtled up their Recorder to come and complain at the Council-Table, his Majeſty preſent. And I remember well, I told his Lordſhip (then making the aforeſaid Motion to refer to the King's Learned Counſel) that his Lordſhip well knew what had paſſed; and that being ſo uſed as I had been by the Townſmen, I would trouble my ſelf with no more References to Lawyers, or to that effect. And I appeal to the Honour of my Lord, whether this be not a true Relation.

VI. The ſixth Inſtance concerns the putting of one Mr. Grant out of his Right. He ſays, (but he is ſingle, and in his own Cauſe) That Mr. Bridges was preſented to an Impropriation; and that ſuing for Tythe, he (the ſaid Grant) got a Prohibition, and Mr. Bridges a Reference to the then Lord Keeper Coventry and my ſelf; That we referred them to the Law, and that there Grant was non-ſuited, and ſo outed of his Right. Firſt, In all this there's nothing ſaid to be done by me alone. Secondly, The Lord Keeper, who well underſtood the Law, thought it fitteſt to refer them to the Law: and ſo we did. If he were there non-ſuited firſt, and outed after, it was the Law that put him out, not we. 'Yet your Lordſhips 'ſee here was a Prohibition granted in a Caſe, 'which the Law it ſelf after rejected.'

VII. Then follows the Inſtance, That I had a purpoſe to aboliſh all Impropriations. The firſt Proof alledged was a Paſſage out of Biſhop Mountague's Book, p. 210. That Tythes were due by Divine Right, and then no Impropriations might ſtand. And Mr. Pryn witneſſed very carefully, That this Book was found in my own Study, and given me by Biſhop Mountague. And what of this? Doth any Biſhop print a Book, and not give the Archbiſhop one of them? Or muſt I anſwer for every Propoſition that is in every Book that is in my Study, or that any Author gives me? And if Biſhop Mountague be of opinion that Tythes are due by Divine Right, what is that to me? Your Lordſhips know many Men are of different Opinions in that Difficulty; and I am confident you will not determine the Controverſy by an Act of Parliament. They were nibling at my Diary in this, to ſhew that it was one of my Projects to fetch in Impropriations; but it was not fit for their purpoſe: For 'tis expreſſed, That if I lived to ſee the Repair of St. Paul's near an end, I would move his Majeſty for the like Grant for the buying in of Impropriations. And to buy them from the Owners, is neither againſt Law, nor againſt any thing elſe that is good; nor is it any Uſurpation of Papal Power.

Diary, in fine, nu. 21.

2. The ſecond Proof was my procuring from the King ſuch Impropriations in Ireland, as were in the King's power, to the Church of Ireland. 'Which 'Mr Nicolas (in his gentle Language) calls Rob-'bing of the Crown.' My Lords, the Caſe was this. The Lord Primate of Armagh writ unto me, how ill conditioned the State of that Church was for want of Means; and beſought me that I would move his Majeſty to give the Impropriations there, which yet remained in the Crown, for the Maintenance and Incouragement of able Miniſters to live among the People, and inſtruct them; aſſuring me, they were daily one by one begged away by private Men, to the great Prejudice both of Crown and Church. And the Truth of this, the Lord Primate is now in this Kingdom, and will witneſs. I acquainted the King's great Officers, the Lord Treaſurer, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer with it. And after long Deliberation, the King was pleaſed, at my humble Suit, to grant them in the way which I propoſed: which was, That when they came into the Clergy's hands, they ſhould pay all the Rents reſpectively to the King, and ſome Conſideration for the ſeveral Renewings. And the Truth of this appears in the Deeds: So here was no Robbing of the Crown. For the King had all his ſet Rents reſerved to a Penny, and Conſideration for his Caſualties beſide. And, my Lords, the Increaſe of Popery is complained of in Ireland: Is there a better way to hinder this Growth, than to place an able Clergy among the Inhabitants? Can an able Clergy be had without Means? Is any Means fitter than Impropriations reſtored? My Lords, I did this, as holding it the beſt means to keep down Popery, and to advance the Proteſtant Religion. And I wiſh with all my heart, I had been able to do it ſooner, before ſo many Impropriations were gotten from the Crown into private Hands.

VIII. Next I was charged with another Project in my Diary, which was to ſettle ſome fixed Commendams upon all the ſmaller Biſhopricks. For this, I ſaid, their own Means were too ſmall to live and keep any Hoſpitality, little exceeding Four or Five Hundred Pounds a Year. I conſidered that the Commendams taken at large and far diſtant, cauſed a great Diſlike and Murmur among many Men; that they were in ſome Caſes Materia odioſa, and juſtly complained of. And hereupon I thought it a good Church-Work to ſettle ſome Temporal Leaſe, or ſome Benefice, ſine Cura, upon the leſſer Biſhopricks, but nothing but ſuch as was in their own Right and Patronage; that ſo no other Man's Patronage might receive prejudice by the Biſhop's Commendam: Which was not the leaſt Rock of Offence, againſt which Commendams endanger'd themſelves. And that this was my Intent and Endeavour, is expreſſed in my Diary; and I cannot be ſorry for it.

Diary, fine, nu. 8.

IX. Then I was accuſed for ſetting old Popiſh Canons above the Laws. Mr. Burton is the ſole Witneſs. He ſays, It was in a Caſe about a Pew, in which thoſe Canons did weigh down an Act of Parliament. 'I did never think till now Mr. Bur-'ton would have made any Canons Pew-Fellows 'with an Act of Parliament.' But ſeriouſly, ſhould not Mr. Burton's Teſtimony for this have been produced at the ſecond Inſtance of this Day? For in the end of that is juſt ſuch another Charge; and the Anſwer there given will ſatisfy this, and that by Act of Parliament too.

25 Hen. 8. c. 19. §. ult.

X. After

X. After this came a Charge with a great Outcry; That ſince my coming to be Archbiſhop, I had renewed the High-Commiſſion, and put in many illegal and exorbitant Clauſes, which were not in the former. Both the Commiſſions were produced. Upon this, I humbly deſired that the Docket might be read, by which their Lordſhips might ſee all thoſe Particulars which were added in the new Commiſſion, and ſo be able to judge how fit or unfit they were to be added. The Docket was read; and there was no Particular found, but ſuch as highly deſerved Puniſhment, and were of Eccleſiaſtical Cognizance: as Blaſphemy, Schiſm, and two or three more of like nature.

1. In this Charge, the firſt exorbitant Clauſe they inſiſted on, as added to the new Commiſſion, was the Power given in Locis Exemptis, & non Exemptis; as if it were thereby intended to deſtroy all Privileges. No, not to deſtroy any Privilege, but not to ſuffer enormous Sins to have any Privilege. Beſides, this Clauſe hath ever been in all Commiſſions that ever were granted. And I then ſhewed it to the Lords in the old Commiſſion there preſent, p. 28, 32, 35, 42. 'Nay more, this Pro-'ceeding tam in Locis Exemptis quam non Exemptis, 'is allowed to the Governours of the Church, 'in the Exerciſe of their Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdic-'tion, by Act of Parliament in 'Queen Elizabeth's Time; which 'would never have been allowed, 'had it then been thought ſuch a dangerous Buſineſs, as 'tis now made againſt me.'

1 Eliz. c. 2.

2. The ſecond Clauſe was Power to cenſure, by Fine and Impriſonment. This alſo I ſhewed in the old Commiſſion, Fol. 37. and is (as I conceive) in plain purſuance of the Act of Parliament upon which the High-Commiſſion is grounded. For the King ſays there, Fol. 13. (and ſo 'tis in the new) That he grants this Power by virtue of his Supreme Authority, and Prerogative Royal, [1] and of the ſaid Act. Nay farther, 'tis added in this latter Commiſſion, And by our Authority Eccleſiaſtical, which is not expreſſed in the former. And ſure I would never have cauſed Authority Eccleſiaſtical to be added, had I any Plot (as 'tis urged) either to exalt the Clergy above the Laity, or to uſurp Papal Power; which all Men know is far enough from aſcribing Eccleſiaſtical Authority to the King. And as for Fine and Impriſonment, if that Power be not according to Law, why was it firſt admitted, and after continued in all former Commiſſions?

1 Eliz. c. 1. §. 8.

[1] The Words of the Statute are, By virtue of this Act.

3. The third Clauſe was the Non Obſtante, which he ſaid was againſt all Law, and of ſuch a boundleſs extent, as was never found in Commiſſion or other Grant in England. And he here deſired the Lords that he might read it, which he did, with great Aſſurance of a Triumph. But after all this Noiſe which Mr. Nicolas had made, I ſhewed the ſame Non Obſtante in the old Commiſſion, Fol. 62. word for word, which I humbly deſired might be read and compared: It was ſo. The Lords looked ſtrangely upon it; Mr. Nicolas was ſo ſtartled, that he had not patience to ſtay till his Reply, (which he ſaw impoſſible to be made) but interrupted me, and had the face to ſay in that Honourable Aſſembly, That I need not ſtand upon that; for he did but name that, without much regarding it. And yet at the giving of the Charge, he inſiſted principally upon that Clauſe, and in higher and louder Terms than are before expreſſed. Had ſuch an Advantage been found againſt me, I ſhould have been accounted extremely negligent, if I compared not the Commiſſions together; or extremely impudent, if I did.

4. The fourth Exception was, That by this Commiſſion I took greater Power than ever any Court had, becauſe both Temporal and Eccleſiaſtical. Firſt, Whatſoever Power the High-Commiſſion had, was not taken by them, till given by his Majeſty, and that according to Uſe and Statute, (for ought hath been yet declared.) Secondly, They have not Power of Life or Limb, therefore not ſo great Power as other Courts have. Thirdly, They may have more various Power in ſome reſpects, but that cannot make it greater. 'As for the Expreſſion in which 'tis ſaid, I took 'this Power; that is put moſt unworthily and un-'juſtly too, to derive the Envy as much as he could 'upon my Perſon only.' For he could not hold from comparing me to Pope Boniface VIII. and ſaying, That I took on me the Power of both Swords. But this was only ad faciendum Populum. For he knows well enough, that to take both the Swords, as the Pope takes them, is to challenge them originally as due to him and his Place: Not to take both, as under the Prince, and given by his Authority; and ſo not I alone, but all the Commiſſioners take theirs.

5. Fifthly, To prove that this vaſt Commiſſion (as it was called) was put in execution, Mr. Burton is produced. He ſays, That when he was called into the High-Commiſſion, he appealed to the King, and pleaded his Appeal; and that thereupon I and the Biſhop of London writ to the King to have him ſubmit to the Court. He confeſſes he was diſmiſſed upon his Appeal, till his Majeſty's Pleaſure was farther known. And it was our Duty, conſidering what a Breach this would make upon the Juriſdiction of the Court, to inform his Majeſty of it; and we did ſo. The King declared that he ſhould ſubmit to the Court, as is confeſſed by himſelf. Then he ſays, Becauſe he would not ſubmit to the Court, he was cenſured notwithſtanding his Appeal. And he well deſerved it, that would not be ruled by his Majeſty, to whom he had appealed. And the Commiſſion had Power to do what they did. Beſides, himſelf confeſſes, all this was done by the High-Commiſſion, not by me. Nor doth he urge any Threat, Promiſe, or Sollicitation of mine, any way to particularize the Act upon me: And farther, he is ſingle, and in his own Cauſe.

XI. Then followed the laſt Charge of this Day, which was the Patent granted for the Fines in the High-Commiſſion, for finiſhing the Weſt End of St. Paul's, cried out upon as illegal, and extorted from the King, and ſuch as took all Power from him for the ſpace of the Ten Years, for which time it was granted. This is the fourth time that St. Paul's is ſtruck at. My Lords, let it come as often as it will, my Project and Endeavour in that Work was honeſt and honourable to both Church and Kingdom of England. No Man in all this Search and Purſuit hath been able to charge me with the turning of any one Penny or Pennyworth to other uſe than was limited to me. I took a great deal of care and pains about the Work, and cannot repent of any thing I did in that Service, but of human Frailty. And whereas 'tis ſaid, this Patent was extorted from his Majeſty; as there is no Proof offered for it, ſo is there no Truth in it. For his Majeſty's Piety was ſo forward, that nothing needed to be extorted from him. Thus went I on, bona fide, and took the prime Direction of the Kingdom for drawing the Patent, the Lord Keeper Coventry, Mr. Noy, and Sir Henry Martin. And therefore if any thing be found againſt Law in it, it cannot be imputed to me, who took all the care I could to have it beyond Exception. And I marvel what Security any Man ſhall have, that adventures upon any great and publick Work in this Kingdom, if ſuch Counſel cannot be truſted for drawing up of his Warrant. 'And whereas it was ſaid, This 'Patent for the ten Years ſpace took away both 'Juſtice and Mercy from the King; that's nothing 'ſo: For whatever the Words be, to enable me the 'better for that Work, yet theſe being inſeparable from him, may be uſed by him, notwithſtanding this or any other Patent. And if theſe be inſeparable, (as 'tis granted they are) no inſeparable 'thing can be taken away; or if it be taken, 'tis 'void in Law, and the King is where he was in 'the Exerciſe of his Right, both for Juſtice and 'Mercy. And ſo I anſwered Mr. Brown's ſummary Charge againſt me. And as for that which 'he farther urged concerning St. Gregory's Church, 'Mr. Jingo Jones and others were truſted with 'that whole Buſineſs, and were cenſured for it in 'this preſent Parliament. In all which Examination, no part of the Charge fell on me.' And becauſe here are ſo many things urged about Free-Chappels, Lay-Fees, Patents, Appeals, and the like, I humbly deſire a Salvo may be enter'd for me; and that my Counſel may be heard for Matter of Law, if any Doubt ſtick with your Lordſhips.

This Day ended, I did, according to my Reſolution formerly taken, move the Lords for Means, conſidering my Charge in coming, and how oft I had attended, and was not heard. Their Lordſhips conſidered of my Motion, and ſent me out word I ſhould petition them. I did humbly petition their Lordſhips May 6. My Petition was preſently ſent down to the Houſe of Commons, that ſo by both Houſes it might be recommended to the Committee for Sequeſtrations. But upon a Speech in the Houſe of Commons, that it was fit to ſee what would become of me, before they troubled themſelves with thinking of Means for me, my Petition was caſt aſide.

At my parting from the Houſe, I was ordered to appear again on Thurſday, May 9. but then fairly put off by an Order (ſent to the Lieutenant of the Tower) to Monday, May 13. So the Scorn and Charge of that Day was ſcaped. But then I appeared according to this Order, and had Scorn plenty, for what I eſcaped the Day before: And, after long Attendance, was diſmiſſed again unheard; and had Thurſday, May 16. aſſigned unto me. That Day held, and proceeded thus.

The Ninth Day of my Hearing.

I. MAY 16. 1644. The firſt Charge of this Day was about a Reverſion of the Town-Clerk's Office of Shrewsbury to one Mr. Lee, which he deſir'd might be inſerted into the new Charter. Firſt, Mr. Lee is ſingle here, and in his own Caſe. Secondly, It appears by his own Confeſſion, out of the Mouth of Mr. Barnard, that there was a Reference of this Buſineſs to thoſe Lords to whom Shrewsbury Charter was referred: For he ſays, That Mr. Barnard told him his Buſineſs was ſtayed, and he thought by me; but did not know whether the Lord Keeper's Hand were not in it. So it ſeems by himſelf, this was done by the Lords Referees, and not by me. Thirdly, I did not then think, nor do now, that the Reverſion of a Place, to be ſold for three hundred Pound, (as he confeſſes that was) was fit to be put into a Town-Charter. But yet neither I, nor the Lord Keeper, did any thing in that Stop, but what we acquainted his Majeſty with, and had his Approbation of. And whereas he ſays, That he acquainted the Right Honourable the Earl of Dorſet with the Stay that was made, and that thereupon his Lordſhip ſhould ſay, Have we two Kings? I cannot believe that Honourable Lord would ſo ſay, unleſs he were much abuſed by Mr. Lee's Information, both in regard of his Love to me, and in regard it could not proceed from a Man of ſo great a Judgment as that Lord is. For I beſeech your Lordſhips conſider, may not Lords, to whom a Buſineſs is referred, give his Majeſty good Reaſon to alter his mind in ſome Particulars which they have debated, and not he? And may not this be done without any one of them taking on him to be a ſecond King?

II. The ſecond Charge was laid on me by Sir Arthur Haſelrig, (which ſhould have come in the Day before, as Mr. Nicolas ſaid, but that Sir Arthur was abſent in the neceſſary Service of the State.) Sir Arthur, being ſingle, and in his own Caſe, ſays, That Sir John Lambe preſented a blind Parſon to a Living of his. If Sir John did that, or any unworthy thing elſe, ætatem habet, let him anſwer for himſelf. He ſays farther, That this Living is an Impropriation, and ſo a Lay-Fee by Law; and that when he told me ſo much, I made him this Anſwer, That if I lived, no Man ſhould name or ſtand upon his Lay-Fee. I conceive, my Lords, here's a great Miſtake in the main: For I have been credibly informed, and do believe, that Benefice is preſentative, and ſo no Lay-Fee. And then there's no Fault to preſent unto it, ſo the Clerk be fit. Secondly, There's a main Miſtake in my Words, which I remember well, and where it was that I ſpake them. My Words, under this Gentleman's Favour, and your Lordſhips, were theſe, and no other; That I had good Information that the Benefice was preſentative; and that if I lived, I hoped to order it ſo, that no Man ſhould make a preſentative Benefice a Lay-Fee; there were too many of them already. Thirdly, If I did ſpeak the Words as they are charged, if they come within that Statute of ſix Months, ſo often mentioned, to that I refer my ſelf: whatſoever the Bird at this time of the Year ſings, as Mr. Nicolas was pleaſed to put it upon me. And truly, my Lords, I could eaſily return all his Bitterneſs upon himſelf, could it befit my Perſon, my preſent Condition, or my Calling.

III. The third Charge was about the refuſing of a Pardon, which Mrs. Baſtwick ſaid ſhe produced in the High-Commiſſion Court ſome nine or ten Years ſince: And ſhe adds, That I ſhould then ſay, it ſhould not ſerve his turn. But this was no rejecting of the Pardon; for ſhe confeſſes I ſaid I would move his Majeſty about it. So that if it did not ſerve his turn, it was from the King himſelf, upon Motion made, and Reaſon given, not from any Power aſſumed by the High-Commiſſion or my ſelf. And the Act, whatever it were, was the Act of the whole Court, not mine. As for the Words, (if mine) I give the ſame Anſwer as before, notwithſtanding Mr. Nicholas his Bird.

IV. The

IV. The fourth Charge was, That whereas there was a Proclamation to be printed about the Pacification with the Scots, it was ſuddenly ſtopp'd, and an Order after for burning of the Pacification. Firſt, Mr. Hinſcot is ſingle in this Charge. Secondly, Whatſoever was done in this, was by Order of Council: And himſelf names an Order, which could not come from me. Thirdly, He charges me with nothing but that I ſent word the Proclamation was to be ſtayed; which, if I did, I did it by Command. Howſoever, this concerns the Scotiſh Buſineſs, and therefore to the Act of Oblivion I refer my ſelf. 'With this, that I ſee by 'this Teſtimony, Mr. Hunſcourt (for I took his 'Name uncertainly) hath not yet forgotten, Thou 'ſhalt commit Adultery; ſo deſirous he is to catch 'me at the Preſs.'

V. The fifth Charge was about a Benefice in Northamptonſhire, in the Caſe of Mr. Fautrye and Mr. Johnſon, and Dr. Beal's ſucceeding them. In which broken Buſineſs, (for ſuch it was) Firſt, That Buſineſs was all along acted by the High-Commiſſion, not by me. Secondly, That though in the Caſe of Simony the Benefice be loſt, ipſo facto, yet that muſt be proved before the Incumbent can be thruſt out, and another inſtituted, elſe Churchmen were in a miſerable Condition for their Livelihood. Excommunication is in many Caſes void in Law, ipſo facto; and yet, ante latam Sententiam, till Sentence be orderly pronounced againſt it, no Man ſhall be ſubjected to thoſe fearful Conſequences which follow upon it. 'And upon this 'ground of natural Equity, that in the Statute 'concerning the Uniformity of Common-Prayer 'proceeds:' Where 'tis ſaid, 'That a Party once convicted for depraving the Common-Prayer Book, and relapſing into the ſame Crime, ſhall be deprived of all his Spiritual Promotions, ipſo facto. But how? without any legal Proceedings? No; God forbid: For the Words preceding immediately in the Statute, are, That he muſt be firſt legally convicted of that criminal Relapſe; and then follows ipſo facto, and not before. And therefore the Super-inſtitution, before the Simony tried and judged, was illegal; beſide the great danger to the Pariſhioners, while two Parſons, and their ſeveral Friends are ſcrambling for the Tythes. Secondly, Fautrye was not cenſured for the original Cauſe of Simony, but for an Intruder, and Colluder too with Jeames, to abuſe the King's Grant of the Benefice. Thirdly, It ſeems Fautrye had no better Opinion of his own Cauſe: For he went to his Benefice in Jerſey, and ſet not his Title on foot again till after ſeven Years; and that, I think, was when he heard that Mr. Johnſon was a Pretender to it. And his Bond upon the Sentence was to make a final Peace. For the Prohibition, which he ſays was refuſed, I have anſwered that before, in the Charge about Prohibitions. Beſides, it appears by [2] Law, that as Prohibitions may be granted in ſome Caſes, ſo in ſome Caſes they may be refuſed. For Dr. Beal, there is not the leaſt ſhew of Proof offered, that I brought him in, if to do ſo be a Crime.

[2] 13 Ed. 1.

Thus far Mr. Fautrye went. As for Mr. Johnſon's Title, he ſays, That the Lords ordered it for him, and declared that we in the High-Commiſſion could put no Man out of his Freehold. Where firſt, if your Lordſhips have ordered this Buſineſs, I muſt crave to know how far I ſhall have leave to ſpeak to it: For if there be any Errors charged upon the Sentence given in the High-Commiſſion, if they may not be ſpoken to, they cannot be ſatisfied. This I am ſure of, the Commiſſion hath Power to deprive: For the [3] Statute gives it Power to uſe all Eccleſiaſtical and Spiritual Cenſures; of which Deprivation is known to be one: And that Power is expreſly given to deprive ſome Offenders of all their Spiritual Promotions, by the following [4] Statute. Therefore I think it follows neceſſarily, either that we have Power over Freehold in that Caſe, or elſe that a Benefice is not a Freehold. But I have no reaſon, howſoever, to ſpeak any thing (were I left never ſo free) againſt your Lordſhips Order, which very honourably left Dr. Beal to the Law; as 'tis confeſſed by Johnſon.

Beſides theſe two in their own Cauſe, one Mr. Jenkins is produced; but to what end I know not, unleſs it be to beſpatter Dr. Beal. He ſays, That ſeven Years ſince Dr. Beal was Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge; that in his Sermon then he inveighed bitterly againſt the Power of Parliaments, and named ſome unſavoury Speeches of his, both concerning their Perſons and Proceedings. Surely, if Dr. Beal did as is teſtified, he was much to blame. But what is this to me? If it be ſaid I did not puniſh him: How could I puniſh that I knew not? And I profeſs I heard not of it till now at Bar. If it be ſaid I did prefer him; that I do abſolutely deny. And neither Mr. Jenkins, nor any other, offers the leaſt Proof that I knew the one, or did the other.

VI. The ſixth Charge was concerning the Statutes of the Univerſity of Oxford; in which, and the Cathedrals of the new Erection, Mr. Nicolas ſays I took on me to be an univerſal Law-giver. Many ſuch Offices he beſtows upon me, which God knows, and I believe he too, that I never affected. No, my Lords, the great Neceſſities of that Univerſity called upon me for it: Their Statutes lay in a miſerable confuſed Heap. When any Difficulty aroſe, they knew not where to look for Remedy or Direction. Then into the Convocation-Houſe, and make a new Statute; and that many times proved contrary to an old one concerning the ſame Buſineſs: Men in the mean time ſworn to both, which could not poſſibly be kept together. By this means Perjury was in a manner unavoidable: And themſelves confeſs in their [5] Regiſter, (which is now in Court) that till this was done, they did in a ſort ſwear, that they might be forſworn.

Beſides, my Lords, I did not aboliſh any the old Books, in which the Statutes lay ſo confuſed, ſome in one Book, and ſome in another; but left them all entirely in the Univerſity, in caſe in after-times any uſe might be made of them. Nor did I with them, as ſome antient Philoſophers are ſaid to have done with the Works of ſome that went before them; that is, make them away, to advance their own Honour the more, as if without any help of former Pains, they had done all themſelves: Holding it Honour more than enough for me, that God had ſo highly bleſſed me in this Work, as to finiſh and ſettle thoſe Statutes, which the greateſt Men in their Times, Cardinal Wolſey firſt, and after him Cardinal Pool, aſſayed, but left as imperfect as they found them. Neither did I any thing in this Work but by the Conſent of the Univerſity, and according to an Act (and a Delegacy thereby appointed) of their own Convocation.

Mr. Nicolas ſays, There is a Razure in one of the Acts, and ſupplied in other Ink. I told your Lordſhips then preſently, (being loth to lie never ſo little under ſuch an Imputation) that if there be any ſuch, it muſt be charged upon the Univerſity, not upon me, for thoſe Records were never in my hands; nor is it ſo much as ſaid they were. And ſince I withdrew to make my Anſwer, I have viewed the Record, and an Alteration or Addition there is; and 'tis a known Hand. 'Tis Dr. Duppa's Hand, now Lord Biſhop of Salisbury, and then Vice-Chancellor; who I doubt not but is able to give a good account of what he did therein, and why. And for ought appears, 'tis nothing but the Amendment of ſome ſlip, which their ignorant Regiſter French had failed in, and the Vice-Chancellor thought it ſafeſt to mend with his own Hand. And for my own part, if ever I did any thing worth Thanks from the Publick in all my Life, I did it in this Work for that Univerſity. And I wiſh with all my Heart the Times were ſo open, as that I might have the Univerſity's Teſtimony both of me and it. 'Since I cannot, a great Lord, preſent in 'the Houſe when this Charge was laid againſt me, 'ſupplied in part their Abſence; for he was over-'heard to ſay to another Lord, I think my Lord 'Archbiſhop hath done no good Work in all his Life, 'but theſe Men will object it as a Crime againſt him 'before they have done.

With this Charge about the Statutes it was let fall, (and I well know why, 'It was to heat a No-'ble Perſon then preſent,') That I procured my ſelf to be choſen Chancellor of that Univerſity. If I had ſo done, it might have been a great Ambition in me, but ſurely no Treaſon. But, my Lords, I have Proof great ſtore, might I be enabled to fetch it from Oxford, that I was ſo far from endeavouring to procure this Honour to my ſelf, as that I laboured by my Letters for another. And 'tis well known, that when they had choſen me, I went inſtantly to his Majeſty, ſo ſoon as ever I heard it, and humbly beſought him that I might refuſe it, as well foreſeeing the Envy that would follow me for it; and it did plentifully every way. But this for ſome Reaſons his Majeſty would not ſuffer me to do.

Then were objected againſt me divers Particulars contained in thoſe Statutes: As, Firſt, The making of new Oaths. The Charters of the Univerſity are not new, and they gave Power to make Statutes for themſelves, and they have ever been upon Oath. Secondly, The next Illegality is, That Men are tied to obey the Proctors in ſinging the Litany. This is antient, and in uſe long before ever I came to the Univerſity; and it is, according to the Liturgy of the Church of England, eſtabliſhed by Law. Thirdly, The Statute of Bannition from the Univerſity. But there is nothing more antient in the Univerſity-Statutes than this. Fourthly, That nothing ſhould be propoſed in Convocation, but what was conſented unto among the Heads of Colleges firſt; which was ſaid to be againſt the Liberty of the Students. The young Maſters of Arts, void of Experience, were grown ſo tumultuous, that no Peace could be kept in the Univerſity, till my worthy Predeceſſor, the Right Honourable William Earl of Pembroke, ſettled this Order among them: As he did alſo, upon the ſame grounds, ſettle the preſent way of the Choice of their Proctors. In both which I did but follow and confirm (for ſo much as lay in me) the good and peaceable Grounds which he had laid in thoſe two Buſineſſes. 'And Mr. Brown, who, in the ſumming up of my 'Charge, urged this againſt me, mainly miſtook 'in two Things. The one was, That he ſaid this 'Inhibition of Propoſals was in Congregations; 'whereas it was only in Convocations, where 'more weighty Buſineſſes are handled. The other 'was, That this ſtay of Propoſals was made till I 'might be firſt acquainted with them. No; it was 'but till the Heads of Colleges had met, and con-'ſidered of them, for avoiding tumultuary Pro-'ceedings. And when my Honourable Predeceſ-'ſor made that Order, it was highly commended 'every where: And is it now degenerated into a 'Crime, becauſe it is made up into a Statute?' Fifthly, That ſome Things are referred to arbitrary Penalties. And that ſome Things are ſo referred, is uſual in that Univerſity, and many Colleges have a particular Statute for it: Nor is this any more Power than ordinary School-Maſters have, which have not a Statute-Law for every Puniſhment they uſe in Schools. And in divers Things the old known Statute is, That the Vice-Chancellor ſhall proceed groſſo modo, that is, without the regular Forms of Law, for the more ſpeedy ending of Differences among the Scholars.

Sixthly, That the [1] Statute made by me againſt Conventicles is very ſtrict. But for theſe that Statute is expreſs de illicitis Conventiculis; and I hope ſuch as are unlawful may be both forbid and puniſhed. Beſides, it is according to the Charter of Richard the Second to that Univerſity. Seventhly, The ſeventh was the Power of diſcommoning. But this alſo hath ever been in power and in uſage in that Univerſity, as is commonly known to all Oxford-Men: And no longer ſince than King James his Time, Biſhop King, then Vice-Chancellor, diſcommoned three or four Townſmen together. Eighthly, That Students were bound to go to Priſon upon the Vice-Chancellor's, or Proctor's Command. This alſo was antient, and long before my coming to the Univerſity. And your Lordſhips may be ſure the Delegacy, appointed by themſelves, would not have admitted it, had it not been antient and uſual. Ninthly, and laſtly, [2] About the ſtay of granting Graces, unleſs there were Teſtimony from the Biſhop of the Dioceſs. This was for no Graces; but of ſuch as live not reſident in the Univerſity, and ſo they could not judge of their Manners and Converſation. And for their Conformity to the Church of England, none (as I conceive) can be a fitter Witneſs than the Biſhop of the Dioceſs in which they reſided. And, my Lords, for all theſe thus drawn up by ſome of their own Body, I obtained of his Majeſty his Broad-Seal for Confirmation; and therefore no one thing in them is by any Aſſumption of Papal Power, as 'tis urged; but by the King's Power only.

[1] Tit. 15. §. 12.

[2] Tit. 9. §. 2.

VII. Then followed the ſeventh Charge, About the Statutes of ſome Cathedral Churches. Firſt, my Lords, for this, I did it by Letters-Patents from the King, bearing date Mar. 31. decimo Caroli, and is extant upon Record. And all that was done, was per juris remedia, and ſo nothing intended againſt Law, nor done, that I know. They had extreme need of Statutes; for all lay looſe for want of Confirmation, and Men did what they liſted: And I could not but obſerve it; for I was Dean of Glouceſter, where I found it ſo. In ſeeking to remedy this, I had nothing but my Labour for my Pains; and now this Accuſation to boot. The Particulars urged are, 1. That I had ordered that nothing ſhould be done in theſe Statutes, me inconſulto.

ſuko. And I had great reaſon for it. For ſince I was principally truſted in that Work by his Majeſty, the King, if any Complaint were made, would expect the Account from me. And how could I give it, if other Men might do all, and I not be ſo much as conſulted before they paſſed?

2. That I made a Statute againſt letting Leaſes into three Lives. But firſt, my Lords, the Statute which makes it lawful to let Leaſes for one and twenty Years, or three Lives, hath this Limitation in it, That they ſhall not let for any more Years than are limited by the ſaid Colleges or Churches. Now in Wincheſter-Church, and ſome other, the old local Statute is moſt plain, that they ſhall let no Leaſe into Lives. Let the Dean and Prebendaries anſwer their own Acts, and their Conſciences, as they can. And in thoſe Statutes which I did not find pregnant to that purpoſe, I did not make the Statute abſolute, but left them free to renew all ſuch Leaſes as were antiently in Lives before. And this give me leave to ſay to your Lordſhips, without offence; If but a few more Leaſes be granted into Lives, no Biſhop nor Cathedral Church ſhall be able to ſubſiſt. And this is conſiderable alſo, That, as the State of the Church yet ſtands, the Laity have the benefit, by the Leaſes which they hold, of more than five parts of all the Biſhops, Deans and Chapters, and College Revenues in England. 'And ſhall it be yet 'an Eye-ſore to ſerve themſelves with the reſt of 'their own? This Evidence Mr. Brown, whoſe 'part it was to ſum up the Evidence againſt me at 'the end of the Charge, wholly omitted: for 'what cauſe, he beſt knows.'

13 Eliz. c. 10. §. penult.

VIII. The next Charge was about my Injunctions in my Viſitation of Winton and Sarum, for the taking down of ſome Houſes. But they were ſuch as were upon conſecrated Ground, and ought not to have been built there; and yet with Caution ſufficient to preſerve the Leſſees from over-much Damage. For it appears apud Acta, that they were not to be pulled down till their ſeveral Leaſes were expired. And that they were Houſes not built long ſince, but by them; and that all this was to be done, to the end that the Church might ſuffer no damage by them: and that this Demolition was to be made juxta Decreta Regni, according to the Statutes of the Kingdom. Therefore nothing injoined contrary to Law: or if any thing were, the Injunction took not place, by the very Tenour of that which was charged. 'Mr. Brown 'omitted this Charge alſo, though he hung hea-'vily upon the like at St. Paul's, though there was 'Satisfaction given, and not here.'

IX. The ninth Charge was my intended Viſitation of both the Univerſities, Oxford and Cambridge. For my Troubles began then to be foreſeen by me, and I viſited them not. 1. This was urged as a thing directly againſt Law. But this I conceive cannot be, ſo long as it was with the King's Knowledge, and by his Warrant. 2. Secondly, Becauſe all Power of the King's Viſitations was ſaved in the Warrant, and that with conſent of all parts. 3. Thirdly, Becauſe nothing in this was ſurreptitiouſly gotten from the King, all being done at a moſt full Council-Table, and great Counſel at Law heard on both ſides. 4. Fourthly, Becauſe it did there appear, that three of my Predeceſſors did actually viſit the Univerſities, and that Jure Eccleſiæ ſuæ Metropoliticæ. 5. Fifthly, No Immunity pleaded, why the Archbiſhop ſhould not viſit; for the Inſtance againſt Cardinal Poole, is nothing. For he attempted to viſit, not only by the Right of his See, but by his Power Legatine from the Pope; whereas the Univerſity-Charters are expreſs, that ſuch Power of Viſitation cannot be granted per Bullas Papales. And yet now 'tis charged againſt me, that I challenged this by Papal Power (a). 'Mr. Brown wholly neglected this 'Charge alſo, which, making ſuch a ſhew, I 'think he would not have done, had he found it 'well grounded.'

X. The tenth Charge was my Viſitation of Merton-College in Oxford. The Witneſs Sir Nathaniel Brent, the Warden of the College, and principally concerned in that Buſineſs. He ſaid, Firſt, That no Viſitation held ſo long. But if he conſult his own Office, he may find one much longer, held and continued at All-Souls-College by my worthy Predeceſſor Archbiſhop Whitgift. Secondly, He urged that I ſhould ſay, I would be Warden for ſeven Years. If I did ſo ſay, there was much need I ſhould make it good. Thirdly, That one Mr. Rich. Nevil, Fellow of that College, lay abroad in an Ale-houſe; that a Wench was got with child in that Houſe, and he accuſed of it; and that this was complained of to me, and Sir Nath. Brent accuſed for conſpiring with the Ale-Wife againſt Nevil. I am not here to accuſe the one, or defend the other. But the Caſe is this: This Cauſe between them was publick, and came to Hearing in the Vice-Chancellor's Court, Witneſſes examined, Mr. Nevil acquitted, and the Ale-Wife puniſhed. In all this I had no hand. Then in my Viſitation it was again complained of to me. I liked not the buſineſs; but forbare to do any thing in it, becauſe it had been legally cenſured upon the place. 'This part of the Charge Mr. Brown urged againſt 'me in the Houſe of Commons, and I gave it the 'ſame Anſwer.' Laſtly, When I ſat to hear the main Buſineſs of that College, Sir Nathaniel Brent was beholden to me that he continued Warden. For in Archbiſhop Warham's time, a Predeceſſor of his was expelled for leſs than was proved againſt him. And I found that true which one of my Viſitors had formerly told me, namely, That Sir Nathaniel Brent had ſo carried himſelf in that College, as that if he were guilty of the like, he would lay his Key under the door, and be gone, rather than come to anſwer it. Yet I did not think it fit to proceed ſo rigidly. But while I was going to open ſome of the Particulars againſt him, Mr. Nicolas cut me off, and told the Lords, this was to ſcandalize their Witneſſes. So I forbare.

XI. Then followed the laſt Charge of this Day, concerning a Book of Dr. Baſtwick's, for which he was cenſured in the High-Commiſſion. The Witneſſes in this Charge were three. Mr. Burton, a mortal Enemy of mine, and ſo he hath ſhewed himſelf. Mrs. Baſtwick, a Woman and a Wife, and well tutoured: for ſhe had a Paper, and all written which ſhe had to ſay; though I ſaw it not till 'twas too late. And Mr. Hanſcot, a Man that comes in to ſerve all turns againſt me, ſince the Sentence paſſed againſt the Printers for Thou ſhalt commit Adultery.

(a) The Archbiſhop had collected many Papers, Decrees, and Precedents, to aſſert his Privilege of viſiting the Univerſities, in Right of his See, about the Year 1635. Which being ſeized on by Pryn, among his other Papers at Lambeth, were by him, after the Archbiſhop's Death, publiſhed in his own Name, with this Title, The Plea of the Univerſity of Oxford refuted, &c. London 1647. eight Sheets in 4to. H. W.

In the Particulars of this Charge, 'tis firſt ſaid, That this Book was written contra Epiſcopos Latiales. But how cunningly ſoever this was pretended, 'tis more than manifeſt, it was purpoſely written and divulged againſt the Biſhops and Church of England. Secondly, That I ſaid that Chriſtian Biſhops were before Chriſtian Kings: So Burton and Mrs. Baſtwick. And with due Reverence to all Kingly Authority be it ſpoken, who can doubt but that there were many Chriſtian Biſhops, before any King was Chriſtian? Thirdly, Mr. Burton ſays, That I applied thoſe words in the Pſalm, Whom thou may'ſt make Princes in all Lands, to the Biſhops. For this, if I did err in it, many of the Fathers of the Church miſ-led me, who interpret that place ſo: And if I be miſtaken, 'tis no Treaſon. But I ſhall ever follow their Comments before Mr. Burton's. Fourthly, Mrs. Baſtwick ſays that I then ſaid, No Biſhop, and no King: If I did ſay ſo, I learned it of a wiſe and experienced Author, King James, who ſpake it out and plainly in the Conference at Hampton-Court. And I hope it cannot be Treaſon in me to repeat it. Fifthly, Mrs. Baſtwick complained, That I committed her Husband cloſe Priſoner. Not I, but the High-Commiſſion; not cloſe Priſoner to his Chamber, but to the Priſon, not to go abroad with his Keeper: which is all the cloſe Impriſonment which I ever knew that Court uſe. Laſtly, The Pinch of this Charge is, That I ſaid I received my Juriſdiction from God, and from Chriſt; contrary to an Act of Parliament, which ſays, Biſhops derive their Juriſdiction from the King. This is witneſſed by all three, and that Dr. Baſtwick read the Statute. That Statute ſpeaks plainly of Juriſdiction in Foro contentioſo, and Places of Judicature, and no other. And all this forinſecal Juriſdiction, I and all Biſhops in England derive from the Crown. But my Order, my Calling, my Juriſdiction in Foro Conſcientiæ, that is from God, and from Chriſt, and by Divine and Apoſtolical Right. And of this Juriſdiction it was that I then ſpake, (if I named Juriſdiction at all, and not my Calling in general.) For I then ſat in the High-Commiſſion, and did exerciſe the former Juriſdiction under the Broad Seal, and could not be ſo ſimple to deny the Power by which I then ſat. Beſide, the Canons of the Church of England, to which I have ſubſcribed, are plain for it. Nay farther, the Uſe and Exerciſe of my Juriſdiction in Foro Conſcientiæ, may not be but by the Leave and Power of the King within his Dominions. And if Biſhops and Presbyters be all one Order, (as theſe Men contend for) then Biſhops muſt be Jure Divino, for ſo they maintain that Presbyters are. ‘ This part of the Charge ‘ Mr. Brown preſſed in his Report to the Houſe of ‘ Commons; and when I gave this ſame Anſwer, ‘ he in his Reply ſaid nothing but the ſame over ‘ and over again, ſave that he ſaid, I fled to he ‘ knew not what inward Calling and Juriſdiction: ‘ which Point, as I expreſſed it, if he underſtood ‘ not, he ſhould not have undertaken to judge me.’

The 16th of May I had an Order from the Lords, for free Acceſs of four of my Servants to me.

On Friday, May 17. I received a Note from the Committee, that they intended to proceed upon part of the Sixth Original Article remaining, and upon the Seventh; which Seventh Article follows in hæc Verba.

VII. That he hath traitorouſly endeavoured to alter and ſubvert God's true Religion by Law eſtabliſhed in this Realm; and inſtead thereof to ſet up Popiſh Superſtition and Idolatry: and to that end hath declared and maintained in Speeches and printed Books divers Popiſh Doctrines and Opinions, contrary to the Articles of Religion eſtabliſhed. He hath urged and enjoined divers Popiſh and Superſtitious Ceremonies, without any warrant of Law; and hath cruelly perſecuted thoſe who have oppoſed the ſame, by corporal Puniſhment and Impriſonment; and moſt unjuſtly vexed others who refuſed to conform thereto, by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures of Excommunication, Suſpenſion, Deprivation and Degradation, contrary to the Law of this Kingdom.

The Tenth Day of my Hearing.

MOnday, May 20. 1644. This day Mr. Serjeant Wild undertook the Buſineſs againſt me. And at his entrance he made a Speech, being now to charge me with Matter of Religion. In this Speech he ſpake of a Tide, which came not in all at once: And ſo he ſaid it was in the intended Alteration of Religion. Firſt a Connivance, then a Toleration, then a Subverſion. Nor this, nor that: but a Tide it ſeems he will have of Religion. And I pray God his Truth (the True Proteſtant Religion here eſtabliſhed) ſink not to ſo low an Ebb, that Men may with eaſe wade over to that ſide, which this Gentleman ſeems moſt to hate. He fears both Ceremonies and Doctrine: but in both he fears where no Fear is; which I hope ſhall appear. He was pleaſed to begin with Ceremonies.

I. In this he charged firſt my Chappel at Lambeth, and Innovation in Ceremonies there.

1. The firſt Witneſs for this was Dr. Featly: he ſays, (1.) There were Alterations ſince my Predeceſſor's time. And I ſay ſo too, or elſe my Chappel muſt lie more undecently than is fit to expreſs. He ſays, I turned the Table North and South. The Injunction ſays it ſhall be ſo. ‘ And then the Innovation ‘ was theirs in going from, not mine ‘ in returning to that way of placing it. Here ‘ Mr. Brown, in his laſt Reply in the Houſe of ‘ Commons, ſaid, That I cut the Injunction ſhort, ‘ becauſe in the words immediately following 'tis ‘ ordered, That this Place of ſtanding ſhall be altered, when the Communion is adminiſtred. But firſt, the ‘ Charge againſt me is only about the Place of it; ‘ of which that Injunction is ſo careful, that it ‘ commands, That when the Communion is done, it be placed where it ſtood before. Secondly, it was ‘ never charged againſt me, that I did not remove ‘ it at the time of Communion, nor doth the ‘ Reaſon expreſſed in the Injunction require it; ‘ which is, When the Number of Communicants is great, and that the Miniſter may be the better heard of them. Neither of which was neceſſary in my ‘ Chappel, where my Number was not great, and ‘ all might eaſily hear.’

(2.) The

(2.) The ſecond thing which Dr. Featly ſaid, was in downright Terms, That the Chappel lay naſtily, all the time he ſerved in that Houſe. Was it one of my Faults too, to cleanſe it?

(3.) Thirdly, He ſays, the Windows were not made up with coloured Glaſs, till my time. The truth is, they were all ſhameful to look on, all diverſly patched, like a poor Beggar's Coat. Had they had all white Glaſs, I had not ſtirred them. And for the Crucifix, he confeſſes it was ſtanding in my Predeceſſor's time, though a little broken: ſo I did but mend it, I did not ſet it up, (as was urged againſt me.) 'And it was 'utterly miſtaken by [1] Mr. Brown, 'that I did repair the Story of thoſe 'Windows, by their like in the Maſs-Book. No, 'but I and my Secretary made out the Story, as 'well as we could, by the Remains that were unbroken. Nor was any Proof at all offered, that 'I did it by the Pictures in the Maſs-Book; but 'only Mr. Pryn teſtified, that ſuch Pictures were 'there; whereas this Argument is of no conſequence: There are ſuch Pictures in the Miſſal, 'therefore I repaired my Windows by them. The 'Windows contain the whole Story from the 'Creation to the Day of Judgment: three Lights 'in a Window; the two Side-Lights contain the 'Types in the Old Teſtament, and the Middle-Light the Antitype and Verity of Chriſt in the 'New: And I believe the Types are not in the 'Pictures in the Miſſal. In the mean time, I know 'no Crime or Superſtition in this 'Hiſtory. And though Calvin do 'not approve Images in Churches, 'yet he doth approve very well of 'them which contain a Hiſtory; and ſays plainly, that theſe have their uſe, in docendo & admonendo, in teaching and admoniſhing the People: 'And if they have that uſe, why they may not 'inſtruct in the Church, as well as out, I know 'not. Nor do the Homilies in this 'particular differ much from Calvin.'

[1] In his Reply.

Calv. 1 Inſtit. c. 11. §. 12.

Hom. of Idol. par. 2. To. 2. p. 27. fine.

But here the [2] Statute of Edw. 6. was charged againſt me, which requires the Deſtruction of all Images, as well in Glaſs-Windows, as elſewhere. 'And this was alſo earneſtly preſſed by Mr. Brown, 'when he repeated the Sum of the Charge againſt 'me in the Houſe of Commons.' To which I anſwered at both times: Firſt, That the Statute of Edw. 6. ſpake of other Images; and that Images in Glaſs-Windows were neither mentioned, nor meant in that Law: the words of the Statute are, Any Images of Stone, Timber, Alabaſter or Earth, graven, carved or painted, taken out of any Church, &c. ſhall be deſtroyed, &c. and not reſerved to any ſuperſtitious uſe. So here's not a word of Glaſs-Windows, nor the Images that are in them. Secondly, That the contemporary Practice, (which is one of the beſt Expounders of the Meaning of any Law) did neither deſtroy all coloured Windows, though Images were in them, in the Queen's time, nor abſtain from ſetting up of new, both in her and King James's time. And as the Body of this Statute is utterly miſtaken, ſo is the Penalty too; which for the firſt and ſecond Offence is but a ſmall Fine, and but Impriſonment at the King's Will for the third. 'A great way ſhort of Puniſhment for Treaſon. And I could not but wonder, that Mr. Brown ſhould be ſo earneſt in this 'Point, conſidering he is of Lincolns-Inn, where 'Mr. Pryn's Zeal hath not yet beaten down the 'Images of the Apoſtles in the fair Windows of 'that Chappel; which Windows alſo were ſet up 'new long ſince that Statute of Edw. 6. And 'tis well known, that I was once reſolved to have 'returned this upon Mr. Brown in the Houſe of 'Commons, but changed my mind, leſt thereby I 'might have ſet ſome furious Spirit on work to 'deſtroy thoſe harmleſs goodly Windows, to the 'juſt diſlike of that Worthy Society.'

[2] 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 10.

But to the Statute Mr. Brown added, That the Deſtruction of all Images, as well in Windows as elſewhere, were [1] condemned by the Homilies of the Church of England, and thoſe Homilies confirmed in the Articles of Religion, and the Articles by Act of Parliament. This was alſo urged before; and my Anſwer was, Firſt, That though we ſubſcribed generally to the Doctrine of the Homilies, as good; yet we did not expreſs, or mean thereby to juſtify and maintain every particular Phraſe or Sentence contained in them. And Secondly, That the very words of the Article to which we ſubſcribe, are, That the Homilies do contain a godly and a wholeſome Doctrine, and neceſſary for thoſe Times. Godly, and wholeſome for all Times; but neceſſary for thoſe, when People were newly weaned from the Worſhip of Images: afterwards, neither the Danger nor the Scandal alike. 'Mr. Brown in his Reply 'ſaid, That ſince the Doctrine contained in the 'Homilies was wholeſome and good, it muſt 'needs be neceſſary alſo for all Times. But this 'worthy Gentleman is herein much miſtaken. 'Strong Meat, as well ſpiritual as bodily, is good 'and wholeſome; but though it be ſo, yet if it 'had been neceſſary at all Times, and for all 'Men, the Apoſtle would never have fed the Corinthians with Milk, and not with Meat, 1 Cor. 3. 1, 2. The Meat always good in itſelf, but not 'neceſſary for them which were not able to 'bear it.'

[1] I. was commended, or commanded.

Art. 35.

(4.) The fourth thing which Dr. Featly teſtifies, is, That there were Bowings at the coming into the Chappel, and going up to the Communion-Table. 'This was uſual in Queen Elizabeth's time, and 'of old, both among Jews, as appears in the Story 'of Hezekiah, 2 Chron. 29. 28. and among Chriſtians, as is evident in Rhenanus's 'Notes upon Tertullian.' And one of them, which have written againſt the late Canons, confeſſes it was uſual in the Queen's Time; but then adds, That that was a Time of Ignorance. What, a Time of ſuch a Reformation, and yet ſtill a Time of Ignorance! I pray God the oppoſite be not a Time of Profaneneſs, and all is well. 'Mr. Brown in the Sum of his 'Charge given me in the Houſe of Commons, inſtanced in this alſo. I anſwered as before; with 'this Addition, Shall I bow to Men in each Houſe of 'Parliament, and ſhall I not bow to God in his Houſe, 'whither I do, or ought to come to worſhip him? Surely I muſt worſhip God, and bow to him, though neither 'Altar nor Communion-Table be in the Church.'

B. Rhenani Annot. in Tert de Coron. Mil. p. 40. Ep Morton de Miſſa, l. 6. c. 5.

(5.) For Organs, Candleſticks, a Picture of a Hiſtory at the back of the Altar, and Copes at Communions and Conſecrations; all which Dr. Featly named: Firſt, Theſe things have been in uſe ever ſince the Reformation. And Secondly, Dr. Featly himſelf did twice acknowledge that it was in my Chappel, as it was at Whitehall; no difference. And it is not to be thought, that Queen Elizabeth and King James would have endured them all their Time in their own Chappel, had had they been Introductions for Popery. And for Copes, they are allowed at Times of Communion, by the Canons of the Church. So that theſe, all or any, are very poor Motives from whence to argue an Alteration of Religion.

Can. Eccleſ. Angl. 24.

2. The ſecond Witneſs againſt my Chappel, was Sir Nathaniel Brent: But he ſays not ſo much as Dr. Featly; and in what he doth ſay, he agrees with him, ſaving that he cannot ſay, whether the Picture at the back of the Communion-Table, were not there before my time.

3. The third Witneſs for this Charge, was one Mr. Boreman, who came into my Chappel at Prayers-time, when I had ſome new Plate to conſecrate for uſe at the Communion; and I think it was brought to me for that end by Dr. Featly. This Man ſays firſt, He then ſaw me bow, and wear a Cope. That's anſwer'd. Secondly, That he ſaw me conſecrate ſome Plate; That in that Conſecration I uſed ſome part of Solomon's Prayer at the Dedication of the Temple; and that in my Prayer I did deſire God to accept thoſe Veſſels. No Fault in any of the three. For in all Ages of the Church, eſpecially ſince Conſtantine's time, that Religion hath had publick allowance, there have been Conſecrations of ſacred Veſſels, as well as of Churches themſelves. * And theſe inanimate Things are holy, in that they are deputed and dedicated to the Service of God. And we are ſaid to miniſter about holy things, 1 Cor. 9. 13. And the Altar is ſaid to ſanctify the Gift, S. Matth. 23. 19. which it could not do, if it ſelf were not holy. So then, if there be no Dedication of theſe things to God, no Separation of them from common uſe, there's neither Thing nor Place holy: And then no Sacrilege; no difference between Churches and common Houſes, between Holy Tables (ſo the Injunction calls them) and ordinary Tables. But I would have no Man deceive himſelf; Sacrilege is a grievous Sin, and was ſeverely puniſhed even among the Heathen. And St. Paul's Queſtion puts it home, would we conſider of it; Thou which abhorreſt Idols, committeſt thou Sacrilege? Rom. 2. 22. Thou which abhorreſt Idols, to the very defacing of Church-Windows, doſt thou, thou of all other, commit Sacrilege, which the very Worſhippers of Idols puniſhed? And this being ſo, I hope my uſe of a part of Solomon's Prayer, or the Words of my own Prayer (That God would be pleaſed to accept them) ſhall not be reputed Faults.

* Tho. p. 3. q. 63. A. 6. ad Secundum.

Injunct. of Q. Eliz. in fine.

But here ſtepped in Mr. Pryn, and ſaid, This was according to the Form in Miſſali parvo. But 'tis well known I borrowed nothing thence. All that I uſed was according to the Copy of the late Reverend Biſhop of Wincheſter, Biſhop Andrews, which I have by me to be ſeen, and which himſelf uſed all his time.

II. Then from my Chappel he went to my Study; and there the ſecond Charge was, 1. That I had a Bible with the five Wounds of Chriſt fair upon the Cover of it. This was curiouſly wrought in Needle-Work. The Bible was ſo ſent me by a Lady, and ſhe a Proteſtant; I was loth to deface the Work: but the Bible I kept in my Study from any Man's Hand or Eye, that might take offence at it. 'Mr. 'Brown touched upon this, and my Anſwer was 'the ſame, ſaving that I mentioned not the Lady. '2. That I had in my Study a Miſſal, and divers 'other Books belonging to the Roman Liturgy.' My Lords, 'tis true, I had many; but I had more of the Greek Liturgies than the Roman: And I had as many of both, as I could get. And I would know, how we ſhall anſwer their Errors, if we may not have their Books? I had Liturgies, all I could get, both antient and modern. I had alſo the Alcoran in divers Copies. If this be an Argument, why do they not accuſe me to be a Turk? 3. To this Charge was added my private Prayer-Book, which Mr. Pryn had taken from me in his Search. Where firſt I obſerved, That the Secrets between God and my Soul were brought to be divulged in open Court. 'Nihil 'gravius dicam: But ſee whether it can be paral-'lel'd in Heatheniſm.' But what Popery was found in theſe Prayers? Why, Firſt, they ſaid, My Prayers were in Canonical Hours, Hora ſexta, & Hora nona, &c. I injoined my ſelf ſeveral Hours of Prayer; that, I hope, is no Sin: And if ſome of them were Church-Hours, that's no Sin neither: Seven times a day will I praiſe thee, (Pſal. 119.) was the Prophet David's, long before any Canonical Hours. And among Chriſtians they were in uſe before Popery got any head. God grant this may be my greateſt Sin. Secondly, The Prayer which I made at the Conſecration of the Chappel at Hammerſmith. I deſired that might be read, or any other. No offence found. Thirdly, The Word Proſtratus in my private Devotions, before I came to the Euchariſt. If I did ſo to God, what's that to any Man? But I pray, in all this curious Search, ('and 'Mr. Pryn here, and all along ſpared no pains) why were no Prayers to the B. Virgin and the Saints found, if I were ſo ſwallowed up in Popery?

III. From my Study he went on to my Gallery. The Serjeant would find out Popery e'er he had done. Thence I was charged with three Pictures: The firſt of them was a fair Picture of the four Fathers of the Weſtern Church, S. Ambroſe, S. Jerome, S. Auguſtine and S. Gregory. It was as lawful to have this Picture as the Picture of any other Men. Yea, but there was a Dove pictured over them, and that ſtood for the Holy Ghoſt. That's more than any Witneſs did or durſt depoſe. The Second, was the Ecce Homo, as Pilate brought Chriſt forth, and ſhewed him to the Jews. This Picture is common, and I yet know no hurt of it, ſo it be not worſhipped; and that I deteſt as much as any Man, and have written as much againſt it as any Proteſtant hath: And it was then read in part. And for both theſe Pictures I anſwered out of Calvin; That it is lawful to make, and have the Picture of any things, quorum ſint capaces Oculi, which may be ſeen. Now the Dove was viſible and ſeen, S. John 1. 32, 33. That's for the firſt Picture. And for the ſecond, the Ecce Homo, why did Pilate ſay Ecce, but that the Jews might and did ſee him? John 19. So both Pictures lawful by the Rule laid down by Calvin.

L. 1. Inſt. c. 11. §. 12.

'Mr. Brown charged againſt both theſe Pictures 'very warmly. And when I had anſwered as be-'fore, in his Reply he fell upon my Anſwer; and 'ſaid it was in the Homilies, (but either he quo-'ted not the Place, or I elſe ſlipped it) That every 'Picture of Chriſt was a Lye, becauſe whole Chriſt 'cannot be pictured. But by this Argument it 'is unlawful to picture any Man, for the whole 'Man cannot be pictured. Who ever drew a Pic-'ture of the Soul? And yet who ſo ſimple as to 'ſay the Picture of a Man is a Lye? Beſides, the 'Ecce Homo, is a Picture of the Humanity of Chriſt 'only,

'only, which may as lawfully be drawn as any o'ther Man. And it may be I may give farther
'Answer, when I see the Place in the Homi-
'lies.'

The third Picture found in my Gallery, I marvel why it was produced; for it relates to that of our Saviour, St. John 10. 1, 2. where he says, That the Shepherd enters into the Sheepfold by the Door, but they which climb up to enter another way, are Thieves and Robbers. And in that Picture the Pope and the Fryars are climbing up to get in at the Windows: So 'tis as directly against Popery as can be. Besides, it was witnessed before the Lords by Mr. Walter Dobson, an antient Servant, both to Archbishop Bancroft and Abbot, That both the Ecce Homo and this Picture, were in the Gallery when he came first to Lambeth-House, which was about forty Years since: So it was not brought thither by me to countenance Popery. * And I hope your Lordships do not think me such a Fool, if I had an Intention to alter Religion, I should hang the Profession of it openly in my Gallery, thereby to bring present Danger upon my self, and destroy the Work which, themselves say, I intended cunningly. And if there be any Error in having and keeping such Pictures, yet that is no sufficient Proof that I had any Intention to alter the Religion established, which I desire may be taken notice of once for all.

IV. From my Gallery the Serjeant crossed the Water to White-Hall, (and sure in haste; for at that time he took no leave of Captain Guest, or his Wife, before he left Lambeth:) At the Court he met Sir Henry Mildmay. 1. This Knight being produced by him against me, says, That in my time Bowings were constantly used in the Chappel there. But, First, Dr. Featly told your Lordships, there was nothing in my Chappel but as it was in use at White-Hall. So all the Popery I could bring, was there before. And, Secondly, if bowing to God in his own House be not amiss, (as how it should I yet know not) then there can be no Fault in the constant doing of it: Quod semel fecisse bonum est, non potest malum esse, si frequenter fiat: So St. Jerome teaches. Thirdly, I am very sorry that any Reverence to God in his House, and in the time of his Worship, should be thought too much. I am sure the Homilies, so often pressed against me, cry out against the Neglect of Reverence in the Church. This Passage was read; and by this it seems, the Devil's Cunning was, so soon as he saw Superstition thrust out of this Church, to bring Irreverence and Profaneness in. 'Here Mr. Brown 'having pressed this Charge, replies upon me in 'his last, That I would admit no Mean, but ei-'ther there must be Superstition or Profaneness; 'whereas my Words can infer no such thing. I said 'this was the Devil's Practice: I would have 'brought in the Mean between them, and preser-'ved it too, by God's Blessing, had I been let a-'lone.'

S. Hierom. adversus Vigilantium.

Tom. 2. Hom. 1. Princip.

2. Sir Henry says next, That he knew of no Bowings in that Chappel before my time, but by the Right Honourable the Knights of the Garter at their Solemnity. No time else? Did he never see the King his Master offer before my time? Or did he ever see him offer, or the Lord Chamberlain attend him there, without Bowing and Kneeling too? And for the Knights of the Garter, if they might do it without Superstition, I hope I and other Men might do so too: Especially since they were ordered by Hen. 5. to do it with great Reverence, ad modum Sacerdotum: Which proves the Antiquity of this Ceremony in England.

In Registro Windesorien-si, p. 65. 'tis commonly called the Black Book.

3. He farther says, There was a fair Crucifix in a piece of Hangings hung up behind the Altar, which he thinks was not used before my time. But that he thinks so, is no Proof. 4. He says, This fair Piece was hanged up in the Passion Week, as they call it. As they call it? Which they? Will he shut out himself from the Passion Week? All Christians have called it so for above a † Thousand Years together; and is that become an Innovation too, as they call it? 5. Fifthly, He says, The hanging up of this Piece was a great Scandal to Men but indifferently affected to Religion. Here I humbly crave leave to observe some few Particulars. First, That here's no Proof so much as offer'd, That the Piece was hung up by me, or my Command. Secondly, That this Gentleman came often to me to Lambeth, and professed much Love to me; yet was never the Man that told me his Conscience, or any Man's else was troubled at it; which had he done, that should have been a Scandal to no Man. Thirdly, That if this were scandalous to any, it must be offensive in regard of the Workmanship; or quatenus talis, as it was a Crucifix: not in regard of the Work certainly, for that was very exact. And then if it were because it were a Crucifix, why did not the old one offend Sir Henry's Conscience as much as the new? For the Piece of Hangings, which hung constantly all the Year at the back of the Altar, thirty Years together, upon my own Knowledge, and somewhat above, long before, (as I offer'd proof by the Vestry-Men) and so all the time of Sir Henry's being in Court, had a Crucifix wrought in it, and yet his Conscience never troubled at it. Fourthly, That he could not possibly think that I intended any Popery in it, considering how hateful he knew me to be at Rome, beyond any my Predecessors since the Reformation: For so he protested at his return from thence to my self. And I humbly desire a Salvo, that I may have him called to witness it: which was granted.

† Et observabatur ab omnibus. Videlius (and he no way superstitious) in Ignat. Epist. ad Philip. Exercit. 16. c. 3.

When they had charged me thus far, there came up a Message from the House of Commons. I was commanded to withdraw: But that Business requiring more haste, I was dismissed with a Command to attend again on Wednesday, May 22. But then I was put off again to Monday, May 27. And after much pressing for some Maintenance, considering how oft I was made attend, and with no small Expence, on May 25. I had an Order from the Committee of Sequestrations, to have Two Hundred Pounds allowed me out of my own now sequester'd Estate: It was a Month before I could receive this. And this was all that ever was yet allowed me since the Sequestration of my Estate, being then of above Two Years continuance.

* All these Pictures were placed in the Gallery by Cardinal Pole, when he built it, and continue there still, having not been defaced by the godly Party in the time of the Rebellion, as were the Windows of the Chappel, and the Chappel it self converted to a Dancing-Room by them, having first beat down Archbishop Parker's Tomb in the middle of it, and cast his Bones upon the Dunghill. H. W.

The Eleventh Day of my Hearing.

I. MOnday, May 27. 1644. This Day Mr. Serjeant Wilde followed the Charge upon me; and went back again to my Chappel-Windows at Lambeth: Three Witneſſes againſt them. The firſt was one Pember a Glaſier. He ſays, There was in one of the Glaſs-Windows on the North-ſide, the Picture of an old Man with a Glory, which he thinks was of God the Father. But his thinking ſo is no Proof; nor doth he expreſs in which of the North-Windows he ſaw it. And for the Glory, that is uſual about the Head of every Saint. And Mr. Brown, who was the ſecond Witneſs, and was truſted by me for all the Work of the Windows, both at Lambeth and Croydon, ſays expreſly upon his Oath, That there was no Picture of God the Father in the Windows at Lambeth. But he ſays, He found a Picture of God the Father in a Window at Croydon, and Archbiſhop Cranmer's Arms under it; and that he pulled it down. So it appears this Picture was there before my time, and continued there in ſo zealous an Archbiſhop's time, as Cranmer was well known to be; and it was pulled down in my time. Neither did I know till now, that ever ſuch a Picture was there; and the Witneſs depoſes he never made me acquainted with it. The third Witneſs was Mr. Pryn. He ſays, He had taken a ſurvey of the Windows at Lambeth. And I doubt not his Diligence. He repeated the Story in each Window. I have told this before, and ſhall not repeat it. He ſays, The Pictures of theſe Stories are in the Maſs-Book. If it be ſo, yet they were not taken thence by me. Archbiſhop Morton did that work, as appears by his Device in the Windows. He ſays, The Story of the Day of Judgment was in a Window in atrio, that muſt not come into the Chappel. Good Lord! whither will Malice carry a Man? The Story oppoſite is of the Creation; and what, muſt not that come into the Chappel neither? The Chappel is divided into an inner and utter Chappel: in this outward the two Windows mentioned are; and the Partition or Skreen of the Chappel, which makes it two, was juſt in the ſame place where now it ſtands, from the very building of the Chappel, for ought can be proved to the contrary. So neither I, nor any Man elſe, did ſhut out the Day of Judgment. He ſays, I had read the Maſs-Book diligently. How elſe ſhould I be able really to confute what is amiſs in it? He ſays, I had alſo a Book of Pictures concerning the Life of Chriſt in my Study. And it was fit for me to have it; for ſome things are to be ſeen in their Pictures for the People, which their Writings do not, perhaps dare not avow.

II. The ſecond Charge of this Day, was about the Adminiſtration of the Sacrament in my Chappel. The Witneſſes two.

The firſt was Dr. Haywood, who had been my Chaplain in the Houſe. They had got from others the Ceremonies there uſed, and then brought him upon Oath. He confeſſed he adminiſtred in a Cope; and the Canon warranted it. He confeſſes (as it was urged) That he fetched the Elements from the Credential (a little Side-Table as they called it) and ſet them reverently upon the Communion-Table. Where's the Offence? For Firſt, the Communion-Table was little, and there was hardly room for the Elements to ſtand conveniently there, while the Service was in Adminiſtration.

Can. Eccleſ. Angl. 24.

And, Secondly, I did not this without Example; for both Biſhop Andrews and ſome other Biſhops uſed it ſo all their time, and no Exceptions taken. The ſecond Witneſs was Rob. Cornwall, one of my menial Servants: A very forward Witneſs he ſhewed himſelf, but ſaid no more than is ſaid and anſwered before; both of them confeſſing that I was ſometimes preſent.

III. The third Charge was about the Ceremonies at the Coronation of his Majeſty. And, firſt, out of my Diary, Feb. 2. 1625. 'tis urged, That I carried back the Regalia, offer'd them on the Altar, and then laid them up in their place of ſafety. I bare the place at the Coronation of the Dean of Weſtminſter, and I was to look to all thoſe things, and their ſafe return into Cuſtody, by the place I then executed; and the offering them could be no Offence: For the King himſelf offers upon ſolemn Days; and the Right Honourable the Knights of the Garter offer at their Solemnity: And the Offertory is eſtabliſhed by Law in the Common-Prayer Book of this Church: And the Prebendaries aſſured me it was the Cuſtom for the Dean ſo to do. Secondly, They charged a Marginal Note in the Book upon me, That the Unction was in formâ Crucis. That Note doth not ſay that it ought ſo to be done; but it only relates the Practice, what was done. And if any Fault were in anointing the King in that Form, it was my Predeceſſor's Fault, not mine; for he ſo anointed him. Thirdly, they ſay, There was a Crucifix among the Regalia, and that it ſtood upon the Altar at the Coronation, and that I did not except againſt it. My Predeceſſor executed at that time, and I believed would have excepted againſt the Crucifix had it ſtood there: But I remember not any there; yet if there were, if my Predeceſſor approved the ſtanding of it, or were content to connive at it, it would have been made but a ſcorn had I quarrell'd it. Fourthly, They ſay, One of the Prayers was taken out of the Pontifical. And I ſay, if it were, it was not taken thence by me: And the Prayers are the ſame that were uſed at King James's Coronation: And ſo the Prayer be good (and here's no Word in it, that is excepted againſt) 'tis no matter whence 'tis taken.

Heylin affirmeth, That the old Crucifix being found among the Regalia, was then placed upon the Altar. Life of Laud, p. 144.

Then leaving the Ceremonies, he charged me two Alterations in the Body of the King's Oath. One added, namely theſe Words (agreeable to the King's Prerogative;) the other omitted, namely theſe Words, (quæ Populus elegerit, which the People have choſen, or ſhall chuſe.) For this latter, the Clauſe omitted, that ſuddenly vaniſhed; for it was omitted in the Oath of King James, as is confeſſed by themſelves in the *printed Votes of this preſent Parliament. But the other highly inſiſted on, as taking off the total Aſſurance which the Subjects have by the Oath of their Prince for the Performance of his Laws. Firſt, I humbly conceive this Clauſe takes off none of the Peoples Aſſurance; none at all. For the King's juſt and legal Prerogative, and the Subjects Aſſurance for Liberty and Property, may ſtand well together, and have ſo ſtood for Hundreds of Years. Secondly, That Alteration, whatever it be, was not made by me; nor is there any Interlining or Alteration ſo much as of a Letter found in that Book. Thirdly, If any thing be amiſs therein, my Predeceſſor gave that Oath to the King, and not I.

* P. 706.

I was merely miniſterial both in the Preparation, and at the Coronation it ſelf, ſupplying the place of the Dean of Weſtminſter.

After this Day's Work was ended, it inſtantly ſpread all over the City, that I had altered the King's Oath at his Coronation, and from thence into all parts of the Kingdom; as if all muſt be true which was ſaid at the Bar againſt me, what Anſwer ſoever I made. The People, and ſome of the Synod, now crying out, That this one Thing was enough to take away my Life. And tho this was all that was charged this Day concerning this Oath, yet ſeeing how this Fire took, I thought fit, the next Day that I came to the Bar, to deſire that the Books of the Coronation of former Kings, eſpecially thoſe of Queen Elizabeth and King James, might be ſeen and compared, and the Copies brought into the Court, both from the Exchequer, and ſuch as were in my Study at Lambeth, and a fuller Inquiſition made into the Buſineſs; in regard I was as innocent from this Crime, as when my Mother bare me into the World. A Salvo was enter'd for me upon this. And every Day that I after came to the Bar, I called upon this Buſineſs: But ſomewhat or other was ſtill pretended by them which managed the Evidence, that I could not get the Books to be brought forth, nor any thing to be done, till almoſt the laſt Day of my Hearing. Then no Books could be found in the Exchequer, nor in my Study, but only that of King James; whereas, when the Keys were taken from me, there were divers Books there, as is confeſſed in the [1] printed Votes of this Parliament, and one of them with a Watchet-Sattin Cover, now miſſing: And whether this of King James (had not my Secretary, who knew the Book, ſeen it drop out of Mr. Pryn's Bag) would not have been concealed too, I cannot tell. At laſt, the Book of King James his Coronation, and the other urged againſt me concerning King Charles, were ſeen and compared openly in the Lords Houſe, and found to be the ſame Oath in both, and no Interlining or Alteration in the Book charged againſt me.

[1] P. 706.

'This Buſineſs was left by the Serjeant to Mr. Maynard, who made the moſt that could be out of my Diary againſt me: And ſo did Mr. Brown, when he came to give the Sum of the Charge againſt me, both before the Lords, and after in the Houſe of Commons. And therefore for the avoiding of all tedious Repetition, and for that the Arguments which both uſed are the ſame, and becauſe I hold it not fit to break a Charge of this moment into divers Pieces, or put them in different Places, I will here ſet down the whole Buſineſs together, and the Anſwer which I then gave.

'Mr. Brown, in the Sum of the Charge againſt me in the Commons Houſe, when he came to this Article, ſaid, He was now come to the Buſineſs ſo much expected. And I humbly beſought that Honourable Houſe, if it were a Matter of ſo great Expectation, it might be of as great Attention too, while I ſhould follow that worthy Gentleman ſtep after ſtep, and anſwer as I went.

'1. And, Firſt, he went about to prove out of my Diary, that this Addition (of the King's Prerogative) to the Oath, was made by me. Thus he ſays, That Decemb. 31. 1625. I went to Hampton-Court. That's true. He ſays, That there, Jan. 1. I underſtood I was named with other Biſhops to meet and conſider of the Ceremonies about the Coronation; and that, Jan. 4. we did meet at White-Hall accordingly; and that, Jan. 6. we gave his Majeſty an Anſwer. Not I, (as 'twas charged) but We gave his Majeſty anſwer. So if the Oath had been changed by me, it muſt have been known to the Committee, and broken forth to my Ruin long ſince. Then he ſays, That, Jan. 16. 'I was appointed to ſerve at the Coronation, in the room of the Dean of Weſtminſter. That's no Crime: And 'tis added in the Diary, that this Charge was delivered unto me by my Predeceſſor. So he knew that this Service to attend at the Coronation was impoſed upon me. He ſays next, That, Jan. 18. the Duke of Buckingham had me to the King, to ſhew his Majeſty the Notes we had agreed on, if nothing offended him. Theſe were only Notes of the Ceremonies. And the other Biſhops ſent me, being puny, to give the Account. Then he ſays, Jan. 23. It is in my Diary, Librum habui paratum, I had a Book ready. And it was time, after ſuch Meetings, and the Coronation being to follow Feb. 2. and I deſigned to aſſiſt and attend that Service, that I ſhould have a Book ready: The Ceremonies were too long and various to carry them in Memory. And whereas 'tis urged, That I prepared and altered this Book, the Words in my Diary are paratum habui, I had the Book ready for my own uſe in that Service. Nor can paratum habui ſignify preparing or altering the Book. And, Thirdly, tis added there, That the Book which I had ready in my hands, did agree per omnia cum libro Regali. And if it did agree in all Things with the King's recorded Book then brought out of the Exchequer, where then is the Alteration ſo laborioufly ſought to be faſten'd on me? I humbly beſeech you to mark this.

'Yet out of theſe Premiſes put together, Mr. Brown's Inference was, That I made this Alteration of the Oath. But ſurely theſe Premiſes, neither ſingle nor together, can produce any ſuch Concluſion; but rather the contrary. Beſide, Inference upon Evidence, is not Evidence, unleſs it be abſolutely neceſſary; which all Men ſee that here it is not. But I pray obſerve: Why was ſuch a ſudden ſtay made at Jan. 23. whereas it appears in my Diary at Jan. 31. that the Biſhops were not alone truſted with this Coronation-Buſineſs, ſed alii Proceres, but other Great and Noble Men alſo? And they did meet that Jan. 31. and ſat in Council about it. So the Biſhops Meetings were but preparatory to eaſe the Lords, moſt of the Ceremonies being in the Church-way. And then can any Man think that theſe great Lords, when they came to review all that was done, would let the Oath be altered by me, or any other, ſo materially, and not check at it? 'Tis impoſſible.

'2. Secondly, This Gentleman went on to charge this Addition upon me thus; There were found in my Study at Lambeth two Books of King James's Coronation, one of them had this Clauſe or Addition in it, and the other had it not; and we cannot tell by which he was crowned. Therefore it muſt needs be ſome wilful Error in me, to make choice of that Book which had this Addition in it, or ſome great Miſtake. Firſt, If it were a Miſtake only, then it is no Crime: And wilful Error it could not be; for being named one of them that were to conſider of the Ceremonies, I went to my Predeceſſor, and deſired a Book, to ſee by it what was formerly done. He 'delivered me this now in queſtion: I knew 'not whether he had more, or no; nor did I know 'that any one of them differed from other: 'Therefore no wilful Error. For I had no Choice 'to make of this Book which had the Addition, 'before that whic had it not, but thankfully took 'that which he g.ve me. But, Secondly, if one 'Book of King James his Coronation, in which I 'could have no hand, had this Addition in it, (as 'is confeſſed) then was not this a new Addition 'of my making. And, Thirdly, it may eaſily be 'ſeen that King James was crowned by the Book 'which hath this Addition in it; this being in a fair 'Carnation-Sattin Cover, the other in Paper, with-'out a Cover, and unfit for a King's Hand, eſpe-'cially in ſuch a great and publick Solemnity.

'3. In the Third Place he ſaid, There were in 'this Book twenty Alterations more, and all, or 'moſt in my Hand. Be it ſo, (for I was never ſuf-'fered to have the Book to conſider of) they are 'confeſſed not to be material. The truth is, 'when we met in the Committee, we were fain to 'mend many Slips of the Pen, to make Senſe in 'ſome Places, and good Engliſh in other. And 'the Book being truſted with me, I had rea-'ſon to do it with my own Hand, but openly at 'the Committee all. Yet two Things, as matters 'of ſome moment, Mr. Brown checked at.'

(1.) The one was, That Confirm is changed into Perform. 'If it be ſo, Perform is the greater and more 'advantageous to the Subjects, becauſe it includes 'Execution, which the other Word doth not. Nor 'doth this Word hinder, but that the Laws and 'Liberties are the People's already: For though 'they be their own, yet the King, by his Place, 'may and ought to perform the keeping and main-'taining of them. I ſay (if it be ſo,) for I was 'never ſuffered to have this Book in my hands, tho-'roughly to peruſe: Nor, under favour, do I be-'lieve this Alteration is ſo made, as 'tis urged. '[In the Book which I have by me, and was tran-'ſcribed from the other, it is Confirm.]

'(2.) The other is, That the King is ſaid to an-'ſwer I will, for I do. But when will he? Why 'all the Days of his Life; which is much more 'than I do, for the preſent. So if this Change be 'made, 'tis ſtill for the People's Advantage. [And 'there alſo 'tis I do grant.] And yet again, I ſay '(if) for the Reaſon before given. Beſides, in all the 'Latin Copies there is a Latitude left for them that 'are truſted, to add to thoſe Interrogatories which 'are then put to the King any other that is juſt, 'in theſe Words, Adjiciantur prædictis Interrogatio-'nibus quæ juſta fuerint. And ſuch are theſe two 'mentioned, if they were made.

'4. Mr. Brown's fourth and laſt Objection was, 'That I made this Alteration of the Oath, be-'cauſe it agrees (as he ſaid) with my Judgment: 'For that in a Paper of Biſhop Harſnett's there is a 'Marginal Note in my Hand, that Salvo Jure Coronæ 'is underſtood in the Oaths of a King. But, Firſt, 'there's a great deal of difference between Jus Re-'gis & Prærogativa, between the Right and Inheri-'tance of the King and his Prerogative, tho ne-'ver ſo legal. And with Submiſſion, and until I 'ſhall be convinced herein, I muſt believe that no 'King can ſwear himſelf out of his native Right. 'Secondly, If this were, and ſtill be an Error in 'my Judgment, that's no Argument at all to prove 'Malice in my Will: That becauſe that is my 'Judgment for Jus Regis, therefore I muſt thruſt 'Prærogativam Regis, which is not my Judgment, 'into a publick Oath which I had no Power to al-'ter. Theſe were all the Proofs which Mr. May-'nard at firſt, and Mr. Brown at laſt, brought 'againſt me in this Particular. And they are all 'but conjectural, and the Conjectures weak. But 'that I did not alter this Oath by adding the Pre-'rogative, the Proofs I ſhall bring are pregnant, and 'ſome of them neceſſary. They are theſe.

'1. My Predeceſſor was one of the Grand Com-'mittee for theſe Ceremonies. That was proved 'by his Servants to the Lords. Now his known 'Love to the Publick was ſuch, as that he would 'never have ſuffered me, or any other, to make 'ſuch an Alteration. Nor would he have con-'cealed ſuch a Crime in me, loving me ſo well as 'he did.

'2. 'Tis notoriouſly known that he crowned 'the King, and adminiſter'd the Oath, (which 'was avowed alſo before the Lords by his antient 'Servants:) And it cannot be rationally conceiv-'ed he would ever have adminiſter'd ſuch an al-'ter'd Oath to his Majeſty.

'3. 'Tis expreſſed in my Diary, at Jan. 31. '1625. (and that muſt be good Evidence for me, 'having been ſo often produced againſt me) that 'divers great Lords were in this Committee for 'the Ceremonies, and did that Day ſit in Council 'upon them. And can it be thought they would 'not ſo much as compare the Books? Or that com-'paring of them, they would endure an Oath with 'ſuch an Alteration to be tender'd to the King? 'Eſpecially ſince 'tis before confeſſed that one Co-'py of King James his Coronation had this Alte-'ration in it, and the other had it not.

'4. 'Tis expreſſed in my Diary, and made uſe 'of againſt me, at Jan. 23. 1625. that this Book 'urged againſt me did agree per omnia cum Libro 'Regali, in all things with the King's Book, 'brought out of the Exchequer. And if the Book 'that I then had, and is now inſiſted upon, did 'agree with that Book which came out of the Ex-'chequer, and that in all things, how is it poſſible 'I ſhould make this Alteration?

'5. With much Labour I got the Books to be 'compared in the Lords Houſe; that of King 'James his Coronation, and this of King Charles; 'and they were found to agree in all things to a 'Syllable. Therefore 'tis impoſſible this ſhould 'be added by me. And this, I conceive, cuts off 'all conjectural Proofs to the contrary.

'Laſtly, In the printed ' Book of 'the Votes of this preſent Parlia- ' P. 706. 'ment, it is acknowledged, that the 'Oath given to King James and King Charles was 'the ſame. The ſame: therefore unaltered. And 'this Paſſage of that Book I then ſhewed the 'Lords in my Defence. To this Mr. Maynard 'then replied, That the Votes there mentioned 'were upon the word elegerit, and the Doubt whe-'ther it ſhould be hath choſen, or ſhall chuſe. I 'might not then anſwer to the Reply, but the 'Anſwer is plain. For, be the Occaſion which 'led on the Votes what it will, as long as the 'Oath is acknowledged the ſame, 'tis manifeſt it 'could not be altered by me. And I doubt not, 'but theſe Reaſons will give this Honourable 'Houſe Satisfaction, that I added not this Parti-'cular of the Prerogative to the Oath.

'Mr. Brown, in his laſt Reply, paſſed over the 'other Arguments I know not how. But againſt 'this, he took exception. He brought the Book 'with him, and read the Paſſage; and ſaid, (as 'far as I remember) That the Votes had rela-'tion to the word chuſe, and not to this Altera'tion.

'tion. Which is in effect the ſame which Mr. Maynard urged before. I might not reply by the Courſe of the Court, but I have again conſidered of that Paſſage, p. 706. and find it plain. Thus, firſt they ſay, They have conſidered of all the Alterations in the Form of this Oath, which they can find: therefore of this Alteration alſo, if any ſuch were. Then they ſay, Excepting that Oath whith was taken by his Majeſty and his Father King James. There it is confeſſed, that the Oath taken by them was one and the ſame, called there that Oath which was taken by both. Where falls the Exception then? For 'tis ſaid, Excepting that Oath, &c. Why it follows, Excepting that the word chuſe is wholly left out, as well hath choſen as will chuſe. Which is a moſt manifeſt and evident Confeſſion, that the Oath of King James and King Charles was the ſame in all things, to the very leaving out of the word chuſe. Therefore it was the ſame Oath all along: no difference at all. For Exceptio firmat Regulam in non Exceptis; and here's no Exception at all of this Clauſe of the Prerogative. Therefore the Oath of both the Kings was the ſame in that, or elſe the Votes would have been ſure to mention it. Where it may be obſerved too, that Serjeant Wilde, though he knew theſe Votes, and was preſent both at the Debate and the Voting, and ſo muſt know that the word chuſe was omitted in both the Oaths; yet at the firſt he charged it eagerly upon me, that I had left this Clauſe of chuſing out of King Charles's Oath, and added the other. God forgive him. But the World may ſee by this, and ſome other Paſſages, with what Art my Life was ſought for.

'And yet before I quite leave this Oath, I may ſay 'tis not altogether improbable, that this Clauſe, And agreeing to the Prerogative of the Kings thereof, was added to the Oath in Edward VI's or Queen Elizabeth's time; and hath no relation at all to the Laws of this Kingdom, abſolutely mentioned before in the beginning of this Oath; but only to the words, The Profeſſion of the Goſpel eſtabliſhed in this Kingdom: And then immediately follows, And agreeing to the Prerogative of the Kings thereof. By which the King ſwears to maintain his Prerogative, according to God's Law, and the Goſpel eſtabliſhed, againſt all foreign Claims and Juriſdictions whatſoever. And if this be the meaning, he that made the Alteration, whoever it were (for I did it not) deſerves Thanks for it, and not the Reward of a Traytor.'

IV. Now to return to the Day. The fourth Charge went on with the Ceremonies ſtill. But Mr. Serjeant was very nimble; for he leaped from the Coronation at Weſtminſter, to ſee what I did at Oxford.

1. There the firſt Witneſs is Sir Nathaniel Brent. And he ſays, The ſtanding of the Communion-Table at St. Mary's was altered. I have anſwered to this Situation of the Communion-Table already. And if it be lawful in one place, 'tis in another. For the Chappel of Magdalen-College, and Chriſt-Church Quire, he confeſſes he knows of no Direction given by me to either: nor doth he know whether I approved the things there done or no. So all this is no Evidence. For the Picture of the Bleſſed Virgin at St. Mary's Door, as I knew nothing of it till it was done, ſo never did I hear any Abuſe or Diſlike of it after it was done. And here Sir Nathaniel confeſſes too, that he knows not of any Adoration of it, as Men paſſed the Streets or otherwiſe. When this Witneſs came not home, they urged the Statute of Merton-College, or the Univerſity, (§. 11.) where (if I took my Notes right) they ſay, I enjoined debitam Reverentiam. And as I know no fault in that Injunction or Statute, ſo neither do I know what due bodily Reverence can be given to God in his Church, without ſome Bowing or Genuflexion.

2. The ſecond Witneſs was Mr. Corbett. He ſays, That when decent Reverence was required by my Viſitors in one of my Articles, he gave Reaſons againſt it, but Sir John Lambe urged it ſtill. Firſt, My Lords, if Mr. Corbett's Reaſons were ſufficient, Sir John Lambe was to blame in that; but Sir John Lambe muſt anſwer it, and not I. Secondly, It may be obſerved, that this Man, by his own Confeſſion, gave Reaſons (ſuch as they were) againſt due Reverence to God in his own Houſe. He ſays, That Dr. Frewen told him from me, That I wiſhed he ſhould do as others did at St. Mary's, or let another execute his Place as Proctor. This is but a Hearſay from Dr. Frewen, who being at Oxford, I cannot produce him. And if I had ſent ſuch a Meſſage, I know no Crime in it. He ſays, That after this he deſired he might enjoy in this particular the Liberty which the King and the Church of England gave him. He did ſo: and from that day he heard no more of it, but enjoyed the Liberty which he asked. He ſays, Mr. [1] Channell deſired the ſame Liberty as well as he. And Mr. Channell had it granted as well as he. He confeſſes ingenuouſly, that the Bowing required, was only toward, not to the Altar. And [2] to the Picture at St. Mary's Door, he ſays he never heard of any Reverence done to it; and doth believe, that all that was done at Chriſt-Church was ſince my time. But it muſt be his Knowledge, not his Belief, that muſt make an Evidence.

[2] And the third Witneſs agrees in this.

3. The third Witneſs was one Mr. Bendye. He ſays, There was a Crucifix in Lincoln-College Chappel ſince my time. If there be, 'tis more than I know. My Lord of York that now is, when he was Biſhop of Lincoln, worthily beſtowed much Coſt upon that Chappel; and if he did ſet up a Crucifix, I think it was before I had ought to do there. He ſays, There was Bowing at the Name of Jeſus. And God forbid but there ſhould; and the Canon of the Church requires it. He ſays, There were Latin Prayers in Lent, but he knows not who injoined it. And then he might have held his peace. But there were Latin Sermons and Prayers on Aſh-Wedneſday, when few came to Church, but the Lent Proceeders, who underſtood them. And in divers Colleges they have their Morning-Prayers in Latin, and had ſo, long before I knew the Univerſity. The laſt thing he ſaid, was, That there were Copes uſed in ſome Colleges, and that a Traveller ſhould ſay, upon the ſight of them, That he ſaw juſt ſuch a thing upon the Pope's back. This wiſe Man might have ſaid as much of a Gown: He ſaw a Gown on the Pope's back, therefore a Proteſtant may not wear one. Or entring into St. Paul's, he may cry, Down with it! for I ſaw the Pope in juſt ſuch another Church in Rome. Can. 18.

4. Then was urged the Concluſion of a Letter of mine ſent to that Univerſity: the words were to this effect; I deſire you to remember me a Sinner, quoties coram Altare Dei procidatis. The Charge lay upon the word procidatis; which is no more, than that when they there fall on their knees, or proſtrate ſtrate to Prayer, they would remember me. In which Deſire of mine, or Expreſſion of it, I can yet ſee no Offence. No, nor in coram Altare, their ſolemneſt time of Prayer being at the Communion. 'Here Mr. Brown aggravated the things done in 'that Univerſity; and fell upon the Titles given 'me in ſome Letters from thence: but becauſe I 'have anſwered thoſe Titles already, I refer the 'Reader thither, and ſhall not make here any 'tedious Repetition. Only this I ſhall add, That 'in the Civil Law 'tis frequent to be ſeen, that 'not Biſhops only one to another, but the great 'Emperors of the World have commonly given 'that Title of Sanctitas veſtra, to Biſhops of 'meaner place than myſelf; to ſay no more. But 'here Mr. Brown, in his laſt Reply, was pleaſed 'to ſay, This Title was not given to any Biſhop 'of England. Firſt, If I had my Books about me, 'perhaps this might be refuted. Secondly, Why 'ſhould ſo grave a Man as he ſo much diſparage 'his own Nation? Is it impoſſible (be my Un-'worthineſs what it will) for an Engliſh Biſhop to 'deſerve as good a Title as another? Thirdly, 'Be that as it may, if it were (as certainly it 'was) lawfully given to other Biſhops, though 'they not Engliſh, then is it neither Blaſphemy, 'nor Aſſumption of Papal Power, as was charged 'upon it.'

V. From Oxford Mr. Serjeant went to Cambridge. And I muſt be guilty, if ought were amiſs there too. For this fifth Charge were produced three Witneſſes, Mr. Wallis, Mr. Greece, and Mr. Seaman. Their Teſtimonies agreed very near: ſo I will anſwer them together. Firſt, they ſay, That at Peter-Houſe there were Copes and Candleſticks, and Pictures in the Glaſs-Windows; and the like. But theſe things I have often anſwered already, and ſhall not repeat. They ſay, The chief Authors of theſe things were Dr. Wren and Dr. Coſens. They are both living, why are they not called to anſwer their own Acts? For here's yet no ſhew of Proof to bring any thing home to me. For no one of them ſays, that I gave direction for any of theſe. No, (ſays Mr. Serjeant) but why did I tolerate them? Firſt, No Man complained to me. Secondly, I was not Chancellor, and endured no ſmall Envy for any little thing that I had occaſion to look upon in that place. And Thirdly, This was not the leaſt Cauſe, why I followed my Right for Power to viſit there. And though that Power was confirmed to me, yet the Times have been ſuch, as that I did not then think fit to uſe it. It would have but heaped more Envy on me, who bare too much already. 'As for Mr. 'Greece, who hath laboured much againſt me in 'all this Buſineſs, God forgive him; and while he 'inherits his Father's ill Affections to me, God 'preſerve him from his Father's End.'

VI. From Cambridge he went to the Cathedrals, and firſt to Canterbury. Here the Charge is bowing verſus Altare; the two Witneſſes, two Prebendaries of that Church, Dr. Jackſon and Dr. Blechenden. And firſt, Dr. Jackſon ſays, the bowing was verſus Altare; ſo not to, but toward the Altar: and Dr. Blechenden ſays, it was the Adoration of the high Majeſty of God, to whom, if no Altar were there, I ſhould bow. Dr. Jackſon ſays, This Bowing was to his grief. Strange! I avow to your Lordſhips and the World, no Man did ſo much approve all my Proceedings in that Church, as he; and for this Particular, he never found the leaſt fault with it to me: and if he conceal his Grief, I cannot eaſe it. He ſays, This Bowing was not in uſe till within this ſix or ſeven Years. Sure the old Man's Memory fails him. For Dr. Blechenden ſays, The Communion-Table was railed about, and Bowings before it, when he came firſt to be a Member of that Church; and ſaith upon his Oath, that's above ten Years ago; and that it was practiſed before their new Statutes were made; and that in thoſe Statutes no Puniſhment is inflicted for the Breach or not Performance of this Reverence. I could tell your Lordſhips how often Dr. Jackſon hath ſhifted his Opinions in Religion, but that they tell me their Witneſſes muſt not be ſcandalized. As for the Statutes, my Secretary Mr. Dell, who copied them out, teſtified here to the Lords, that I left out divers Superſtitions which were in the old Book, and ordained many Sermons in their rooms.

The next Cathedral he inſtanced in, was Wincheſter. But there's nothing but the old Objections, Copes. And the wearing of them is warranted by the Canon; Can. 24. and Reverence at coming in and going out of the Church. And that, great Kings have not (in better Ages) thought much to do. And they did well to inſtance in the College of Wincheſter, as well as the Church; for 'tis confeſſed, the Injunction ſent thither requires, that the Reverence uſed be ſuch as is not diſſonant from the Church of England. So this may be a Comment to the other Injunctions. 'But for the Copes 'in Cathedrals, Mr. Brown in his laſt Reply was 'not ſatisfied. For he ſaid, the Canon mentioned 'but the wearing of one Cope. Be it ſo: but 'they muſt have that before they can wear it. 'And if the Canon enjoin the wearing of one, 'my Injunction might require the providing and 'uſing of one. Beſides, if there be no Popery, 'no Introduction to Superſtition in the having or 'uſing of one; then certainly there can be none 'in the having of more for the ſame uſe: the Su-'perſtition being lodged in the Miſuſe, not in the 'Number.'

VII. From the Cathedrals, Mr. Serjeant went to view ſome Pariſh-Churches. And firſt 'tis charged, That in a Pariſh-Church at Wincheſter two Seats were removed, to make way for railing in of the Communion-Table. But for ought I know, this might have been concealed. For it was liked ſo well, that they to whom the Seats belonged, removed them at their own Charges, that the other might be done.

The next Inſtance was in St. Gregory's Church, by St. Paul's. The Charge was, the placing of the Communion-Table Altar-wiſe. To the Charge itſelf, Anſwer is given before. The Particulars which are new, are theſe: the Witneſs Mr. Wyan. He ſays, The Order for ſuch placing of the Table was from the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. And St. Gregory's is in their peculiar Juriſdiction. So the Holy Table was there placed by the Ordinary, not by me. He ſays next, That the Pariſhioners appealed to the Arches, but received an Order to command them and the Cauſe to the Council-Board; That it was a full Board when the Cauſe was heard, and his Majeſty preſent; and that there I maintained the Queen's Injunction about placing the Communion-Table. In all this, here's nothing charged upon me, but Maintenance of the Injunction: and I had been much to blame, if I ſhould not have maintained it. He ſays, Sir Henry Martin came and ſaw it, and ſaid it would make a good Court-Cupboard. If Sir Henry Q. Eliz. Injunct. fine.

Henry did ſay ſo, the Scorn ill became either his Age or Profeſſion; though a Court-Cupboard be ſomewhat a better Phraſe than a Dreſſer. God forgive them who have in Print called it ſo. He ſays, That hereupon I did ſay, That he which ſpake that, had a Stigmatical Puritan in his Boſom. This Man's Memory ſerves him long for Words: this is many Years ſince; and if I did ſpeak any thing ſounding this way, 'tis more like I ſhould ſay Schiſmatical, than Stigmatical Puritan. But let him look to his Oath; and which word ſoever I uſed, if Sir Henry uſed the one, he might well hear the other. For a profane Speech it was, and little becoming a Dean of the Arches. He ſays, That ſoon after this, Sir Henry was put out of his Place. Not very ſoon after this; for I was at the time of this Buſineſs (as far as I remember) Biſhop of London, and had nothing to do with the diſpoſing of his Place. After, when I came to be Archbiſhop, I found his Patent was void, neither could Sir Henry himſelf deny it. And being void, and in my Gift, I gave it to another.

He ſays farther, That it was urged that this way of placing the Communion-Table was againſt the Word of God, in Biſhop Jewel's and Mr. Fox's Judgment; and that I replied, It were better they ſhould not have theſe Books in Churches, than ſo to abuſe them. Firſt, For ought I yet know, (and in theſe Straits of Time the Books I cannot come at) their Judgment, rightly underſtood, is not ſo. Secondly, Though theſe two were very worthy Men in their Time, yet every thing which they ſay is not by and by the Doctrine of the Church of England. And I may upon good reaſon depart from their Judgment in ſome Particulars, and yet not differ from the Church of England. As in this very Particular, the Injunction for placing the Table ſo, is the Act of the Queen and the Church of England. And I conceive the Queen, then upon the Act of Reformation, would not have enjoined it, nor the Church obeyed it, had it been againſt the Word of God. Thirdly, If I did ſay, That if they could make no better uſe of Jewel and the Book of Martyrs, it were better they had them not in the Churches; they gave too great occaſion for the Speech: For they had picked divers Things out of thoſe Books which they could not maſter, and with them diſtemper'd both themſelves and their Neighbours. And yet, in hope other more modeſt Men might make better uſe of them, I never gave Counſel to have thoſe Books removed, (nor is that ſo much as charged) but ſaid only thus, That if no better uſe would be made of them, then that laſt Remedy; but never till then. 'This laſt Paſſage Mr. Brown inſiſted 'upon; The taking of good Books from the Peo-'ple. But as I have anſwered, there was no ſuch 'thing done, or intended; only a Word ſpoken to 'make buſy Men ſee how they abuſed themſelves 'and the Church, by miſunderſtanding and miſap-'plying that which was written for the good of 'both.' Laſtly, It was urged, he ſaid, that the Communion-Table muſt ſtand Altar-wiſe, that Strangers which come and look into theſe Churches, might not ſee ſuch a diſproportion; the holy Table ſtanding one way in the Mother-Church, and quite otherwiſe in the Parochial annexed. And truly, to ſee this, could be no Commendation of the Diſcipline of the Church of England. But howſoever, Mr. Clarke (the other Witneſs with Wyan, and agreeing with him in the moſt) ſays plainly that it was the Lord of Arundel that ſpake this, not I; and that he was ſeconded in it by the Lord Weſton, then Lord Treaſurer, not by me.

VIII. The laſt Charge of this Day was a Paſſage out of one Mr. Shelford's Book, p. 20, 21. That they muſt take the Reverend Prelates for their Examples, &c. And Mr. Pryn witneſſed, the like was in the Miſſal, p. 256. Mr. Shelford is a mere Stranger to me, his Book I never read; if he have ſaid any thing unjuſt or untrue, let him anſwer for himſelf. As for the like to that, which he ſays, being in the Miſſal, though that be but a weak Argument, yet let him ſalve it.

Here this Day ending, I was put off to Saturday, June 1. And then again put off to Thurſday, June 6. which held.

My Twelfth Day of Hearing.

THurſday, June 6. 1644. This Day Serjeant Wilde, inſtead of beginning with a new Charge, made another long Reply to my Anſwers of the former Day. Whether he found that his former Reply, made at the time, was weak, and ſo reputed, I cannot tell. 'But ano-'ther he made, as full of premeditated Weakneſs, 'as the former was of ſudden. Mr. Pryn I think 'perceived it, and was often at his Ear; but 'Mr. Serjeant was little leſs than angry, and 'would on.' I knew I was to make no Anſwer to any Reply, and ſo took no Notes; indeed holding it all as it was, that is, either nothing, or nothing to the purpoſe. This tedious Reply ended;

I. Then came on the Firſt Charge about the Window of coloured Glaſs ſet up in the new Chappel at Weſtminſter. It was the Hiſtory of the coming down of the Holy Ghoſt upon the Apoſtles. This was charged to be done by me, and at my Coſt: the Witneſſes, Mr. Brown, employ'd in ſetting up the Window, and Mr. Sutton the Glaſier.

Theſe Men ſay, That Dr. Newell, Sub-Dean of Weſtminſter, gave order for the Window, and the ſetting of it up; but they know not at whoſe Coſt, nor was any Order given from me. So here's nothing charged upon me. And if it were, I know nothing amiſs in the Window. As for the King's Arms being taken down (as they ſay) let them anſwer that did it. Though, I believe, that the King's Arms ſtanding alone in a white Window, was not taken down out of any ill meaning, but only out of neceſſity to make way for the Hiſtory.

II. The Second Charge was the Picture of the Bleſſed Virgin ſet upon a new-built Door at St. Mary's in Oxford. Here Alderman Nixon ſays, That ſome Paſſengers put off their Hats, and, as he ſuppoſes, to that Picture. But, my Lords, his Suppoſal is no Proof. He ſays, That the next day he ſaw it. But what did he ſee? Nothing, but the putting off the Hat; for he could not ſee why, or to what, unleſs they which put off, told it. They might put off to ſome Acquaintance that paſſed by. He farther ſays, He ſaw a Man in that Porch upon his knees, and he thinks praying; but he cannot ſay to that. 'But then (if the Malice 'he hath long born me, would have ſuffer'd him) 'he might have ſtaid till he knew to whom he was 'praying, for till then 'tis no Evidence.' He ſays, he thinks that I countenanced the ſetting of it up, becauſe it was done by Biſhop Owen. But Mr. Bromfeeld, who did that Work, gave Teſtimony to the Lords, that I had nothing to do in it. He ſays, There was an Image ſet up at Carfax Church, but pulled down again by Mr. Widdows, Vicar there. But this hath no relation at all to me. 'This Picture of the Bleſſed Virgin was twice 'men-

'mentioned before: and Sir Nath. Brent could ſay 'nothing to it but Hearſay. And Mr. Corbet did 'not ſo much as hear of any Abuſe. And now 'Alderman Nixon ſays, he ſaw Hats put off; but 'the wiſe Man knows not to what. Nor is there 'any ſhew of Proof offer'd, that I had any hand 'or approbation in the ſetting of it up; or that 'ever any Complaint was made to me of any 'Abuſe to it, or Diſlike of it. And yet Mr. Brown, 'when he gave the Sum of the Charge againſt me, 'inſiſted upon this alſo, as ſome great Fault of 'mine, which I cannot yet ſee.'

III. In the next Charge, Mr. Serjeant is gone back again to Whitehall, as in the former to Oxford. The Witneſſes are Mrs. Charnock, and her Daughter. They ſay, they went (being at Court) into the Chappel, and it ſeems a Woman with them, that was a Papiſt; and that while they were there, Dr. Brown, one of the King's Chaplains, came in, bowed toward the Communion-Table, and then at the Altar kneeled down to his Prayers. I do not know of any Fault Dr. Brown committed, either in doing Reverence to God, or Praying there. And yet if he had committed any Fault, I hope I ſhall not anſwer for him. I was not then Dean of the Chappel, nor did any ever complain to me. They ſay, That two Strangers came into the Chappel at the ſame time, and ſaw what Dr. Brown did, and ſaid thereupon, That ſure we did not differ much, and ſhould be of one Religion ſhortly: And that the Woman which was with theſe Witneſſes, told them they were Prieſts. Firſt, This can no way relate to me; for neither did theſe Women complain to me of it, nor any from them. Secondly, If theſe two Men were Prieſts, and did ſay as is teſtified, are we ever a whit the nearer them in Religion? Indeed, if all the Difference between Rome and us conſiſted in outward Reverence, and no Points of Doctrine, ſome Argument might hence be drawn; but the Points of Doctrine being ſo many and great, put ſtop enough to that. Thirdly, If Recuſants, Prieſts eſpecially, did ſo ſpeak, might it not be ſaid in Cunning, to diſcountenance all external Worſhip in the Service of God, that ſo they may have opportunity to make more Proſelytes? And 'tis no ſmall advantage, to my knowledge, which they have this way made. 'And this was the Anſwer which I gave Mr. Brown, 'when he charged this upon me in the Houſe of 'Commons.'

Here, before they went any farther, Mr. Serjeant Wilde told the Lords, That when Sir Nathaniel Brent was employed in my Viſitation, he had Inſtructions for particular Churches, of which ſome were tacit Intimations, and ſome expreſs. I know not to what end this was ſpoken; for no coherent Charge followed upon it. But ſure he thinks Sir Nathaniel Brent very skilful in me, that he can underſtand my tacit Intimations, and know to what particular Church to apply them. 'And as 'I ſaid no more at the Bar, ſo neither did I think 'to ſay any more after; yet now I cannot but a 'little bemoan myſelf. For ever ſince Mr. Maynard left off, who pleaded, though ſtrongly, yet 'fairly, againſt me; I have been in very ill condition between the other two. For from Mr. Nicolas I had ſome Senſe, but extreme virulent and 'foul Language: And from Serjeant Wilde Language good enough ſometimes, but little or no 'Senſe. For let me anſwer what I would, when 'he came to reply, he repeated the Charge again, 'as if I had made no Anſwer at all: or as if all 'that I expreſſed never ſo plainly, had been but 'tacit Intimations; which I think he underſtood 'as much as Sir Nathaniel Brent.'

IV. In the Fourth Charge he told the Lords he would not trouble them with repeating the Evidence, but only put them in mind of ſome things in the Caſe of Ferdinando Adams of Ipſwich; of the Men of Lewes ſuffering in the High-Commiſſion; of the Pariſhioners of Beckington, and ſome others heard before, but would leave the Lords to their Memory and their Notes: Yet read over the Sentences given in the High-Commiſſion, and made a Repetition of whatſoever might but make a ſhew to render me odious to the People. 'And 'this hath been their Art all along, to run over 'the ſame thing twice and again, (as they did 'here in the ſecond Charge about the Picture of 'the Bleſſed Virgin:) to the end, that as the Auditors changed, the more of them might hear it; 'and that which wrought not upon ſome, might 'upon others. In all which I patiently referred 'myſelf to my former Anſwers, having no other 'way to help myſelf; in regard they pretended 'that they renew'd the ſame Inſtances, but not 'the ſame way; but in one place, as againſt 'Law; and in another, as againſt Religion. But 'why then did they in both places run over all 'Circumſtances appliable to both?' And on they went too with the Men of Lewes; where,

1. One Mr. Parnlye (they ſay) was cenſured cruelly in the High-Commiſſion, for not removing the Communion-Table. The Buſineſs was but this: Sir Nathaniel Brent, and his own Ordinary Dr. Nevill, ordered the Remove of the Table; he would not. For this Contumacy he was cenſured, but enjoined only to make his Submiſſion to Dr. Nevill. Which I think was a Sentence far from any barbarous Cruelty, as 'tis called.

2. Another Inſtance, and the next, was Mr. Burket. He ſays, he was cenſured alſo about removing the Communion-Table, and for that only. But firſt, this was not ſimply for removing the Holy Table; but it was for abetting the Church-Wardens to remove it back again from the place, where lawful Authority had ſet it. And ſecondly, whereas he ſays, he was cenſured for this only, the very Charge itſelf confutes him. For there 'tis ſaid, That this, about removing the Communion-Table, appears in the ſixth Article that was againſt him. Therefore there were five other Articles at leaſt more againſt him: and therefore not this only.

3. The third Inſtance was Mr. Chancye: And he likewiſe is ſaid to have ſuffered very much only about railing in of the Communion-Table. But this is not ſo neither: For he confeſſes that he ſpake reproachful Words againſt Authority, and in contempt of his Ordinary; that he ſaid the Rails were fit to be ſet up in his Garden; that he came fifty Miles from his own Church, on purpoſe to countenance this Buſineſs: And all this he acknowledges upon his Oath in his Submiſſion. And yet nothing laid upon him but Suſpenſion; and that no longer than till he ſubmitted. And all this the Act of the High-Commiſſion, not mine. 'And ſo I an-'ſwered Mr. Brown, who urged this againſt me alſo.' And the Truth of all this appears apud Acta; tho they were taken away, and kept ever ſince from my uſe, yet many things done in that Court have been charged againſt me. And here ſtepped in a Teſtimony of Mr. Genebrard's, That I threaten'd openly in the High-Commiſſion to ſuſpend Dr. Merrick. And why might I not do it, if he will be overbold with the Proceeding of the whole Court? I have have known, e'er now, a very good Lawyer committed from the Chancery-Bar to the Fleet. Tho I ſhall ſpare Names.

4. The fourth Inſtance was in Mr. Workman's Caſe; charged as if he were ſentenced only for preaching a Sermon to the Judges againſt Images in Churches. (1.) The firſt Witneſs in the Cauſe was Mr. Langly. He ſays Mr. Workman was cenſured for this Sermon, and other Things. Therefore not for this Sermon only: The High-Commiſſioners were no ſuch Patrons of Images. He ſays, That when I was Dean of Glouceſter, I told them in the Chappel, that King James had heard of many Things amiſs in that Church, and required me to take care of them. 'Tis true, he did ſo. He ſays farther, That hereupon I placed the Communion-Table altar-wiſe, and commanded due Reverence at the coming into the Church. This I did, and I have given my Reaſon often already for it out of the Injunctions of Queen Elizabeth. He ſays, That Biſhop Smith took offence at this, and would come no more to the Cathedral. Firſt, My Lords, this Gentleman was then School-Maſter there, and had free Acceſs unto me: He never diſcovered this. Secondly, The Biſhop himſelf never ſaid a Word to me about it. If he had, I would either have ſatisfied his Lordſhip in that, or any thing elſe that I did; or if he had ſatisfied me, I would have forborn it. He ſays, That Mr. Workman, after he was put from his Lecture, was not ſuffered to teach Children. Firſt, If he had been ſuffered, this Man had been like to make the firſt Complaint for decay of his own School. But, Secondly, the Commiſſion thought it no way fit to truſt him with the Education of Children, who had been factious among Men; eſpecially not in that Place, where he had ſo ſhewed himſelf. 'And 'this Anſwer I gave to Mr. Brown; who, in ſum-'ming the Evidence, ſtood as much, and inveigh-'ed as earneſtly againſt this cruel Proceeding with 'Mr. Workman, as upon any one Thing in the 'Charge. At which time he added alſo, That he 'would not be ſuffered to practiſe Phyſick, to get 'his Living. But, Firſt, no Witneſs evidenceth this, 'that he was denied to practiſe Phyſick. And, 'Secondly, he might have taught a School, or 'practiſed Phyſick, any where elſe. But he had 'done ſo much harm, and made ſuch a Faction in 'Glouceſter, as that the High-Commiſſion thought 'it not fit to continue him there: And he was not 'willing to go from thence, where he had made his 'Party.' He ſays farther, That ſome few of the Citizens of Glouceſter were called into the High-Commiſſion, for an Annuity of twenty Pound a Year allowed Mr. Workman out of the Town-Stock. For the Thing it ſelf, it was a groſs Abuſe and Scorn put upon that Court; that when they had cenſured a Schiſmatical Lecturer, (for ſuch he was there proved) the Townſmen ſhould make him an Allowance of twenty Pound a Year: A Thing (as I humbly conceive) not fit to be endured in any ſettled Government. And whereas Clamour is made, that ſome few of the Citizens were called to an Account for it, that's as ſtrange on the other ſide: For where there are many Offenders, the Noiſe would be too great to call all. And yet here's Noiſe enough made for calling a few. Here it was replied by Mr. Maynard, That this was done by that Corporation, and yet a few ſingled out to anſwer; and that therefore I might be ſingled out to anſwer for Things done in the High-Commiſſion. 'But, under favour, this learned and worthy Gen-'tleman is miſtaken: For here the Mayor and 'Magiſtrates of Glouceſter did that which was no 'way warrantable by their Charter, in which 'Caſe they may be accountable, all or ſome. But 'in the High-Commiſſion we meddled with no 'Cauſe not cognoſcible there; or if by Miſin-'formation we did, we were ſure of a Prohibition 'to ſtop us. And meddling with nothing but 'Things proper to them, I conceive ſtill no one 'Man can be ſingled out to ſuffer for that which 'was done by all. And this may ſerve to anſwer 'Mr. Brown alſo, who in his laſt Reply upon me, 'when I might not anſwer, made uſe of it.'

(2.) The ſecond Witneſs was Mr. Purye of Glouceſter. He ſays, That Mr. Brewſter, and Mr. Guies the Town-Clerk, were called to the Council-Table about this Annuity; and that I deſired it might be farther examined at the High-Commiſſion. If this were true, I know no offence in it, to deſire that ſuch an Affront to Government might be more thoroughly examined, than the Lords had leiſure to do. But the Witneſs doth not give this in Evidence: For he ſays no more than that he heard ſo from Mr. Brewſter. And his Hear-ſay is no Conviction. He ſays farther, That the High-Commiſſion called upon this Buſineſs of the Annuity, as informed that the twenty Pound given to Mr. Workman, was taken out of the Moneys for the Poor. And this I muſt ſtill think was a good and a ſufficient ground, juſtly to call them in queſtion. He ſays alſo, That theſe Men were fined, becauſe that which they did was againſt Authority. So by their own Witneſs it appears, that they were not fined ſimply for allowing Means to Mr. Workman, but for doing it in oppoſition to Authority. Laſtly, he ſays, They were fined ten Pound a-piece; and that preſently taken off again. So here was no ſuch great Perſecution, as is made in the Cauſe. And for the cancelling of this Deed of Annuity, it was done by themſelves, as Mr. Langly witneſſes.

After theſe two Witneſſes heard, the Sentence of the High-Commiſſion Court was read, which I could not have come at, had not they produced it. And by that it appeared evidently, that Mr. Workman was cenſured as well for other Things, as for his Sermon about Images in Churches. As firſt he ſaid, So many Paces in Dancing, were ſo many to Hell. This was hard, if he meant the Meaſures in the Inns of Court at Chriſtmas; and he excepted none. Then he ſaid, and was no way able to prove it, That Drunkards, ſo they were conformable, were preferred. Which was a great and a notorious Slander upon the Governours of the Church, and upon orderly and conformable Men. Then he ſaid, That Election of Miniſters was in the People. And this is directly againſt the Laws of England, in the Right of all Patrons. Then conſtantly, in his Prayer before his Sermon, he prayed for the States and the King of Sweden before his Majeſty, which was the Garb of that Time among that Party of Men. Then, That one of his common Themes of preaching to the People, was againſt the Government of the Church. And then, That Images in Churches, were no better than Stews in the Commonwealth; which at the beſt is a very unſavoury Compariſon. But here it was replied, That Images were Idols, and ſo called in the 'Homilies; and that therefore the Compariſon might hold. Yea, but in the ſecond Homily againſt the Peril of Idolatry, Images or Pictures in Glaſs or Hangings are expreſly and truly ſaid not to be Idols, till they be worſhipped. And therefore Mr. Workman ſhould not have compared their ſetting ting up, to Stews, till he could have proved them worſhipped. And in all this, were the Act good or bad in the cenſuring of him, it was the Act of the High-Commiſſion, not mine.

V. After this followed the fifth Charge; which was Mr. Sherfeild's Caſe, his Sentence in the Star-Chamber for defacing of a Church-Window in or near Salisbury. The Witneſſes produced were two.

1. The firſt was Mr. Carill. He ſaid that Mr. Sherfeild defaced this Window becauſe there was an Image in it, conceived to be the Picture of God the Father. But firſt, this comes not home: For many a Picture may be conceived to be of God the Father, which yet is not, nor was ever made for it. And then ſuppoſe it were ſo, yet Mr. Sherfeild in a ſettled Government of a State, ought not to have done it but by command of Authority. He ſays, That in my Speech there in the Court, I juſtified the having of the Picture of God the Father, as he remembers, out of Dan. 7. 22. This (as he remembers) came well in: For I never juſtified the making or having that Picture. 'For [1] Calvin's Rule, that we picture that 'which may be ſeen, is grounded 'upon the Negative, that no Pic-'ture may be made of that which was never, 'never can be ſeen. And to ground this Nega-'tive, is the Command given by Moſes, Deut. 4 '15, & 16. Take good heed to your ſelves. For what? 'That you make not to your ſelves this Picture. 'Why? For that you ſaw no manner of Similitude in 'the Day that the Lord ſpake unto you out of the midſt 'of the Fire. Out of the midſt of the Fire; and 'yet he ſtill reſerved himſelf in thick Darkneſs, Exod. '20. 21. So no Picture of him, becauſe no Si-'militude ever ſeen. And this Rule having ever 'poſſeſſed me wholly, I could not juſtify the ha-'ving of it.' I ſaid, indeed, that ſome Men in later ſuperſtitious Times were ſo fooliſh as to picture God the Father, by occaſion of that Place in Daniel: But for my ſelf, I ever rejected it. Nor can that Place bear any ſhew of it: For Daniel ſays there, That the Antient of Days came. But in what Shape or Similitude he came, no Man living can tell. And he is called the Antient of Days, from his Eternity, not as if he appeared like an old Man. The Text hath no Warrant at all for that.

[1] Calv. 1 Inſt. c. 11. §. 12.

2. Yet the ſecond Witneſs, Mr. Tomlyns, ſays alſo, That I did juſtify this Picture. 'God forgive 'him the Malice or Ignorance of this Oath, be it 'which it will.' He might have been as wary as Mr. Carill, and added (as he remembers:) For ſo many Years ſince, as this Hearing was, he may eaſily miſtake. But if I did ſay any ſuch thing, why are not my own Papers here produced againſt me? I had that written which I then ſpake, and the Paper was in my Study with the reſt, and came (for ought I know) into their Hands which follow the Charge againſt me. I ask again, why is not this Paper produced? Out of all doubt it would, had there appeared any ſuch thing in it. He ſays alſo, That I ſaid then, that if the Idol of Jupiter were ſet up, yet it were not lawful to pull it down in a popular Tumult, but by Order and Authority. I did ſay ſo, or to that effect, indeed; and muſt ſay it ſtill. For I find in St. Auguſtin almoſt the very Words. And Biſhop Davenant, a Man very learned, cites this Place of St. Auguſtin, and approves it. And they both prove this Doctrine from Deut. 7. 5. & 12. 2. Where the Command given for deſtroying of the Idols, when they came into the Land of Canaan, was not left at large to the People, but ſettled in Moſes the chief Magiſtrate, and his Power. And according to this Rule, the Temple of Æſculapius, though then grown very ſcandalous, was not pulled down but by [2] Conſtantine's Command. Which Place I then ſhewed the Lords. But this Witneſs added, That Mr. Sherfeild had Authority to do this from the Veſtry. If he had, that's as good as none; for by the Laws of England there is yet no Power given them for that, or any thing elſe. And all that Veſtries do, is by Uſurpation, or Conſent of the Pariſh, but reaches not this. The Biſhop of the Dioceſs had been fitter to be conſulted herein than the Veſtry.

[2] Euſeb. 3. de vita Conſtan. c. 54.

Here, as if theſe Witneſſes had not ſaid enough, Mr. Nicolas offered himſelf to be a Witneſs; and told the Lords he was preſent at the Hearing of this Cauſe; and that four Witneſſes came in clear, that the Picture broken down, was the Picture of God the Father; and that yet the Sentence of the Court paſſed againſt Mr. Sherfeild. Firſt, if this be ſo, it concludes againſt the Sentence given in the Star-Chamber, not againſt me: And he calls it here the Sentence of the Court. Secondly, be it that it were undoubtedly the Picture of God the Father; yet he ought to have taken Authority along with him, and not to go about it with violence; which he did, and fell, and brake his Leg in the Buſineſs. Thirdly, By his own Deſcription of the Picture, it ſeems to me to be ſome old fabulous Picture out of a Legend, and not one of God the Father: For he then told the Lords, it was the Picture of an old Man with a Budget by his Side, out of which he was plucking Adam and Eve. 'And I believe no 'Man ever ſaw God the Father ſo pictured any 'where. Laſtly, Let me obſerve how Mr. Nico-'las takes all parts upon him wherein he may hope 'to do me miſchief.'

VI. The ſixth Charge was concerning a Bible that was printed with Pictures, and ſold. The Witneſs was Mr. Walſal a Stationer; who ſays, That this Bible was licenſed by Dr. Weeks, my Lord of London's Chaplain, not mine: ſo thus far it concerns not me. 'Yes, ſays Mr. Brown in his 'laſt Reply; for it appears in a Liſt of my Chap-'lains, under my own Hand, that Dr. Weeks was 'one. 'Tis true, when I was Biſhop of Bath and 'Wells, he was mine; but my Lord of London had 'him from me, ſo ſoon as ever he was Biſhop: 'And was his, not mine, when he licenſed that 'Book. And Mr. Brown knew that I anſwered it 'thus to the Lords.' He ſays, That I gave him direction that they ſhould not be ſold openly upon the Stalls, but only to diſcreet Men that knew how to uſe them. The Caſe was this: As I was at Prayers in the King's Chappel, I there ſaw one of them in Mrs. Kirk's Hand. She was far enough from any Affection to Rome. And this being the firſt knowledge I had of it, many were vended and ſold before I could prevent it. Upon this I ſent for one, (whether to this Witneſs or another, I cannot ſay) and acquainted the Lords of the Council with it, and craved their Direction what ſhould be done. It was there ordered, that I ſhould forbid the open Sale of them upon their Stalls, but not otherwiſe to learned and diſcreet Men. And when I would have had this Order ſtricter, no Man ſtuck to me but Mr. Secretary Cook. So according to this Order I gave direction to Mr. Walſal, as he witneſſes.

Here Mr. Maynard replied, That I ought to have withſtood this Order, in regard it was every way faulty.

faulty. For, ſaid he, either theſe Pictures were good or bad. And if they were good, why ſhould they not be ſold openly upon the Stalls to all that would buy? And if they were bad, why ſhould they be ſold privately to any? 'To this Reply 'I was not ſuffered to anſwer. But when I heard 'Mr. Brown charge this Bible with Pictures a-'gainſt me, then I anſwered the thing as before, 'and took occaſion thereby to anſwer this Dilem-'ma thus: Namely, That this kind of Argument 'concludes not, but in things neceſſary, and where 'no Medium can be given. For where a Medium 'can be given, the Horns of this Argument are 'too weak to hurt; and ſo 'tis here. For Pictures 'in themſelves are things indifferent; not ſimply 'good, nor ſimply bad, but as they are uſed. 'And therefore they were not to be ſold to all 'Comers, becauſe they may be abuſed, and be-'come evil; and yet might be ſold to learned and 'diſcreet Men, who might turn them to good. 'And that Images are things indifferent of them-'ſelves, is granted in the Homi-'lies, which are againſt the very 'Peril of Idolatry.' He ſaid, There were ſome inconvenient Pictures a-mong them; as the Aſſumption and the Dove. Be it ſo, the Book was not licenſed by me nor mine: And yet, as I then ſhewed the Lords, they were not ſo ſtrict at Amſterdam againſt theſe Pictures; for the Book which Mr. Walſal ſhewed me, was printed and ſent thence, before it was print-ed here. Beſides, our old Engliſh Bibles in the be-ginning of the Queen were full of Pictures, and no fault found. As for that which is added at the Bar, That one of theſe Bibles was found in Secretary Windebank's Trunk, and another in Sir John Lambe's; that's nothing to me.

Hom. par. I. p. 11.

VII. The laſt Charge of this Day was, That ſomething about Images was expunged out of Dr. Featly's Sermons by my Chaplain, Dr. Bray, before they could be ſuffered to be printed. But, Firſt, he himſelf confeſſes, That I told him he might print them, ſo nothing were in them contrary to the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church of Eng-land. Secondly, He confeſſes, That when Dr. Bray made ſtay of them, he never complained to me; and I cannot remedy that which I do not know. Thirdly, He confeſſes, That all the time he was in Lambeth-Houſe, my Predeceſſor ever left that Care of the Preſs upon his Chaplains; and why I might not do it as well as my Predeceſſor, I do not yet know. But he ſaid, That he complained to Sir Edmund Scott, and deſired to be adviſed by him what he ſhould do; and that he anſwer'd, He thought I would not meddle with that trouble-ſome buſineſs, more than my Predeceſſors had done. 'Be this ſo, yet Sir Edmund Scott never told me 'this; nor is there any the leaſt Proof offer'd that 'he did. But becauſe this and the like Paſſages 'about expunging ſome things out of Books, makes 'ſuch a great noiſe, as if nothing concerning Po-'pery might be printed; and becauſe Mr. Brown, 'in ſumming up of the Charge in the Houſe of 'Commons, warmly inſiſted upon this Particular; 'I thought it neceſſary to anſwer as follows: That 'what moved my Chaplain to expunge that large 'Paſſage againſt Images, I knew not; nor could I 'now know, my Chaplain being dead. But that 'this I was ſure of, that elſe-where 'in thoſe very Sermons there was as 'plain a Paſſage, and full againſt [1] I-'mages left in. And in another place 'a whole Leaf together ſpent to prove 'them [2] Idolaters; and that as groſs 'as the Baaliſts, and ſo he terms 'them. Yea, and that the [3] Pope is 'Antichriſt too; and not only called 'ſo, but proved by divers Arguments: And not ſo 'only, but in plain Terms, that he 'is [4] the Whore of Babylon. And theſe 'Paſſages I then read out of the 'Book it ſelf in the Houſe of Commons: and 'many other like to theſe there are. So my Chap-'lain might ſee good cauſe to leave out ſome Paſ-'ſages, where ſo many upon as good cauſe were 'left in.'

[1] Dr. Featly's Sermons, p. 447.

[4] p. 810.

But to the Buſineſs of leaving the Care of theſe Books, and the Over-view of them to my Chaplains, it was then urged, 'That the Commiſſary of John Lord 'Archbiſhop of York, had excom-'municated the Lord Biſhop of Dur-'ham, being then in the King's Ser-'vice; and that the Archbiſhop 'himſelf was deeply fined for this 'Act of his Commiſſary; and that 'therefore I ought much more to be 'anſwerable for my Chaplain's Act, 'whom I might put away when I would, than he 'for his Commiſſary, who had a Patent, and could 'not be put out at pleaſure.' Mr. Brown alſo fol-lowed this Precedent cloſe upon me. But firſt there is a great deal of difference in the thing it ſelf: My Chaplain's Caſe being but the leaving out of a Paſſage in a Book to be printed; but his Com-miſſary's Caſe being the Excommunicating of a great Biſhop, and he in the King's Service, of whoſe Honour the Laws of this Realm are very tender. And, Secondly, the Biſhop and his Offi-cial, (call him Chancellor or Commiſſary, or what you will) make but one Perſon in Law; and therefore the Act of the Commiſſary, to the full ex-tent of his Patent, is the Act of the Biſhop in le-gal Conſtruction, and the Biſhop may be anſwer-able for it. But the Biſhop and his Chaplain are not one Perſon in any Conſtruction of Law. 'And 'ſay he may put away his Chaplain when he will, 'yet that cannot help what is paſt, if ought have 'been done amiſs by him. And this was the An-'ſwer I inſiſted on to Mr. Brown.'

This was done long before the Reformation; when the Patents of Chancellors and Commiſſaries were revocable at the pleaſure of the Biſhop. H. W.

Upon my entrance on this Day's Defence, I found my ſelf aggrieved at the Diurnal, and another Pamphlet of the Week, wherein they print whatſoever is charged againſt me, as if it were fully proved; never ſo much as mentioning what or how I an-ſwer'd. And that it troubled me the more, becauſe (as I conceived) the Paſſages, as there expreſſed, trenched deep upon the Juſtice and Proceedings of that Honourable Houſe; and could have no aim but to incenſe the Multitude againſt me. With ſome difficulty I got theſe Pamphlets received, but there they died, and the weekly Abuſe of me con-tinued to keep my Patience in breath.

The Thirteenth Day of my Hearing.

I. Whitſon-Tueſday, June 11. 1644. The firſt Charge of this Day, was the Opinion which was held of me beyond the Seas. The firſt Witneſs was Sir Henry Mildmay, who (as is before related) told me without asking, That I was the moſt hateful Man at Rome, that ever ſat in my See ſince the Reformation. Now he denied not this, 'but being helped on by good Preparation, a flexi-'ble Conſcience, and a fair leading Interrogatory 'by Mr. Nicolas,' (Mr. Serjeant Wilde was ſick, and came no more till the laſt Day, when I made my Recapitulation) he minced it. And now he ſays, That there were two Factions at Rome, and that one of them did indeed ſpeak very ill of me, becauſe they thought I aimed at too great a Power here in England; but the other Faction ſpake as well of me, becauſe they thought I endeavoured to bring us in England nearer to the Church of Rome. But, Firſt, my Lords, this Gentleman's Words to me were round and general; That I was hated at Rome, not of a Party or Faction there; and my Servants heard him at the ſame time, and are here ready to witneſs it, That he then ſaid the Pope was a goodly Gentleman, and did uſe to ride two or three great Horſes in a Morning; and, but that he was ſomething taller, he was as like Auditor Philips (who was then at Dinner with me) as could be. But I pray mark what wiſe Men he makes them at Rome. One Faction hates me, becauſe I aim at too much Power; and the other loves me, becauſe I would draw England nearer Rome. Why, if I went about to draw England nearer Rome, can any among them be ſuch Fools as to think my Power too great? For if I uſed my Power for them, why ſhould any there condemn me? And if I uſed it againſt them, why ſhould any here accuſe me? 'Non ſunt hæc bene diviſa tempo-

'ribus; theſe things ſuit not with the Times, or
'the Diſpoſitions of Rome: But the plain Truth is,
'I do not think that ever he was at Rome; I after
'heard a Whiſper, that he only ſtepped into France
'for another Cure, not to Rome for Curioſity,
'which was the only Cauſe he gave the Lords of
'his going thither.'

2. The ſecond Witneſs was Mr. Challoner. He ſays not much of his own Knowledge, but of Fame, that tatling Goſſip; yet he told the Lords, I was a very obſcure Man, till within theſe fifteen Years. Be it ſo, if he pleaſe; yet I have been a Biſhop above Three and Twenty Years: and 'tis Eighteen Years ſince I was firſt Dean of his Majeſty's Chappel-Royal. He ſays, That after this time there was a ſtrong Opinion of Reconciliation to Rome. A ſtrong Opinion, but a weak Proof. For it was an Opinion of Enemies, and ſuch as could eaſily believe, what they over-much deſired. He farther ſaid, That ſome of them were of Opinion, that I was a good Roman Catholick, and that I wrought cunningly to introduce that Religion by Inches; and that they prayed for me. Firſt, My Lords, the Opinion of Enemies is no Proof at all, that I am ſuch as they think me. And ſecondly, this is a notable, and no unuſual piece of Cunning, for an Enemy to deſtroy by commending; for this was the ready way, and I doubt not but it hath been practiſed, to raiſe a Jealouſy againſt me at home, thereby either to work the Ruin of my Perſon, or utterly to weaken and diſable me from doing harm to them, or good for the Church of England. Beſides, if the Commendation of Enemies may in this kind go for Proof, it ſhall be in the power of two or three practiſing Jeſuits, to deſtroy any Biſhop or other Church-man of England when they pleaſe. At laſt he told a Story of one Father John, a Benedictine; that he asked him how Church-Livings were diſpoſed in England, and whether I had not the diſpoſing of thoſe which were in the King's Gift? And concluded, That he was not out of hope to ſee England reduced to Rome. Why, my Lords, this is not Father John's Hope alone; for there is no (a) Roman Catholick but hath ſome Hope alive in him to ſee this Day. And were it not for that Hope, there would not have been ſo many, ſome deſperate, all dangerous Practices upon this Kingdom to effect it, both in Queen Elizabeth's time, and ſince. But if this I know not what Father John hope ſo, what is that to me?

3. The third Witneſs was Mr. Anthony Mildmay; a Man not thought on for a Witneſs, till I called for his Brother Sir Henry. But now he comes laden with his Brother's Language. He ſays juſt as Sir Henry did before, That there were two Factions at Rome, the Jeſuits, and they abhorred me; but the other, the Secular Prieſts, they wiſhed me well, as he was informed. Firſt, this is ſo one and the ſame Teſtimony, that any Man that will, may ſee, that either he informed his Brother, or his Brother him. Secondly, here's nothing affirmed, for it is but as he was informed: And he doth not tell you by whom. It may be, my Lords, it was by his Brother. Then he ſays, This was to make my ſelf great, and tells a Tale of Father Fitton, as much to the purpoſe as that which Mr. Challoner told of Father John. But whatſoever either of theſe Fathers ſaid, it was but their own Opinion of me, or Hearſay; neither of which can prove me guilty of any thing. 'Thus much
'Mr. Anthony made a ſhift to ſay by Five of the 'Clock at Afternoon, when I came to make my 'Anſwer. And this (as I have ſufficient Cauſe to 'think) only to help to ſhoar up his Brother's
'Teſtimony. But in the Morning, when he
'ſhould have come, as his Brother did, he was
'by Nine in the Morning ſo drunk, that he 'was not able to come to the Bar, nor to ſpeak
'common Senſe, had he been brought thither:
'Nobile Par Fratrum.'

II. The Second Charge was the Conſecration of two Churches in London; St. Catherine Cree-Church, and St. Giles in the Fields. The Witneſſes two.

1. The firſt Witneſs was one Mr. Willingham. And he ſays, That I came to theſe Churches in a pompous manner: But all the Pomp that he mentions, is, that Sir Henry Martin, Dr. Duck, and ſome other of the Arches, attended me, as they uſually do their Dioceſans in ſuch Solemnities. He ſays, he did curiouſly obſerve what was done, thinking it would one day be called to an account, as now it is. So this Man (himſelf being Judge) looked upon that Work with a malevolent Eye, and God preſerve him from being a malicious Witneſs. He ſays, That at my approach to the Church-Door, was read, Lift up your Heads, O ye Gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlaſting Doors, and the King of Glory ſhall come in; Pſal. 24. 7. And this was urged over and over, as a Jeer upon my Perſon. But this Place of Scripture hath been antiently uſed in Conſecrations: And it relates not to the Biſhop, but to God Almighty, the true King of Glory, who at the Dedication enters by his Servant to take poſſeſſion of the Houſe, then to be made his. He ſays, That I kneeled down at my coming in, and after uſed many Bowings and Cringings. For my kneeling down at my entrance, to begin with Prayer, and after to proceed with Reverence, I did but my Duty in that; let him ſcoffingly call it Cringing, or Ducking, or what he pleaſe.

(a) The Archbiſhop calls the Engliſh Papiſts Roman Catholicks; not as allowing them to be ſuch, but referring to that Name, which ſome of them were before ſaid to have affixed to him. H. W.

He

He ſays farther, That at the beginning I took up Duſt, and threw it in the Air, and after uſed divers Curſes. And here Mr. Pryn put Mr. Nicolas in mind to add, That ſpargere Cinerem is in the Form of Conſecration uſed in the Pontifical. 'And 'Mr. Brown, in his ſummary Account of my 'Charge, laid the very Conſecration of theſe 'Churches as a Crime upon me, and inſiſted on 'this Particular.' But here my Anſwer to all was the ſame; That this Witneſs had need look well to his Oath, for there was no throwing up of Duſt, no Curſes uſed throughout the whole Action: Nor did I follow the Pontifical, but a Copy of Learned and Reverend Biſhop Andrews, by which he conſecrated divers Churches in his time; and that this is ſo, I have the Copy by me to witneſs, and offered them to ſhew it. Nor can this howſoever favour any way of Treaſon. No, ſaid Mr. Brown, but the Treaſon is, To ſeek, by theſe Ceremonies, to overthrow the Religion eſtabliſhed. Nor was that ever ſought by me: And God of his Mercy preſerve the true Proteſtant Religion amongſt us, till the Conſecration of Churches, and Reverence in the Church, can overthrow it; and then I doubt not, but by God's Bleſſing it ſhall continue ſafe to the World's end.

He ſays alſo, That I did pronounce the Place Holy. I did ſo: And that was in the ſolemn Act itſelf of the Conſecration, according to the uſual Form in that behalf. And no Man will deny, but that there is a Derivative and a 'Relative Holineſs in Places, as well as in Veſſels, and other things dedicated to the Honour and Service of God. Nor is any thing more common in the Old Teſtament; and 'tis expreſs in the New, both for Place and Things: 1 Cor. 9. 13.

'Objectiva & adhærens, Jo. Prideaux, Concio in S. Luc. 19. 46.

Then it was urged at the Bar, That a Prayer which I uſed, was like one that is in the Pontifical. So in the Miſſal are many Prayers like to the Collects uſed in our Engliſh Liturgy, ſo like, that ſome are the very ſame, tranſlated only into Engliſh; and yet theſe confirmed by Law. And for that of Pſal. 95. 6. Venite procidamus, &c. then alſo excepted againſt, that hath been of very antient uſe in the Liturgies of the Church. From which rejecimus Paleam, numquid & Grana? We have ſeparated the Chaff, ſhall we caſt away the Corn too? If it come to that, let us take heed we fall not upon the Devil's Winnowing, who labours to beat down the Corn; 'tis not the Chaff that troubles him, St. Luke 22. 31. Then they urged my Predeceſſor Archbiſhop Parker, That he found fault with the Conſecration of new Churches. I anſwered then upon Memory, that he did not find fault ſimply with Conſecrations of Churches, but only with the ſuperſtitious Ceremonies uſed therein. 'And this ſince, upon peruſal of the place, 'I find to be true. For after he had in ſome ſort 'commended the Popes for taking away ſome 'groſs and ſuperſtitious Purgations, he adds, That 'yet for want of Piety or Prudence, their later 'Pontifical and Miſſal-Books did outgo the antient in 'multitudine Ceremoniarum, & peragendi Difficultate, '& Tædio, & Exorciſationis Amentiâ. So theſe were 'the things he found fault with, not the Conſe'cration itſelf; which he could not well do, him'ſelf being then a conſecrated Biſhop.'

In Antiq. Britannicis, p. 85.

2. The ſecond Witneſs was Mr. Hope. He ſays, That he agrees with the former Witneſs, and ſaw all, and the throwing up of the Duſt, &c. Since he agrees with the former Witneſs, I give him the ſame Anſwer. Yet with this Obſervation upon him and his Oath: The former Witneſs ſays, That at the beginning of this Action, I took Duſt and threw it up; this Man agrees with him, and ſaw all; and almoſt in the very next words confeſſes, he was not there at the beginning. Not there; yet he ſaw it. My Lords, if you mark it, this is a wholeſome Oath. He ſays, That then the Churchyard was conſecrated by itſelf. It was ever ſo; the one Act muſt follow the other, though both done the ſame day: for the Places being different, the Act could not paſs upon them at the ſame time. Then he ſaid, there were Fees required, and a good eye had to the Money. This is a poor Objection againſt me: if the Officers did exact any Money without rule or beyond precedent, let them anſwer for it. But for that which was ſaid to belong to me, I preſently gave it to the Poor of the Pariſh: and this Mr. Dell my Secretary then preſent atteſted to the Lords. Laſtly, he ſaid, They were not new Churches. Let him look to his Oath again; for 'tis notoriouſly known, they were both new built from the ground, and St. Giles not wholly upon the old Foundation.

III. The Third Charge was laid on me only by Mr. Nicolas, and without any Witneſs. It was, That I out-went Popery itſelf; for the Papiſts conſecrated Churches only, but I had been ſo ceremonious, that I had conſecrated (a) Chappels too. My Lords, the Uſe of Chappels and of Churches in regard of God's Service is the ſame. Therefore if Conſecration be fit for the one, it muſt needs be for the other. And the Conſecrations of Chappels was long before Popery came into the World. For even Oratories newly built were conſecrated in or before Euſebius's time: and he flouriſhed about the Year of Chriſt 310. So antient they are in the Courſe of Chriſtianity; and for any Prohibition of them, there is neither Law nor Canon in the State or Church of England that doth it.

Euſeb. l. 10. Hiſt. c. 3.

The Chappels they inſtance in are three. Firſt, they ſay, I conſecrated a Chappel of the Right Honourable the Lord Treaſurer Weſton's. I did ſo, and did no harm therein. As for the Touch given by the way upon that Honourable Perſon, he is gone to God, I have nothing to do with it. Secondly, they inſtanced in a Chappel of Sir John Worſtenham's building. 'Tis true, I conſecrated that too, but that was a Pariſh-Church, built in the place where he was born, and it was in my Dioceſs, and ſo the Work proper for me. The third Inſtance was in my own Chappel, in my Houſe at Aberguilly, when I was Biſhop of St. Davids; the Room lay waſte and out of repair, and I fitted it at my own coſt, and conſecrated it into a Chappel, that Houſe having no Oratory before. Here they farther aggravated many Circumſtances: as Firſt, That I named it at the Dedication, The Chappel of St. John the Baptiſt. I did ſo name that Chappel, in memory of the College where I was bred, which bears the ſame Name; but I dedicated it to God and his Service. And to give the Names of Angels and Saints to Churches, for diſtinction-ſake, and for the honour of their Memory,

(a) Here in England, both before and ſince the Reformation, Chappels newly erected were always ſolemnly conſecrated, as well as Churches. I could produce innumerable Inſtances of the Time preceding, many of the Time ſucceeding the Reformation. H. W.

mory, is very antient and uſual in the Church, as appears in St. Auguſtine, and divers others of the Fathers; but dedicated only to God: 'Which 'in the midſt of ſuperſtitious Times, the School 'itſelf confeſſes.' So yet no Offence. Secondly, That I did it upon the 29th of Auguſt. And why might I not do it that Day, as well as upon any other? But reſolving to name the Chappel as I did, I the rather made choice of that Day, both becauſe it was the Day of the Decollation of St. John the Baptiſt, and becauſe as upon that Day God had wonderfully bleſſed me, in the Hearing of my Cauſe concerning the Preſidentſhip of St. John's College in Oxford, by King James of ever-bleſſed Memory: So yet no Offence. Thirdly, There was a Paper read, and avowed to be mine, in which was a fair Deſcription of Chappel-Furniture and rich Plate, and the Ceremonies in uſe in that Chappel, and Wafers for the Communion. At the reading of this Paper, I was a little troubled. I knew I was not then ſo rich, as to have ſuch Plate or Furniture; and therefore I humbly deſired ſight of the Paper. So ſoon as I ſaw it, I found there was nothing in it in my hand, but the Indorſement, which told the Reader plainly, that it was the Model of Reverend Biſhop Andrews's Chappel, with the Furniture, Plate, Ceremonies therein uſed, and all things elſe. And this Copy was ſent me by the Houſhold Chaplain to that famous Biſhop. 'This I laid open to the Lords, and it 'would have made any Man aſhamed, but Mr. 'Pryn, who had delivered upon Oath, that it was 'a Paper of my Chappel-Furniture at Aberguilly, 'contrary to his Conſcience, and his own Eye-'ſight of the Paper.' And for Wafers, I never either gave or received the Communion, but in ordinary Bread. At Weſtminſter I knew it was ſometimes uſed, but as a thing indifferent. As for the Slur here given to that Reverend dead Biſhop of Wincheſter, it might well have been ſpared; he deſerved far better Uſage for his Service to the Church of England, and the Proteſtant Cauſe.

Tho. 2. 2æ q. 85. A. 2. ad 3.

IV. The Fourth Charge was the publiſhing the Book of Recreations: and it was uſhered in with this Scorn upon me, That I laboured to put a Badge of Holineſs, by my Breath, upon Places; and to take it away from Days. But I did neither; the King commanded the printing of it, as is therein atteſted, and the Warrant which the King gave me, they have. And though at Conſecrations I read the Prayers, yet it was God's Bleſſing, not my Breath, that gave the Holineſs. And for the Day, I ever laboured it might be kept holy, but yet free from a ſuperſtitious Holineſs. And firſt it was ſaid, That this was done of purpoſe to take away Preaching. But Firſt, there is no Proof offered for this. And Secondly, 'tis impoſſible; for till the Afternoon-Service and Sermon were done, no Recreation is allowed by that Book, nor then to any but ſuch as have been at both: therefore it could not be done to take it away. Thirdly, the Book names none but Lawful Recreations; therefore if any unlawful be uſed, the Book gives them no warrant. And that ſome are lawful (after the publick Service of God is ended) appears by the Practice of Geneva, where after Evening-Prayer the elder Men bowl, and the younger train. And Calvin ſays in expreſs Terms, That one Cauſe of the Inſtitution of the Sabbath, was, (a) That Servants might have a Day of Reſt and Remiſſion from their Labour. And what time of the Day fit, if not after Evening-Prayer? And what Reſt is there for able young Men, if they may uſe no Recreation? Then it was urged, That there was great Riot and Diſorder at Wakes kept on the Lord's-Day. That is a very ſufficient Cauſe to regulate and order thoſe Feaſts, but not quite to take them away. I make no doubt for my part, but that the Feaſt of the Dedication was abuſed by ſome among the Jews; and yet Chriſt was ſo far from taking it away for that, as that he honoured it with his own Preſence, St. John 10. 22. As for the Paper which was read containing three Cauſes why that Book was publiſhed, that was a Note taken for my own private Uſe and Memory.

Then came in Mr. Pryn, who ſaid, That the Lord Chief Juſtice Richardſon had made an Order in his Circuit againſt theſe Wakes, and was forced to revoke it. This was done by Authority, as is before anſwered; to which I refer myſelf. Here 'tis added, to help fill up the Noiſe. But Mr. Pryn ſays, That all the Gentlemen in the Country petitioned on the Judge's behalf. No; there was a great Faction in Somerſetſhire at that time, and Sir Robert Philips and all his Party writ up againſt the Judge and the Order he made, as was apparent by the Certificates which he returned. And Sir Robert was well known in his time to be neither Popiſh nor Profane. He ſays farther, That William then Earl of Pembroke was out of Town, and the Book printed in the interim by my procurement. But for this laſt, here's not one word of Proof offered, and ſo I leave it.

V. The Fifth Charge was, That ſome Miniſters were puniſhed for not reading this Book. Witneſſes for this were produced.

1. The firſt was Sir Nathaniel Brent; who ſays, He had charge from me to call for an account of not reading this Book, both in my Province at my Viſitation, and in my Dioceſs. His Majeſty having commanded this, I could do little, if I had not ſo much as inquired what was done. And he confeſſes, That for my Province he gave time to them which had not read it, and then never asked more after it. So here was no eager Proſecution. But then he ſays, That three in my Dioceſs ſtood out, and asked time: and confeſſes that I granted it; but adds, That when he asked more time for them, I denied; and that they were then ſuſpended ab Officio only. I thought I had reaſon to deny, when I ſaw they did but dally by asking time. And it was then evident, that in the Dioceſs of other Biſhops far more than three were puniſhed, and their Puniſhment greater. 'How-'ever, this my Proceeding was far from Rigour. 'And this was the Anſwer that I gave Mr. Brown, 'who in the Sum of his Charge inſtanced in this 'Particular againſt me.'

2. The ſecond Witneſs was Mr. Culmer, one of the three Miniſters that were ſuſpended. He ſays, That he was ſuſpended by Sir Nathaniel Brent, and that when he came to me about it, I ſaid, If you know not how to obey, I know not how to grant your Petition. Truly, my Lords, finding him both wilful and ignorant, I cannot tell what I could ſay leſs. He ſays, That his Patron took away his Benefice. Why, my Lords, he had none; he was only a Curate, and God knows, unfit for that. So being ſuſpended from his Office, this muſt needs be done. He ſays, He was not abſolved till the Scots came in, and that he was conformable in all things elſe. For the time of his Abſolution, I leave that to the Record: but for his Conformity in other things, 'tis more than ever I heard of any (a). 'This I can ſay for him, he is good at purchaſing 'a Benefice; for he offered a Servant of mine One 'Hundred and Fifty Pound, ſo he could procure 'me but to name him to the Parliament for Char- 'tham in Kent. Since, I have heard he is as good 'at doing Reverence in the Church: 'for he piſſed in the Body of the 'Cathedral at Canterbury at Noon-'day, as will be juſtified by Oath. 'And for this very Particular, the 'Book of Recreations, he informed 'at the Council-Table againſt a Gentleman of 'Quality, for ſaying, It was unfit ſuch Books ſhould 'be ſent, for Miniſters to read in the Church. And 'was himſelf laid by the heels, for the Falſhood 'of this Information. So he is very good at the 'point of Conſcience too, that can refuſe to read 'the Book, as being unfit, and complain to have 'another puniſhed for ſaying 'tis ſo.'

Antidotum Culmerianum, p. 11.

Ibid. p. 35.

3. The third Witneſs is Mr. Wilſon. He ſays, That I ſent to Sir Nath. Brent to ſuſpend him. That is true, but it was when he would neither obey, nor keep in his Tongue. He ſays, his Living was ſequeſtred for almoſt four Years. But it was not for not reading this Book. For himſelf confeſſes it was done in the High-Commiſſion; and that for Dilapidations, in not repairing his Houſe.

4. The fourth Witneſs was one Mr. Snelling, a Miniſter in the Dioceſs of Rocheſter. All that was done againſt this Man, was openly in the High-Commiſſion Court: and there he was cenſured for other things, as well as for this. Himſelf confeſſes his open refuſing to bow at the Name of Jeſus, though the Canon of the Church command it. I kept him off from being ſentenced a long time, and when he was ſentenced he confeſſes I was not preſent. He ſays, Somewhat was expunged out of his Brief. If it were, it was with the conſent of his Counſel; which in that Court was ordinary. Howſoever it cannot touch me: for thoſe things were done at Informations, where I was not preſent. He ſays, that when I heard of the Nature of his Defence, I ſaid, If any ſuch Defence were put in, it ſhould be burnt. This was upon juſt Complaint of the Judge then preſent at Informations, affirming it was againſt all the Courſe of that Court. He ſays, There is no Penalty mentioned in that Declaration. And I ſay, his Obedience and other Mens ſhould have been the more free and cheerful. Well I pray God keep us in the Mean, in this Buſineſs of the Sabbath, as well as in other things; that we run not into a Jewiſh Superſtition, while we ſeek to ſhun Profaneneſs. This, Calvin hath in the mean time aſſured me, That thoſe Men who ſtand ſo ſtrictly upon the Morality of the Sabbath, do by a groſs and carnal Sabbatization, three times out-go the Superſtition of the Jews.

Craſſâ carnalique Sabbatiſmi Superſtitione ter Judæos ſuperant. Calv. 2. Inſt. c. 8. §. 34.

Here it was inferred, That there was a Combination for the doing of this in other Dioceſes. But no Proof at all was offered. Then Biſhop Mountague's Articles, and Biſhop Wren's, were read, to ſhew that Inquiry was made about the reading of this Book; and the Biſhop of London's Articles named, but not read. But if I were in this Combination, why were not my Articles read? Becauſe no ſuch thing appears in them; and becauſe my Articles gave ſo good Content, that while the Convocation was ſitting, Dr. Brown and Dr. Holdſworth came to me, and deſired me to have my Book confirmed in Convocation, to be general for all Biſhops in future, it was ſo moderate, and according to Law. But why then (ſay they) were other Articles thought on, and a Clauſe that none ſhould paſs without the Approbation of the Archbiſhop? Why; other were thought on, becauſe I could not in Modeſty preſs the Confirmation of my own, though ſollicited to it. And that Clauſe was added, till a ſtanding Book for all Dioceſes might be perfected, that no Quære in the interim might be put to any, but ſuch as were according to Law.

VI. The ſixth Charge was about reverſing of a Decree in Chancery (as 'tis ſaid) about Houſes in Dr. Walton's Pariſh, given (as was ſaid) to ſuperſtitious Uſes.

1. The firſt Witneſs was Serjeant Turner. He ſays, He had a Rule in the King's-Bench for a Prohibition in this Cauſe. But by reaſon of ſome Defect (what, is not mentioned) he confeſſes he could not get his Prohibition. Here's nothing that reflects upon me. And if a Prohibition were moved for, that could not be perſonally to me, but to my Judge in ſome Spiritual Court, where it ſeems this Cauſe depended, to which the Decree in Chancery was directed. And indeed this Act, which they call a Reverſing, was the Act and Seal of Sir Nath. Brent, my Vicar-General: And if he violated the Lord Keeper's Decree, he muſt anſwer it. But the Inſtrument being then produced, it appeared concurrent in all things with the Decree. The Words are, Juxta ſcopum Decreti hac in parte in Curiâ Cancellariæ factum, &c.

2. The ſecond Witneſs was Mr. Edwards. And wherein he concurs with Serjeant Turner, I gave him the ſame Anſwer. For that which he adds, That Dr. Walton did let Leaſes of theſe Houſes at an under Value, and called none of the Pariſhioners to it: If he did in this any thing contrary to Juſtice, or the Will of the Donor, or the Decree, he is living to anſwer for himſelf; me it concerns not. For his Exception taken to my Grant (of Confirmation, I think he means) and to the Words therein, Omnis & Omnimoda, &c. 'tis the antient Stile of ſuch Grants for I know not how many hundred Years; no Syllable innovated or altered by me.

VII. Then followed the Charge of Mr. Burton and Mr. Pryn, about their Anſwer, and their not being ſuffered to put it into the Star-Chamber. Which though Mr. Pryn preſſed at large before, yet here it muſt come again, to help fill the World with Clamour. Yet to that which ſhall but ſeem new I ſhall anſwer. Two Things are ſaid: (1.) The one, That they were not ſuffered to put in their Defence modo & forma, as it was laid. There was an Order made openly in Court to the Judges, to expunge ſcandalous Matter. And the two Chief Juſtices did order the expunging of all that which was expunged, be it more or leſs; as appears in the Acts of that Court. (2.) The other is, That I procured this Expunging. The Proofs that I procured it, were theſe: Firſt, Becauſe Mr. Cockſhot gave me account of the Buſineſs from Mr. Attorney. I had reaſon to look after the Buſineſs, the whole Church of England being ſcandalized in that Bill, as well as my ſelf. But this is no proof that I either gave Direction, or uſed any Sollicitation to the reverend Judges, to whom it was referred. Secondly, Becauſe I gave the Lords Thanks for it. It was openly in Court: It was after the Expunging was agreed unto. And what could I do leſs in ſuch a Cauſe of the Church, tho I had not been perſonally concerned in it? Thirdly, Becauſe I had a Copy of their Anſwer found in my Study. I conceive it was not only fit, but neceſſary for me to have one, the Nature of the Cauſe conſidered. But who interlined any Paſſages in it with Black-lead, I know not: For I ever uſed Ink, and no Black-lead all my Life. Theſe be ſtrange Proofs that I procured any thing.

(a) This Mr. Culmer not only piſſed in the Church of Canterbury, but alſo demoliſhed the noble Glaſs-Windows of it with his own hands. The like he did in the Pariſh-Church of Minſter in Thanet; which Benefice he uſurped during the Rebellion. I have had more particular Opportunities to be informed concerning him from many yet alive, who knew him well; and upon the whole, think him to have been one of the greateſt Villains in the three Kingdoms. H. W.

Then Mr. Pryn added, That the Juſtice and Favour which was afforded Dr. Leighton was denied unto him. As far as I remember, it was for the putting in of his Anſwer under his own Hand. This, if ſo, was done by Order of the Court; it was not my Act.

VIII. The laſt Charge followed: And that was taken out of the Preface to my Speech in the Star-Chamber. The Words are, 'That one Way of Government is not always either fit or ſafe, when the Humours of the People are in a continual Change, &c. From whence they inferred I laboured to reduce all to an arbitrary Government. But I do humbly conceive no Conſtruction can force theſe Words againſt me for an arbitrary Government: For the meaning is, and can be no other, for ſometimes a ſtricter, and ſometimes a remiſſer holding and ordering the Reins of Government; yet both according to the ſame Laws, by a different uſe and application of Mercy and Juſtice to Offenders. 'And ſo I anſwer'd to Mr. Brown, who charged 'this againſt me as one of my ill Counſels to his 'Majeſty. But my Anſwer given is Truth: For 'it is not ſaid, That there ſhould not be one Law 'for Government, but not one Way in the order-'ing and execution of that Law. 'And the [1] Obſervator upon my 'Speech, (an Engliſh Author, and 'well enough known, though he 'pretend 'tis a Tranſlation out of 'Dutch) though he ſpares nothing 'that may be but carped at; yet to this Paſ-'ſage he ſays, 'Tis a good Maxim, and wiſhes 'the King would follow it. And truly, for my 'part, I learned it of a very wiſe and an able Go-'vernor, and he a King of England too; it was of 'Henry VII. of whom the Story ſays, '[2] That in the Difficulties of his 'Time and Cauſe he uſed both ways 'of Government, Severity and Cle-'mency; yet both theſe were ſtill within the 'Compaſs of the Law. He far too wiſe, and I 'never yet ſuch a Fool, as to imbrace arbitrary 'Government.'

June 14. 1644. This Day I received a Note from the Committee, that they intended to proceed next upon the remainder of the Seventh, and upon the Eighth and Ninth Original Articles: Which follow in hæc verba.

VIII. That for the better advancing of his Traytorous Purpoſe and Deſign, he did abuſe the great Power and Truſt his Majeſty repoſed in him; and did intrude upon the Places of divers great Officers, and upon the Right of other of his Majeſty's Subjects: whereby he did procure to himſelf the Nomination of ſundry Perſons to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, Promotions and Benefices, belonging to his Majeſty, and divers of the Nobility, Clergy, and others; and hath taken upon him the Commendation of Chaplains to the King; by which means he hath preferred to his Majeſty's Service, and to other great Promotions in the Church, ſuch as have been popiſhly affected, or otherwiſe unſound and corrupt both in Doctrine and Manners.

IX. He hath for the ſame traytorous and wicked Intent, choſen and employed ſuch Men to be his Chaplains, whom he knew to be notoriouſly diſaffected to the Reformed Religion, groſly addicted to Popiſh Superſtition, and erroneous and unſound both in Judgment and Practice. And to them, or ſome of them, he hath committed the Licenſing of Books to be printed; by which means divers falſe and ſuperſtitious Books have been publiſhed, to the great Scandal of Religion, and to the ſeducing of many of his Majeſty's Subjects.

The Fourteenth Day of my Hearing.

MOnday, June 17. 1644. At the ending of the former Day's Charge, I was put off to this Day, which held.

I. The Firſt Charge was concerning Mr. Damport's leaving his Benefice in London, and going into Holland.

1. The firſt Witneſs for this was Quaterman, a bitter Enemy of mine; God forgive him. He ſpeaks as if he had fled from his Miniſtry here for fear of me. But the ſecond Witneſs, Mr. Dukeſwell, ſays, That he went away upon a Warrant that came to ſummon him into the High-Commiſſion. The truth is, my Lords, and 'tis well known, and to ſome of his beſt Friends, that I preſerved him once before, and my Lord Vere came and gave me thanks for it. If after this he fell into danger again, majus Peccatum habet; I cannot preſerve Men that will continue in dangerous Courſes. He ſays farther, (and in this the other Witneſs agrees with him) That when I heard he was gone into New England, I ſhould ſay my Arm ſhould reach him there. The Words I remember not. But for the Thing, I cannot think it fit that any Plantation ſhould ſecure any Offender againſt the Church of England. And therefore if I did ſay my Arm ſhould reach him, or them ſo offending, I know no Crime in it; ſo long as my Arm reached no Man but by the Law.

2. The ſecond Witneſs, Mr. Dukeſwell, adds nothing to this, but that he ſays, Sir Maurice Abbot kept him in before. For which Teſtimony I thank him. For by this it appears, that Mr. Damport was a dangerous factious Man, and ſo accounted in my Predeceſſor's time, and it ſeems proſecuted then too, that his Brother Sir Maurice Abbot was fain (being then a Pariſhioner of his) to labour hard to keep him in.

II. The Second Charge was concerning Nathaniel Wickens, a Servant of Mr. Pryn.

1. The firſt Witneſs in this Cauſe was William Wickens, Father to Nathaniel. He ſays, his Son was nine Weeks in divers Priſons, and for no cauſe but for that he was Mr. Pryn's Servant. But it appears apud Acta, that there were many Articles of great Miſdemeanour againſt him. And afterwards himſelf adds, That he knew no cauſe, but his refuſing to take the Oath ex Officio. Why, but if he knew that, then he knew another cauſe, beſide his being Mr. Pryn's Servant: unleſs he will ſay all Mr. Pryn's Servants refuſe that Oath, and all that refuſe that Oath are Mr. Pryn's Servants. As for the Sentence which was laid upon him, and the Impriſonment, that was the Act of the High-Commiſſion, not mine. Then he ſays, That my Hand was firſt in the Warrant for his Commitment. And ſo it was to be of courſe.

2. The ſecond Witneſs was Sarah Wayman. She ſays, That he refuſed to take the Oath. Therefore he was not committed for being Mr. Pryn's Servant. She ſays, That for refuſing the Oath, he was threatned he ſhould be taken pro Confeſſo: And that when one of the Doctors replyed, That could not be done by the Order of the Court, I ſhould ſay, I would have an Order by the next Court-Day. 'Tis manifeſt in the Courſe of that Court, that any Man may be taken pro Confeſſo, that will not take the Oath, and anſwer. Yet ſeeing how that Party of Men prevailed, and that one Doctor's doubting might breed more difference, to the great ſcandal and weakning of that Court; I publickly acquainted his Majeſty and the Lords with it: who were all of opinion, that if ſuch Refuſers might not be taken pro Confeſſo, the whole Power of the Court was ſhaken. And hereupon his Majeſty ſent his Letter under his Signet, to command us to uphold the Power of the Court, and to proceed. She ſays farther, That he deſired the ſight of his Articles, which was denied him. It was the conſtant and known Courſe of that Court, that he might not ſee the Articles till he had taken the Oath, which he refuſed to do.

3. The third Witneſs was one Flower. He agrees about the buſineſs of taking him pro Confeſſo: But that's anſwered. He adds, That there was nothing laid to his charge; and yet confeſſes, that Wickens deſired to ſee the Articles that were againſt him. This is a pretty Oath: There were Articles againſt him, which he deſired to ſee, and yet there was nothing laid to his charge.

4. Then was produced his Majeſty's Letter ſent unto us. And herein the King requires us by his Supreme Power Eccleſiaſtical to proceed, &c. We had been in a fine caſe, had we diſobeyed this Command. Beſides, my Lords, I pray mark it, we are enjoined to proceed by the King's Supreme Power Eccleſiaſtical; and yet it is here urged againſt me, that this was done to bring in Popery. An excellent new way of bringing in Popery by the King's Supremacy. Yea, but they ſay, I ſhould not have procured this Letter. Why? I hope I may by all lawful ways preſerve the Honour and juſt Power of the Court in which I ſat. And 'tis expreſſed in the Letter, that no more was done, than was agreeable to the Laws and Cuſtoms of the Realm. And 'tis known that both an Oath, and a taking pro Confeſſo in point of refuſal, are uſed both in the Star-Chamber and in the Chancery.

5. The laſt Witneſs was Mr. Pryn; who ſays, That his Man was not ſuffered to come to him, during his Soreneſs, when his Ears were cropt. This Favour ſhould have been asked of the Court of Star-Chamber, not of me. And yet here is no Proof that I denied him this, but the bare Report of him, whom he ſays he employed. Nor do I remember any Man's coming to me about it.

III. The Third Charge followed; it was concerning ſtopping of Books from the Preſs, both old and new, and expunging ſome things out of them.

1. The firſt Inſtance was about the Engliſh Bibles with the Geneva Notes. The Bibles with thoſe Notes were tolerated indeed both in Queen Elizabeth's and King James's time; but allowed by Authority in neither. And King James ſaid plainly, That he thought the Geneva Tranſlation was the worſt, and many of the Notes very partial, untrue, ſeditious, and ſavouring too much of dangerous and traitorous Conceits: and gave Inſtance. This Paſſage I then read to the Lords; and withal told them, That now of late theſe Notes were more commonly uſed to ill Purpoſes than formerly, and that that was the cauſe why the High-Commiſſion was more careful and ſtrict againſt them than before. Conference at Hampton-Court, p. 47.

Here Michael Sparks the elder came in as Witneſs, and ſaid, He was called into the High-Commiſſion about theſe Books: but he confeſſes, it was not only for them. He ſays, The Reſtraint of thoſe Bibles was for the Notes: but he adds, as he ſuppoſes. And his Suppoſal is no Proof. Beſides, he might have added here alſo, that the Reſtraint was not for the Notes only: for by the numerous coming over of Bibles, both with and without Notes, from Amſterdam, there was a great and a juſt Fear conceived, that by little and little Printing would quite be carried out of the Kingdom. For the Books which came thence, were better Print, better bound, better Paper, and, for all the Charges of bringing, ſold better cheap. And would any Man buy a worſe Bible dearer, that might have a better more cheap? And to preſerve Printing here at home, as well as the Notes, was the cauſe of ſtricter looking to thoſe Bibles. And this appears by a Letter of Sir William Boſwell's, his Majeſty's Agent in the Low Countries; the Letter written to me, and now produced againſt me: but makes for me, as I conceive. For therein he ſends me word of two Impreſſions of the Bible in Engliſh, one with Notes, and the other without; and deſires me to take care to regulate this buſineſs at home. What ſhould I do? Should I ſleep upon ſuch Advertiſements as theſe, and from ſuch a hand? Eſpecially ſince he ſends word alſo, that Dr. Amyes was then printing of a Book wholly againſt the Church of England. So my Care was againſt all Underminings, both at home and abroad, of the eſtabliſhed Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church of England, for which I am now like to ſuffer. And I pray God that point of Arminianiſm, Libertas Prophetandi, do not more miſchief in ſhort time, than is expreſſible by me.

2. The ſecond Inſtance was about the new Decree of the Star-Chamber, concerning Printing. Four Articles of this Decree were read, namely, the 1ſt, 2d, 18th, 24th. What theſe are, may be ſeen in the Decree: And as I think that whole Decree made Anno 1637, uſeful and neceſſary; ſo, under your Lordſhip's favour, I think thoſe four Articles as neceſſary as any.

Mr. Waly and Mr. Downes, two Stationers, Witneſſes in this Particular, ſay, That they deſired ſome Mitigation of the Decree, and that Judge Bramſton ſaid, he could not do it without me. I ſaw my Lord Chief Juſtice Bramſton here in the Court but the other day; why was not he examined, but theſe Men only, who oppoſe all regulating of the Preſs, that oppoſes their Profit? And ſure that grave Judge meant, he could not do it alone without the conſent of the Court. Or if he would have me conſulted, it was out of his judicious Care for the Peace of this Church, almoſt preſſed to death by the Liberty of Printing. The chief Grievance they expreſſed againſt the new cenſing of Books, was only for matter of Charges; but that is provided for in the Eighteenth Article. And Mr. Downes takes a fine Oath, which was, That he makes no doubt, but that all was done by my Direction; and yet adds, that he cannot ſay it. So he ſwears that, which himſelf confeſſes he cannot ſay. And manifeſt it is in the Preface, that this Decree was printed by Order of the Court, and ſo by their Command ſent to the Stationers-Hall: And the end of it was to ſuppreſs ſeditious, ſchiſmatical and mutinous Books, as appears in the firſt Article.

Frigidè dictum. W. S. A. C.

3. The third Inſtance was, That I uſed my Power to ſuppreſs Books in Holland. This was drawn out of a Letter which John le Mare, one of the prime Preachers in Amſterdam, writ to me; expreſſing therein, That ſince the Proclamation made by the States, no Man durſt meddle with printing any ſeditious Libels againſt either the State or Church of England. Where's the Fault? For this Gentleman did a very good Office to this Kingdom and Church, in procuring that Proclamation: For till this was done, every diſcontented Spirit could print what he pleaſed at Amſterdam, againſt either. And if he had any Direction from me about it (which is not proved) I neither am, nor can be ſorry for it. And the Fear which kept Men in from printing, proceeded from the Proclamation of the States, not from any Power of mine.

4. The fourth Inſtance was in the Book of Martyrs. But that was but named, to credit a baſe Buſineſs, an Almanack made by one Mr. * Genebrand; in which he had left out all the Saints, Apoſtles and all, and put in thoſe which are named in Mr. Fox, and yet not all them neither; for he had left out the ſolemn Days, which are in Fox, as Feb. 2. Feb. 25. Mar. 25. And Cranmer tranſlated to Mar. 23.

* His Name was Gellibrand. W. S. A. C.

In this Particular Mr. Genebrand, Brother to this Almanack-Maker, witneſſeth, That the Queen ſent to me about this new Almanack. If her Majeſty did ſend to me about it (as 'tis probable ſhe would diſdain the Book) is that any Crime in me? Could I prevent her Majeſty's ſending, who could not know ſo much as that ſhe would ſend? He ſays, His Brother was acquitted in the High-Commiſſion, but charged by me, that he made a Faction in the Court. If I did ſay ſo, ſurely, my Lords, I ſaw ſome practiſing by him in this new-found Way. He ſays, The Papiſts bought up a great Number of theſe Almanacks, and burnt them. It ſeems he could not hinder that, nor I neither; unleſs it ſhall not be lawful for a Papiſt to buy an Almanack: for when he hath bought him, he may burn him if he pleaſe.

But ſince the Book of Martyrs was named, I ſhall tell your Lordſhips how careful I was of it. It is well known how eaſily Abridgments, by their Brevity and their Cheapneſs, in ſhort time work out the Authors themſelves. Mr. Young the Printer laboured me earneſtly and often for an Abridgment of the Book of Martyrs; but I ſtill withſtood it (as my Secretary here preſent can teſtify) upon theſe two Grounds: The one, leſt it ſhould bring the large Book it ſelf into diſuſe; and the other, leſt if any material Thing ſhould be left out, that ſhould have been charged as done of purpoſe by me, as now I ſee it is in other Books. And I humbly pray your Lordſhips caſt your Eyes upon the Frontiſpiece of the Book of Martyrs, printed Anno 1642. ſince this Parliament began, and when I was ſafe enough from having any hand in the Buſineſs, and there you ſhall ſee as dangerous Pictures as have been charged upon me, or any my Chappel-Windows.

Upon occaſion of Mr. Genebrand's Calendar, Mr. Pryn took occaſion to tell the Lords, That I had made Notes upon the Calendar in the Miſſal. I deſired they might be read: it was thought too tedious. They were nothing but ſome Additions of my own reading to the Occurrences on ſome Days. And becauſe the Calendar in the Miſſal was open and large, I thought fit to write them there.

5. The fifth Inſtance is in Dr. Pocklinton's Cenſure of * ..... and of Flaccius Illyricus; and that this Book was licenſed by my Chaplain Dr. Bray; and he was cenſured in this Honourable Houſe for that and like Slips of his. Then it was inferred at the Bar, That it muſt be taken as my Act, if it were done by my Chaplain: But Inferences are no ſworn Proof. And, I conceive, no Man can by Law be puniſhed criminally for his Servant's Fact, unleſs there be Proof that he had a hand in it. Then it was urged, but without any Proof too, that Dr. Pocklinton was preferred by me. To which I ſhall anſwer when Proof is made; and if I had, 'tis far enough from Treaſon.

* I believe the Name here wanting is Mr. Fox the Martyrologiſt, W. S. A. C.

6. The next Inſtance was about the calling in of Thomas Beacon's Diſputation of the Maſs. The Witneſs Mr. Pryn. He ſays, The Book was licenſed, and that a Papiſt thereupon ſaid, Doth my Lord of Canterbury licenſe ſuch Books? That I was informed of theſe Words, and the Book called in the next Day. Firſt, Mr. Pryn is ſingle in this part of the Teſtimony for the Words. Secondly, If any Papiſt did ſay ſo, it was not in my power to ſtop his Mouth; and they which licenſe Books, muſt endure many and various Cenſures, as the Readers of them ſtand affected. Thirdly, If any Papiſt did ſo ſpeak, I have reaſon to think it was to do me a miſchief, as much as in him lay. Fourthly, This is a very bold Oath; for he ſwears, that I was informed of theſe Words. He was not preſent to hear it, and then he can have it but by Hearſay; and no Religion teaches him to ſwear that for Truth, which he doth but hear. Laſtly, The Book was called in, becauſe it was ſlipt out contrary to the late Decree for Printing. Yea, but Mr. Pryn ſwears, and ſo doth Michael Sparks the other Witneſs, That the Book was ſent to the Printer before the Decree. But firſt, Sparks's Oath is uncertain; for he ſays, Mr. Pryn ſent him the Book before the Decree; and then by and by after ſays, it was about that time. Now the Book is ſomewhat large, ſo that it might be ſent him before the Decree, and yet not be printed till after, and that a good ſpace too. And, Secondly, Mr. Pryn himſelf confeſſes, the Book was ſent when the Decree was in agitation.

7. The ſeventh Inſtance was about Arminianiſm, as maintained by me againſt the Declarations of both Houſes of Parliament, and of King James, concerning Vorſtius and Bertius. Firſt, I have nothing thing to do to defend Arminianiſm, no Man having yet charged me with the abetting any Point of it. Secondly, King James's Declaration is very learned: But under favour, he puts a great deal of difference between Vorſtius and Bertius; and his Majeſty's Opinion is clear with the Article of the Church of England, and ſo expreſſed by himſelf; and to which I ever conſented. And the Paſſage in the Conference at Hampton-Court was then read to the Lords: and yet for the Peace of Chriſtendom, and the ſtrengthning of the Reformed Religion, I do heartily wiſh theſe Differences were not purſued with ſuch Heat and Animoſity, in regard that all the Lutheran Proteſtants are of the ſame Opinions, or with very little difference from thoſe which are now called Arminianiſm.

Conſer. at Ham. Court, p. 29, 30.

And here comes in Michael Sparks, who ſays, He was called into the High-Commiſſion about a Book of Biſhop Carleton's. I cannot punctually remember all Particulars ſo long ſince; but he confeſſes the Buſineſs was in the High-Commiſſion, and ſo not ſingly chargeable againſt me. Beſides, he is ſingle in this Buſineſs. He ſays, He was Eleven Years in the High-Commiſſion, and never ſentenced. 'This is more than I know: But if it 'be ſo, he had better luck than ſome honeſter 'Men; for a bitterer Enemy, to his power, the 'Church-Government never had.' He was Mr. Pryn's Printer. He ſays, I was a Dean then, and he thinks of Hereford. I was never Dean of Hereford: But howſoever, this is a dangerous Oath; let him think of it. He ſwears that I was a Dean then, and a High-Commiſſioner, or elſe what had I to do in the Buſineſs? Now it is well known I was never a High-Commiſſioner, till I had been a Biſhop ſome Years. For the Book it ſelf, Sparks ſays nothing what was the Argument of it; but (ſo far as I remember) it was expreſly againſt the King's Declaration. 'And ſo I anſwered Mr. 'Brown, when he ſummed up the Evidence againſt 'me in the Houſe of Commons. And though in 'his Reply he ſeemed to deny this, yet I remem-'ber no Proof he brought for it.'

8. The laſt Inſtance was pregnant, and brought forth many Particulars. 1. As firſt, Dr. Featly's Parallels againſt Biſhop Mountague: but this was ſtill-born; at leaſt it ſays nothing of me. 2. Secondly, Mr. Pryn's Perpetuity, and againſt Dr. Coſens, both burnt. But he doth not ſay abſolutely burnt, but as he is informed; and he may be informed amiſs. And howſoever he ſays, it was done by the High-Commiſſion, not by me. 3. Thirdly, Some Sheets of Dr. Succliff's Book prohibited the Preſs at Oxford. I hope Oxford is able to give an Account for it ſelf. And whereas it was here ſaid at the Bar, They hoped I would ſhew ſome repreſſing of the contrary part: I would ſatisfy their Hopes abundantly, could I bring Witneſſes from Oxford, how even and ſteddy a Hand I carried to both Parts. 4. Fourthly, Mr. Burton queſtioned about his Book called, The Seven Vials: But himſelf confeſſes, That upon Sir Henry Martin's Information, that, as that Cauſe was laid, the High-Commiſſion had no Power in it, he was diſmiſſed. 5. Fifthly, That about his Book, intituled, Babel no Bethel, he was queſtioned at a Court out of Term. This was very uſual, whenſoever the Court was full of buſineſs, to hold one Court-day out of Term. This is warranted by the Commiſſion; and Warning of it was always publickly given the Court-day before, that all, whom it concerned, might take notice of it, and provide themſelves. 6. Sixthly, He ſays he was there railed at by Biſhop Harſnet. 'Tis more than I know that Biſhop Harſnet railed at him; but if he did, I hope I am not brought hither to anſwer all Mens Faults. 7. Seventhly, He ſays, He claimed the Petition of Right, yet was committed. This is more than I know or believe; yet if it were ſo, it was done by the High-Commiſſion Court, not by me. 8. He ſays next, That he could never be quiet. But I am ſure, my Lords, the Church for divers Years could never be in quiet for him and his Aſſociates. 9. Laſtly, They ſay, Some Paſſages againſt Arminianiſm, were left out of two Letters; one of Biſhop Davenant's, and the other of Biſhop Hall's, ſent to be printed. Firſt, Here is no Proof at all offer'd, that I differ'd in any thing from the Doctrine expreſſed in thoſe Letters. And, Secondly, for the leaving out of thoſe Paſſages, it was (it ſeems) done to avoid kindling of new Flames in the Church of England. And it appeared on the other ſide of the Paper, which was produced againſt me, and ſo read to the Lords, that theſe Paſſages were left out by the expreſs Order from thoſe Biſhops themſelves, under Biſhop Hall's own Hand, and with Thanks to Dr. Turner, then my Chaplain, for his Letter to them. And here this Day's Buſineſs ended; and I received Command to attend again the Twentieth of the ſame Month.

The Fifteenth Day of my Hearing.

THurſday, June 20. 1644. This Day I came again to the Houſe. A Day or two before, as now alſo, the Landing-Place at Weſtminſter was not ſo full of People; and they which were there, much more civil towards me than formerly. My Friends were willing to perſuade me, that my Anſwer had much abated the edge of the People, ſaving from the violent and factious Leaders of the Multitude, whom it ſeems nothing would ſatisfy but my Life, (for ſo I was after told in plain terms by a Man deeply intereſted in them;) when I preſently ſaw Quaterman coming towards me; who, ſo ſoon as he came, fell to his wonted railing, and asked aloud, What the Lords meant, to be troubled ſo long and ſo often, with ſuch a baſe Fellow as I was? they ſhould do well to hang me out of the way. I heard the Words with Grief enough, and ſo left them and him in the hands of God. My Servants were earneſt to have me complain to the Lords. I remembred my late Complaint about the Pamphlets had no redreſs, and ſo forbare it. They notwithſtanding, out of their Zeal, complained to Mr. Lieutenant of the Tower, who preſently went forth, and ſaid he would ſchool him; but I hearkned no more after it.

When I came to the Bar, Mr. Nicolas began with great violence, and told the Lords, the Buſineſs grew higher and higher againſt me. What the Buſineſs did, will after appear; but I am ſure he grew higher and higher: and from this time forward, beſides the Violence of Expreſſion, gave me ſuch Language, as no Chriſtian would give a Jew. But God, I humbly thank him, bleſſed me with Patience; and ſo I made my Ears obedient. That which made him ſay the Buſineſs grew higher and higher, was this: Upon my often calling to have the Oaths at the Coronation of King James and King Charles compared, ſome of them repaired again to my Study at Lambeth, to ſearch for all ſuch Copies of Coronation-Books as could there be found. In this diligent and curious Search ('for

'Mr. Pryn's Malice made it,) they found ſome Papers concerning Parliaments, no other (I praiſe God for it) than ſuch as with indifferent Conſtruction might (I hope) well paſs; eſpecially conſidering what Occaſion led me, and what Command was upon me. And, as I have been told by able and experienced Men, they would have been nothing, had they been found in any, but this troubleſome and diſtracted time about the Rights of Parliaments (as 'tis ſaid.) Howſoever, I was moſt unfortunate they ſhould be now found; and I had not left them a Being, but that I verily thought I had deſtroyed them long ſince: But they were unhappily found among the Heaps of my Papers. And ſo,

I. An Anſwer to the Remonſtrance made June 17. 1628. (which is ſixteen Years ſince) was made the firſt Charge againſt me.

II. And the ſecond Charge was, a Paper concerning a Declaration, Jan. 28. 1628. To both which I then anſwered; but becauſe theſe are urged more than once, to help fill the People with new Clamour, and becauſe they are more cloſely preſſed againſt me at the laſt Day of my Hearing, and becauſe Mr. Brown, in his ſummary Charge, laid and charged all theſe Papers together; to avoid tedious Repetition, I will alſo make my whole and entire Anſwer together, when that time comes.

III. The third Charge of this Day was, A Letter of a Jeſuit to his Superiour, found in my Study, dated March 1628. Let the Letter be dated when it will, I hope the Archbiſhop may get and keep the Letters of any Jeſuits or others. How ſhall I be able to know or prevent their Plots upon the Religion by Law eſtabliſhed, if this may not be done? Yet this I deſire all Men to take notice of, that this Letter was not directed to me. I was then Biſhop of London: The Letter was found in a Search. But when by all poſſible Care taken by the High-Commiſſion, the Author could not be found, I had (as I humbly conceive) great reaſon to keep it. And I then humbly deſired the whole Letter might be read. There was in it, That Arminianiſm (as 'twas urged) was their Drug, and their Plot againſt us, &c. The Jeſuit ſeeing a Fire kindling about theſe Opinions, might write what he pleaſed to help on his Cauſe: Yet this Drug, which he ſays is theirs, is the received Opinion of all the Lutherans, and they too Learned Proteſtants to uſe their Drugs. And if it be their Drug, why do the Dominicans ſo condemn it? Nay, why doth the Maſter of the Sentences, and the School after him, for the moſt, determine rigidly againſt it? And whereas 'tis ſaid, That theſe Men had Inſtruments at the Duke's Chamber-Door; that belongs not to me, I was not Porter there. As for that Power which I had (called by Mr. Nicolas the Command of his Ear) I uſed it as much as I could to ſhut ſuch Inſtruments thence. Beſide, 'tis barely ſaid, no Proof at all offer'd, that ſuch Inſtruments were about the Duke's Chamber-Door. Other Papers were found in my Study, above ſixty at leaſt, expreſſing my continued Labours for ſome Years together, to reconcile the divided Proteſtants in Germany, that ſo they might go with united Forces againſt the Romaniſts. 'Why are 'not theſe produced too? Would not Chriſtianity 'and Juſtice have my Innocence cleared, as well 'as my Faults accuſed?'

IV. The fourth Charge was Biſhop Mountague's Preferment. The Parliament (they ſay) called him in queſtion, and the King called in his Book; yet, in affront to the Parliament, that he was preferred by me. No, it was then publickly known in Court (whether now remembred or no, I cannot tell) that he was preferred by my Lord Duke; but being a Church-Buſineſs, the King commanded me to ſignify his Pleaſure to the Signet-Office: And the Docket (which is all the Proof here made) mentions him only by whom the King's Pleaſure is ſignified, not him that procures the Preferment: So the Docket in this Caſe no Proof at all.

V. The fifth Charge was a Paper, intitled, Conſiderations for the Church. Three Exceptions againſt them. The Obſervation of the King's Declaration, Art. 3. The Lecturers, Art. 5. And the High-Commiſſion and Prohibitions, Art. 10, 11. The Paper I deſired might be all read: nothing in them againſt either Law or Religion. And for Lecturers a better Care taken, and with more Eaſe to the People, and more Peace to the Church, by a Combination of conformable neighbouring Miniſters, in their turns, and not by ſome one humorous Man, who too often miſ-leads the People. Secondly, my Copy of Conſiderations came from Archbiſhop Harſnet, in which was ſome four Expreſſion concerning Emanuel and Sidney Colleges in Cambridge, which the King in his Wiſdom thought fit to leave out. The King's Inſtructions upon theſe Conſiderations, are under Mr. Baker's Hand, who was Secretary to my Predeceſſor; and they were ſent to me to make Exceptions to them, if I knew any, in regard of the Miniſters of London, whereof I was then Biſhop. And by this, that they were thus ſent unto me by my Predeceſſor, 'tis manifeſt, that this Account from the ſeveral Dioceſes to the Archbiſhop, and from him to his Majeſty once a Year, was begun before my time. Howſoever, if it had not, I ſhould have been glad of the Honour of it, had it begun in mine. For, I humbly conceive, there cannot be a better or a ſafer way to preſerve Truth and Peace in the Church, than that once a Year every Biſhop ſhould give an Account of all greater Occurrences in the Church to his Metropolitan, and he to the King: Without which, the King, who is the Supreme, is like to be a great Stranger to all Church-Proceedings.

I ſuppoſe theſe Conſiderations are thoſe publiſhed in Pryn's Compl. Hiſt. p. 287. W. S. A. C.

VI. The ſixth Charge was about Dr. Sibthorp's Sermon, That my Predeceſſor oppoſed the printing of it, and that I oppoſed him, to affront the Parliament. Nothing ſo, my Lords: Nothing done by me to oppoſe, or affront the one or the other. This Sermon came forth when the Loan was not yet ſettled in Parliament. The Lords, and the Judges, and the Biſhops, were ſome for, ſome againſt it. And if my Judgment were erroneous in that Point, it was miſ-led by Lords of great Honour and Experience, and by Judges of great Knowledge in the Law. But I did nothing to affront any. 'Tis ſaid, That I inſerted into the Sermon, That the People may not refuſe any Tax that is not unjuſtly laid. I conceive nothing is juſtly laid in that kind but according to Law, God's and Man's: And I dare not ſay, the People may refuſe any thing ſo laid. For Jus Regis, the Right of a King, (which is urged againſt me too) I never went farther than the Scriptures lead me; nor did I ever think, that Jus Regis, mentioned 1 Sam. 8. is meant of the ordinary and juſt Right of Kings, but of that Power which ſuch as Saul would be, would aſſume unto themſelves, and make it Right by Power, 1 Sam. 8. 12.

Then

Then they ſay I expunged ſome Things out of it: As, Firſt, The Sabbath, and put inſtead of it the Lord's-Day. What's my Offence? Sabbath is the Jews Word, and the Lord's-Day the Chriſtians. Secondly, About evil Counſellors to be uſed as Haman. The Paſſage (as there expreſſed) was very ſcandalous, and without juſt Cauſe, upon the Lords of the Council. And they might juſtly have thought I had wanted Diſcretion, ſhould I have left it in. Thirdly, That I expunged this, That Popery is againſt the firſt and the ſecond Commandment. If I did it, it was becauſe it is much doubted by Learned Men, whether any thing in Popery is againſt the firſt Commandment, or denies the Unity of the Godhead. And Mr. Perkins (who charges very home againſt Popery) lays not the Breach of the firſt Commandment upon them. 'And when I gave 'Mr. Brown this Anſwer; in his laſt Reply he 'asked why I left out both? Why, I did it becauſe 'its being againſt the ſecond is common and ob-'vious, and I did not think it worthy the ſtanding 'in ſuch a Sermon, when it could not be made 'good againſt the firſt.'

But they demanded, Why I ſhould make any Animadverſions at all upon the Sermon? It was thus: The Sermon being preſented to his Majeſty, and the Argument not common, he committed the Care of printing it to Biſhop Mountain, the Biſhop of London, and four other; of which I was one. And this was the Reaſon of the Animadverſions now called mine; as alſo of the Anſwer to my Predeceſſor's Exceptions (now charged alſo) and called mine. But it was the Joint-Anſwer of the Committee. And ſo is that other Particular alſo, in which the whole Buſineſs is left to the Learned in the Laws: For tho the Animadverſions be in my Hand, yet they were done at and by the Committee, only I being puny Biſhop, was put to write them in my Hand.

VII. The ſeventh Charge was Dr. Manwaring's Buſineſs and Preferment. It was handled before, only reſumed here to make a noiſe, and ſo paſſed it over.

VIII. The eighth Charge was concerning ſome Alterations in the Prayers made for the Fifth of November, and in the Book for the Faſt, which was publiſhed Ann. 1636. and the Prayers on the Coronation-Day.

1. Firſt, For the Faſt-Book: The Prayer mentioned was altered, as is expreſſed; but it was by him that had the ordering of that Book to the Preſs, not by me. Yet I cannot but approve the Reaſon given for it, and that without any the leaſt Approbation of Merit: For the Abuſe of Faſting, by thinking it meritorious, is the Thing left out; whereas in this Age and Kingdom, when and where ſet Faſtings of the Church are cried down, there can be little fear of that erroneous Opinion of placing any Merit in Faſting.

2. Secondly, For the Prayers publiſhed for the Fifth of November and Coronation-Day; the Alterations were made either by the King himſelf, or ſome about him when I was not in Court: And the Book ſent me, with a Command for the printing, as there altered. I made ſtay till I might wait upon his Majeſty. I found him reſolved upon the Alterations; nor in my Judgment could I juſtly except againſt them. His Majeſty then gave Warrant to the Books themſelves, with the Alterations in them; and ſo by his Warrant I commanded the printing. And I then ſhewed both the Books to the Lords, who viewed them, and acknowledged his Majeſty's Hand, with which, not his Name only, but the whole Warrant was written.

And here I humbly deſired three Things might be obſerved, and I ſtill deſire it. Firſt, With what Conſcience this Paſſage out of my Speech in the 'Star-Chamber was ur- [1] P. 32.
ged againſt me, (for ſo it was, and fiercely by Mr. Nicolas) to prove that I had alter'd the Oath at the King's Coronation, becauſe the Prayers appointed for the Anniverſary of the Coronation were altered. 'Which is abſolute Non-'ſenſe.' Secondly, He charged me that the Word Antichriſtian was left out. But that is viſibly untrue; for it is left in. Thirdly, That though it be in, yet that the Alteration takes it off from the Papiſt, as alſo their Rebellion. Neither: For the Change is this; That Antichriſtian Sect, alter'd into The Antichriſtian Sect of them which, &c. and, whoſe Religion is Rebellion, alter'd into who turn Religion into Rebellion. By which it is manifeſt that the Alteration takes off neither Imputation from the Papiſt, but moderates both. And for ought I yet know, 'tis neceſſary it ſhould: For if their Religion be Rebellion, ſee what it will produce. Is not this the Syllogiſm? The Religion of the Papiſt is Rebellion; but Chriſtianity is the Religion of the Papiſt: Therefore Chriſtianity is Rebellion. I may not inlarge; but you may ſee more, if you pleaſe, in my Speech in the 'Star-
Chamber. 'And when Mr. Brown in [2] P. 36.
'the Sum of his Charge preſſed theſe
'Alterations hard againſt me, he did not ſo much
'as mention that I had the King's both Warrant
'and Command to all that I did in that Particular.
'And beſides, urged this as a great Innovation;
'becauſe the Prayers mentioned had continued un-
'altered for the ſpace of above thirty Years; not 'remembring therewhile, that the Liturgy of the 'Church, eſtabliſhed by Act of Parliament, muſt
'be taken away, or altered, tho' it hath continued
'above fourſcore. Nay, and Epiſcopacy muſt be 'quite aboliſhed, though it have continued in the 'Church of Chriſt above ſixteen hundred.'

IX. The ninth Charge was from Sir Edward Hungerford, who came to Lambeth to have a little Book licenſed at the Preſs. The Author was Sir Anthony Hungerford, whether Sir Edward's Grandfather or his Uncle, I remember not the Relation. He ſays he came to my Chaplain Dr. Bray to licenſe it; and that Dr. Bray told him there were ſome harſh Phraſes in it, which were better left out, becauſe we were upon a way of winning the Papiſts. Firſt, I hope I ſhall not be made anſwerable for my Chaplain's Words too. And Secondly, I hope there is no harm in winning the Papiſts to the Church of England; eſpecially, if ſo eaſy a Cure as avoiding harſh Language would do it. He ſays my Chaplain expreſſed a diſlike of Guicciardin's Cenſure of Pope Alexander the Sixth. Sure, if the Cenſure be falſe, he had reaſon to except againſt it: If true, yet to publiſh ſuch an unſavoury Buſineſs to the common People ------. He ſays he came and complained to me; and that I told him I was not at leiſure, but left it to my Chaplain. So the Charge upon me was, That my Chaplain was in an Error concerning this Book, and I would not redreſs it. To this I anſwered, Firſt, That my Chaplain was dead; and I not knowing the Reaſons which moved him to refuſe licenſing this Book, can neither confeſs him to be in an Error, nor yet juſtify him. Secondly, For my own refuſing to meddle with it, Sir Edward took me in a time of Buſineſs, when I could not attend it.

Thirdly, If I had abſolutely refuſed it, and left it to my Chaplain, I had done no more than all my Predeceſſors did before me. And Dr. Featly then witneſſed to the Lords, that Archbiſhop Abbot, my immediate Predeceſſor, and to whom the Doctor was Houſhold Chaplain, would never meddle with licenſing Books, but ever referred them to his Chaplains. And Dr. Mocket, another of his Chaplains, (well known to Dr. Featly) ſuffered for a Book ſharply; yet not one Word ſaid to my Predeceſſor about it. Fourthly, As the Liberty of the Preſs is in England, and of the Books which are tendred to the Preſs, the Archbiſhop had better grind than take that Work to his own hands, eſpecially conſidering his many and neceſſary Avocations. Laſtly, No Man ever complained to me in this kind, but this Gentleman only. So it is one only ſingle Offence, if it be any. 'But how this, or the reſt, 'ſhould be Treaſon againſt Sir Edward Hungerford, 'I cannot yet ſee. And ſo I anſwered Mr. Brown, 'who in his ſummary Charge forgot not this. But 'Mr. Nicolas laid load upon me in his Reply, in ſuch 'Language as I am willing to forget.'

X. The tenth Charge was out of a Paper of Conſiderations to Dr. Potter, about ſome few Paſſages in his Anſwer to a Book intitled Charity miſtaken. The Buſineſs this: Dr. Potter writ to me for my Advice. I uſed not to be peremptory; but put ſome few Things back to his farther Conſideration: Of which three were now charged upon me. The firſt was, He uſed this Phraſe, Believe in the Pope. I deſired him to conſider of (In.) And in this I yet know not wherein I offend. The ſecond was this Phraſe, The Idol of Rome. I adviſed him to conſider this Phraſe too, that Men might not be to ſeek what that Idol was. 'And here Mr. Nicolas 'cried out with Vehemency, That every Boy in 'the Street could tell the Pope was the Idol. I 'had not Dr. Potter's Book now at hand, and ſo 'could not be certain in what Senſe the Doctor 'uſed it; but elſe, as many at leaſt think the Maſs 'the Idol of Rome, as the Pope; unleſs Mr. Nicolas's 'Boys in the Streets think otherwiſe, and then 'I cannot blame him for following ſuch mature 'Judgments.' The third was, That I bid him conſider whether the Paſſage, p. 27. (as I remember) did not give as much Power to the Parliament in matter of Doctrine, as the Church. 'But my 'Anſwer to this I ſhall put off to the Charge 'againſt me concerning Parliaments, becauſe there 'Mr. Brown began with this. The two former he 'charged alſo, and I anſwered them as before. 'But he omitted that I obtained of the Lords the 'reading of Dr. Potter's Letter to me; by which 'he drew from me thoſe Things which I deter-'mined not, but only put to his ſecond Thoughts 'and Conſideration. In which way (I humbly 'conceive) I cannot be in Crime, though I were 'in Error. Here ended the Buſineſs of this Day, 'and I was ordered to attend again June 27.

The Sixteenth Day of my Hearing.

I. THurſday, June 27. 1644. I appeared this Day again: And the firſt Charge laid againſt me, was my Chaplain Dr. Bray's Expungings out of Dr. Featly's Sermons. The ſame Charge ad verbum which was before; and I give it the ſame Anſwer. Theſe Repetitions of the ſame Things being only to increaſe Clamour, and to fill more Mens Ears with it.

II. The ſecond Charge was certain Expunctions of ſome Things againſt the Papiſts in Dr. Clark's Sermons. The Witneſs which ſwore to the Paſſages left out was one Mr. White, a Miniſter, and it ſeems ſome near Acquaintance of Dr. Clark's. But, Firſt, this Witneſs is ſingle. Secondly, He brought only a Paper, in which he had written down what was expunged; but Dr. Clark's Sermons he brought not with it: So 'tis not impoſſible he might be miſtaken. Howſoever, I not having the Book, could not poſſibly make an abſolute and a perfect Anſwer. Thirdly, This Witneſs confeſſes that Dr. Weeks, then Chaplain to my Lord of London, had the view of Dr. Clark's Sermons, and took Exceptions againſt ſome Paſſages, as well as my Chaplain Dr. Haywood did. So it ſeems there was cauſe for it. Fourthly, I anſwer, That for this, and for all other of like nature, my Chaplain muſt anſwer for his own Act, and not I. He is living, and an able Man: I humbly deſire he may be called to his Account. For 'tis not poſſible for me to tell your Lordſhips upon what Grounds he did expunge theſe many and different Paſſages, which are inſtanced againſt me. Laſtly, In all the Paſſages of Dr. Clark's Sermons, it is not any where diſtinguiſhed which were expunged by my Chaplain, and which by Dr. Weeks. So that the Charge in that behalf is left very uncertain.

For the Paſſages themſelves, as they are many, ſo they are ſuch as may eaſily be miſtaken, the moſt of them. And whether Dr. Clark handled them in ſuch manner as was not juſtifiable, either againſt Arminius, or the Papiſts, cannot poſſibly be known, till each Place in the Book be examined for the Thing, and my Chaplain Dr. Haywood for the Meaning. 'This made a great noiſe in 'Mr. Brown's ſummary Charge againſt me; he 'alledging that two and twenty Paſſages about 'Points of Popery were daſhed out of Dr. Clark's 'Sermons. To which I anſwered, That I con-'ceived my Chaplain would be able to make it 'good, there were two hundred left in for two 'and twenty left out; and that they which were left 'out, were not ſome way or other juſtifiable againſt 'the Papiſts, as ſet down and expreſſed by him. 'And if ſo, they are better out than in: For we 'gain nothing by urging that againſt the Papiſts, 'which, when it comes to the touch, cannot be 'made good againſt them.'

One Paſſage is here added out of Dr. Featly's Sermons, Pag. 225. where he inveighs againſt too much imbelliſhing and beautifying the Church, and not the Souls of Men, &c. Firſt, If there be not a care to beautify the Soul, let Men profeſs what Religion they will, 'tis a juſt Exception; and I believe no fault found with that. But, Secondly, for the over-much beautifying of the Church, 'tis a Point that might be well left out. Little Neceſſity, God knows, to preach or print againſt too much adorning of Churches among us, where yet ſo many Churches lie very naſtily in many Places of the Kingdom, and no one too much adorned to be found. Nay, the very Conſecration of Churches cried down, (as is before expreſſed.) And this Opinion, That no Place is holy but during the Service in it, made Mr. Culmer, though a Miniſter, to piſs in the Cathedral Church of Canterbury; and divers others to do ſo, and more, againſt the Pillars of St. Paul's, nearer hand, as may daily be both ſeen and ſmelt, to the ſhame of that which is called Religion. 'Here Mr. Ni-'colas would fain have ſhovell'd it to the Out-ſide 'of the Church, (which had been bad enough;) 'but

'but it was the inſide I ſpake of, and the thing is 'known.'

Then an Inſtance was made in a Book of Dr. Jones: The Witneſs that any thing was expunged out of this, was only Mr. Chetwin. And he confeſſes, that this Book was licenſed by Dr. Baker, and he my Lord of London's Chaplain, not mine. Here my Friends at the Bar infer, that Dr. Baker was preferred by me. First, That's not ſo, he was preferred by his own Lord. Secondly, If he had been preferred by me, it could have made no Charge, unleſs proof had been made that I preferred him for abuſing Dr. Jones's Book. And for the Docket, which is the only Proof offered that I preferred him, I have already ſhewed, that that is no Proof. Yea, but they ſay, Dr. Baker was employed by me as one of my Viſitors. And what then? Muſt I be anſwerable for every Fault that is committed by every Man that I employ in my Viſitation, though it be a Fault committed at another time and place? though I humbly deſire Dr. Baker may anſwer for himſelf, before I acknowledge any Fault committed by him. 'And 'though I conceive this Anſwer abundantly ſa-'tisfactory for any thing that may concern me, 'yet Mr. Brown omitted not this Inſtance againſt 'me.'

III. The Third Charge was perſonally againſt myſelf, and taken out of my 'Speech in the Star-Chamber. The Words theſe: The Altar is the greateſt place of God's Reſidence upon Earth, greater than the Pulpit; for there 'tis Hoc eſt Corpus meum, This is my Body; but in the other it is at moſt but Hoc eſt Verbum meum, This is my Word: And a greater Reverence is due to the Body, than the Word of the Lord. Out of this place, Mr. Nicolas would needs inforce, that I maintained Tranſubſtantiation; becauſe I ſay, there 'tis Hoc eſt Corpus meum. First, I perceive by him, he confounds (as too many elſe do) Tranſubſtantiation with the Real Preſence, whereas theſe have a wide difference. And Calvin grants a Real and True Preſence, yea, and he grants realiter too; and yet no Man a greater Enemy to Tranſubſtantiation than he: as I have proved at large in my Book againſt Fiſher, and had leave to read the Paſſage therein to the Lords. And Mr. Perkins avows as much. And Secondly, the word there makes nothing againſt this. For after the Words of Conſecration are paſt, be the Miniſter never ſo unworthy, yet 'tis infallibly Hoc eſt Corpus meum to every worthy Receiver. So is it not Hoc eſt Verbum meum, from the Pulpit to the beſt of Hearers, nor by the beſt of Preachers ſince the Apoſtles time. 'And as Preaching goes now, ſcarce is any 'thing heard from many in two long Hours, that 'ſavours of the Word of God.' And St. Paul tells us, 1 Cor. 11. 29. of a great Sin committed in his time, of not diſcerning the Lord's Body, when unworthy Communicants received it. Where was this? Why it was there, at the Holy Table or Altar where they received, yet did not diſcern. I hope, for all this, St. Paul did not maintain Tranſubſtantiation. 'Mr. Brown in his ſummary 'Charge preſſed this alſo upon me. I anſwer'd as 'before, and added, That in all Ages of the 'Church, the Touch-ſtone of Religion was not 'to hear the Word preached, but to communicate. 'And at this day, many will come and hear Ser-'mons, who yet will not receive the Communion 'together. And as I call the Holy Table the 'greateſt Place of God's Reſidence 'upon Earth, ſo doth a late Learned 'Divine of this Church call the Ce-'lebration of the Euchariſt, the Crown 'of Publick Service, and the moſt ſolemn and chief 'Work of Chriſtian Aſſemblies: and he a Man 'known to be far from affecting Popery in the 'leaſt. And all Divines agree in this, which our 'Saviour himſelf teaches, St. Mat. '26. 26. That there is the ſame Effect 'of the Paſſion of Chriſt, and of this 'Bleſſed Sacrament worthily received.'

Another Paſſage taken out of my 'Speech, was, That due Reverence be given to God, and to his Altar. Hence Mr. Nicolas infers again, This Reverence is one joint Act, therefore 'tis Divine to the Altar, as well as to God, and ſo Idolatry. First, The very next Words in my Speech are, that this Reverence to the Altar comes far ſhort of Divine Worſhip. What can prevent an Objection, if ſuch plain Words cannot? Secondly, Having thus plainly expreſſed it, he may infer too if he will, that I do not then worſhip God. For this Reverence is one joint Act; but 'tis confeſſed, that 'tis not Divine Worſhip to the Altar, and therefore not to God. 'But Thirdly, This Gentleman, by 'his favour, underſtands not the Myſteries which 'lie hid in many parts of Divinity. In this for 'one.' For when this Reverence is performed, 'tis to God as to the Creator, and ſo Divine: but 'tis only toward, not to the Altar, and ſo far ſhort. And though in outward Performance it be one joint Act, yet that which is not ſeparated, is, and muſt be diſtinguiſhed one from the other. 'To make a good Work ac-'ceptable to God, there muſt be 'both Faith and Charity; they can-'not be ſeparated one from the o-'ther: what, ſhall they not there-'fore be diſtinguiſhed? He that 'ſpeaks (ſaith St. Auguſtine) by one 'joint Act ſends out his Voice and 'his Word; ſeparated they cannot 'be, ſhall not they be diſtinguiſhed 'therefore? But I have lived long 'enough, and taken pains to ſmall purpoſe, if 'Mr. Nicolas, or any Lay-Man elſe, at his by 'and leiſure Hours from a buſy Profeſſion, ſhall 'be able to teach me in that which I have la-'boured all my Life. And God bleſs the poor 'Biſhops and Clergy of England, if falling into a 'Storm (as I now am) they muſt have ſuch Judges 'as Mr. Nicolas.'

IV. The Fourth Charge is the licenſing of Sales, and other Books which had Popery in them, by my Chaplain Dr. Haywood.

1. To this Mr. Pryn (who is the ſingle Witneſs) ſays, That he tender'd a Bill to the then Lord Keeper againſt my Chaplain for licenſing this Book, and that his Lordſhip refuſed it. If the Lord Keeper Coventry refuſed his Bill, I believe, were he living, he would aſſign juſt Cauſe why he did it. But whatever Cauſe he had, it concerns not me, that he rejected the Bill. Mr. Pryn ſays farther, That this Book of Sales was printed heretofore, but purged firſt by Dr. James; but licenſed now by Dr. Haywood, not according to that Purgation, but with all the Points of Popery in. For this he produces Mr. Oakes, whoſe Son printed it. And ſays farther, That his Corrector at the Preſs found fault with ſome Paſſages, and thereupon he was ſent to Dr. Haywood, who returned anſwer (as they they ſay) That if he licenſed it, he would juſtify it: and that his Son told him this. Firſt, My Lords, this Under-Teſtimony of Mr. Oakes, produced by Mr. Pryn, is nothing but a Hearſay from his Son, who is now dead, and cannot be examined; and while he was living, ran away, and would not be examined. Secondly, This was a moſt notable piece of Villany practiſed againſt my Chaplain, and thorow his ſides againſt me. It was thus, my Lords: Whether the Bill were rejected or no, I cannot tell; but the Complaint of printing this Book came publickly into the Star-Chamber. And then was the firſt time that ever I heard of it. I then humbly deſired their Lordſhips that Dr. Haywood might anſwer whatever he had done amiſs, either there or where they pleaſed. The Court preſently commanded Mr. Attorney Bankes to call all Parties before him, examine them thorowly, and then give his account what he found; that the Court might proceed farther, according to Juſtice. Dr. Haywood appeared, and ſhewed Mr. Attorney how he had corrected Sales in all Popiſh Points before he licenſed it. But young Oakes, and he which brought Sales to be licenſed, (who was then thought to be ſome Jeſuited Recuſant, and, as I remember, lodged for that time of printing in Oakes's Houſe) ran both away, or hid their heads, and would not be found. And this was a mere Plot of this Recuſant, if not Prieſt, to have Sales printed, with all his Points of Popery in him, to work miſchief to my Chaplain and myſelf: And young Oakes was in all likelihood well paid for his pains. This Account Mr. Attorney brought into that Court, and this Relation Dr. Haywood (who I obtained might be after ſent for) atteſted at this Bar.

One Circumſtance my old decayed Memory miſtook. For I thought, and ſo at firſt told the Lords, that for this Clamour raiſed upon him in this way, I did ſoon after diſmiſs him my Houſe. But after, I found that he was gone out of my Houſe before. Howſoever I left him, without any Mediation, to the Juſtice of the Court. And here I may not forget that which I then obſerved to the Lords, That whereas 'tis urged, that many Points of Popery have paſſed the Preſs; 'tis no wonder, if ſuch Art be uſed as was here to get out Sales. And this farther is obſervable, that all theſe Quotations of Popiſh Opinions, mentioned here to fill up the noiſe, are out of four or five Books at the moſt, of which more are out of this Sales than all the reſt. 'And called in he was, as 'ſoon as known. Which Mr. Brown in the Sum of 'his Charge acknowledges.'

2. After Sales, the next Inſtance was in a Book intitled, Chriſt's Epiſtle to the devout Reader. Four particular Points were urged out of this: but neither I nor my Chaplains had ought to do with it. For it was licenſed at London-Houſe by Dr. Weeks. Nor was there ever any Complaint brought to me to have it called in: nor was any ſuch Proof ſo much as offer'd.

3. The third Inſtance was of a Book called The Female Glory, where Mr. Pryn (who is ſingle again) ſaid, that Dr. Heylin anſwered Mr. Burton, and juſtified all the Paſſages in this Book: And added, That this was by my direction. But upon my Motion at the Bar concerning the Boldneſs of this Oath, Mr. Pryn recalled himſelf, and ſaid that I appointed him to anſwer Mr. Burton. But it is one thing to appoint him to anſwer Mr. Burton, and another to direct him to juſtify all Paſſages in The Female Glory.

4. The fourth Inſtance was in a Letter ſent to me from one Croxton, a young Divine in Ireland. He was bred in St. John's-College in Oxford. At the Lord Mountnorris's Intreaty, I ſent Croxton into Ireland to be his Chaplain. If he miſcarried there, I could not help it, nor hinder his writing of a Letter to me, nor preſcribe what he ſhould write in it. But, to my remembrance, I never heard of any Miſcarriage of his in Matter of Religion: And whether he be living or dead, I know not. That Letter indeed hath a Croſs at the top of it. But then was another Letter of his ſhewed without a Croſs, in which he calls Rome Monſtrum Abominandum. Howſoever, I conceive all this is nothing to me.

5. The fifth Inſtance was a Book, which they ſaid was licenſed by Dr. Weeks. And if ſo, then not by my Chaplain. But upon peruſal, I find no Licence printed to it, nor to any of the other, but only to Sales, which is anſwered.

6. The ſixth Inſtance was in Biſhop Mountague's Books, the Gagg and the Appeal. Here they ſaid, that Dr. White told Dr. Featly, That five or ſix Biſhops did allow theſe Books. But he did not name me to be one of them. Then Mr. Pryn urged upon his Oath, That theſe Books were found in my Study. And I cannot but bleſs myſelf at this Argument. For I have Bellarmine in my Study, therefore I am a Papiſt; or I have the Alcoran in my Study, therefore I am a Turk; is as good an Argument as this: I have Biſhop Mountague's Books in my Study, therefore I am an Arminian. May Mr. Pryn have Books in all kinds in his Study, and may not the Archbiſhop of Canterbury have them in his? Yea, but he ſays, There is a Letter of the Biſhop's to me, ſubmitting his Books to my Cenſure. This Letter hath no date, and ſo belike Mr. Pryn thought he might be bold both with it and his Oath, and apply it to what Books he pleaſed. But as God would have it, there are Circumſtances in it as good as a Date. For 'tis therein expreſſed, that he was now ready to remove from Chicheſter to Norwich. Therefore he muſt needs ſpeak of ſubmitting thoſe his Books to me, which were then ready to be ſet out, which were his Origines Eccleſiaſticæ; not the Gagg, nor the Appeal, which are the Books charged, and which were printed divers Years before he was made a Biſhop: and my Receit indorſed upon it, is Mar. 29. 1638. And I hope Mr. Nicolas will not call this the Colour of an Anſwer, as he hath called many of the reſt given by me.

7. The ſeventh Inſtance was in a Book licenſed by Dr. Martin, then my Chaplain in London-Houſe. This Book, Mr. Pryn ſays, was purpoſely ſet out to countenance Arminianiſm, as if it had been ſome Work of moment, whereas it was anſwered twice in the Queen's time. If Dr. Martin did this, 'tis more than I remember; nor can I ſo long after give any account of it. But Dr. Martin is living, and in Town, and I humbly deſired he might be called to anſwer. He was called the next day, and gave this Account.

Mr. Pryn ſays farther, That after this he preached Arminianiſm at St. Paul's Croſs. Why did not Mr. Pryn come then to me, and acquaint me with it? Which neither he nor any Man elſe did. And I was in Attendance at Court, whither I could not hear him. And the Charge which came againſt him upon the next Day's Hearing, was this and no more, That one then preached at the Croſs Univerſal Redemption; but he that gave teſtimony, knew him not: only he ſays, one told him 'twas Dr. Martin.

8. The laſt Inſtance was of a Bible commonly ſold, with a Popiſh Table at the end of it. This is more than I know, or ever heard till now; nor was any Complaint ever brought to me of it. And I cannot know all things that are done abroad for Gain; for that will teach them to conceal, as well as move them to act. Yet one of the Popiſh Heads mentioned in that Table, was Confirmation, which is commanded in our Church-Liturgy, and ratified by Law.

Here this Day ended, and I was ordered to appear again July 4. That Day I received a Note, under Mr. Nicolas's hand, that they meant to proceed upon the Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, and Fourteenth Original Articles, and the Sixth and Seventh Additionals. The laſt Warrant for other Articles, came under Serjeant Wilde's Hand, and Mr. Nicolas ſigning this, it ſeems, miſtook: for the Eighth and Ninth Original Articles are in part proceeded on before. Now they go forward with theſe, and then on to the reſt; which I will write down ſeverally, as they come to them.

The ſame Day, being Thurſday, all my Books at Lambeth were by Order of the Houſe of Commons taken away by Mr. . . . . Secretary to the Right Honourable the Earl of Warwick, and carried I know not whither, but are (as 'tis commonly ſaid) for the uſe of Mr. Peters. Before this time, ſome good number of my Books were delivered to the uſe of the Synod; the Miniſters which had them giving no Catalogue under their hands, which or how many they had. And all this was done contrary to an Order of the Lords, bearing date Novemb. 9. 1642. for the ſafe keeping of my Books there; and before I was convicted of any Crime. This day alſo I received an Order, which put off my Hearing to the next day.

The Seventeenth Day of my Hearing.

I. FRiday, July 5. 1644. This Day I appeared again: And the Firſt Charge againſt me was, That I had preferred none to Biſhopricks, Deaneries, Prebends, and Benefices, but Men popiſhly affected, or otherwiſe unworthy. And ſome they named:

1. As Firſt, Dr. Manwaring, diſabled by the Parliament.

2. Secondly, Mr. Mountague, excepted againſt by Parliament. But for theſe, no Proof was now brought: They referred themſelves to what was ſaid before, and ſo do I. And where they go to prove only by Dockets, I deſire it may ſtill be remembred that the Docket is a full Proof who gave Order for drawing the Bill at the Signet-Office, but no Proof at all who procured the Preferment.

3. Thirdly, Biſhop Corbet. But the Earl of Dorſet got my Lord Duke of Buckingham to prefer him, to make way for Dr. Duppa, his deſerving Chaplain, into Chriſt-Church. Nor was any thing charged againſt Dr. Corbet, but that he was preferred by me.

4. Fourthly, Biſhop Pierce: againſt whom there was no Proof offered neither. And he is living to anſwer it, if any be.

5. Nor was there now any Proof offered againſt Biſhop Wren, who was named alſo; at the leaſt not till he was made a Biſhop. So if I did prefer him, it ſeems I did it when nothing was laid againſt him. And if after he had his Preferment, he did any thing unworthily, that could not I foreſee; and he is living to anſwer it.

6. The Sixth was Biſhop Lindſey, a Man known to be of great and univerſal Learning, but preferred by the then Lord Treaſurer Portland, not by me. Him they charged with Arminianiſm. The Witneſſes two: The firſt, Mr. Smart; he is poſitive: he was his Fellow-Prebendary at Durham. There was Animoſity between them. 'And 'Smart, not able to judge of Arminianiſm.' Secondly, Mr. Walker, who could ſay nothing, but that he heard ſo much from ſome Miniſters, and Dr. Baſtwick. 'So here is as learned a Man as 'Chriſtendom had any of his time, debaſed in this 'great and honourable Court, by Ignorance, and 'a Hearſay: and that, when the Man is gone to 'that which ſhould be his Quiet, the Grave.'

7. The Seventh was Archbiſhop Neile, a Man well known to be as true to, and as ſtout for, the Church of England eſtabliſhed by Law, as any Man that came to Preferment in it. Nor could his great Enemy Mr. Smart ſay any thing now againſt him, but a Hearſay from one Dr. Moor of Wincheſter. And I cannot but profeſs, it grieves me much, to hear ſo many honeſt and worthy Men ſo uſed, when the Grave hath ſhut up their Mouths from anſwering for themſelves.

8. The next was Dr. Coſens, to be Dean of Peterborough. I named four of his Majeſty's Chaplains to him, as he had commanded me: and the King pitched upon Dr. Coſens, in regard all the Means he then had, lay in and about Dureſm, and was then in the Scots hands; ſo that he had nothing but Forty Pound a Year by his Headſhip in Peter-Houſe, to maintain himſelf, his Wife and Children.

9. The Ninth was Dr. Potter, a known Arminian, to the Deanery of Worceſter. What Proof of this? Nothing but the Docket. And what of the Crime? Nothing but Dr. Featly's Teſtimony; who ſays no more but this, That Dr. Potter was at firſt againſt Arminianiſm; (that's abſolute:) But afterwards he defended it, as he hath heard; (there's a Hearſay.)

10. The Tenth was Dr. Baker.

11. The Eleventh Dr. Weeks. Both very honeſt and able Men; but preferred by their own Lord, the Lord Biſhop of London.

12. The Twelfth was Dr. Bray. He had been my Chaplain above ten Years in my Houſe; I found him a very able and an honeſt Man, and had reaſon to prefer him to be able to live well; and I did ſo. Here is nothing objected againſt him, but his Expungings, and not Expungings of ſome Books; which if he were living, I well hope he would be able to give a good account for.

13. The Thirteenth Dr. Heylin. He is known to be a learned and an able Man; but for his Preferment, both to be his Majeſty's Chaplain, and for that which he got in that Service, he owes it under God to the Memory of the Earl of Danby, who took care of him in the Univerſity.

14. After theſe, they named ſome, whom they ſaid I preferred to be the King's Chaplains. The Witneſs here Mr. Oldſworth, the Lord Chamberlain's Secretary. He ſays, The Power and Practice of naming Chaplains was in the Lord Chamberlain for theſe 25 Years. And I ſay, 'tis ſo ſtill, for ought I know. He ſays, That in all things concerning which the Lord Chamberlain's Warrant went in this Form, Theſe are to will and require you, &c. that there his Lordſhip did it without conſulting the King; and that the Warrants for Chaplains run all in this Form. Firſt, This is more than I know, or ever heard of till now. Secondly, Be it ſo; yet 'tis hard to deny the King to hear Men preach, before they be ſworn his Chaplains, 'if his Majeſty deſire it, ſince it argues a 'great Care in the King, eſpecially in ſuch a factious time, as began to overlay this Church.' Thirdly, He confeſſes, that he knows not who put the King upon this way, but believes that I did it. He is ſingle, and his Belief only is no Evidence. 'And whoſoever gave the King that Ad'vice, deſerved very well both of his Majeſty and 'the Church of England;' That none might be put 'about him in that Service, but ſuch as himſelf 'ſhould approve of. But that which troubled this 'Witneſs, was another thing. He had not Mo'ney for every one that was made Chaplain; nor 'Money to get them a Month to wait in; nor 'Money to change their Month, if it were in'convenient for their other Occaſions; nor Money 'for ſparing their Attendance, when they pleaſed. 'In which, and other things, I would he had 'been as careful of his Lord's Honour, as I have 'been in all things. For 'tis well known in 'Court, I obſerved his Lordſhip as much as any 'Man.'

The Men which are inſtanced in, are Dr. Heylin. But he was preferred to that Service by my Lord the Earl of Danby. Then Dr. Potter. But the Lord Keeper Coventry was his means. Dr. Coſens was preferred by Biſhop Neile, whoſe Chaplain he had been many Years, and he moved the Lord Chamberlain for it. Dr. Lawrence was my Lord Chamberlain's own Chaplain, and preferred by himſelf; and in all likelihood, by Mr. Oldſworth's means: for he was Fellow of Magdalen-College in Oxford, as Mr. Oldſworth himſelf was, and he once (to my knowledge) had a great opinion of him. Dr. Haywood indeed was my Chaplain; but I preferred him not to his Majeſty, till he had preached divers times in Court with great Approbation; nor then, but with my Lord Chamberlain's Love and Liking. As for Dr. Pocklington, I know not who recommended him; nor is there any Proof offered that I did it.

15. Then they proceeded to my own Chaplains. They name four of them: Firſt, Dr. Weeks. But he was never in my Houſe, never meddled with the licenſing of any Books, till he was gone from me to the Biſhop of London: So he is charged with no Fault, ſo long as he was mine. The Second, Dr. Haywood. But he is charged with nothing but Sales, which was a moſt deſperate Plot againſt him, as is before ſhewed. The Third was Dr. Martin. Againſt him came Mr. Pryn, for his Arminian Sermon at St. Paul's-Croſs. But that's anſwered before. And Mr. Walker, who ſaid, He propoſed Arminian Queſtions to divers Miniſters. Belike, ſuch as were to be examined by him. But he adds, As theſe Miniſters told him. So 'tis but a Hearſay. And ſay he did propoſe ſuch Queſtions, may it not be fit enough to try how able they were to anſwer them? The Fourth was Dr. Bray. Againſt him Dr. Featly was again produced, for that which he had expunged out of his Sermons. But when I ſaw this ſo often inculcated to make a noiſe, I humbly deſired of the Lords, that I might ask Dr. Featly one Queſtion. Upon leave granted, I asked him, Whether nothing were of late expunged out of a Book of his written againſt a Prieſt? and deſired him to ſpeak upon the Oath he had taken. He anſwered roundly, That divers Paſſages againſt the Anabaptiſts, and ſome in defence of the Liturgy of the Church of England, were expunged. I asked, by whom? He ſaid, by Mr. Rouſe and the Committee, or, by Mr. Rouſe or the Committee. Be it which it will, I obſerved to the Lords, that Mr. Rouſe and the Committee might expunge Paſſages againſt the Anabaptiſts, nay, for the Liturgy eſtabliſhed by Law; but my Chaplains may not expunge any thing againſt the Papiſts, though perhaps miſtaken.

From thence, they fell upon Men whom they ſaid I had preferred to Benefices. They named but two. Dr. Heylin was one again, whom I preferred not. The other was Dr. Jackſon, the late Preſident of Corpus-Chriſti-College in Oxford. Dr. Featly being produced, ſaid, Dr. Jackſon was a known Arminian. If ſo to him, 'tis well; the Man is dead, and cannot anſwer for himſelf. Thus far I can for him, without meddling with any his Opinions: He was very honeſt and very learned, and at thoſe Years he was of, might deſerve more than a poor Benefice.

16. Here Mr. Pryn came in again, and teſtified very boldly, That I gave many Benefices, which were in the Gift of the Maſter of the Wards: and all Preferments only to ſuch Men as were for Ceremonies, Popery, and Arminianiſm. For the firſt of theſe two, the buſineſs was thus: There aroſe a difference between the then Lord Keeper Coventry and the Lord Cottington, then Maſter of the Wards, about the diſpoſing of thoſe Benefices. It grew ſomewhat high, and came to Hearing by the King himſelf: His Majeſty, upon Hearing, gave the Right of Sealing to the Lord Keeper; but for the time, till more might appear, reſerved the Giving to himſelf, that he might have ſome of thoſe leſſer Preferments to beſtow on ſuch Miniſters as attended upon his Navy then at Sea. I never gave any one of theſe Benefices in my Life. And that this Story is of truth, the Lord Cottington is yet living, and can witneſs it. 'And this very 'Anſwer I gave to Mr. Brown, who in ſumming 'up the Charge laid this alſo upon me, and with'out mentioning what Anſwer I gave to it.' For the ſecond, That I preferred none but ſuch Men; 'tis known I preferred Biſhop Hall to Exeter, Dr. Potter to Carliſle, Dr. Cook to Briſtol firſt, and then to Hereford; that I gave Dr. Weſtfield the Archdeaconry of St. Albans; that I was Dr. Fell's means for Chriſt-Church, and Dr. Higgs's for the Deanery of Litchfield; that I ſettled Dr. Downing at Hackney, and Mr. Herrick at Manchester, when the Broad Seal formerly given him was queſtioned; That I gave two of my own Benefices to Mr. Palmer and Mr. Taylor, two of the now Synod; an Hoſpital to Dr. Jackſon of Canterbury, and a Benefice to his Son-in-Law, at his Suit. I could not name all theſe upon the ſudden, yet ſome I did; and no one of them guilty of this Charge in the leaſt. 'Mr. Brown in his Summary ſaid, I could name 'but one or two. And when in my Anſwer made 'in the Houſe of Commons, I ſpecified more, a'mong which Mr. Palmer was one; Mr. Brown ſaid 'in his Reply, That Mr. Palmer had indeed his 'Benefice of my giving, ſo himſelf told him, but 'it was at the intreaty of a great Nobleman. Say 'it were; Mr. Palmer was then a ſtranger to me: 'ſomebody muſt ſpeak, and aſſure me of his 'Wants and Worth, or I cannot give. But if 'upon

'upon this I give it freely, is it worth no thanks 'from him, becauſe a Nobleman ſpake to me? 'Let Mr. Palmer rank this Gratitude among his 'other Vertues.'

17. From hence they ſtepped over into Ireland, and objected my preferring of Dr. Chappel to be Maſter of the College at Dublin. Here the firſt Witneſs is Mr. Walker. He ſays, That all his Scholars were Arminians. This is a great Sign, but not full Proof. He ſays, That Dr. Chappel was at firſt fierce againſt them, but afterward changed his mind. Dr. Featly ſaid the like of Dr. Potter. Some ſay Arminius himſelf was at firſt zealous againſt thoſe Opinions, but ſtudying hard to confute them, changed his own Mind. 'Take 'heed, Mr. Walker, do not ſtudy theſe Points too 'hard.' For my own part, Dr. Chappel was a Cambridge Man, altogether unknown to me, ſave that I received from thence great Teſtimony of his Abilities and Fitneſs for Government, which that College then extremely wanted; and no Man ever complained to me, that he favoured Arminianiſm.

The other Witneſs was Dr. Hoyle, a Fellow of the College in Dublin. He ſays, That the Doctor did maintain, in that College, Juſtification by Works; and in Chriſt-Church, Arminianiſm. In this he is ſingle: But if it be true, why did not the Lord Primate of Armagh puniſh him? For he ſays, he knew it. That he oppoſed ſome things in the Synod: And it may be there was juſt Cauſe for it. Laſtly, he ſays, The late Lord Deputy liked not the Iriſh Articles, but gave them an honourable Burial, as (he ſays) the Lord Primate himſelf confeſſed. I am a Stranger to all this; nor doth Dr. Hoyle charge any thing againſt me; but ſays, That they which did this, were ſuppoſed to have ſome Friend in England. And ſurely their Carriage was very ill, if they had none.

18. Then were Letters read of my Lord Primate's to me, in which is teſtified my Care of the Patrimony of that Church. And then a Paper of Inſtructions given by me to the Lord Deputy at his firſt going into that Kingdom. For the firſt, though it be thruſt in here, among Matters of Religion, yet I pray your Lordſhips to conſider, 'tis about the Patrimony of that Church only; and I thank them heartily for producing it. For in this Letter is a full Confeſſion of my Lord Primate's, That the Motion of getting the Impropriations from his Majeſty, (formerly objected againſt me) proceeded from him, as I then pleaded: And the Letter was read. For the ſecond; my Lord Deputy, a little before his firſt going into Ireland, asked me what Service I would command him for the Church there? I humbly thanked him, as I had reaſon, and told him I would bethink my ſelf, and give him my Thoughts in Writing: Theſe are they which are called Inſtructions. They are only for the good of that poor Church, as your Lordſhips have heard them. This was all; and herein my Lord ſhewed his Honour, and I did but my Duty. 'Though I very well underſtand why 'this Paper is produced againſt me.'

After this, they proceeded to the Eleventh Original Article, which follows in hæc verba.

XI. He in his own Perſon, and his Suffragans, Viſitors, Surrogats, Chancellors, or other Officers, by his Command, have cauſed divers Learned, Pious, and Orthodox Preachers of God's Word to be ſilenced, ſuſpended, deprived, degraded, excommunicated, or otherwiſe grieved and vexed, without any juſt and lawful Cauſe; whereby, and by divers other Means, he hath hindred the preaching of God's Word, cauſed divers of his Majeſty's Loyal Subjects to forſake the Kingdom, and increaſed and cheriſhed Ignorance and Prophaneneſs amongſt the People; that ſo he might the better facilitate the way to the effecting of his own wicked and traitorous Deſign of altering and corrupting the true Religion here eſtabliſhed.

1. The firſt Inſtance to make good this Article, was a Repetition of ſome Lecturers before-named. But when they thought they had made noiſe enough, they referred the Lords to their Notes; and ſo did I to my former Anſwers.

2. The ſecond Inſtance was out of ſome Articles of Biſhop Mountague and Biſhop Wren, and their Account given to me. Biſhop Wren, Art. 16. ſpeaks of the Afternoon-Sermons being turned into Catechiſing: And Art. 5. (of his Account, I take it) That no Lecture in his Dioceſs after, &c. It was made plain to the Lords, that this was ſpoken of ſome ſingle and factious Lecturers; and that they had their Lectures read by a Company of Learned and Orthodox Miniſters by turns; as appeared by the Monday-Sermon at Bury, during that Learned Biſhop's time. Nor were any forbid to preach in the Afternoon, ſo the Catechiſing were not omitted, before it, or with it: And the Biſhop is living to anſwer it, if ought were then done amiſs by him. In all which he did nothing as any Deputy or Surrogat of mine, but as Dioceſan of the Place. As for the yearly Account to the King, according to his Royal Inſtructions in that behalf, though it were preſſed here again to multiply noiſe, yet nothing being new, I gave my Anſwer as before, and to that I refer my ſelf.

3. The third Anſwer was concerning Mr. Lee of Wolverhampton. The Evidence was a Letter of my Secretary Mr. Dell, written by my Command, to my Viſitors there, to this effect; That whether there were Cauſe or no, they ſhould either puniſh Mr. Lee, or bring him into the High-Commiſſion. Had the Words or the Senſe been thus, they might well ſay, It was hard for the Judge before whom the Party was to anſwer, to write thus. But I called to have the Letter read again, and the Words were theſe; If there were found againſt him that which might juſtly be cenſured, then they ſhould puniſh, &c. And the Reaſon why this ſtrict Care was taken, was becauſe the Dean of Windſor his Ordinary complained unto me, That Mr. Lee's Carriage was ſo factious there, that he could contain him in no Order. If he were a Man after this approved at Shrewsbury (as Mr. Walker witneſſes) I hope the Proceedings at Wolverhampton did him good. But, my Lords, had it ſo fallen out, that my Secretary had forgotten my Inſtructions, and himſelf too, and expreſſed himſelf amiſs, ſhall that Slip of his (had it been ſuch) be imputed to me? I believe your Lordſhips would not willingly anſwer for every Phraſe of your Secretaries Letters, which yet you command them to write.

4. The laſt Inſtance was the Sentence in the High-Commiſſion againſt Mr. Barnard, for Words about Pelagian Errors and Popery. Firſt, if he were ſentenced in the High-Commiſſion, it was the Act of the Court, and not mine; as has been often ſaid. Secondly, No Proof is offer'd that he was ſentenced for thoſe Words only. Thirdly, The Recantation (howſoever refuſed by him, as Mr. Pryn ſays it was) makes mention of four Points for which he was cenſured, of which theſe Words are one: But not the Words themſelves, but his unjuſt and ſcandalous Application of them to me, which deſerve them not. And laſtly, Dr. Cumber, Maſter of Trinity-College in Cambridge, was Proſecutor againſt him; which Office, ſo grave and worthy a Man would not (I ſuppoſe) have undertaken, had there not been great and juſt Cauſe for it.

Hence they proceeded to the Sixth Additional Article, which follows in theſe Words:

VI. That whereas divers Gifts and Diſpoſitions of divers Sums of Money were heretofore made by divers charitable and well-diſpoſed Perſons, for the buying in of divers Impropriations for the Maintenance of Preaching the Word of God in ſeveral Churches; the ſaid Archbiſhop about Eight Years laſt paſt, wilfully and maliciouſly cauſed the ſaid Gifts, Feoffments and Conveyances, made to the Uſes aforeſaid, to be overthrown in his Majeſty's Court of Exchequer, contrary to Law, as things dangerous to the Church and State, under the ſpecious Pretence of buying in Impropriations; whereby that pious Work was ſuppreſſed and trodden down, to the great Diſhonour of God, and Scandal of Religion.

This Article is only about the Feoffments. That which I did, was this. I was (as then adviſed, upon ſuch Information as was given me) clearly of Opinion, that this was a cunning way, under a glorious Pretence, to overthrow the Church-Government, by getting into their Power more Dependency of the Clergy, than the King, and all the Peers, and all the Biſhops in all the Kingdom had. And I did conceive the Plot the more dangerous for the fairneſs of the Pretence, and that to the State as well as the Church. Hereupon, not maliciouſly (as 'tis charged in the Article) but conſcientiouſly I reſolved to ſuppreſs it, if by Law it might be done. Upon this, I acquainted his Majeſty with the thing, and the Danger which I conceived would, in few Years, ſpring out of it. The King referred me to his Attorney and the Law. Mr. Attorney Noy, after ſome pauſe upon it, proceeded in the Exchequer, and there it was by judicial Proceeding and Sentence overthrown. If this Sentence were according to Law and Juſtice, then there's no Fault at all committed: if it were againſt Law, the Fault, whate'er it be, was the Judges, not mine; for I ſollicited none of them. And here I humbly deſired, that the Lords would at their leiſure read over the Sentence given in the Exchequer, which I then delivered in; but by reaſon of the length, it was not then read: whether after it were, I cannot tell. I deſired likewiſe that my Counſel might be heard in this, and all other Points in Law.

Sir Leolin Jenkins hath a Copy of it, out of the Records of the Exchequer. W. S. A. C.

1. The firſt Witneſs was Mr. Kendall. He ſays, That ſpeaking with me about Preſteen, I thanked God that I had overthrown this Feoffment.

2. The ſecond Witneſs Mr. Miller ſays, he heard me ſay, They would have undone the Church, but I have overthrown their Feoffment. Theſe two Witneſſes prove no more than I confeſs: For in the manner aforeſaid, I deny not but I did my beſt in a legal way to overthrow it. And if I did thank God for it, it was my Duty to do ſo, the thing being in my Judgment ſo pernicious as it was.

3. The third Witneſs was Mr. White, one of the Feoffees. He ſays, That coming as Counſel in a Cauſe before me, when that Buſineſs was done, I fell bitterly on him as an Underminer of the Church. I remember well his coming to me as Counſel about a Benefice; and 'tis very likely I ſpake my Conſcience to him, as freely as he did his to me, but the Particulars I remember not; nor do I remember his coming afterwards to me to Fulham, nor his Offer to change the Men or the Courſe, ſo the thing might ſtand. For to this I ſhould have been as willing as he was: and if I remember right, there was order taken for this in the Decree of the Exchequer; and his Majeſty's Pleaſure declared, That no Penny ſo given ſhould be turned to other uſe. And I have been, and ſhall ever be as ready to get in Impropriations, by any good and legal way, as any Man, (as may appear by my Labours about the Impropriations in Ireland.) But this way did not ſtand either with my Judgment or Conſcience.

1. Firſt, Becauſe little or nothing was given by them to the preſent Incumbent, to whom the Tythes were due, if to any; that the Pariſhioners which paid them, might have the more cheerful Inſtruction, the better Hoſpitality, and more full Relief for their Poor.

'2. Secondly, Becauſe moſt of the Men they 'put in, were Perſons diſaffected to the Diſcipline, 'if not the Doctrine too, of the Church of England.

'3. Thirdly, Becauſe no ſmall part was given to 'School-Maſters, to ſeaſon Youth ab Ovo, for their 'Party; and to young Students in the Univerſities, 'to purchaſe them and their Judgments to their 'ſide, againſt their coming abroad into the Church.'

'4. Fourthly, Becauſe all this Power to breed 'and maintain a Faction, was in the hands of 'Twelve Men, who were they never ſo honeſt, 'and free from Thoughts of abuſing this Power, 'to fill the Church with Schiſm; yet who ſhould 'be Succeſſors, and what Uſe ſhould be made of 'this Power, was out of human Reach to know.'

5. Fifthly, Becauſe this Power was aſſumed by, and to themſelves, without any legal Authority, as Mr. Attorney aſſured me.

He farther ſaid, That the Impropriation of Preſteen in Radnorſhire, was ſpecially given to St. Antolins in London. I ſay, the more the pity, conſidering the Poorneſs of that Country, and the little Preaching that was among that poor People, and the Plenty which is in London: Yet becauſe it was ſo given, there was care taken after the Decree, that they of St. Antolins had Conſideration, and I think to the full. He ſays, That indeed they did not give any thing to the preſent Incumbents, till good Men came to be in their Places. Scarce one Incumbent was better'd by them. And what then? In ſo many Places not one good Man found? 'Not one factious enough againſt the 'Church, for Mr. White to account him good?' Yet he thinks I diſpoſed theſe things afterwards to unworthy Men. 'Truly, had they been at my diſpo-'ſal, I ſhould not wittingly have given them to Mr. 'White's Worthies.' But his Majeſty laid his Command upon his Attorney, and nothing was done or to be done in theſe things, but by his Direction. For Dr. Heylin, if he ſpake any thing amiſs concerning this Feoffment, in any Sermon of his, he is living to anſwer it; me it concerns not. 'Mr. 'Brown, in the Sum of the Charge, omitted not 'this; and I anſwered as before: And in his Re-'ply he turned again upon it, That it muſt be a 'Crime in me, becauſe I projected to overthrow 'it. But, under favour, this follows not: for to 'project (though the word Projector found ill in 'England) is no more than to forecaſt and forelay

'any

'any Buſineſs. Now as 'tis lawful for me, by all 'good and fit means, to project the Settlement of 'any thing that is good; ſo is it lawful, by good 'and legal means, to project the Overthrow of 'any thing that is cunningly or apparently evil. 'And ſuch did this Feoffment appear to my Un-'derſtanding, and doth ſtill.' As for reducing of Impropriations to their proper Uſe, they may ſee (if they pleaſe) in my Diary (whence they had this) another Project to buy them into the Church's Uſe; for given they will not be. But Mr. Pryn would ſhew nothing, nor Mr. Nicolas ſee any thing, but what they thought would make againſt me.

Here this Day ended, and I was commanded to attend again July 15. But was then put off to July 17. which Day held.

The Eighteenth Day of my Hearing.

WEdneſday, June 17. 1644. This Day they charged upon me the Twelfth Original Article; which follows in theſe Words:

XII. He hath traitorouſly endeavoured to cauſe Diviſion and Diſcord between the Church of England and other Reformed Churches; and to that end hath ſuppreſſed and abrogated the Privileges and Immunities, which have been by his Majeſty and his Royal Anceſtors granted to the French and Dutch Churches in this Kingdom: And divers other ways hath expreſſed his Malice and Diſaffection to thoſe Churches, that ſo by ſuch Diſunion the Papiſts might have more Advantage for the Overthrow and Extirpation of both.

I. The firſt Charge is, That I deny them to be a Church: For they ſay that I ſay plainly in my Book againſt Fiſher, that [1] No Biſhop, no Church. Now 'tis well known they have no Biſhops, and therefore no Church. The Paſſage in my Book is an Inference of St. Jerom's Opinion, no Declaration of my own. And if they, or any other, be aggrieved at St. Jerom for writing ſo, they may anſwer him. Mr. Nicolas added, That this was ſeconded by Biſhop Mountague's Book, which Mr. Pryn (carefully) witneſſed was found in my Study, and licenſed by Dr. Bray. Is this Argument come again, that Biſhop Mountague's Book was in my Study? 'Leave it for ſhame.' But they have now left me never a Book in my Study; ſo I cannot make them any fuller Anſwer, without viewing the Place, than themſelves help me to by their own Confeſſion: which is, that he adds this Exception, That none but a Biſhop can ordain, but in caſu neceſſitatis, which is the Opinion of many learned and moderate Divines. 'Yet this is very conſiderable in 'the Buſineſs, whether an inevitable Neceſſity be 'caſt upon them, or they pluck a kind of Neceſſity 'upon themſelves.'

Mount. Orig. Eccleſ. p. 464.

II. The ſecond Charge is out of a Letter of mine to Biſhop Hall, upon a Letter which he had formerly ſent me. In which, it ſeems, is ſomething about the Caſe of Neceſſity in point of Ordination, which (they ſay) I diſliked. And it ſeems I diſliked upon good ground: For he had given me power, under his Hand, to alter what I would in that which he ſent unto me. I would not take that Power; but writ back to him what Paſſages I thought might be better expreſſed, if it could agree with his Judgment alſo. Hereupon he ſent me another Letter of Jan. 18. 1639. In which he alter'd thoſe Things which I put to his farther Conſideration. Could any thing be more fairly carried? And this Letter was read to the Lords. Yea, but they ſay, I diſliked the giving of this Title Antichriſt to the Pope. No, I did not ſimply diſlike it; but I adviſed Biſhop Hall, if he thought it good, not to affirm it ſo poſitively. And the Reaſon I gave was this; That King James being preſſed upon a great occaſion that he had maintained that the Pope was Antichriſt, which might much trouble, if not quite croſs ſome Proceedings much deſired by that prudent King, his Majeſty made anſwer, I maintain it not as a Point of Faith, but as a probable Opinion: And for which I have more grounds than the Pope hath for his Challenge of Temporal Power over Princes. Let him recall this Opinion, and I'll recall that. This I writ to the Biſhop, but left him free to do what he pleaſed.

Here Mr. Nicolas fell extremely foul upon me, inſomuch that I could not but wonder at their Patience which heard him. Among other Titles beſtowed upon me, many and groſs, he called me, over and over again, Pander to the Whore of Babylon. I was much moved; and humbly deſired the Lords, that if my Crimes were ſuch as that I might not be uſed like an Archbiſhop, yet I might be uſed like a Chriſtian; and that were it not for the Duty which I owe to God and my own Innocency, I would deſert my Defence before I would endure ſuch Language in ſuch an Honourable Preſence. Hereupon ſome Lords ſhewed their Diſlike, and wiſhed him to leave, and purſue the Evidence.

'Mr. Brown in ſumming up the Charge made 'this a great matter, the Denial of the Pope to 'be Antichriſt. But I did not deny it, nor de-'clare any Opinion of my own: And many Pro-'teſtants, and thoſe very learned, are of opinion 'that he is not. 'Tis true, I did not, I cannot 'approve foul Language in Controverſies. Nor 'do I think that the calling of the Pope Antichriſt, 'did ever yet convert an underſtanding Papiſt. 'And ſure I am, Gabriel Powel's Peremptorineſs '(to ſay no worſe) in this Point, did the Church 'of England no good, no honour in foreign Parts: 'For there he affirms, (a) That he is as certain that 'the Pope is Antichriſt, as that Jeſus Chriſt is the Son 'of God, and Redeemer of the World. As for the 'thing it ſelf, I left it free to all Men to think as 'their Judgment guided them; as appears by the 'licenſing of Dr. Featly's Sermons, where he proves 'the Pope, in his Opinion, to be

[3] Antichriſt; where he calls him alſo 'the [4] Whore of Babylon. Which 'ſurely I ſhould never have ſuffered 'to be printed, had I been her Pan-'der. And for Biſhop Hall, I on-'ly told him what King James had ſaid, and left 'him to make what uſe he pleaſed of it.'

[4] P. 810.

III. The third Charge was out of a Paper, which Biſhop Hall, about the time when he wrote his Book in Defence of Epiſcopacy, ſent unto me, containing divers Propoſitions concerning Epiſcopal Government. In which either he or I, or both,

ſay, (for that Circumſtance I remember not) That Church-Government by Biſhops is not alterable by human Law. To this I anſwer'd, That Biſhops might be regulated and limited by human Laws, in thoſe Things which are but Incidents to their Calling: But their Calling, ſo far as it is Jure Divino, by Divine Right, cannot be taken away. They charge farther, That I ſay this is the Doctrine of the Church of England. And ſo I think it is: For Biſhop Bilſon ſet out a Book in the Queen's time, entitled, The Perpetual Government. And if the Government by Biſhops be perpetual, as he there very learnedly proves thorough the whole Book, it will be hard for any Chriſtian Nation to out it. Nor is this his Judgment alone, but of the whole Church of England. For in the Preface to the Book of Ordination are theſe Words; From the Apoſtles time there have been three Orders of Miniſters in the Church of Chriſt, Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons. Where 'tis evident, that in the Judgment of the Church of England, Epiſcopacy is a different, not Degree only, but Order from Prieſthood, and ſo hath been reputed from the Apoſtles times. And this was then read to the Lords. And the Law of England is as full for it, as the Church: For the Statute of 8 Eliz. cap. 1. abſolutely confirms all and every part of this Book of Ordination: Where alſo the Law calls it, The high Eſtate of Prelacy. And Calvin, (if my old Memory do not fail me) upon thoſe Words of St. John, ver. 20, 21. As my Father ſent me, ſo ſend I you, &c. ſays thus upon that Place, Eandem illis imponit Perſonam ac idem Juris aſſignat. And if our Saviour Chriſt put the ſame Perſon upon the Apoſtles, and aſſigned to them the ſame Right which his Father gave him, it will prove a ſour Work to throw their Succeſſors the Biſhops out of the Church, after ſixteen hundred Years continuance; 'and in the mean time cry out againſt 'Innovation.' For either Chriſt gave this Power to his Apoſtles only, and that will make the Goſpel a Thing temporary, and confined to the Apoſtles times; or elſe he gave the ſame Power, tho not with ſuch eminent Gifts, to their Succeſſors alſo, to propagate the ſame Goſpel to the end of the World, as St. Paul tells us he did, Epheſ. 4. 11. Now all the Primitive Church all along gives Biſhops to be the Apoſtles Succeſſors; and then it would be well thought on, what Right any Chriſtian State hath (be their abſolute Power what it will) to turn Biſhops out of that Right in the Church which Chriſt hath given them.

IV. The fourth Charge was an Alteration made in a Brief for a third Collection for the diſtreſſed Miniſters and others in the Palatinate. The Queen of Bohemia was pleaſed to do me the Honour to write to me about this: And becauſe two Collections had been before, her Majeſty deſired that this third might be only in London, and ſome few Shires about it. I out of my Deſire to relieve thoſe diſtreſſed Proteſtants, and to expreſs my Duty to the Queen, became an humble Suitor to his Majeſty that this Collection alſo might go thorough England, as the reſt had done. And 'tis acknowledged by all, that this I did. Now the Witneſſes which accuſe me for ſome Circumſtances in this Buſineſs, are two.

1. The firſt is Mr. Wakerly. He ſays, That Mr. Ruly (who was employed by the Queen of Bohemia about this Collection) was roughly uſed by me upon occaſion of this Clauſe put into the Brief, and which, he ſays, I cauſed to be altered. This, Firſt, is a bold Oath; for Mr. Wakerly was not preſent, but ſwears upon Hearſay. Secondly, What Kindneſs I ſhewed him and the Buſineſs, is mentioned before; and if for this Kindneſs he had been practiſing with Mr. Wakerly about the Brief, (as I had probable Reaſon to ſuſpect) I cannot much be blamed, if I altered my Countenance towards him, and my Speech too; which yet theſe Witneſſes (for the other agrees in this) have no reaſon to call rough Carriage, only upon Mr. Ruly's unthankful Report.

He ſays, That theſe Words, the Antichriſtian Yoke, were left out. Firſt, This is more than I remember; and the Briefs I had not to compare: Nor is there any Neceſſity that two Briefs, coming for the ſame Thing, with ſome Years diſtance between, ſhould agree in every Phraſe or Circumſtance. Secondly, If I did except againſt this Paſſage, it was partly becauſe of the fore-recited Judgment of King James, of which I thought his Son King Charles ought to be tender; and partly becauſe it could move nothing but Scorn in the common Adverſary, that we ſhould offer to determine ſuch a Controverſy by a Broad-Seal. I remember well, ſince I had the Honour to ſit in this Houſe, the naming of Tythes to be due Jure Divino caſt out the Bill; a prudent Lord asking the Peers, whether they meant to determine that Queſtion by an Act of Parliament. The other part of the Clauſe, which they ſay was altered, was, The Religion which we with them profeſs. Whence they infer, becauſe (with them) was left out, that I would not acknowledge them of the ſame Religion; which follows not: For we may be and are of the ſame Religion, and yet (agree) not with them in thoſe Opinions, in which we differ from them. And Mr. Wakerly confeſſes that the Words as altered are, That they are perſecuted for their Religion; and their Religion is the Proteſtant Religion, and ſo is ours. And therefore I could have no Intention to make the Religions different, but the Opinions under the ſame Religion.

'For Mr. Wakerly, he is a Dutchman born; and 'how far the Teſtimony of an Alien may be of 'force by the Law, I know not: And a bitter 'Enemy to me he hath ever ſhewed himſelf, ſince 'I complained to the King and the Lords that a 'Stranger born and bred ſhould be ſo near a Secretary of State, and all his Papers and Cyphers, as he 'was known to be to Mr. Secretary Coke. A thing 'which few States would endure. And how far the 'Teſtimony of ſuch a canker'd Enemy ſhould be admitted, let the World judge. Admitted he was.'

2. The ſecond Witneſs was Mr. Hartlip. He acknowledges my Improvement of the Collection, and my great Readineſs therein; which doubtleſs I ſhould not have ſhewed, had I accounted them of another Religion. He ſays, There was no Alteration but in that Clauſe; and that implies a manifeſt Difference. But that is but in his Judgment; in which I have already ſhewed that Wakerly is miſtaken, and ſo is he. Beſide, he comes here as a Witneſs of the Fact, not as a Judge of my Intentions or Thoughts. He adds, That, if he remember well, the Alteration was drawn by me. But if he do not remember well, what then? Surely here's no Evidence to be grounded upon Ifs. Here, upon the Point of Antichriſt, Mr. Nicolas ſtiled me as before, and was furious till he foamed again. But I ſaw a Neceſſity of Patience. 'Mr. Brown alſo in his 'ſummary Charge followed this Buſineſs cloſe: 'But I gave it the ſame Anſwer.'

V. The fifth Charge, and the laſt under this Article, was the calling in of a Book, Anno 1637. ſhewing the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church in the Palatinate; but called in only becauſe againſt Arminianiſm.

Arminianiſm. The ſingle Witneſs Michael Sparks. He ſays this Book was called in; but he knows not by whom, nor mentions he for what. But he ſays the Purſevants which ſearched for it were mine. He means ſuch as belonged to the High-Commiſſion; for other than ſuch I had none. And there was cauſe enough for calling in the Book, without thinking of Arminianiſm.

'But what is the reaſon why here's nothing urged againſt me about abrogating the Immunities and Privileges of the French and Dutch Churches, which fill the Body of this Article? Why, I conceive there may be two Reaſons of it. One, becauſe there was taken by Mr. Pryn, among other Papers for my Defence, a Letter under Queen Elizabeth's own Hand to the Lord Pawlet, Marquiſs of Wincheſter, then Lord Treaſurer; in which ſhe expreſſes her Willingneſs that thoſe Strangers, diſtreſſed in and for point of Conſcience, ſhould have Succour and free Entertainment; but ſhould conform themſelves to the Engliſh Liturgy, and have that tranſlated into their own Language. And they knew I would call to have this Letter produced, proved, and read. And had this Letter been ſtood unto, they had never been able to do the Church of England half the harm they have ſince. The other was, becauſe they found by their own Search againſt me, that all which I did concerning thoſe Churches was with this Moderation; That all thoſe of their ſeveral Congregations in London, Canterbury, Sandwich, Norwich, or elſe-where, which were of the ſecond Deſcent, and born in England, ſhould repair to their ſeveral Pariſh-Churches, and conform themſelves to the Doctrine, Diſcipline, and Liturgy of the Church of England; and not live continually in an open Separation, as if they were an Iſrael in Ægypt, to the great Diſtraction of the Natives of this Kingdom, and the aſſiſting of that Schiſm which is now broke forth. And as this was with great Moderation, ſo was it with the joint Approbation of his Majeſty and the Lords of his Council, upon the Reaſons openly given and debated. And all this before I proceeded to do any thing; as appears apud Acta.'

Then they went to the Thirteenth Original Article; which here follows.

XIII. He hath traitorouſly and wickedly endeavoured to reconcile the Church of England with the Church of Rome: And for the effecting thereof, hath conſorted and confederated with divers Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits; and hath kept ſecret Intelligence with the Pope of Rome: And by himſelf, his Agents and Inſtruments, treated with ſuch as have from thence received Authority and Inſtruction. He hath permitted and countenanced a Popiſh Hierarchy or Eccleſiaſtical Government to be eſtabliſhed in this Kingdom. By all which traitorous and malicious Practices this Church and Kingdom have been exceedingly indangered, and like to fall under the Tyranny of the Roman See.

The Seventh Additional Article.

That the ſaid Archbiſhop at ſeveral times within theſe ten Years laſt paſt, at Weſtminſter, and elſewhere within this Realm, contrary to the known Laws of this Land, hath endeavoured to advance Popery and Superſtition within the Realm: And for that end and purpoſe hath wittingly and willingly received, harboured, and relieved divers Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits; namely, one called Sancta Clara, alias Damport, a dangerous Perſon and Franciſcan Friar: who having written a Popiſh and Seditious Book, entitled, Deus, Natura, Gratia, wherein the Thirty nine Articles of the Church of England, eſtabliſhed by Act of Parliament, were much traduced and ſcandalized; the ſaid Archbiſhop had divers Conferences with him, while he was in writing the ſaid Book: and did alſo provide Maintenance and Entertainment for one Monſieur S. Giles, a Popiſh Prieſt, at Oxford, knowing him to be a Popiſh Prieſt.

I. The firſt Charge (they ſay) was to be laid as a Foundation; and it was, That I was generally reputed a Papiſt in Heart, both in Oxford, and ſince I came thence.

1. The firſt Witneſs for this was Dr. Featly. He ſays, There was ſuch an Opinion of me thirty Years ſince there. But he ſays he never heard any Popiſh Opinion maintained by me. So here's nothing of Knowledge. And if I ſhould ſay that above thirty Years ago there was an Opinion that Dr. Featly, then in Oxford, was a Puritan, this could make no Proof againſt him: Nor can his ſaying that I was reputed a Papiſt, make any Proof againſt me. He ſays farther, That one Mr. Ruſſel, who had been bred in St. John's College, told him in Paris, that I maintained ſome Catholick Opinions. Firſt, Mr. Nicolas would have it that this Mr. Ruſſel was my Scholar: But the whole College can witneſs it is not ſo; nor had he ever any relation to me in the leaſt degree. After his Father's Death he left the College, and went beyond-Sea; where the weak Man (for ſuch he was) loſt his Religion. Secondly, Dr. Featly ſays expreſly, that Mr. Ruſſel ſaid I was no Papiſt; which, for the Countenance of his own Charge, he would never have ſaid, had he thought me one. Thirdly, if he did ſay that I maintained ſome Catholick Opinions; yet he named none, by which there might be Tryal and Judgment whether they were ſuch or no, in the Senſe he meant them. Laſtly, Mr. Perkins, in his Reformed Catholick, ſets down divers Opinions in which they of Rome and we agree: Shall he be a Papiſt for this? Or ſhall not that which is lawful for him, be as lawful for me?

2. The ſecond Witneſs was one Harris. He ſays, That Mr. Ireland (who was ſome time Student of Chriſt-Church in Oxford, and after School-Maſter at Weſtminſter) told him that I would leave the Church of England. This is a bare Report from Mr. Ireland, with whom I never had any Acquaintance, nor was ſcarce in his Company twice in all my Life. Nor is it in my power to hinder what Mr. Ireland will ſay, or Mr. Harris from him. He ſays, That one that called himſelf Leander, came over on purpoſe to make this Reconciliation. If he did, (which is more than I know or believe) I think he would hardly make ſuch a one, as Harris is reported to be, acquainted with it. But howſoever, if he did come with that purpoſe, was it in my power to hinder his coming? And here is no Proof offered that I did help on his Purpoſe, or ſo much as know of it. He ſays he often petitioned me for Relief, but had none. It may be; I well knew he deſerved none: And your Lordſhips know that by Law I might not afford him any. Had I given him any, I ſhould now have heard it with both Ears. For I am informed he is a Prieſt, and condemned in a Præmunire, and was let out of Priſon on purpoſe to be a Witneſs againſt me. And having ſet that which is aforeſaid, under his Hand, is now ſlipped away, and gone. Who got him out of Priſon for this good purpoſe, I know not; but ſure ſomewhat there is in it, for your Lordſhips ſee his Teſtimony is now read, but he appears not.

3. The third Witneſs was Sir Nathaniel Brent, (now abſent, but came in the next day.). He ſays, I was eſteemed Popiſhly-affected in Oxford; and he gave three Inſtances very carefully, to prove it. The firſt was, That in the Divinity-School there, I maintained the Neceſſity of Baptiſm. I did ſo; and my Predeceſſor Archbiſhop Abbot was then Vice-Chancellor, and preſent, and approved my Opinion: and my Grace paſſed for my Degree to be Batchelor of Divinity, without any one Man's oppoſition. He ſays, That Mr. Dale of Merton-College then ſhewed him all my Suppoſition taken out of Bellarmine. This is a bold and a dangerous Oath: He might ſwear that Mr. Dale ſhewed him in Bellarmine, that which he ſaid was my Suppoſition; but that he ſhewed him all my Suppoſition there, is a ſtrange Oath for a Man of Learning and Law to make, in ſuch a Preſence. Beſides, I have my Suppoſition, which I then made, yet by me; and if my Tenet of that Queſtion be the ſame with Bellarmine's, or that there be any Line taken out of him, but what I cite for my own advantage againſt him, I will utterly forfeit my Reputation of any Learning to your Lordſhips. His ſecond Inſtance was, That I was acquainted with one Mr. Brown, Fellow of Corpus-Chriſti-College in Oxford, who was ſuſpected to be a Papiſt, and after his death proved to be one, by a Book that was found in his Study, proving that a Man might be a Roman Catholick, and yet go to Church, and conform in England. I was acquainted with this Man; he was a very good Scholar and an honeſt Man, and a good Proteſtant, for ought I know. For the Tract found after his death among his Papers, that's no Proof: for Scholars get all the Papers they can, eſpecially ſuch as belong to their own Profeſſion. And the more ſtrange the Opinions are, the more do they labour to get them. Nor is it any Proof that the Tract was of his making, becauſe written in his own Hand, as 'tis urged. For the Argument being ſo foul and dangerous, it could not be ſafe for him, nor any way fit, to commit it to any other to write for him. Nor is there any Proof that I knew he had ſuch a Tract by him; neither indeed did I. The Opinion is very baſe and unworthy, and was firſt broached by the Jeſuit Azorius, and it ſeems ſome of the Fellows had inlarged him, and made this Tract out of his Principles. His third Inſtance was, That I petitioned King James in this buſineſs. I was complained of to King James by a great Perſon, That I had inward Acquaintance with this Man. Hereupon, my waiting Month being June, and not long after the Complaint made, I took occaſion in my firſt Sermon to confute this Opinion, and then petitioned his Majeſty that it might be examined, that ſuch an Imputation might not lie upon me. His Majeſty referred it to the Lord Archbiſhop of ' Canterbury, Biſhops of London, Winchester, and Dureſm; where after full Examination I was acquitted.

Inſtit. Moral. p. 1. l. 8. c. 27.

' Abbot, King, Mountague, Niele.

II. The Second Charge was, that the ſame Opinion was held of me beyond the Seas, That I was a cunning Promoter of the Roman Cauſe. And here the Witneſſes are the ſame, which were produced before; Mr. Challoner, who told over his old Tale again of I know not what Plot he heard from a Jeſuit: nothing but Hearſay at the beſt. And it ſavours like an Almanack de poſt facto, 'or 'rather of ſomewhat elſe, which I will ſpare to 'name, becauſe he is upon his Oath.' The other Witneſs is Mr. Anthony Mildmay, who alſo tells over his old Tale of his Father Fitton. But he was out of the way again, and appeared not till the next day, with Sir Nathaniel Brent. So here's a Repetition again of the ſame Witneſſes, and the ſame things, to multiply the noiſe. 'Only noble 'Sir Henry Mildmay appeared not the ſecond time; 'but whether it were becauſe he had enough at 'his firſt appearance, or whether his Face was 'ſcratched then (as ſince Men ſay it was) I can-'not tell.'

III. The Third Charge was, That I had a damnable Plot, to reconcile the Church of England with the Church of Rome. If to reconcile them with the Maintenance of Idolatry, it were a damnable Plot indeed. But if Chriſtian Truth and Peace might meet and unite together, all Chriſtendom over, were that a Sin too? Were I able to plot and effect ſuch a Reconciliation, I would think myſelf moſt happy, whatever I ſuffered for it. But how is this damnable Plot proved? Pope Gregory writ a Letter to his Nuncio in Spain, and a Letter alſo to King Charles; which Letter is printed: Copies of theſe Letters were found in my Study. Could I hinder the Pope from writing to whom he pleaſed? Shall not I get Copies of any Letters I can, to ſee what practiſing is abroad for private Intereſt? Shall it be lawful for all my Predeceſſors to get and keep Copies of ſuch Letters by them, and ſhall it be unlawful for me only? And here I produced Mr. Dobſon, an antient Servant to my Predeceſſors, who witneſſed that Archbiſhop Bancroft had ſtore of them, and kept them all his time. Nor do I know, how this Charge can fall upon me: for there is no one word in any of the Letters produced, that reflects upon me, or any Plot of mine. Nor indeed had I ever any ſuch to reflect upon.

IV. The Fourth Charge is, That I had a hand in the Plot for ſending the King, when he was Prince, into Spain, to be perverted in his Religion. They follow their Proof of this out of my Diary: And they begin with my Friendſhip with the Lord Duke of Buckingham, who waited on the Prince in this Journey. And firſt they urged my Diary at June 9. 1622. where I mention, that there were then Particulars, which are not for Paper. But the Words, which lead theſe in, were his Entrance upon a near Reſpect to me, the particular Expreſſions whereof were not for Paper: Nor Word, nor Thought, of either Plot or Popery. Then they urged June 15. 1622. where 'tis ſaid, that I became C. that is, Confeſſor to the Lord Duke. Firſt, If my Lord Duke would honour me ſo much as to make me his Confeſſor, as I know no Sin in it, ſo is it abundantly proof, that the Paſſages before mentioned were not for Paper. Should I venture them ſo, there's never a Perſon of Honour preſent, but would think me moſt unworthy of that Truſt. Next, they preſſed June 13. 1623. where I confeſs, that I received Letters from my Lord Duke out of Spain. I did ſo; and I then held it great honour to me, and do ſo ſtill. But then, and long before, it was known to all Men whither he was gone, and with whom; nay, it was commonly known to all Men of Quality hereabout within three or four days: And till it was ſo commonly known, I knew it not. Yea, but then they inforced out of Febr. 17. 162⅔. That the Prince and the Marquiſs of Buckingham ſet forward very ſecretly for Spain. And Febr. 21. That I writ to his Lordſhip into Spain. 'Tis true, they went away that Day, and very ſecretly; but I neither did, nor could ſet it down, till afterwards that I came to know it. And then ſo ſoon as I came to know it, which was about the 21ſt, I did write. To theſe was cunningly (how honeſtly let all the World judge) pieced a Paſſage out of a Letter of mine to Biſhop Hall. But that Letter was read, at my humble Motion to the Lords, and the Date of it was in 1634. So, many Years after this Buſineſs of Spain. And the Paſſage mentioned, was only about King James's manner of defending the Pope to be Antichriſt, and how he ſalved it while the Prince was in Spain. But King James related it after. Nor could any Words of that Letter be drawn to the King's going thither, much leſs to any knowledge I had of it.

V. The Fifth Charge was concerning his Majeſty's Match with France. And here again they urge my Diary at Mar. 11. 1625. That the Duke of Buckingham was then and there employed. And at May 19. & 29. That I then writ Letters to him. Firſt, My Lords, I hold it my great honour, that my Lord Duke would write to me, and give me leave to write to him. Secondly, I have committed ſome Error in theſe Letters, or none. If none, why are they charged? If any, why are they not produced, that I may ſee what it is, and anſwer it?

VI. The Sixth Charge was, That I was an Inſtrument of the Queen's. This they endeavoured to prove by my Diary in three places. Firſt, at Aug. 30. 1634. Upon occaſion of ſome Service done, ſhe was graciouſly pleaſed to give me leave to have immediate Acceſs unto her, when I had occaſion. This is true, and I moſt humbly thanked her Majeſty for it: for I very well knew what belonged to Addreſſes at ſecond hand in Court. But what Crime is in this, that the Queen was pleaſed to give me Acceſs unto her, when I had occaſion? Here's no word of Religion. Secondly, at May 18. 1635. where 'tis ſaid, That I gave her Majeſty an account of ſome thing committed to me. If her Majeſty ſent or ſpake to me to do any thing, as it ſeems ſhe did, ſhall I want ſo much Duty as to give her an account of it? So belike I muſt be unmannerly with her Majeſty, or lie open to no leſs than a Charge of High Treaſon. Thirdly, at April 3. 1639. 'tis made a great matter, That I ſhould then diſpatch a great Buſineſs for the Queen, which I underſtood ſhe would not move for herſelf: and that for this her Majeſty gave me great Thanks. Mr. Nicolas's Inference upon this was, That they conceive wherefore. But his Conceit makes no Evidence: he muſt not only conceive, but prove wherefore, before it can work any thing againſt me. As for Religion, as there is no word of it in my Diary, ſo neither was it at this time thought on. Her Majeſty would therein have moved for herſelf: But it ſeems it muſt be a Crime if I be but civil and dutiful towards the Queen, though it be but thrice mentioned in ſo many Years.

VII. The Seventh Charge was, That I forbad Miniſters praying for the Queen's Converſion, and puniſhed others. The firſt Witneſs, Mr. Ratcliff, ſays, That Sir Nath. Brent gave it in charge at Bow-Church in my Viſitation. The more to blame he, if ſo he did. Yea, but he ſays, it was by my Command delivered unto him by Sir John Lambe. Was it ſo? How doth Mr. Ratcliff know that? he doth not expreſs. He was not preſent, when I ſpake with Sir John Lambe. And if Sir Nath. Brent told him of it, 'tis but Hearſay. And Sir Nath. having been ſo ready a Witneſs againſt me, why is he not examined to this Particular? And as for the Paper which was ſhewed, it appears plainly there, that it was no Paper of Inſtructions ſent to my Viſitors by me, but of particular Informations to me: of which one was, That the Queen was prayed for in a very factious and ſcandalous way. And this appeared, when that Paper was read. And this I referred to my Viſitors, as I not only might, but ought: not forbidding the Prayers, but the ſcandalous manner of them. The ſecond Witneſs was Mr. Pryn; who ſays, That one Mr. Jones was puniſhed for praying for the Queen. He was puniſhed in the High-Commiſſion for ſcandalous abuſing the Queen, under a Form of praying for her, and for divers other Articles that were againſt him. 'And this Anſwer I gave to 'Mr. Brown, who forgot not this in ſumming up 'my Charge.'

VIII. The Eighth Charge was, That I puniſhed Men for praying to preſerve the Prince. No, God forbid. The High-Commiſſion-Book was ſhewed, and that there in the Year 1634, one Mr. Howe was cenſured for it. I got this Act of the High-Commiſſion to be read to the Lords: His Prayer went thus, That God would preſerve the Prince in the true Religion, of which there was cauſe to fear. Could this Prayer have any other Operation upon the People, than to make them think his Majeſty was careleſs in the Education of the Prince, eſpecially in point of Religion? And this was ſo grievous and graceleſs a Scandal caſt upon a Religious King, as nothing could be greater. Upon the matter, it was the ſhew of a Prayer for the Prince, but was indeed to deſtroy the King in the Hearts of his People. And had I not there conſented to his Puniſhment, I had deſerved to be puniſhed myſelf. 'Mr. Brown, when he repeated the Sum of 'the Evidence, laid this Charge upon me, but 'ſpake not one word (to my remembrance) of 'this Anſwer given to it.'

IX. The Ninth Charge, That I did extol Queen Mary's days. The Proof for it was taken out of the Preface to the Statutes of the Univerſity of Oxford. I took a great deal of pains about thoſe Statutes, and might juſtly have expected Thanks for it, not ſuch an Accuſation. But as for the Preface, it was made and printed at Oxford: I meddled not with it. I could truſt the Univerſity with little, if not with the making of a Preface. If they have done any thing amiſs in it, let them anſwer it. The Paſſage was about certain Offers made to amend thoſe confuſed old Statutes, both in Edward VI's and Queen Mary's days; but no effect came of the pains then taken, Recruduit Labor, ſays the Preface. So that this I can anſwer for them: There's not a word ſpoken of Religion, but of Manners only, and that as much in relation to the Times of Princes following, as hers. For the words, to my remembrance, are Interim optandæ Temporum Fœlicitate, &c. And that Interim cannot be reſtrained to Queen Mary's days only, but muſt include the whole Interim, or middle diſtance of Time, to that preſent in which I ſettled the Body of their Statutes; that is, all Queen Elizabeth's and King James's days, which I think no Man can deny was Optanda Temporum Fœlicitas.

X. Here Mr. Nicolas confeſſed there was no downright Proof againſt me. That was his Phraſe:

But he added, that was not to be expected in ſuch a Work of Darkneſs. Then he produced a Paper found in my Study, printed at Rome. So were divers of my Books printed there: what of this? They may print what they will at Rome, I cannot hinder it: and I may have and keep whatever they print, no Law forbidding it. Then he ſhewed a Letter ſent unto me from Mr. Graves. The Gentleman is at this preſent Fellow of Merton-College in Oxford, a great Traveller, and a Man of great Worth. As far as I remember, his Letter came to me from Alexandria. It was fit to be ſent, and kindly received; as by me it was. I deſired it might be read. Then were mentioned Sir William Boſwell's Letters, and the Papers ſent by Andreas ab Habernfeld, about a great Plot to deſtroy the King and Religion, and that I concealed theſe Papers. 'I might have been amazed at the Impu-'dence of this Charge above all the reſt: Diaboli 'Impudentia, the Devil's Impudence, S. Aug. Epiſt. 167. 'and no leſs, as St. Auguſtine ſpeaks 'in another Caſe.' Did I conceal theſe Papers? Firſt, the ſame Day that I received them, I ſent them by an Expreſs to his Majeſty. I had a ſpeedy Anſwer from his Majeſty, and that I returned with equal ſpeed to his Majeſty's Agent Sir William Boſwell, as I was commanded. And this Mr. Pryn and Mr. Nicolas knew: For Mr. Pryn took all theſe Letters and Papers from me, when he ſearched me at the Tower; and out of them made his Book called (a) Rome's Maſter-piece: excepting the Slanders, which he hath juggled in of his own. So ſoon as his Majeſty came home, I humbly beſought him, that he would be pleaſed to appoint a time, and call ſome Lords to him, to hear and examine the Buſineſs; and this Examination continued till I was committed. What was after done, I cannot account for. Beſides, my Lords, it appears by thoſe Papers, that my Life was ſought for, becauſe I would not give way to the Change of Religion; and Mr. Pryn himſelf hath printed this: and yet now Mr. Nicolas, from his Teſtimony, preſſes theſe Papers againſt me. But the King, and the Lords, and both Secretaries of State then preſent, can witneſs, that I took all the care and pains above-mentioned, to have it ſifted to the bottom. 'Notwithſtanding 'all this, Mr. Nicolas falls upon this Plot again 'upon the next Day of my Hearing, as if nothing 'had been ſaid unto it: and was ſo ſhameleſs, as 'to ſay, That I followed this Buſineſs ſo long as I 'thought the Plot was againſt the Puritans; but 'ſo ſoon as I found it was againſt the Papiſts, I 'kept it ſecret, till Mr. Pryn diſcovered it in his 'Search of my Papers. Where, Firſt, there's no 'word in all the Papers to make me or any Man 'think the Puritans were concerned in it. And 'Secondly, I did not ſleep upon the Receipt of 'theſe Papers, till I had ſent them to his Ma-'jeſty. But I had reaſon to keep the Papers as 'ſafe as I could, conſidering how much they 'juſtify me againſt theſe foul Calumnies put up-'on me.'

XI. Then followed the Charge of Sancta Clara's Book, alias Monſieur St. Giles: ſo they expreſſed it; and I muſt follow the way they lead me.

1. Firſt then they charge, That I had often Conference with him, while he was writing his Book, intitled, Deus, Natura, Gratia. No, he never came to me, till he was ready to print that Book. Then ſome Friends of his brought him to me. His Suit then was, That he might print that Book here. Upon Speech with him, I found the Scope of his Book to be ſuch, as that the Church of England would have little cauſe to thank him for it: and ſo abſolutely denied it. Nor did he ever come more at me after this, but twice or thrice at moſt, when he made great Friends to me, that he might print another Book, to prove that Biſhops are by Divine Right. My Anſwer then was, That I did not like the way which the Church of Rome went, in the Caſe of Epiſcopacy. And howſoever, that I would never give way, that any ſuch Book ſhould be printed here from the Pen of a Romaniſt; and that the Biſhops of England were able to defend their own Cauſe and Calling, without calling in Aid from Rome, and would in due time. Maintenance he never had any from me, nor did I then know him to be a Prieſt. Nor was there any Proof ſo much as offered in contrary to any of this.

2. Secondly, They did ſpecially except againſt a Paſſage in the Licenſer, and another at the end of the Book. The Book was printed at Lyons, where I could not hinder the printing, either of the whole, or any part. This might have been ſomething, had I licenſed it here; but that I conſtantly denied.

3. Thirdly, They produced a Letter written to me from Venice, by one Mr. Middleton, Chaplain there to the Right Honourable the now Earl of Denbigh, his Majeſty's Ambaſſador. Therein he writes, That S. Clara was Homo nequiſſimus, and that one Monſieur S. Giles was the Author of that Book. That Clara and S. Giles were the ſame Perſon, is but Mr. Middleton's Opinion. Such News as he there heard, ſome true, ſome falſe, he thought fit to write unto me: and he being abſent, here's no proof upon Oath, that they are one and the ſame Perſon. And I hope a young Man's Letter from Venice, or any other place, ſignifying only ſuch things as he hears, ſhall not ſtand for good Evidence in a Caſe of Life. And he was mainly deceived in this Particular, as appears, Firſt, Becauſe what Clara is, I know not: but Monſieur St. Giles is a great Scholar, and a ſober Man; and one that gave the late Lord Brooke ſo good Content, that he allow'd him One Hundred Pound a Year during his Life. Secondly, Becauſe 'tis commonly known that Clara is an Engliſhman, and St. Giles a Frenchman born and bred.

'Thirdly, Becauſe their own Arti- The 7th Additional.
'cle, upon which they bring this 'Charge, acknowledges them two
'diſtinct Perſons. Fourthly, Becauſe both Mr.
'Pryn and Mr. Nicolas had Monſieur S. Giles before 'them in Examination, and could not but know
'him to be a Frenchman: as appears by a Warrant
'given to him by Mr. Pryn, to ſecure him after his 'Examination; which Warrant follows in theſe
'words:

'THESE are to certify thoſe whom it may concern,
'That the Committee of the Houſe of Commons,

(a) This Book was publiſhed by Pryn in the Year 1643, in five Sheets in Quarto. A Copy whereof being by his Endeavours conveyed to the Archbiſhop, then a Priſoner in the Tower, the Archbiſhop wrote Notes in the Margin of it, ſo far, and ſo much, as to vindicate himſelf from the Aſperſions laid upon him therein. This Copy, with the ſaid Notes, is now in the hands of that knowing and learned Antiquary Mr. Anthony Wood; which having been by him communicated to me, I have, with his leave, tranſcribed the Archbiſhop's Notes, and cauſed them to be adjoined to theſe Papers concerning the Plot diſcovered by Andrew ab Habernfeld, reprinted in this Collection. H. W.

'appointed

'appointed to proſecute the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, 'have examined and received Satisfaction from Mon-'ſieur S. Giles, a Domeſtick Servant to the Reſident of 'Venice; and therefore he is no farther to be examined 'or moleſted concerning the ſame.

'This Licence came to my hands ſince my an-'ſwering was paſt, ſo I could not then ſhew it. 'Monſieur S. Giles was never the Man that gave 'me notice of any of this, not ſo much as that he 'had been examined; but my Secretary Mr. Dell 'came to hear of it by chance, and went to him, 'and had this Copy (with ſome Labour) from him, 'and will make oath it is a true Copy. This is 'not the thankfulleſt Part that ever S. Giles played, 'conſidering my Carriage towards him.'

4. Then they charged upon Monſieur S. Giles directly, That I knew him to be a Prieſt, and yet maintained him at Oxford. The (a) Caſe was this: Mr. S. Giles was in good Place about the Queen's Majeſty at her firſt coming: Here he did ſo good Services to this State, that he loſt himſelf in France, and durſt not go thither when the French were ſent away. All this while the Man was unknown to me, till his Majeſty one day at St. James's told me this, and that he was a Prieſt, and that it lay upon him in Honour to allow him ſome Maintenance, and preſcribed me a way how to order it, that he might receive One Hundred Marks a Year as from him; and gave me charge, if the Penſion were at any time behind, I ſhould acquaint him with it. After this Mr. S. Giles, by his Friends, petition'd his Majeſty, that being a Stranger, he might live in Oxford, to have the uſe of the Library there, being reſolved to meddle no more with the Controverſies of the Time, but to apply himſelf to Metaphyſical Learning. His Majeſty was deſirous to have him plac'd in ſome College, to ſave Charges: But this I moſt humbly deprecated, becauſe it might be dangerous to the Youth there, and ſcandalous to his Majeſty, the Church, and the Univerſity; and dangerous to my ſelf, being Chancellor: to the reſt I ſubmitted. So he was left to place himſelf in ſome Town-Houſe, as he could: And for this his Majeſty gave me his Warrant, which Mr. Pryn, in his Search, took from me. But here follows the true Copy of it.

'Charles Rex.

'CAnterbury, Mr. S. Giles by ſerving Us and this 'State, hath loſt all his Hopes in France, and 'deſires to ſpend his time here at his private Studies. 'I would have you think upon ſome way for his Main-'tenance, and to place him in Oxford, that he may 'have uſe of that Library, which he much deſires. And 'you may ſo order it, that his Profeſſion in Religion may 'do no harm.'

And according to this Direction of his Majeſty I did take order, but with aſſurance from himſelf, and with Spies upon him there, beſides the ſpecial Care of the Vice-Chancellor, that he ſhould not converſe with young Students, nor exerciſe his Prieſtly Office, nor do any thing againſt the Laws. Nor did I ever hear that he failed in any of theſe Aſſumptions.

5. Then they produced one Mr. Broad, who teſtified, That while S. Giles lived at Oxford, ſome Doctors came to him. Doctors were able to deal well enough with him; but all Reſort of young Scholars was forbidden. He ſays farther, That Mr. S. Giles ſhould ſay, That the Biſhops of England were cordially of his Religion, but that he feared their Rigidneſs would ſpoil all. Firſt, This is but a Report of his Speech. Secondly, Why was not S. Giles at his Examination asked, whether he ſaid it or no? And if he did, what Ground he had for it? At the moſt, it was but his Opinion of the Biſhops, who were never the more cordial to Popery for his thinking ſo. 'And Thirdly, I 'doubt it appears by this time, that all is over-'thrown, or near it, not by the Rigidneſs, but 'by Over-Remiſſneſs of ſome Biſhops, who never 'would believe any Danger could come from the 'Godly, as they were called.'

6. Laſtly, What's the reaſon of this great Endeavour, upon nothing but News in a Letter, to make Clara and Mr. S. Giles to be one and the ſame Man? 'Doubtleſs, nothing but an Hydropical Thirſt 'after my Blood.' For Reſort of Prieſts to Lambeth, was uſual in both my laſt Predeceſſors times, Bancroft's and Abbot's; and ſome lay in the Houſe and had Relief. This was proved to the Lords by two antient Servants of that Houſe: Neither of which have been done in my time. Archbiſhop Abbot made a Warrant (this Warrant was ſhewed) to ſecure Mr. Preſton an Engliſh Prieſt, upon a 'Command of King James: Why may not I a French one, by the Warrant of King Charles? King James juſtified Biſhop Bancroft for doing this, when he was Biſhop of London, and no Privy-Counſellor: And may not I do it, being Archbiſhop and Privy-Counſellor, with as much Privity of the King and the State, as he did? But to let theſe paſs, why ſhould I ſay here was a Thirſt for Blood? I'll tell you why? The Statute of 27 Eliz. makes it Felony without Benefit of Clergy, to maintain or relieve any Romiſh Prieſt born in England, or any other of her Majeſty's Dominions, knowing him to be ſuch. Now they had laid their Article, That I had given Maintenance to one Monſieur S. Giles, a Popiſh Prieſt at Oxford, knowing him to be ſuch. But when, upon Examination of S. Giles, they found him to be a Frenchman, and ſo not within the Statute; (as the words of that Statute are moſt plain, and ſo is Sir Edw. Coke's Judgment upon them; both which I then read to the Lords:) I ſay, when they ſaw this, then they caſt about how to make (b) S. Clara and Mr. S. Giles to be one Man. And though they could find no Shadow of Proof of a thing that is not, but a Letter of News from Venice; yet againſt their own Knowledge and Conſcience, they give that in Evidence to reach my Life any way.

Here Mr. Nicolas, ſo ſoon as he had diſcovered whither I tended, would have broken me off, ſaying, They did not urge it for that now, they were not yet come to it. I replied, if they came to it after, I would be at the pains to anſwer again: But ſince it concerned my Life, I would not ſlip

(a) The Archbiſhop related this Caſe more at large, and therewith defended himſelf in a written Paper; which being ſeized by Pryn in the Tower, was now produced and read before the Lords. It may be found in Pryn's Compl. Hiſt. p. 428. H. W.

(b) After all, Pryn would inſinuate, that S. Giles was the ſame Man with Sancta Clara, and wrote the Book, entitled, Deus, Natura, & Gratia, although he fully knew the contrary, Compl. it now, nor leave it unanſwered in any Circumſtance. So I went on, but they never mentioned it after; and by this way meant certainly to have involved me within the Law, Clara being an Engliſhman born. 'God of his Mercy grant, that 'this Thirſt after my Blood lie not too heavy a-'nother day upon their Souls. Mr. Brown, in 'ſumming up the Charge, fell upon this alſo. I 'made a brief Anſwer out of that which is afore 'ſaid: Yet after, in his Reply, he fell upon this 'Letter of Mr. Middleton's, and cites his News 'for Evidence, That S. Clara and Mr. S. Giles were 'the ſame Man: Which I much wonder ſo able 'and grave a Man as he is, ſhould ſwallow from 'Mr. Pryn, who doubtleſs (being preſent) was 'angry to ſee himſelf ſo laid open in the Houſe 'of Commons.'

XII. At laſt came in the laſt Charge of this Day, That a Cardinal's Hat was offer'd unto me. My Diary quoted for this, at Aug. 4. & 21. 1633. I could hinder no Offer, unleſs I could propheſy what each Man came about, and ſo ſhun them. But why is not my Anſwer, there ſet down, expreſſed too? My Anſwer was, That ſomewhat dwelt in me, which would not ſuffer me to accept that, till Rome were other than now it is. Beſides, I went preſently to his Majeſty, and acquainted him with it; which is all that * the Law requires at my hands. And his Majeſty very prudently and religiouſly (yet in a calm way, the Perſons offering it, having relation to ſome Ambaſſador) freed me ſpeedily of that, both Trouble and Danger. They urged farther out of the Papers of Andreas ab Habernfield (which Mr. Pryn took from me in his Search) That Signior Con had power to offer me a Cardinal's Hat. The words which they cite, are (for I could never get ſight of thoſe Papers ſince) Mandatum habuit offerre, ſed non obtulit. What Power he had to make me ſuch an Offer, I know not; but themſelves confeſs he did not offer it. Nor had I ever any Speech with him during all the time he ſtaid here. I was ſollicited as much by honourable Friends to give him admittance to me at Lambeth, with Aſſurance he ſhould ſpeak nothing about Religion, as ever I had about any thing in my Life. I ſtill refuſed, and could not perſuade my ſelf to do other; and yet could not but inwardly (in Verbo Sacerdotis, this is true) condemn my ſelf of groſs Incivility for refuſing; for which yet now I ſee I am much bound to God for that Unmannerlineſs. Had I held a Correſpondence with him, though never ſo innocent, where had I now been? Beſides, I would not have it forgotten, that if to offer a Cardinal's Hat, or any like thing, ſhall be a ſufficient Cauſe to make a Man guilty of Treaſon, it ſhall be in the power of any Romaniſt to make any Engliſh Biſhop a Traytor when he pleaſes: a Miſchief not to be indured. And thus this long and tedious Day ended; and I had order to attend again on July 24. which I did accordingly.

* Sir Ed. Coke, L. 3. Inſtit. c. 3.

The Nineteenth Day of my Hearing.

I. MOnday, July 24. 1644. This Day they went on with the ſame Article: And the firſt Charge was, my denying the Pope to be Antichriſt. The Proofs, the Alteration of the Clauſe in the Letters Patents for the Palatinate, and the Letters between Biſhop Hall and me. Theſe Proofs are anſwer'd before, and repeated here only to make a noiſe. Nor did I in any of theſe deny the Pope to be Antichriſt: For, to forbear that word, for ſome both Temporal and Eccleſiaſtical Reſpects, is one thing; and to deny the Thing it ſelf, is another.

II. The ſecond conſiſts of a great many Particulars, and moſt of them urged before, repeated only to help to make the Ignorant clamorous and wild againſt me. God forgive them this Practice.

1. The firſt Particular was Shelford's Book: The whole Book. And Mr. Pryn very gravely ſaid, That this Book and the other two following, were found in my Study. Is he not yet aſhamed of this Argument? May I have no Book in my Study, but I muſt be of the ſame Judgment with the Author in all things? The Author is altogether unknown to me; the Book was licenſed at Cambridge: ſo nothing faulty in me, but the having of the Book in my Study.

2. The ſecond was Dr. Heylin's Book againſt Mr. Burton. This Book was printed by my Command (they ſay) and in it is a Paſſage for Abſolute Obedience to Kings, p. 229. This was before alſo. And I did command the printing of the Book, but gave no Warrant to put any thing unjuſtifiable into it. This Paſſage I cauſed to be read to the Lords; and the Doctor there ſays no more than what he learned of King James in the Conference at Hampton-Court. But if any thing be amiſs, he is ready to anſwer it: But I find not one word in him, that this Abſolute Obedience ought to be in any thing that is againſt Law. 'That's 'one of Mr. Nicolas's Stretches.'

3. The third Particular is Biſhop Mountague's Appeal, p. 141. But nothing hence charged upon me, but only, that the Book was found in my Study. I would Mr. Pryn could find any Books there now.

4. The fourth was, That divers Books of like nature were licenſed by my Chaplains. But none was of all they then named, but Dr. Heylin's and Sales, of which your Lordſhips have heard the Plot how it came to be licenſed. And for Dr. Heylin, he is ready to make all good, which he hath therein done.

5. The fifth Particular is, That the Homilies which are authorized in the Church of England, make the Pope Antichriſt, p. 216. And the Babyloniſh Beaſt of Rome, p. 316. But, Firſt, this is nothing againſt me, till it be proved, (which yet is not done) That I have poſitively denied the Pope to be Antichriſt. And, Secondly, I do not conceive, that the Article of the Church of England, which confirms the Homilies, doth alſo confirm every Phraſe that is in them. Nor, Thirdly, do I conceive, that the Homilies in thoſe Places which are cited, do make the Pope the great Antichriſt. For, in the firſt place, the Words are, to the beating down of Sin, Death, the Pope, the Devil, and all the Kingdom of Antichriſt: Which Words cannot poſſibly imply, that the Pope is that Antichriſt. In the ſecond place, he is only called the Babylonical Beaſt of Rome; which Phraſe doth not neceſſarily ſignify the great Antichriſt. For the Beaſt ſo often mentioned in the Revelation (Chap. 11. 7.) is no where called the Babylonical Beaſt of Rome. And if that Beaſt do ſtand for the great Antichriſt, (I ſay If, becauſe thoſe Scriptures are very dark) then † the Beaſt is primarily the Roman Empire in the Judgment of the Geneva Noters. 'And 'that there ſhould be two great Antichriſts, is more 'than any Man hath yet ſaid. Here Mr. Nicolas 'was up again with Pander to the Whore of Babylon, 'and his other foul Language; not remembring 'all this while, (which yet I was loth to mind him 'of) that one of his zealous Witneſſes againſt the 'Whore of Babylon, and all her Superſtitions, got 'all his Means (which are great) by being a Pan-'der to other leud Women; and loved the Buſi-'neſs it ſelf ſo well, as that he was (not long ſince, 'Men ſay) taken in Bed with one of his Wife's 'Maids. Good Mr. Nicolas, do not diſpenſe with 'all Whores, ſave the Whore of Babylon.'

6. The ſixth Particular was the Articles of Ireland, which call the Pope the Man of Sin. But the Articles of Ireland bind neither this Church, nor me. And ſome learned Proteſtants do not underſtand that noted place of the Apoſtle, 2 Theſſ. 2. as meant of Antichriſt or the Pope.

7. The ſeventh and laſt Particular is a Repetition of Sancta Clara and Mr. St. Giles, and the Letter of News, (which were News indeed) to make them one Man; though this were anſwered at large but the laſt Day: and Sir Ed. Hungerford's Teſtimony brought up again. It's a ſign Mr. Nicolas hath indeed no downright Proof, (as he ſaid before) that ſo tumbles up and down in repeating the ſame Things.

III. The third Charge is, That I ſay in my [1] Book that the Religion of the Church of Rome and ours is all one. This is ſpoken only in oppoſition to other Religions, in regard of Chriſtianity. The Words are, Nor do the Church of Rome and the Proteſtants ſet up a different Religion; for the Chriſtian Religion is the ſame to both, &c. And the like Paſſage to this is in my [2] Speech in the Star-Chamber. And theſe Paſſages were read to the Lords. So that either Papiſts muſt be denied to be Chriſtians, or elſe this Charge can work nothing againſt me.

IV. The fourth Charge is out of Chouneus's Book, p. 45, & 46. licenſed by my Chaplain Dr. Braye; where (they ſay) 'tis ſaid, That Rome is a true Church, and differs not in Fundamentals. And that at the High-Commiſſion, when this Book was queſtion'd by ſome, I did ſay, That the Church of Rome and the Proteſtants did not differ in Fundamentals, but in Circumſtances. And this latter part was teſtified by Mr. Burton and one Mr. Lane, who ſaid they were preſent. Firſt, Suppoſe this be falſe, and that they do differ in Fundamentals; yet this then is but my Error in Divinity, no Practice to overthrow Religion. Secondly, I ſuppoſe, if I did ſo ſay, I did not err: For the Foundation of Chriſtian Religion are the Articles of the Creed; and the Church of Rome denies no one of them. Therefore there is no Difference in the Fundamentals. If they of Rome differ in Expoſition of ſome of theſe, that muſt needs be a Superſtructure upon or beſide the Article, not the Article or Foundation it ſelf. Nor did I follow my own Judgment herein, but (a) Calvin's; who ſays expreſly, That in deſpight of Antichriſt, the Foundations of the Church remain'd in the Papacy it ſelf, that the Church might not wholly periſh. And this Paſſage was then read to the Lords. Thirdly, Theſe two learned Wineſſes (as they would be reputed) are quite miſtaken in their very Terms: For they report me, as if I ſaid, Not in Fundamentals, but in Circumſtantials; whereas theſe are not Membra oppoſita, [3] but Fundamentals and Superſtructures, which may ſway quite beſide the Foundation. And this, though not the only, yet is a main Failing in the Roman Fabrick; in which many Things are built upon unwarrantable Tradition, as is expreſſed in my [4] Book at large, and their many Superſtitions named: and that Paſſage read alſo to the Lords. For though they differ not in the prime Foundations, [5] yet they in many things grate cloſe upon them, and in ſome things fall beſide them, to no ſmall hazard of their own Souls. As for Circumſtantials, it ſeems theſe Men have forgotten, or never knew, that many times Circumſtantials in Religion do quite deſtroy the Foundation. For Example: The Circumſtances are theſe; Quis? Quid? Ubi? Quibus Auxiliis? Quomodo? Quando?

[5] Cont. Fiſher, §. 37. nu. 6. p. 320.

1. Quid? What a Man believes; and that contains Fundamentals, and in the firſt place,

2. Ubi? Place, a mere Circumſtance; yet to deny that Chriſt took our Fleſh of the Bleſſed Virgin, and that in Judea, denies the Foundation, and is flat Judaiſm.

3. Quibus Auxiliis? By what Helps a Man believes, and in ſome meaſure obeys as he is commanded? For to believe that a Man doth this by the Strength of Nature only, and not by Aid and Aſſiſtance of Grace, is with the Pelagian to deny the Foundation, and to overthrow the Grace of Chriſt.

4. Quando? When? That's Time, a mere Circumſtance: Yet to deny that Chriſt is already come in the Fleſh, denies the Foundation utterly, and is flat Judaiſm, and an inſeparable Badge of the great Antichriſt, 1 John 4. 3. And in the caſe of the Reſurrection, to ſay 'tis paſt already, (which is Time) St. Paul tells us, 2 Tim. 2. 18. is no leſs than the Overthrow of Faith. And the Rule is general, That ſome [1] Circumſtances, dant Speciem, give the very Kind and Form to a moral Action. 'This for 'their Ignorance: But for the Ma-'lice of their Oath, I leave them to 'God's Mercy. Here Mr. Brown, 'when he ſummed up the Evidence 'againſt me, fell upon this; and ſaid, 'That when I gave divers Inſtances what dange-'rous Errors Circumſtances did ſometimes breed 'in Religion, I gave no Inſtance in any Point of 'Popery. But to this I anſwered, Firſt, That it was 'not material what Inſtances I made, ſo I was able 'to make ſome. Secondly, That it was not poſ-'ſible for me, or perhaps a readier Man, to have 'all Inſtances ſo preſent with his Memory. Thirdly, 'If an Inſtance in Popery, rank Popery, will ſerve 'the turn, you may take it in Tranſubſtantiation. 'That is either a Fundamental Point, or it is 'not: If it be not fundamental, why did the 'Papiſt put the Proteſtant to death for it? And 'why did the Proteſtant ſuffer death? If it be 'fundamental, (as it ſeems by both ſides it was 'accounted) it is upon the bare Circumſtance

'of Quomodo, how Chriſt is preſent in the Sacra-

As for that which was ſaid in the Beginning of this Charge, That Rome is a True Church: I ever did, and ever muſt grant it, that ſuch it is, Veritate Entis, in the Truth of its Entity and Being. For, as I have ſaid againſt [a] Fiſher, Ens & Verum, Being and True are convertible one with another. And every Thing that hath a Being, is truly that Being which it is in Truth of Subſtance. But a Right or an Orthodox Church I never ſaid it was, either in Doctrine or Manners. As a Thief is a true Man in Verity of his Eſſence, that is, he is a Creature indued with Reaſon: But it doth not therefore follow and that he is a true Man, Veritate Moris, in his Life and Converſation. 'And this I anſwered firſt to the 'Lords, and after to Mr. Brown's ſummary Charge; 'who in his laſt Reply ſaid two Things: Firſt, 'That when I ſaid Rome was a True Church, I 'ſpake it generally, without this Diſtinction. But 'this is quite beyond the Proof; for no Witneſs 'ſays ſo. Beſides, it is manifeſt by Diſtinction of 'Fundamentals from other Doctrines (acknow-'ledged by both the Witneſſes) that I did not 'ſpeak it abſolutely, but plain enough to any or-'dinary Underſtanding. Secondly, (which I was 'very ſorry to hear from ſo grave a Man) he add-'ed, That there was no Truth of a Church, but 'in the Verity of Doctrine and Manners; and that 'in Veritate Entis, a Company of Turks were a 'True Church. Now God be merciful to us, whi-'ther are we poſting? 'Tis known that the Greek 'Word Ἐκκλησία, which ſignifies Church, ſignifies 'alſo in Heathen Authors any kind of Company or 'Congregation of Men, Turks if you will. But in 'Eccleſiaſtical Writers, and among of Chriſtians, 'the Word Church is uſed only (and all Ἐκκλησία 'too) for a Company of Men which profeſs the 'Faith of Chriſt, and are baptized into his Name. 'And will any Man ſay that a Company of Turks 'are ſuch a Church in Veritate Entis, in the Verity 'of this Being, as all the World knows Papiſts 'are? Or if he will not ſpeak de Ente tali, but 'change the Suppoſitum, he may ſay what he 'pleaſe. But I was very much troubled to hear 'this, and from him.' I had almoſt forgot that Mr. Nicolas here preſſed the Authority of the [b] Homilies upon me again; where 'tis ſaid, That the Biſhop of Rome and their Adherents are not the true Church. But the Anſwer is eaſy: For I ſay as the Homily doth, and as it means too in that place; namely, That the Church of Rome is not the True, that is, not the Catholick Church, nor the Head thereof. But there is a great deal of Difference between the Church and a Church: The one is the General, the other a Particular. The Church it cannot be: A Church it is; and a true one too, in the Senſe before ſpecified. Upon occaſion of this, Mr. Nicolas's Mouth was open again, and ſaid, That at the beginning I reckon'd up ſome that I had converted; but if this were my Opinion, and that if this might ſtand for good, I might convert the Devil and all. My Ears had been ſo beaten with his Language, that I was patient, and left him to inſult. And to help on this Buſineſs, while he was in theſe loud Expreſſions, the Earl of Pembroke came to Mr. Burton to the Bar, and in my hearing deſired him to repeat the Teſtimony he had given; which Mr. Burton did, and his Lordſhip ſeemed to be much pleaſed with it. Not long before, when the News was come hot to the Houſe that York was taken, when I came at Five in the Afternoon to make my Anſwer, I was no ſooner come to the Bar, but the ſame Lord came and ſat juſt before me, and there with much Joy told Mr. Lieutenant the News. I preſume he did it in favour to me, becauſe he thought it would put me in very good Heart, being then inſtantly to begin to make my Anſwer. God forgive this Lord; for I have deſerved in my time far better of him, if he underſtood himſelf, or any Man elſe.

[b] Hom. Par. 2. p. 213.

The next Charge was out of Dr. Pocklinton's Altare Chriſtianum, p. 49, 50. where he ſpeaks (they ſay, for I now have not his Book) of a Happineſs that the Biſhops of England can derive their Succeſſion from St. Peter; which, in great Scorn, Mr. Nicolas called the Archbiſhop's Pedegree. Firſt, If there be any Crime in this, Dr. Pocklinton is to anſwer it, not I. Secondly, He may ſcorn what he will; but wiſe Men know 'tis a great Honour to the Church of England, and a great Stopple in the Mouths of the Romaniſts, that her Biſhops can derive their Calling ſucceſſively from St. Peter; eſpecially conſidering how much they ſtand upon perſonal Succeſſion. Thirdly, Dr. Pocklinton in this ſays no more for me and the Biſhops, than (a) St. Auguſtin urged for himſelf and his Brethren againſt the Donatiſts in the ſame Words, ſave that St. Auguſtin begins at St. Peter, and deſcends to his own Time; and the Doctor begins at his own Time, and aſcends to St. Peter. 'But it ſeems, an upſtart Clergy, 'without a Calling, will ſerve Mr. Nicolas well 'enough.'

VI. The ſixth Charge was, That Books were written of purpoſe to maintain theſe Opinions; and ſuch Men as writ them only preferred. He named Mr. Shelford, Mr. Butterfield, Dr. Coſens, and Dr. Pocklinton. This hath been clamoured upon already: If any have ſet out unworthy Books, they may be called to account for it; I hope I ſhall not anſwer for all the Divines in the Kingdom. 'They 'whom I preferred were worthy and able Men, 'and it will not be in the power of Mr. White's 'Centuries, to blaſt a Man of them among any 'that know them.' For theſe that are named, Mr. Shelford I know not, Mr. Butterfield I ſaw puniſhed in the High-Commiſſion; neither of them preferred, that I know. 'The two laſt, by whom-'ſoever they were preferred, deſerved all the Pre-'ferment they had, and more.'

VII. The ſeventh Charge is out of my Diary at June 15. 1632. where 'tis ſaid, That I preferred Mr. Secretary Windebank, my old Friend. And here Mr. Nicolas laid all the Correſpondency open, which (he ſaid) that Gentleman had with the Pope's Agents, with Prieſts and Jeſuits: And when he had made him this way as foul as he could, then I muſt be guilty of all, for preferring ſuch a Man to the King. This Gentleman was indeed my antient Friend: In my many Years Acquaintance with him, I ſaw nothing in him but Honeſty and Worth. If when he was preferred, he deceived my Opinion, he is living to anſwer for himſelf. Many in all Ages have been preferred to Princes, which do not anſwer the Hopes and Deſires of them which prefer them; and yet they not made anſwerable for them neither. But whether he did fail in any publick Truſt, or no, I am not his Judge. Yea, but ſome Letters were found from his Son Thomas, what Entertainment he had in foreign Parts for his Father's ſake. But theſe Letters were read to the Lords, and there is not one Word in them that relates to me: And 'tis both likely and fit the Son of a Secretary of State ſhould be worthily uſed in his Travels. Yea, but his Son Chriſtopher was at Rome, and ſent thither to inſinuate himſelf with the Pope: So Andreas ab Habernfeld writes in the Papers which Sir William Boſwell ſent over to me. If he did ſend his Son to that end, then I diſcovered his Plot; for I cauſed thoſe Papers to be examined by the King and the Lords, as is before related. Beſides, in my poor Judgment the Pope muſt be a very ſimple Man, ('it may be Mr. Nicolas thinks 'him ſo, compared with himſelf') that a Youth of ſeventeen at the moſt, ſhould inſinuate himſelf to fiſh any thing out of him for his Father's Service. Laſtly, He preſſed, That my Intereſt continued with Mr. Secretary in all theſe Courſes of his. 'Tis well known in Court the old Intereſt did not continue between us: But for old Friendſhip's ſake I will not be drawn to ſay more. As for his releaſing of any Prieſts, he muſt give an account of that himſelf. But for my ſelf, I was ſo careful in this Particular, that I never put my Hand, tho publick at Council-Table or Star-Chamber, to any Releaſe in all my time. I might be named, as preſent when ſuch Releaſe was made, (which I could not avoid;) but act in any I did not. Nay, I was ſo careful, that I refuſed to ſet my Hand to any Licence to travel, leſt, if any young Man ſhould be perverted abroad in his Travels, any thing might be imputed to me. And this all the Clerks of the Council can witneſs. 'But I ſee 'no Warineſs, no Care, can prevent the Envy and 'the Malice of the Many and the Mighty.'

Qui ſe inſinuaret cum Papâ.

VIII. The eighth Charge was my Correſpondence with Popiſh Prieſts. And for Proof of this, they produced divers Witneſſes.

1. The firſt Witneſs was one Wadſworth, one of the common Meſſengers uſed to attach ſuch Perſons. He ſays, That Smith, alias Fludd, bragged to him that he had Acquaintance with me. Here's nothing but a bragging Report of Smith; who, what he is, I know not. So here's no Proof. He ſays, That four Pound was ſent to himſelf, to free him out of Priſon; and that Davis told him it came from me. This is but a Hearſay from Davis, as the former was from Smith. But ſay, my Lords, if I did ſend him four Pound to free him out of Priſon, doth he not now very thankfully reward me for it? The truth is, my Lords, I did ſend him four Pound: And the Motive that made me ſend it, was becauſe I heard he was a Convert from Popery to be a Proteſtant, and that his Impriſonment was as much for that as for any thing elſe. And this was atteſted to the Lords by my Servant Mr. Snath, who was one of them that moved me for him.

2. The ſecond Witneſs was Francis Newton, another Meſſenger. He ſays, That when he had taken Henry Mors, a Prieſt, he ſhould have been carried to a private Committee; that he diſliked it, and complained to Mr. Secretary Cook, who (he ſays) ſent him to me; and that when he came to Lambeth, Mr. Dell told him I was in my Garden with Sir Toby Matthew. My Servant Mr. Dell being appointed my Sollicitor, was now preſent in Court, and denied all this. And well he might; for Sir Toby was never in my Garden with me in all his Life. And if Mr. Dell told him that I would not meddle in the Buſineſs, (as he ſays he did) Mr. Dell muſt give the account for it, not I. Yet if there were a Reference of this Mors to a private Committee, the hindring of that was more proper to Mr. Secretary than to me. Howſoever, here was no hurt done: For he confeſſes that Mors was ſent back to Newgate. And if (as he farther ſays) he was diſcharged by Mr. Secretary Windebank, that is nothing to me. He ſays, He was informed by Stukely, that Smith, alias Fludd, was acquainted with me. But if he were but informed ſo himſelf, that's no Proof to inform your Lordſhips. He ſays, That Brown a Prieſt was diſmiſſed out of the High-Commiſſion. Thus it was: He was called in thither for very foul Uncleanneſs. In Proceſs of this Buſineſs, he there openly confeſſed himſelf a Prieſt. Hereupon that Court ſent him to Newgate. 'What 'became of him after, I know not, ſave that I 'know he was ſtrictly examined by Mr. Pym and 'others concerning me.' This Newton, upon what Grudge I know not, calls me Rogue, and all to naught, in all Companies; and with ſo much I acquainted the Lords.

3. The third Witneſs was Tho. Mayo, a Meſſenger alſo. He ſays, That Sir Toby Matthew was accounted a Prieſt when he was in Parts beyond the Seas; and that he ſaw him in Coach with me, and that he went over with me in my Barge. Firſt, I gave in two Exceptions againſt this Witneſs. One, that he was a Man of no Conſcience; for he had ſhifted his Religion from Proteſtant to Papiſt, and back again three or four times: Which was a Thing known. The other was, That he kept a Brothel-Houſe at this preſent; and that his Fellow Wadſworth knew this, and called him pimping Knave, ſaying he kept a Brace of Wenches at this time in his Houſe. And theſe Words he ſpake of him but the Fifth of this preſent July, in the Bull-Tavern in the Palace-Yard. So I thought him no fit Witneſs. But he was heard for all this. 'And afterwards 'Wadſworth meeting my Servant Mr. Snath, he told 'him that he did ſay ſo to Mayo, and wonder'd how 'I ſhould come to hear it.' Being admitted, and ſaying as he did, I told the Lords that he began with a very bold Oath, and like a Shifter of his Religion: For I had four Servants there, three of which uſually attended me when I went and returned from Court, Mr. Dell, Mr. Snath, Mr. Goodwin, and Mr. Dobſon, and they all atteſted the contrary; and I never went, but one of theſe, at leaſt, was with me. Beſides, he is ſingle in this Teſtimony. He ſays, That he ſaw Sir Toby ſeveral times in my Houſe. But he confeſſes withal, that he never ſaw him near me. For my own part, I cannot ſay that ever he was within my Doors. But if he, or others of his Quality, do come to pry out any thing in my Houſe, how is it poſſible for me to hinder it? My Porter could not ſee it written in their Foreheads, who they were. He ſays, That one Price was often ſeen at my Houſe. But he doth not ſay he was ſeen with me, or there with my Knowledge. He ſays, That one Leander was reported to have been my Chamber-Fellow in Oxford. Firſt, This is but a Report, and ſo no Evidence. Secondly, If he were my Chamber-Fellow in Oxford when we were Boys together, I am ſure he was then no Prieſt; and he was but a Boy when he left the College. He confeſſes that I gave Order to obſerve who and how many reſorted to Ambaſſadors Houſes, and Signior Con's, and ſays he thought I could prove it. But I believe he would would never have confeſſed it, but that he knew I could prove it. And thereupon I ſhewed the Lords many Papers certifying me what Numbers were found reſorting to each place reſpectively; and Thomas Mayo's Hand to many of thoſe Papers. He ſays, he took one Peter Wilford and brought him to me to Whitehall, while Sir John Lambe was with me. But he confeſſes withal, that Wilford then ſhewed Mr. Secretary Windebank's Warrant to diſcharge him: And then what could I do to him? Nay, I have ſome cauſe to think he would never have apprehended him, had he not known he had that Warrant. Laſtly, he ſays, That once at the Star-Chamber I told him he was too quick and nimble for me. And I hope it is no Treaſon, if I did ſay ſo. Nor could I mean he was too quick in apprehending Prieſts, for I found both him and his Fellows, after Croſſe's death, ſlow enough at that: But if I ſaid ſo, it was becauſe I could not tell how to truſt his Shifting and his Wilineſs.

4. The fourth Witneſs was Elizabeth Graye, Wife to another Meſſenger. And this is a very fine Witneſs. For firſt, ſhe ſays, her Husband was committed by my means. And then with a Breath ſhe ſays, She doth not know by whom he was committed, but ſhe thinks by Secretary Windebank and me. But ſince ſhe doth not know, but think only; I hope her thinking can be no Evidence. She ſays, That ſhe delivered me a Petition, and that I flung it away, ſaying, I would not meddle with any Prieſt-catching Knave. The Witneſs ſingle, and I doubt doating, and the Words far from Treaſon.

5. The fifth Witneſs was John Cooke, a Meſſenger too, and one that for his Miſdemeanour had ſtood in the Pillory. This I urged againſt him, as unfit to witneſs againſt me: 'My Witneſs that 'ſaw him in the Pillory, was ſo threatned, that 'he ſent me word he durſt not come. I may not 'ſay from whom this Threatning came.' But the thing was ſo true, that Cooke himſelf confeſſed it, but excuſed the Cauſe; and his Teſtimony received. He told how Fiſher the Jeſuit was taken by Graye; That when he was brought to the Council-Table, Secretary Cook and I went to the King to know his Pleaſure about him; That we brought back word from his Majeſty to the Lords, that he ſhould be baniſhed. All this while here's no hurt done. Then he ſays, That notwithſtanding this Order of his Majeſty, Graye and he met Fiſher at liberty, by a Warrant from Secretary Windebank: That hereupon Graye repaired to Secretary Cook, and to me, and that Dell told him I would not meddle with it. My Secretary muſt anſwer this, I remember it not. But if Mr. Dell received any ſuch Anſwer from me, That I would not meddle with it; there were two apparent Reaſons for it: One, that I would not meddle with it alone, his Majeſty's Order being to all the Lords: The other, that Fiſher was the Man I had written againſt, and Men would have been apt to ſay, that when I could not anſwer, I ſought means to deſtroy. So I no way fit (alone at leaſt) to meddle with him of all Men. He ſays, That Graye was committed to the Fleet, for railing on me in my own Houſe. Yet he confeſſes, that he was not committed by me. And I preſume your Lordſhips will think there was Cauſe of his Commitment, if he did rail upon me.

The Pop. Roy. Favourit. p. 31. And 'tis confeſſed by Mr. Pryn, (tho he had then received no Anſwer from myſelf) That he ſaid he ſaw now how the Game went, and hoped e'er long to ſee better Days, &c. He ſays, That Smith, alias Fludd, deſired Sir Kenelm Digby, as he was going to Lambeth, to tell me that he could not dine with me that day, but deſired his Buſineſs might be remembred. No ſuch Man ever dined at my Table, to my knowledge. And if any Prieſt would ſay ſo to Sir Kenelm, how could I poſſibly hinder it? And Sir Kenelm, when this Cooke was examined, was a Priſoner in Wincheſter-Houſe; why was not he examined to ſift out this Truth, if Truth be in it?

6. The ſixth Witneſs was John Threſher, a Meſſenger too: He ſays, that he took Mors and Goodwin, two Prieſts; and that Secretary Windebank took away his Warrant, and diſmiſſed them, ſaying, he would ſpeak with me about it: And that when he came to me, I was angry with him about the Warrant. Mr. Secretary Windebank will, I hope, be able to anſwer for his own Actions. Why he diſmiſſed the Prieſts, I know not; but he had great reaſon to take away his Warrant, and I a greater reaſon to be angry with him for it. For no Warrant can iſſue from the High-Commiſſion Court, but under three of their Hands at leaſt. Now Threſher having gotten my Hand to the Warrant, never goes for more Hands, but proceeds in his Office, upon this unwarrantable Warrant. Had not I reaſon to be offended at this? He ſays, That at the ſame time I ſaid that Graye was an ill-tongued Fellow, and that if he kept him company, I ſhould not regard him. I had good cauſe to ſay this and more, conſidering how Graye had uſed me: and I believe no Archbiſhop would have borne his words. Laſtly, he ſays, That by a Warrant from me he arreſted Sir Toby Matthew, and that the Earl of Strafford ſtayed him from going to Priſon, ſaying, he ſhould anſwer it before the Lords. Here by the Witneſs himſelf it appears that I did my Duty. And Sir Toby did appear before the Lords, as was 'aſſumed he ſhould. In the mean time, I was complained of to the Queen: and a great Lady (who perhaps made the Complaint) ſtood by, and made herſelf merry to hear me chid. The Queen was pleaſed to ſend to the Lords, and Sir Toby was releaſed. Where my fault was in all this, I do not yet ſee.

7. The laſt of theſe famous Witneſſes, was Goldſmith; who ſays nothing, but that one day before the High-Commiſſion Court began, I forewarned the Meſſengers of that Court of Graye, in regard he was openly ſpoke againſt at the Council-Table. Which, all things conſidered, I had great reaſon to do. He ſays likewiſe, That then Graye's Wife tender'd me a Petition, which I rejected, ſaying, I would meddle with no Prieſt-catching Knaves. I think his Carriage deſerved no better of me, than to reject his Petition: But as for the Words, I cannot own them; let the Goldſmith look to it that he have not forged them. And I would very willingly know, whether when the Apoſtle required, that an Accuſation ſhould not be received againſt an Elder, but under two or three Witneſſes, (1 Tim. 5. 19.) he had any meaning they ſhould be ſuch as theſe?

Frigidè dictum. W. S. A. C.

IX. The Ninth Charge was about the ordering of Popiſh Books that were ſeized, and the diſpoſing of them. The ſole Witneſs here, is John Egerton: he ſays, Theſe Books were delivered to Mr. Matterſhead, Regiſter to the High-Commiſſion. And I ſay ſo too; it was the conſtant Courſe of the High-Commiſſion to ſend them thither, and have them kept in that Office, till there was a ſuffiſufficient number of them, and then to burn them. Yea, but he adds, That Matterſhead told him they were re-delivered to the Owners. This is but a Report, and Matterſhead is dead, who ſhould make it good. 'And though this be but a ſingle Witneſs, and of a dead Man's Report; yet Mr. 'Browne thought fit to ſum it up with the reſt. 'But ſurely if any Books were re-delivered to the 'Owners, it was ſo ordered by the High-Commiſſion, in regard the Books were not found 'dangerous: From me, Matterſhead had never any 'ſuch Command.' Laſtly, he ſays, He met Sir Toby Matthew twice at Lambeth. But he confeſſes, he never ſaw him with me; and then me it cannot concern.

X. The Tenth Charge was concerning the Prieſts in Newgate; the Witneſſes are Mr. Deuxel, and Francis Newton. They both agree, and they ſay, That the Prieſts there had the beſt Chambers, and Liberty to go abroad without Keepers. I hope theſe Men do not mean to make the Archbiſhop of Canterbury Keeper of Newgate. If any Man gave them this Liberty, he is to be blamed for it, not I, who never knew it till now. Nor do either of theſe Witneſſes ſay, that they called on me for remedy, or ever did ſo much as acquaint me with it. And they ſay this was twelve Years ſince; and I had been Archbiſhop but ſeven Years when I was committed.

XI. The Eleventh Charge was about Words in my Epiſtle Dedicatory before my Book againſt Mr. Fiſher. The Words theſe; For, to my remembrance, I have not given him, or his, ſo much as coarſe Language. So the Charge is, becauſe I have not given ill Words. And here Mr. Nicolas fell foul upon me again for taking ſuch care, that the Whore of Babylon may have nothing but good Words, &c. But firſt, my Lords, I have always thought, and do ſtill, that ill Language is no Proof againſt an Adverſary: All the good it can do, is, it may bring Scorn upon the Author, and work Hardneſs of Heart in the Adverſary, whom he doth or ſhould labour to convert. And this I learned of two eminent Fathers in the Church, (a) Gregory Nazianzen, and (b) St. Auguſtine. The firſt would not uſe it, no not againſt the Arians, who (as he ſaith) made open War againſt the Deity of Chriſt. Nor would the other againſt the ſame Adverſaries. The one accounts it Ignorance, though a Faſhion taken up by many; and the other Loſs of Time. And here I deſired the Lords, that I might read what immediately followed this Paſſage, which was granted: And there, as their Lordſhips did, ſo may the Reader ſee, if he pleaſe, that though my Words were not uncivil, yet in the matter I favoured neither him nor his. And to avoid Tediouſneſs, thither I refer the Reader. With this, that ſometimes Men apt enough to accuſe me, can plead for this Moderation in their own Caſes, and tell each other that [1] Chriſt will not own Bitterneſs in maintaining any way, though conſonant to his Word. And [2] another finds juſt fault both with Papiſts and Martin Mar-Prelate, for this reproachful Language. And yet it muſt be a Crime in me not to uſe it.

XII. The laſt Charge was the Commitment of one Ann Huſſy to the Sheriff of London. The Buſineſs was this. She ſent one Philip Bambridge to tell me of I know not what Plot againſt the King, (nor I think ſhe neither.) Bambridge came to Whitehall toward the Evening, and could make nothing of this dangerous Plot. Yet becauſe it pretended ſo high, I ſent him preſently to Mr. Secretary Windebank; I being the next Morning to go out of Town. The Buſineſs was called to the Council-Table. When I came back, I was preſent there. Bambridge produced Ann Huſſy, but ſhe could make nothing appear. She ſays, I thought ſhe was out of her Wits. Not ſo, my Lords; but I did not think ſhe was well in them; nor do I yet. And whereas ſhe complains of her Impriſonment, it was her own deſire ſhe might be committed to the Sheriff; and Mr. Hearn (my Counſel here preſent) was aſſigned by the Lords to take her Examination. Therefore if any Particular in this Charge ſtick with your Lordſhips, I humbly deſire Mr. Hearn may ſupply my Want of Memory. But it paſſed over, as well it might. Here this Day ended, and I was ordered to attend again July 29.

The Twentieth, and the Laſt Day of my Hearing.

MOnday, July 29. 1644. This Day I appeared again, and they proceeded upon the Fourteenth Original Article, which follows in theſe words.

XIV. That to preſerve himſelf from being queſtioned for theſe, and other his traitorous Courſes, he hath laboured to ſubvert the Rights of Parliaments, and the antient Courſe of Parliamentary Proceedings, and by falſe and malicious Slanders to incenſe his Majeſty againſt Parliaments. By which Words, Counſels and Actions, he hath traitorouſly, and contrary to his Allegiance, laboured to alienate the Hearts of the King's liege People from his Majeſty, to ſet a Diviſion between them, and to ruin and deſtroy his Majeſty's Kingdoms. For which they do impeach him of High-Treaſon againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

I. The Firſt Charge of this Day was prefaced with a Note out of my Diary, at May 8. 1626. That the Duke of Buckingham was that day impeached to the Lords by the Houſe of Commons. And at May 25. The Difference ariſing in the Houſe of Peers about the Earl of Arundel's Commitment to the Tower without a Cauſe declared. No uſe made of theſe, but that I then Biſhop of St. Davids took notice of theſe things. Then the Charge followed; and the firſt of it was, That I then being of the Lords Houſe, and ſo to be one of the Duke's Judges, made a Speech for him, and corrected his Speech in ſome particulars; and of a Judge made myſelf an Advocate. Which Mr. Nicolas ſaid was a great Offence. I ſaw not theſe Papers, and therefore can ſay nothing, what is, or is not under my Hand. But to the thing itſelf, I ſay firſt, That if in that Speech any particular Fault had been found, impeaching any Right or Power of Parliament, that I muſt have anſwered; but none is charged, but only the bare making of one Speech, and the mending of another. And this is a very poor Argument of any Enmity against Parliaments. Secondly, Seeing no Fault is charged upon me in particular, it was but the Office of a poor Friend to a great one, to whom being so much bound as I was, I could not refuse so much Service, being intreated to it. And Thirdly, I do humbly conceive, that so long as there was nothing done against Law, any Friend may privately assist another in his Difficulties. And I am perswaded, many Friends in either House do what they justly may, when such sad Occasions happen. 'And this 'Answer I gave to Mr. Brown, when he summed 'up my Charge in the House of Commons.

'But Mr. Brown did not begin with this, but 'with another, here omitted by Mr. Nicolas; 'though he had pressed it before in the fifteenth 'Day of my Hearing. Dr. Potter writ unto me for 'my Advice in some Passages of a Book writ by 'him, (as I remember against a Book intitled, 'Charity mistaken:) I did not think it fit to amend 'any thing with my own Pen, but put some few 'things back to his second Thoughts, of which 'this was one; That if he express himself so, he 'will give as much Power to the Parliament in 'Matters of Doctrine, as to the Church. This 'Mr. Brown said, took away all Authority from 'Parliaments, in that kind. But, under favour, 'this takes away nor all, nor any that is due unto them. Not all, for my Words are about 'giving so much Power: Now he that would not 'have so much given to the one, as the other, 'doth not take away all from either: Not any that 'is due to them; for my Words not meddling simply with Parliamentary Power (as appears by 'the Comparative Words so much) my Intention 'must needs be to have Dr. Potter so to consider 'of his Words, as that, that which is proper to 'the Church, might not be ascribed to Parliaments. 'And this I conceive is plain in the very Letter of the Law. The Words of the

* 1 Eliz. c. 1. '* Statute are, Or such as shall hereafter be ordered, judged, or determined to 'be Heresy, by the High-Court of Parliament in this 'Realm, with the Assent of the Clergy in their Convocation. Where 'tis manifest, that the judging and 'determining Part, for the Truth or Falshood of 'the Doctrine, is in the Church. For the Assent 'of the Church or Clergy cannot be given but in 'Convocation, and so the Law requires it. Now 'Assent in Convocation cannot be given, but there 'must precede a Debate, a Judging, a Voting, 'and a Determining. Therefore the determining 'Power for the Truth or Falshood of the Doctrine, 'Heresy or no Heresy, is in the Church: But the 'judging and determining Power for binding to Obedience, and for Punishment, is in the Parliament, with this Assent of the Clergy. Therefore I humbly conceive the Parliament cannot 'by Law, that is, till this Law be first altered, 'determine the Truth of Doctrine without this 'Assent of the Church in Convocation; and that 'such a Synod and Convocation, as is chosen and 'assembled as the Laws and Customs of this Realm 'require.

'To this Mr. Brown, in his Reply upon me in 'the House of Commons, said two Things. The 'one, That this Branch of the Statute of 1 Eliz. was 'for Heresy only, and the adjudging of that; but 'meddles not with the Parliament's Power in other 'matters of Religion. If it be for Heresy only, 'that the Church alone shall not so determine 'Heresy, as to bring those grievous Punishments 'which the Law lays upon it, upon the Neck of 'any Subject, without Determination in Parliament; then is the Church in Convocation left 'free also in other matters of Religion, according 'to the first Clause in Magna Charta, which establishes the Church in all her Rights. And her 'main and constant Right when that Charter was 'made and confirmed, was Power of determining in 'matters of Doctrine and Discipline of the Church. 'And this Right of the Clergy is not bounded or 'limited by any Law, but this Clause of 1 Eliz. 'that ever I heard of.

'The other was, That if this were so, that the 'Parliament might not meddle with Religion, but 'with the Assent of the Clergy in Convocation, 'we should have had no Reformation: for the 'Bishops and the Clergy dissented. First, it is not '(as I conceive) to be denied, That the King and 'his High Court of Parliament may make any 'Law what they please, and by their Absolute 'Power may change Religion, Christianity into 'Turcism, if they please, (which God forbid:) And 'the Subjects, whose Consciences cannot obey, must 'fly, or endure the Penalty of the Law. But both 'King and Parliament are sub graviori Regno, and 'must answer to God for all such Abuse of Power. 'But beside this Absolute, there is a Limited Power; Limited, I say, by natural Justice and Equity, by which no Man, no Court, can do more, than what he can by right: And according to this Power, the Church's Interest must be considered, and that indifferently, as well as the 'Parliament's. To apply this to the Particular of 'the Reformation. The Parliament, in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth, would not indure Popish Superstition, and by Absolute 'Power abolished it, [1] 'without any 'Assent of the Clergy in Convocation. And then in her first Year, 'Anno 1559. she had a Visitation, 'and set out her Injunctions, to direct 'and order such of the Clergy as 'could conform their Judgments to the Reformation.

Id possumus, quod jure possumus.

[1] By the Advice of her Honourable Council. Prefat. to the Injunctions.

'But then so soon as the Clergy was settled, 'and that a Form of Doctrine was to be agreed 'upon, to shew the difference from the Roman Superstition, a Synod was called; and in the Year '1562. the Articles of Religion were agreed upon, and they were determined and confirmed by 'Parliament, with the Assent of the Clergy in 'Convocation, and that by a just and orderly 'Power. Nor is the Absolute Power of King 'and Parliament any way unjust in it self, but 'may many ways be made such, by Misinformation, or otherwise. And this gives the King 'and the Parliament their full Power, and yet preserves this Church in her just Right: Just, and 'acknowledged by some that loved 'her not over-well. For the [2] Lord 'Brooke tells us, That what a Church 'will take for true Doctrine, lies only in 'that Church. Nay, the very Heathen 'saw clearly the Justice of this; for '[3] M. Lucullus was able to say in Tully, 'That the Priests were Judges of Religion, and the Senate of Law.'

II. The second Proof is, That I made two Speeches for the King, to be spoken or sent to the Parliament that then was; and that they had some four and ill Passages in them. 'These Speeches were read 'to the Lords; and had I now the Copies, I 'would

'would insert them here, and make the World 'Judge of them.' First, I might shuffle here, and deny the making of them: For no Proof is offer'd, but that they are in my Hand, and that is no necessary Proof; for I had then many Papers by me written in my own Hand, which were not my making, tho I transcribed them, as not thinking it fit to trust them in other Hands. But, Secondly, I did make them, and I followed the Instructions which were given me, as close as I could, to the very Phrases; and being commanded to the Service, I hope it shall not now be made my Crime that I was trusted by my Sovereign. Thirdly, As I did never endeavour to imbitter the King this way; so the smart Passages which Mr. Nicolas says are there, I hope will not be thought such, when 'tis consider'd whose Mouth was to utter them, and upon what Occasion: Yet if such they shall be thought, I am heartily sorry for them, and humbly desire they may be pass'd by. Howsoever, they can make no Proof that I am an Enemy to Parliaments. 'And this 'Answer I gave Mr. Brown in the House of Com-'mons, for he there omitted it not.'

See the Diary at March 26, 29. May 11. Anno 1626. H. W.

III. The third Proof that I am an Enemy to Parliaments, is the Testimony of one Mr. Bland: A forward Witness he hath been against me in other Particulars. Here he says, That Sir Sackvil Crowe shewed him a Paper, in which were fifteen or sixteen Passages concerning Parliaments, with some four Aspersions to boot; and that this Paper was subscribed W. Laud. First, my Lords, this Man is but a single Witness. Secondly, He says, He had this Paper from Sir Sackvil Crowe, and he is now in Turkey, and cannot be produced, that the Truth may be known. Thirdly, As I never gave Sir Sackvil any such Paper, so had he come by any such, 'tis more than probable somebody else might have seen it beside Mr. Bland, to make a second Witness. Fourthly, This is a very bold Oath; for he swears, the Paper was subscribed with my own Hand, W. Laud: Whereas I being then Bishop of St. Davids, never writ my Name to any thing other than Guil. Meneven. Let him bethink himself of this Oath, ne quid gravius dicam. Besides, it may be considered too, that this, with some Particulars mentioned by Mr. Bland, was charged in the first Additional Article, and now brought in upon the fourteenth Original; partly to confound me, that I might not see how, or against what to defend my self; and partly to make me secure, because they had quite passed over the first Additional: But especially, because they had therein charged me, that these Propositions of mine had caused that Parliament to be dissolved; and yet in the same Article, and within three Lines, 'tis said expresly, That my Propositions were delivered to my Lord Duke of Buckingham after that Parliament was dissolved. 'So this Article hangs as well together as Mr. 'Bland's Testimony concerning it. Mr. Brown 'pressed this also hard against me; but I answered 'according to the Sum of that which is above-'written.' And as for the Particular said to be in that Paper, (were it mine, as it is not) or were the Words thought treasonable, (as well they cannot be) yet the Statute of Queen Mary makes it, that no Words, nor Writings, nor Cypherings, nor Deeds, shall be Treason, but only such as are within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. and no other. And this Statute I then read to the Lords, though I conceive there was no need of it.

Art. 1. Additional.

1 Mariæ c. 1. §. 3.

IV. The fourth Proof was out of my Diary, at June 15. 1626. The Words these: Post multas agitationes privata Malitia in Ducem Buckinhamiæ superavit & suffocavit omnia publica negotia; nihil actum est, sed Parliamentum solutum. And this was applied first by Mr. Nicolas, and after by Mr. Brown, as if I had charged this private Malice upon the Parliament. But this is utterly mistaken: For I spake not this of the Parliament, but of some few particular Men, some of the House, 'Men well e-'nough known to the World;' and more, not of the House, but Sticklers at large, who went between, and did very ill Offices, and so wronged both the King and the Parliament: which is no new thing in England. That my Words there cannot be meant of the Parliament, is two ways apparent. First, in that I say, privata Malitia, private Malice did it; but name not the Parliament, nor charge any thing upon it. Secondly, Because had I spoken this of the Parliament, it could not have been called private, but publick Malice; nothing being more publick in this Kingdom, than what is done in and by the Parliament.

V. The fifth Proof was, That a Proclamation for calling in of the Remonstrance, was found in my Study: And Mr. Nicolas said, They conceived I had a hand in it. It was as lawful for me to have and keep this Proclamation, as for any other Subject. And their Conceit that I had a hand in it, is no Proof. Mr. Nicolas says, That my Preferments followed very quick upon this; and infers, That I was preferred for my ill Services in this kind. But all the Proof that he brings for this his uncharitable Inference, is the comparing of the Times; and I shall be content to be tried by that. For by his own Acknowledgment this Proclamation came out June 16. 1622. I being then Bishop of St. David's: And he confesses I was not made Bishop of Bath and Wells till June 20. 1626. full four Years after; nor a Privy-Counsellor till April 29. 1627. which was five Years after. Whereas Rewards for such Services are found to come much quicker. 'And Mr. Brown, when he made his 'summary Charge, slighted this, and passed it 'over.'

VI. The sixth Proof of my Enmity to Parliaments, was a Paper of Reasons, Mr. Nicolas said, against Parliaments. But, First, when this Paper was shewed and read to the Lords, it was found otherwise, and was but a Paper of Hopes and Fears, which were conceived of a Parliament: Not Reasons against them. Secondly, These Fears and Hopes were not of a Parliament then in Being, but of one in Deliberation, whether it should be or not at that time; which all Men know is often disputed, and without offence. And any considering Man may privately do it, for his own use and tryal of his Judgment. Thirdly, In this Deliberation, I was not the Author of these Fears and Hopes, but an Amanuensis to higher Powers, in regard their Hands were slower; though commanded also to set down my own Opinion, which I did. Fourthly, I was then either a Counsellor, or a sworn Servant to the King, and required, upon my Oath, to deliver truly, both my Fears and my Hopes; and I durst not perjure my self: And I hope the keeping of my Oath, and doing my Duty in that kind, shall not now prejudice my Life. Fifthly, These Fears and Hopes, whatever they contain, did relate to the being or not being of that one Parliament only, as appears in the very Paper it self; and the Hopes prevailed, and that Parliament ſat. 'And this Anſwer I gave to Mr. Brown, who 'made all the uſe of this Paper, that could be, a-'gainſt me.'

Here Mr. Nicolas brings in Mr. Bland again, who ſays, That the four laſt Heads in this Paper, were in that Paper alſo which was ſhewed him. This ſingle Witneſs hath an excellent Memory, that can remember four Heads of a Paper punctually ſixteen Years ago. I asked why he did not complain of me then, when his Memory was freſher, and his Witneſs Sir Sackvil Crowe nearer? 'Twas replied, He durſt not for my Greatneſs. Why, but he knows well enough, that Parliaments, when they have a juſt Cauſe of Proceeding, do neither fear nor ſpare any Man's Greatneſs. And is it probable, that they which ſpared not the Duke of Buckingham's Greatneſs, would have feared mine, being then a poor Biſhop of Bath and Wells? And a Parliament was held again in the very next Year, 1627. ſo that he wanted not opportunity to complain. Nor can I believe any Opinion of my ſuppoſed Greatneſs ſtopped him: Let him look into himſelf.

Then Mr. Nicolas told the Lords with great vehemency, what Venom there was in this Paper, which, he ſaid, was in every Particular. A right Spider I ſee now he is, Venom out of any thing.

[Here is a void ſpace left, I ſuppoſe, with deſign to have the Paper (here mentioned) to be inſerted: which was not done.]

VII. The ſeventh Proof out of my Diary at March 1628. where the Words are, That the Parliament which was diſſolved March 10. 1628. ſought my Ruin. 'This had been a better Argument to 'prove Parliaments an Enemy to me, than me to 'them.' But nothing can be meant by this, but that my Ruin was ſought in that Parliament by ſome particular Men, whoſe Edge was too keen againſt me. And this appears in my Diary at June 14. preceding; at which time I was put into a Remonſtrance, which, had I been found any way guilty, muſt needs have ruin'd me. But by God's Bleſſing, the very ſame Day I did clearly acquit my ſelf in open Parliament, of all the Aſperſions caſt upon me about Dr. Manwaring's Sermons. 'This Particular Mr. Brown charged upon 'me, and I anſwer'd as before: But Mr. Nicolas 'did not touch upon it this Day.'

VIII. The eighth Proof that I was an Enemy to Parliaments, was taken from ſome Marginal Notes, which I had made upon a printed Speech of Sir Benjamin Rudyard, which he ſpake in the Parliament held Anno 1627. Mr. Nicolas named four; but Mr. Brown, in ſumming up my Charge, inſiſted only upon two. The Word Reducing; and the Aim of gaining from the King. Sir Benjamin Rudyard is my old Acquaintance, and a very worthy Member of that Houſe, both now and then. But be a Man never ſo worthy, may he not uſe ſome Phraſe amiſs? Or if he do, may not I or another obſerve, yea, check at it, but by and by I muſt be an Enemy to Parliaments? Is there any Argument in this; I ſaid a Gentleman in the Houſe of Commons uſed an ill Phraſe in a Speech of his in that Houſe, therefore I am an Enemy to the Parliament in which he ſpake it? Say I am miſtaken, and not he, and that the Phraſe is without Exception; yet this is but my Error in Judgment, no Proof of Enmity, either to the Parliament, or him that ſpake it. That which I ſaid was this: Firſt, That the Word Reducing, as there placed, was a hard Phraſe. Let any Man view that Speech conſiderately, and tell me whether it be not ſo. Secondly, That I diſliked the Word Gaining, being between the King and his People in Parliament. For (as I humbly conceive) there will alway's be Work enough for both to join for the publick Good; and well it can never be, if they which ſhould ſo join, do labour only to gain one from another. For if the King ſhall labour to gain upon the Liberty or Property of the Subject, or the Subjects in Parliament labour to gain from the juſt Power and Prerogative of the King; can any prudent Man think the Publick can thrive there-while? Yea, but they ſay, That my Marginal Note upon this Phraſe was, That this Gaining was the Aim of the lower Houſe. If my Note be ſo, yet that cannot be otherwiſe underſtood, than that according to this Expreſſion, this muſt be their Aim. 'And the 'Reaſon why I found fault with the Phraſe was, 'becauſe I ſaw this muſt follow out of it. So, 'under favour, I was not ſo bold with this Gentle-'man, as he was with the Houſe in uſing this 'Speech.'

IX. The next Proof was, That I found fault with eight Bills that were then in the Houſe. This is a very poor Proof of my Enmity to Parliaments, that I diſliked ſome Bills propoſed in them; though there be no Proof of this urged at all, ſave only that I writ the time, May 27. 1628. upon the Paper where the Bills were mentioned. And I hope, to mention the time when any Bills were propoſed, is not to diſlike the Bills. But ſay I did diſlike them, what then? It is lawful for any Member of the Houſe (and ſuch was I then) to take Exceptions, which he thinks are juſt, againſt any Bill before it paſs. And ſhall not that which is lawful for any Man to do, be lawful for me? Beſide, almoſt all Bills are put in by private Perſons: The Houſe is not intereſted in them, till they are paſſed and voted by them: So that till then any Man may ſpend his Judgment upon the Bill, without any Wrong at all to the Parliament. 'Mr. Brown ſaw this well enough, and therefore 'vouchſafed not ſo much as to name it.'

X. The tenth Proof was, That I made an Anſwer to the Remonſtrance ſet out by Parliament, Anno 1628. This was preſſed before, and here 'tis laid hold of on all hands, to make as full a Cry as it can againſt me. 'Mr. Nicolas preſſes it here aloud (as 'he doth all things) and Mr. Brown lays it cloſe 'in ſumming up the Charge.' My Anſwer the ſame to both. 1. They charge me, That I made that Anſwer to the Remonſtrance which came forth Anno 1628. I did this by the King's Command, and upon ſuch Inſtructions as were given me. And as I obeyed the Command, ſo did I cloſely purſue my Inſtructions: and I durſt do no other, for I was then upon my Oath as a ſworn Counſellor, and ſo employed in that Service. And I hope no Man will conceive, that I would, without ſuch a Command, have undertaken ſuch a kind of Service. 2. Yea, but they ſay, It doth not appear that I had any ſuch Command. Yes, that appears as plainly as that I made it. For they bring no Proof that I made it, but becauſe the Indorſement upon that Paper is in my Hand, and calls it my Anſwer: And the ſame Indorſement ſays, I made it by his Majeſty's Command. So either the Indorſement is no ſufficient Proof for the one, or if it be, 'tis ſufficient for both; and muſt needs witneſs the one for me with the ſame Strength that it doth the other againſt me. For a kind of Confeſſion that

Indorſe-

Indorſement is, and muſt therefore not be broken, but be taken with all its Qualities. 3. Thirdly, They ſay there are ſome ſour and bitter Paſſages in the Anſwer. 'Tis more than I perceived, if it be ſo. Nor was any Sourneſs intended. And I hope no ſuch Paſſages found in it, the Perſon conſidered in whoſe Name the Anſwer was made. The Expreſſions indeed might have been too big for a Subject's Mouth. 4. Fourthly, They ſay I was diſpleaſed that this Anſwer was not printed; but all the Proof they brought for it is, That it is written upon the Paper, that there was an Intention to print it, but that I know not what hinder'd it. 'But this Argument can never conclude: 'John a Nokes knows not who hinder'd the print-'ing of a Jewiſh Catechiſm in England, therefore 'he was diſpleaſed the Catechiſm was not printed. 'But I ſee every Foot can help trample him that 'is down.' Yea, but they inſtanced in three Particulars, which they charged ſeverally upon me. The firſt Particular was, That by this Remonſtrance they ſought to fill our People's Hearts more than our Ears. A ſecond was, That they ſwelled to that bigneſs, till they brake themſelves. But neither of theſe ſtrike at any Right or Privilege of Parliaments; they only tax ſome Abuſes, which were conceived to be in the Miſcarriage of that one Parliament. And both theſe Particulars were in my Inſtructions. And though I have ever honoured Parliaments, and ever ſhall, yet I cannot think them infallible. General Councils have greater Promiſes than they, yet they may err. 'And when a Parliament, by what ill Accident 'ſoever, comes to err, may not their King tell 'them of it? Or muſt every Paſſage in his An-'ſwer be ſour, that pleaſes not?' And for that Remonſtrance, whither it tended, let the World judge; the Office is too dangerous for me. The third Particular, was the excuſing of Ireland, and the Growth of Popery there, of which that Remonſtrance Ann. 1628, complained. This was in the Inſtructions too. And I had reaſon to think, the King and his Council underſtood the State of Ireland, for Religion and other Affairs, as well as other Men. And I was the more eaſily led into the belief, that Religion was much at one ſtate in Ireland, in Queen Elizabeth's and King James's time, and now; becauſe ever ſince I underſtood any thing of thoſe Iriſh Affairs, I ſtill heard the ſame Complaints that were now made. For in all theſe times they had their Romiſh Hierarchy; ſubmitted to their Government; paid them Tythes; came not to the Proteſtant Churches; and rebelled under Tyrone, under pretence of Religion. And I do not conceive they have gone beyond this now. 'If they have, let them anſwer it, who 'have occaſioned it.' But to prove this great new Growth of Popery there, they produced firſt a Proclamation from the State in Ireland, dated April 1. 1629. Then a Letter of the Biſhop of Kilmore's to myſelf, dated April 1. 1630. Thirdly, A Complaint made to the State there, Ann. 1633. of this Growth, ſo that I could not but know it. Moſt true; when theſe Informations came, I could not but know it: But look upon their Date, and you ſhall find that all of them came after this Anſwer was made to the Remonſtrance, and therefore could not poſſibly be foreſeen by me, without the Gift of Prophecy. Then they produced a Letter of the Earl of Strafford's, in which he communicated to me, Mar. 1633. That to mould the Lower Houſe there, and to rule them the better, he had got them to be choſen of an equal number of Proteſtants and Papiſts. 'And here Mr. May-'nard, who preſſed this Point of Religion hard 'upon me, began to fall foul upon this Policy of 'the Earl of Strafford, and himſelf yet brake off 'with this, But he is gone.' Then he fell upon me as a Man likely to approve thoſe ways, becauſe he deſired the Letter might be communicated to me. This Letter was not written to me, as appears by the Charge itſelf: for if it had, no Man elſe needed to communicate it to me. And I would fain know, how I could help any of this? If that Lord would write any thing to me himſelf, or communicate any thing to another that ſhould acquaint me with it, was it in my power to hinder either of theſe? And there were other Paſſages in this Letter, for which, I conceive, his Lordſhip deſired the Communication of that Letter to me, much more than the Particular urged, which could no way relate unto me. 'And Mr. 'Brown in his Sum ſaid very little, if any thing, 'to this Buſineſs of Ireland.'

XI. After this Mr. Nicolas, who would have nothing forgotten, that might help to multiply Clamour againſt me, fell upon five Particulars, which he did but name, and left the Lords to their Notes. Four of theſe five were handled before. As Firſt, the words, If the Parliament prove peeviſh. Secondly, That the King might uſe his own Power. Thirdly, The Violation of the Petition of Right. Fourthly, The Canons. Fifthly, That I ſet Spies about the Election of Parliament-Men in Glouceſterſhire: And for this laſt, they produced a Letter of one Allibon to Dr. Heylin. To the four firſt, I referred the Lords to their Notes of my Anſwers, as they did. To this laſt, that Mr. Allibon is a mere Stranger to me, I know not the Man. And 'tis not likely I ſhould employ a Stranger in ſuch a Buſineſs. The Letter was ſent to Dr. Heylin, and if there were any diſcovery in it of Jugglings there in thoſe Elections, (as too often there are;) and if Dr. Heylin ſent me thoſe Letters, as deſirous I ſhould ſee what Practices are abroad, what fault is there in him or me for this?

XII. Then Mr. Nicolas would not omit that which he thought might diſgrace and diſcontent me, though it could no way be drawn to be any Accuſation: 'twas out of my Diary, at Oct. 27. 1640. this Parliament being then ready to begin. The Paſſage there is, That going into my upper Study, to ſend away ſome Manuſcripts to Oxford, I found my Picture which hung there privately, fallen down upon the face, and lying on the Floor; I am almoſt every day threatned with my Ruin, God grant this be no Omen of it. The Accident is true; and having ſo many Libels cauſeleſly thrown out againſt me, and hearing ſo many ways as I did, that my Ruin was plotted, I had reaſon to apprehend it. But I apprehended it without Paſſion, and with looking up to God, that it might not be ominous to me. 'What is 'this Man angry at? Or why is this produced?'

XIII. But though I cannot tell why this was produced, yet the next was urged only to incenſe your Lordſhips againſt me: 'tis in my Diary again, at Feb. 11. 1640. where Mr. Nicolas ſays confidently, I did abuſe your Lordſhips, and accuſe you of Injuſtice. My Lords, what I ſaid in my Diary, appears not; if it did appear whole and all together, I doubt not but it alone would abundantly ſatisfy your Lordſhips. But that Paſſage is more than half burnt out (as 'is 'to be ſeen) whether of purpoſe by Mr. Pryn, or caſually, I cannot tell; yet the Paſſage as confidently made up, and

'It was viewed.

read

read to your Lordſhips, as if nothing were wanting. For the thing itſelf, the Cloſe of my words is this; So I ſee what Juſtice I may expect, ſince here's a Reſolution taken, not only before my Anſwer, but before my Charge is brought up againſt me. Which Words can traduce no Man's Juſtice: Firſt, Becauſe they depend upon an If; if the Parliament-Man there mentioned told me truth, that ſuch a Reſolution was taken. And Secondly, Becauſe it can be no Juſtice in any Men, be the Sentence never ſo moderate in itſelf, to take up a Reſolution what Sentence ſhall paſs, before Anſwer given, or Charge put in: for elſe a Man may be puniſhed firſt, and tryed after, which is contrary [a] to all Rules of Juſtice. And therefore if ſuch a Reſolution were taken (as I believe not) I might well ſay that which followed after.

[a] Potentia ſequi debet Juſtitiam, non præire. Aug. L. 13. de Trin. c. 13.

XIV. Then was produced a Paper concerning the Subſidies or Aids which had been given in divers Parliaments, in which it is ſaid, at the beginning of it, That Magna Charta had an obſcure Birth, and was foſtered by an ill Nurſe. 'I believe that no Man that knows 'Mr. Nicolas, thinks that he ſpake ſoftly upon 'this.' No, he ſpake loud enough: What Laws would I ſpare, that ſpake thus of Magna Charta? Firſt, Here is no Proof offered that this Paper is my Collection, but only that it is in my Hand: by which Argument (as is ſaid before) I may be made the Author of any thing; and ſo may any Scholar, that is able and willing to inform himſelf. Secondly, The main Draught of that Paper is not in my Hand, though ſome Notes upon it be. Thirdly, There are Littleton, and other Lawyers, quoted in that Paper, Authors which I never read. Nor is this now any diſgrace to Magna Charta, that it had an obſcure Birth: for ſay the Difficulties of the Times brought it obſcurely forth, that's no blemiſh to the Credit and Honour to which it hath for many Ages attained. Not only their Laws, but the greateſt Empires that have been in the World, ſome of them have had obſcure Beginnings: witneſs the Roman Empire. Fourthly, What if our Stories agree upon it, that it had an obſcure Birth, and a worſe Nurſe? What if ſome Law-Books (which Mr. Nicolas never read) and thoſe of good account, uſe almoſt the ſame words of Magna Charta, which are in that Paper? Shall the ſame Words be Hiſtory and Law in them, and Treaſon in me? And ſomewhat certainly there is in it, 'that Mr. Brown, when he gave his 'ſummary Charge againſt me, firſt 'to the Lords, and after in the 'Houſe of Commons, quite omitted 'this Particular. Sure I believe he 'found nothing was in the Paper but 'known Truth, and ſo paſſed it 'over, elſe he would never have 'denied a Vindication to Magna 'Charta.'

Here is a void Space left in the Margin, with deſign (I ſuppoſe) to inſert therein ſome Paſſages out of Law-Books concerning the obſcure Birth of Magna Charta: which Space was not filled up. H. W.

XV. After all this, Mr. Nicolas concludes with a Dream, which he ſays was mine. The Dream (he ſays) was, that I ſhould come to greater Preferment in the Church, and Power in the State, than any Man of my Birth and Calling had done before me, but that in the end I ſhould be hanged. Firſt, My Lords, if I had had any ſuch Dream, 'tis no proof of any thing againſt me. Dreams are not in the power of him that hath them, but in the Unrulineſs of the Fancy, which in broken Sleeps wanders which way it pleaſes, and ſhapes what it pleaſes; Numb. 11. But this Dream is brought in, as the Fall of my Picture was, to make me a Scorn to your Lordſhips and the People, and to try whether any thing will yet at laſt break my Patience. This Dream is reported here according to Mr. Pryn's Edition of my Diary, ſomewhat different from that which Mr. Pryn printed in a former Book of his: but the beginning and the end agree. From Mr. Pryn, Culmer hath taken and printed it. And Mr. Pryn confeſſed before the Lords, that one Mr. Badger an Attorney at Law, a Kinſman of mine, told it him. The truth, my Lords, is this. This Badger married a near Kinſwoman of mine; he was a notorious Separatiſt, and ſo nearer in Affection to Mr. Pryn, than to me in Alliance. This Man came one day to me to Lambeth, and told me privately (which was more Manners than uſually the bold Man had) that he heard I had ſuch a Dream when I was young, in Oxford: I proteſted to him there was no ſuch thing, and that ſome malicious Fellow or other had ſet him on work to come and abuſe me to my face. He ſeemed ſatisfied: but going to viſit Mr. Pryn then in the Tower, he told it him; and Mr. Pryn, without further proof, prints it in the next Book he ſet out. When I ſaw it in print, and found that ſome in Court took notice of it, I reſolved to acquaint his Majeſty how I was uſed; and meeting with the Earl of Pembroke, then Lord Chamberlain, and my great Friend, as he pretended, (the King being not then come forth of his Chamber) I told his Lordſhip how I was uſed; and when the King came forth, I told it him alſo. But the Earl of Pembroke, then preſent in the Houſe, and called up by them for a Witneſs, forgetting the Circumſtances, but remembring the Thing, took it upon his Honour, that I ſaid nothing of Mr. Pryn's printing it, but that I told him abſolutely I had this Dream. Now God forgive his Lordſhip. I was much troubled in myſelf to hear him to take it upon his Diſhonour, (for ſo it was) and yet unwilling (knowing his Violence) to conteſt with him in that Place, and in my Condition; and obſerving what Spleen he hath lately ſhewed againſt me, I ſtood a little ſtill to gather up myſelf. When Mr. Nicolas, before I could make any Reply, fell on with great earneſtneſs, and told the Lords, That the fore part of my Dream was found true, to the great hurt both of Church and State; and that he hoped they would now make good the latter, That I might be hanged. To which I anſwered, That I had not forgotten our Saviour's Prediction, St. John 16. 33. That in the World we ſhould be ſure to meet with Affliction. Nor his Prayer; Father, forgive theſe Men, for they know not what they do; St. Luke 23. 34. No, nor is that out of my memory which St. Paul ſpeaks, 1 Cor. 4. 3. de Humano Die. But for the Publick, with this I ſhall conclude: God of his infinite Mercy bleſs the King and his People with Love, and Peace, and Piety, and Plenty, which is the worſt I ever wiſhed or endeavoured, whatſoever it ſhall pleaſe God ſhall become of me; to whoſe bleſſed Will and Pleaſure, in all humility I ſubmit myſelf. And here ended this laſt Day of my Tryal. But before I went from the Bar, I made three Motions to the Lords: The one, That I might have a Day to make a Recapitulation of this long and various Charge, or of the chief Heads of it, that it might appear in a Body together. The other, That after this, my Counſel might have a Day to ſpeak to all Points of Law, incident to my Cauſe. The third, That they would be pleaſed to remember, that I had pleaded the Act of Oblivion to the thirteenth Original Article. Mr. Nicolas ſaid they would acquaint their Houſe with it. And the Lords promiſed to take all into Conſideration. And ſo I was diſmiſſed ſine Die.

Act

'But here I may not go off from this Dream ſo, 'ſince Mr. Pryn hath printed it at the end of my 'Diary: Where he ſhamelesly ſays, This Dream 'was atteſted from my own Mouth at my Tryal 'in the Lords Houſe. For I have ſet down all 'that paſſed exactly. Nor did I then give any At-'teſtation to it; only before I could gather up my 'ſelf to anſwer the Earl of Pembroke in a fitting 'manner, and not to hurt my ſelf, Mr. Nicolas fell 'upon me with that unchriſtian Bitterneſs, as di-'verted me from the Earl, to anſwer him. But 'once for all, and to ſatisfy any Man that deſires 'it, that is all true which I have here ſet down 'concerning this Dream: And upon my Chriſtia-'nity and Hope of future Salvation, I never had 'this Dream, nor any like it; nor did I ever tell 'it this Lord, or any other, any other way than 'in relation to Badger and Pryn, as is before rela-'ted. And ſure if I had had ſuch a Dream, I ſhould 'not have had ſo little Diſcretion as to tell it any 'Man, leaſt of all to pour it into that Sieve, the 'Earl of Pembroke. For that which follows, and 'wherein his Charity and Words are almoſt the 'ſame with thoſe of Mr. Nicolas, I give him the 'ſame Anſwer, and (forgiving him all his moſt un-'chriſtian and inſatiable Malice againſt me) leave 'my ſelf in the hands of God, not in his.'

Aug. 23. 1644. I received an Order from the Lords, That if I had a mind to make a Recapitulation (as I had formerly deſired) of my long and various Charge, I ſhould provide my ſelf for it againſt Monday next, (this Order came upon Friday;) and that I ſhould give in my Anſwer the next Morning what I meant to do. The next Day, Aug. 24. in obedience to this Order, I gave in my Anſwer; which was humble Thanks that I might have Liberty to make it, referring the Day to their honourable Conſideration, with this, that Monday next was a very ſhort Time for ſuch a Collection. Upon this Anſwer an Order was preſently made, that I ſhould provide to make my Recapitulation upon Monday, September the ſecond. And about this time (the certain Day I know not) it was reſolved in the Houſe of Commons, that according to my Plea I ſhould enjoy the Benefit of the Act of Oblivion, and not be put to anſwer the thirteenth Original Article, concerning the Scotiſh Buſineſs. And truly, I bleſs God for it, I did not deſire the Benefit of that Act for any Senſe of Guiltineſs which I had in my ſelf; but in conſideration of the Times, and the Malice of the now potent Faction, which being implacable towards me, I could not think it Wiſdom to lay by any ſuch Power as might help to ſecure me. Yet in the former part of my Hiſtory, when I had good reaſon to think I ſhould not be called to anſwer ſuch general Articles, I have ſet down my Anſwer to each of them, as much as Generals can be anſwered. And thereby I hope my Innocency will appear to this thirteenth Article alſo.

Then came Monday, Sept. 2. And, according to the Order of the Lords, I made the Recapitulation of my whole Cauſe, in Matters of greateſt Moment, in this Form following. But ſo ſoon as I came to the Bar, I ſaw every Lord preſent with a new thin Book in Folio, in a blue Coat. I heard that Morning, that Mr. Pryn had printed my Diary, and publiſhed it to the World to diſgrace me. Some Notes of his own are made upon it. The firſt and the laſt are two deſperate Untruths, beſides ſome others. This was the Book then in the Lords Hands; and I aſſure my ſelf that Time picked for it, that the ſight of it might damp me, and diſenable me to ſpeak. I confeſs I was a little troubled at it. But after I had gathered up my ſelf, and looked up to God, I went on to the Buſineſs of the Day, and thus I ſpake.

My Recapitulation.

'MY Lords, my Hearing began March 12. 164⅓. and continued to the end of July. 'In this time I was heard before your Lordſhips, 'with much Honour and Patience, twenty Days; 'and ſent back without hearing, by reaſon of your 'Lordſhips greater Employments, twelve Days: 'The reſt were taken up with providing the Charge 'againſt me.

'And now, my Lords, being come near an end, 'I am by your Grace and Favour, and the Leave of 'theſe Gentlemen of the Honourable Houſe of 'Commons, to repreſent to your Lordſhips and 'your Memories, a brief Sum of my Anſwers to 'this long and various Charge: In which I ſhall 'not only endeavour, but perform alſo all poſſible 'Brevity. And as with much Thankfulneſs I ac-'knowledge my ſelf bound to your Lordſhips for 'your Patience; ſo I cannot doubt but that I ſhall 'be as much obliged for your Juſtice, in what I 'am innocent from Crime; and for your Clemency, 'in what the common Frailty of Mankind hath 'made me err. And I humbly deſire your Lord-'ſhips to look upon the whole Buſineſs with ho-'nourable Care of my Calling, of my Age, of my 'long Impriſonment, of my Sufferings in my E-'ſtate, and of my Patience in and through this 'whole Affliction; the Sequeſtration having been 'upon my Eſtate above two Years. In which, 'notwithſtanding, I may not omit to give Thanks 'for the Relief which my Petitions found, for my 'preſent Neceſſities in this Time of my Hearing, at 'your honourable Hands.

'1. Firſt then, I humbly deſire your Lordſhips 'to remember the Generality, and, by occaſion of 'that, the Incertainty of almoſt every Article char-'ged upon me; which hath caſt me into great 'Streights all along in making my Defence.

'2. Next, That your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to 'conſider what a ſhort Space, upon each Day's 'Hearing, hath been allowed me to make my An-'ſwer to the many Charges in each ſeveral Day 'laid againſt me: Indeed, ſome Days ſcarce Time 'enough to peruſe the Evidence, much leſs to make, 'and then to review and weigh my Anſwers. 'Eſpecially conſidering (to my greateſt Grief) 'that ſuch a Charge ſhould be brought up againſt 'me from ſo great and honourable a Body as the 'Commons of England. In regard of which, and 'all other ſad Occaſions, I did at firſt, and do ſtill 'in all Humility deſire, that in all Particulars con-'cerning Law, my Counſel may be heard before 'your Lordſhips proceed to Sentence; and that a 'Day may be aſſigned for my Counſel accord-'ingly.

'3. Thirdly, I heartily pray alſo, that it may 'be taken into your honourable Conſideration how 'I have all manner of ways been ſifted to the ve-'ry Bran, for that (whate'er it amounts to) which 'ſtands in Charge againſt me.

'(1.) The

'(1.) The Key and Uſe of my Study at Lambeth, Books, and Papers, taken from me.

'(2.) A Search upon me at the Tower, made by Mr. Pryn, and one and twenty Bundles of Papers, prepared for my Defence, taken from me, and not three Bundles reſtored to me again. This Search made before any particular Articles were brought up againſt me. My very Pockets ſearched; and my Diary, nay, my very Prayer-Book taken from me, and after uſed againſt me: And that in ſome Caſes not to prove, but to make a Charge. Yet I am thus far glad, even for this ſad Accident: For by my Diary your Lordſhips have ſeen the Paſſages of my Life; and by my Prayer-Book the greateſt Secrets between God and my Soul. So that you may be ſure you have me at the very bottom. Yet, bleſſed be God, no Diſloyalty is found in the one; no Popery in the other.

'(3.) That all Books of Council-Table, Star-Chamber, High-Commiſſion, Signet-Office, my own Regiſteries, and the Regiſteries of Oxford and Cambridge, have been moſt exquiſitely ſearched for matter againſt me, and kept from me and my uſe, and ſo affording me no Help towards my Defence.

'4. I humbly deſire your Lordſhips to remember in the fourth place, That the Things wherein I took great pains, and all for the publick Good and Honour of this Kingdom and Church, without any the leaſt Eye to my own Particular, nay, with my own great and large Expences, have been objected againſt me as Crimes: As, namely, the Repair of St. Paul's, and the ſettling of the Statutes of the Univerſity of Oxford.

'(1.) For St. Paul's: Not the Repair it ſelf, they ſay, (no, for very ſhame they dare not ſay that, though that be it which galls the Faction) but the demoliſhing the Houſes which ſtood about it. Yea, but without taking down of theſe Houſes, it was not poſſible to come at the Church to repair it; which is a known Truth. And they were taken down by Commiſſion under the Broad-Seal. And the Tenants had valuable Conſideration for their ſeveral Intereſts, according to the Number of their Years remaining, and according to the Judgment of Commiſſioners named for that purpoſe, and named by his Majeſty and the Lords, not by me: Nor did I ever ſo much as ſit with them about this Buſineſs. And if the Commiſſion it ſelf were any way illegal, (as they urge it is) that muſt reflect upon them whoſe Office was to draw and ſeal it; not on me, who underſtood not the Legality or Illegality of ſuch Commiſſions: Nor did I deſire that any one Circumſtance againſt Law ſhould be put into it; nor is any ſuch thing ſo much as offered in proof againſt me. And becauſe it was preſſed, That theſe Houſes could not be pulled down but by order of Parliament, and not by the King's Commiſſion alone; I did here firſt read in part, and afterwards, according to a Salvo granted me, deliver into the Court three Records, two in Edward I's Time, and one in [1] Edward III's Time, in which are theſe Words; Authoritate noſtra Regali, prout opus fuerit, ceſſantibus quibuſcunque Appellationum & Reclamationum diffugiis, Juris, Scripti, aut Patriæ ſtrepitu procedatis; Nova Ædificia quæ, &c. amoveri, & divelli penitus faciatis, &c. And a little after, Quouſque per nos cum deliberatione & aviſamento noſtri Conſilii ſuper hoc aliter fuerit ordinatum, &c. Here's no ſtaying for a Parliament; here's no Recompence given; here's barring of all Appeal, nay, all Remedy of Law, though written. And all this by the King's own Authority, with the Advice of his Council. And is a far more moderate way taken by me, yet under the ſame Authority, and for the Removal of far greater Abuſes, and for a more noble End, become Treaſon?

[1] 1 Pars Pat. de An. 45 Ed. 3, m. 34.

'(2.) As for the Statutes of Oxford, the Circumſtances charged againſt me are many; and therefore I crave leave to refer my ſelf to what I had already anſwered therein.

'5. Fifthly, Many of the Witneſſes brought againſt me in this Buſineſs are more than ſuſpected Sectaries and Separatiſts from the Church; which by my Place I was to puniſh, and that exaſperated them againſt me, whereas by [2] Law no Schiſmatick ought to be received againſt his Biſhop. And many of theſe are Witneſſes in their own Cauſes, and pre-examined before they come in Court; at which Pre-examination I was not preſent, nor any for me, to croſs interrogate. Nay, many Cauſes which took up divers Days of Hearing in Star-Chamber, High-Commiſſion, and at Council-Table, are now upon the ſudden eaſily overthrown by the Depoſitions of the Parties themſelves. And upon what Law this is grounded, I humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhips. And ſuch as theſe are the Cauſes of Mr. Pryn, Mr. Burton, Mr. Wilſon, Alderman Chambers, Mr. Vaſſal, Mr. Waker, Mr. Huntly, Mr. Foxlye, and many other. Where I humbly repreſent alſo, how impoſſible it is for any Man that ſits as a Judge to give an account of all the ſeveral Motives which directed his Conſcience in ſo divers Cauſes, and ſo many Years paſt, as theſe have been, and where ſo many Witneſſes have been examined, as have been here produced againſt me: My Lords, above an hundred and fifty Witneſſes, and ſome of them three, four, ſix times over; and Mr. Pryn I know not how often. Whereas the Civil Law ſays expreſly, That the (a) Judges ſhould moderate Things ſo, that no Man ſhould be oppreſſed by the Multitude of Witneſſes; which is a kind of Proof too, that they which ſo do, diſtruſt the Truth and Goodneſs of their Cauſe. Beſides, my Lords, in all Matters which came before me I have done nothing, to the uttermoſt of my Underſtanding, but what might conduce to the Peace and Welfare of this Kingdom, and the Maintenance of the Doctrine and Diſcipline of this Church eſtabliſhed by Law; and under which God hath bleſſed this State with ſo great Peace and Plenty, as other neighbouring Nations have looked upon with Admiration. And what Miſeries the Overthrow of it (which God in Mercy forbid) may produce, he alone knows.

[2] Cod. L. 1. Tit. 5. L. 12. & 21. Confer. at Hampton-Court, p. 26.

'6. Sixthly, My Lords, there have been many and different Charges laid upon me about Words. But many of them (if ſpoken) were only paſſio-

'nate and haſty; and ſuch, upon what occaſion ſo-'ever drawn from me, (and I have had all manner 'of Provocations put upon me) may among hu-'man Errors be pardoned unto me, if ſo it pleaſe 'your Lordſhips. But for ſuch as may ſeem to be 'of a higher nature, as thoſe witneſſed by Sir Henry 'Vane the Elder, I gave my Anſwer again now fully 'to the Lords, but ſhall not need to repeat it here.

'7. Seventhly, Then, my Lords, for my Actions: 'Not only my own, but other Mens have been 'heavily charged againſt me in many Particulars, 'and that criminally, and I hope your Lord-'ſhips will think illegally: As Secretary Winde-'bank's, Biſhop Montague's, my Chaplains, Dr. Hey-'lin's, Dr. Coſens's, Dr. Pocklinton's, Dr. Dove's, 'Mr. Shelford's, and divers others: And many of 'theſe Charges look back into many Years paſt. 'Whereas the Act made this preſent Parliament 'takes no notice of, nor puniſhes any Man for any 'thing done and paſt at the Council-Table, Star-'Chamber, or High-Commiſſion, much leſs doth 'it make any thing Treaſon. And out of this Act 'I am no way excepted. Beſides, (as I have often 'pleaded) all Acts done in the Star-Chamber, at 'Council-Table, High-Commiſſion, or Convoca-'tion, are all joint Acts of that Body in and by 'which they were done; and cannot by any Law 'be ſingly put upon me, it being a known Rule of 'the Law, Refertur ad univerſos quod publice fit per 'majorem partem. And [1] Mr. Pryn 'himſelf can ſtand upon this Rule 'againſt the Independents, and tell us 'that the major Voice or Party ought 'to over-rule and bind the leſs; and 'he quotes [2] Scripture for it too. 'In which place, that which is done 'by the major Part is aſcribed to 'all; not laid upon any one, as here upon me. 'And in ſome of theſe Courts, Star-Chamber eſpe-'cially, and Council-Table, I was accompanied 'with Perſons of great Honour, Knowledge, and 'Experience, Judges, and others: And 'tis to me 'ſtrange, and will ſeem ſo to future Ages, that one 'and the ſame Act ſhall be Treaſon in me, and not 'the leaſt Crime, nay, nor Miſdemeanour in any 'other. And yet no Proof hath been offered that 'I ſollicited any Man to concur with me, and al-'moſt all the Votes given preceded mine, ſo that 'mine could lead no Man.'

8. After this I anſwered to divers other Particulars, as, namely, to the Canons, both as they concerned Aid to the King, and as they looked upon Matters of the Church and Religion.

9. To the Charge about Prohibitions.

10. To the baſe Charge about Bribery. But paſs them over here, as being anſwered before: Whither I may refer the Reader now, though I could not the Lords then.

'11. My Lords, after this came in the long 'and various Charge of my uſurping Papal Power, 'and no leſs than a Deſign to bring in all the Cor-'ruptions of Popery, to the utter Overthrow of 'the Proteſtant Religion eſtabliſhed in England. 'And this they went about to prove,

'(1.) By my Windows in the Chappel: An Argu-'ment as brittle as the Glaſs in which the Pic-'tures are.

'(2.) By Pictures in my Gallery: Which were there 'before the Houſe was mine, and ſo proved to 'your Lordſhips.

'(3.) By Reverence done in my Chappel: As if it 'were not due to God, eſpecially in his Church; 'and done it was not to any other Perſon or 'Thing.

'(4.) By Conſecration of Churches: Which was long 'before Popery came into the World; as was alſo the 'Care of ſafe laying up of all hallowed and ſacred 'Things. For which, I deſire your 'Lordſhips I may read a ſhort Paſſage 'out of [3] Sir Walter Raleigh's Hiſtory; 'the rather becauſe written by a Lay-'Man, and ſince the Times of Re-'formation.

[3] Sir Wal. Raleigh's Hiſt. of the World, L. 2. c. 5. S. 1.

But this Mr. Maynard excepted againſt, both as new Matter, and becauſe I had not the Book preſent, though the Paper thence tranſcribed was offered to be atteſted by Oath to be a true Copy. But though I could not be ſuffered to read it then, yet here it follows: 'So ſacred was the moveable 'Temple of God, and with ſuch Reverence guard-'ed and tranſported, as 22000 Perſons were dedi-'cated to the Service and Attendance thereof, of 'which 8580 had the peculiar Charge, according 'to their ſeveral Offices and Functions, the Parti-'culars whereof are in the Third and Fourth of 'Numbers. The reverend Care which Moſes the 'Prophet and choſen Servant of God had, in all 'that belonged even to the outward and leaſt Parts 'of the Tabernacle, Ark, and Sanctuary, witneſ-'ſed well the inward and moſt humble Zeal borne 'toward God himſelf. The Induſtry uſed in the 'framing thereof, and every and the leaſt part there-'of, the curious Workmanſhip thereon beſtowed, 'the exceeding Charge and Expence in the Provi-'ſions, the dutiful Obſervance in laying up and 'preſerving the Holy Veſſels, the ſolemn removing 'thereof, the vigilant Attendance thereon, and 'the provident Defence of the ſame, which all 'Ages have in ſome degree imitated, is now ſo 'forgotten and caſt away, in this ſuperfine Age, 'by thoſe of the Family, by the Anabaptiſts, 'Browniſts, and other Sectaries, as all Coſts and 'Care beſtowed and had of the Church, wherein 'God is to be ſerved and worſhipped, is accounted 'a kind of Popery, and as proceeding from an 'idolatrous Diſpoſition. Inſomuch, as Time would 'ſoon bring to paſs (if it were not reſiſted) that 'God would be turned out of Churches into Barns, 'aud from thence again into the Fields and Moun-'tains, and under the Hedges; and the Office of 'the Miniſtry (robbed of all Dignity and Reſpect) 'be as contemptible as thoſe Places; all Order, 'Diſcipline, and Church-Government, left to 'Newneſs of Opinion and Mens Fancies: Yea, 'and ſoon after as many Kinds of Religions would 'ſpring up, as there are Pariſh-Churches, &c.' Do ye not think ſome body ſet Mr. Maynard on to prohibit the reading out of this Paſſage, as foreſee-ing whither it tended? For I had read one third part of it, before I had the Stop put upon me.

'(5.) But they went on with their Proof, by my 'cenſuring of good Men, that is, Separatiſts and 'refractory Perſons.

'(6.) By my Chaplains expunging ſome Things 'out of Books which made againſt the Papiſts. 'It may be, if my Chaplains (whom it concerns) 'had Liberty to anſwer, they were ſuch Paſſages 'as could not be made good againſt the Papiſts; 'and then 'tis far better they ſhould be out than 'in. For as (a) St. Auguſtin obſerved in his, and (a) Quid Moleſtiæ & Triſtitiæ ingerunt Prudentibus Fratribus, temerarii Aſſertores ſatis dici non poteſt. Aug. 1. de Gen. ad Lit. C. 19.

'we find it true in our Time, The Inconvenience 'is great, which comes to the Church and Religion by 'bold Affirmers. Nay, he is at a satis dici non po- 'test, the Mischief is so great as cannot be ex- 'pressed.

'(7.) Then by altering some Things in a Ser- 'mon of Dr. Sibthorp's. But my Answer formerly 'given will shew I had cause.

'(8.) By my Preferment of unworthy Men. So 'unworthy, as that they would be famous both for 'Life and Learning, were they in any other Pro- 'testant Church in Christendom. And they are 'so Popishly affected, as that having suffered much 'both in State and Reputation (since this Perse- 'cution of the Clergy began; for less it hath not 'been) no one of them is altered in Judgment, or 'fallen into any liking with the Church of Rome.

'(9.) By the Overthrow of the Feoffment: But 'that was done by Judgment in the Exchequer, to 'which I referred my self. And if the Judgment 'there given be right, there's no Fault in any 'Man: If it were wrong, the Fault was in the 'Judges, not in me; I sollicited none of them.

'(10.) By a Passage in my Book, 'where I say, The Religion of the Pa- 'pists and ours is one: But that's ex- 'pressed at large, only because both 'are Christianity; and no Man, I hope, will de- 'ny that Papists are Christians. As for their no- 'torious Failings in Christianity, I have in the 'same Book said enough to them.

'(11.) By a Testimony of Mr. Burton's and Mr. 'Lane's, That I should say, We and the Church of 'Rome did not differ in Fundamentals, but in Circum- 'stantials. [This I here followed at large; but, to avoid tedious Repetition, refer my Reader to the Place where 'tis answered.]

'(12.) By my making the Dutch Churches to be 'of another Religion. But this is mistaken (as 'my Answer will shew the Reader;) and if they 'do not make themselves of another Religion, 'I shall never endeavour to make them.

'(13.) By a Pack of such Witnesses, as were ne- 'ver produced against any Man of my Place and 'Calling; Messengers and Pursuivants, and such 'as have shifted their Religion to and again; Pil- 'lory-Men and Bawds; and these the Men that 'must prove my Correspondence with Priests.

'(14.) In the midst of these, upon occasion of the 'Ceremonies at the Coronation, it was pressed 'against me, That I had altered the King's Oath.

'(15.) And last of all, That I had shewed my self 'an Enemy to Parliaments. [Upon both these I did very much enlarge my self: But here also, that I may not be a Burden in repeating the same things, I desire the Reader to look upon them in their proper Places, where I doubt not but my Answer will give him full Satisfaction, that I did not the one, nor am the other.]

'But, my Lords, there are other strange Argu- 'ments produced against me, to prove my Com- 'pliance with Rome, which I most humbly desire 'your Lordships may not be forgotten.

'1. As, First, my Lords, it hath been charged 'upon me, That I made the Oath recited in the 'first of the late Canons; one Clause whereof is 'this: That I will never give my Consent to subject 'this Church to the Usurpations and Superstitions of 'the Church of Rome. Whence the Argument drawn 'against me, must be this, and can be no other; 'That I did endeavour to bring in Popery, because 'I made and took a solemn Oath, never to give 'my Consent to subject this Church of England to 'to the Usurpations and Superstitions of the 'Church of Rome. I beseech your Lordships mark 'the Force of this Argument; and they which 'follow are as pregnant against me.

'2. Secondly, My Book against Fisher, hath been 'charged against me; where the Argument must 'lie thus: I have endeavoured to advance Popery, 'because I have written against it: And with 'what Strength I have written against it, I leave 'Posterity to judge, when the Envy which now 'over-loads me, shall be buried with me. This 'I will say with St. Gregory Nazianzen (whose 'Success at Constantinople was not much unlike 'mine here, save that his Life was 'not sought) I † never laboured for 'Peace to the Wrong and Detriment of 'Christian Verity; nor I hope ever 'shall. [And let the Church of Eng- 'land look to it: for in great Humi- lity I crave to write this (though then was no time to speak it) That the Church of England must leave the way it's now going, and come back to that way of Defence which I have followed in my Book, or she shall never be able to justify her Separation from the Church of Rome.]

† Non studeamus paci in veræ doctrinæ detrimentum, Greg. Naz. Orat. 32.

'3. Thirdly, All the late Canons have been 'charged against me; and the Argument which 'is drawn from thence, must lie thus: The third of 'these Canons for suppressing the Growth of Po- 'pery, is the most full and strict Canon that ever 'was made against it in the Church of England; 'therefore I that made this Canon to keep it out, 'am guilty of endeavouring to bring it in.

'4. Fourthly, I have by my Industry, and God's 'great Blessing upon my Labours, stayed as many 'from going, and reduced to the Church of Eng- 'land as many that were gone to Rome, as I be- 'lieve any Minister in England can truly say he 'hath done: I named them before, and had Scorn 'enough put upon me for it, as your Lordships 'could not but both see and hear; where the Ar- 'gument lies thus: I converted many from Popery, 'and settled them in the Religion established in 'England; therefore I laboured to bring in Popery, 'which out of all doubt can be no sober Man's 'way.

'5. Fifthly, The Plot discovered to Sir William 'Boswell and my self, by Andreas ab Habernfield, 'hath been charged against me: That Plot for 'altering of Religion, and by what ways, your 'Lordships have heard already, and 'is to be seen at full in Rome's Ma- 'ster-Piece. Now if this Plot in the 'Issue proved nothing but a confused 'Information, and no Proof of any Particular, as 'indeed it did; what's become of Rome's Master- 'Piece? But if it had any Reality in it, as it 'appeared to be a sad Plot, not only to me, but 'to all Men that saw the short Propositions which 'were first sent, with an absolute Undertaking to 'prove them; then it appears expressly, that I was 'in danger of my Life, for stiffly opposing the 'bringing in of Popery; and that there was no 'hope to alter Religion in England, till I was ta- 'ken out of the way. And though in Conclusion 'the Proofs failed, yet what was consulted, and 'it seems resolved, concerning me, is plain e- 'nough. And then the Argument against me lies 'thus: There's no hope to bring in Popery, till I 'am taken out of the way; therefore I did la- 'bour to bring it in. Do not these things, my 'Lords, hang handsomly together?

Mr. Pryn's Rome's Ma- ster-Piece.

'6. Lastly,

'6. Laſtly, There have been above threeſcore 'Letters and other Papers, brought out of my Study into this Honourable Houſe; they are all about 'compoſing the Differences between the Lutherans 'and the Calviniſts in Germany. Why they ſhould 'be brought hither, but in hope to charge them 'upon 'em, I know not; and then the Argument 'will be this: I laboured to reconcile the Pro- 'teſtants in Germany, that they might unanimouſly 'ſet themſelves againſt the Papiſts; therefore I 'laboured to bring Popery into England.

'Now that your Lordſhips have heard the Arguments, and what Proof they make againſt me, 'I muſt be bold to put you in mind of that 'which was ſaid here at the Bar, April 16. 1644. 'That they did not urge any of theſe particular 'Actions as Treaſon againſt me; but the Reſult 'of them altogether amounted to Treaſon. For 'Anſwer to which, I muſt be bold to tell your 'Lordſhips, That if no Particular which is charged upon me be Treaſon, the Reſult from them 'cannot be Treaſon, which will appear by theſe 'Reaſons following:

'1. Firſt, The Reſult muſt be of the ſame Nature and Species with the Particulars from which 'it riſes. But 'tis confeſſed no one of the Particulars are Treaſon: Therefore neither is the 'Reſult that riſes from them. And this holds in 'Nature, in Morality, and in Law.

'In Nature, and that both for Integral and Eſſential Parts: for neither can the Body of a Bear 'and the Soul of a Lion, reſult into a Fox; nor 'the Legs of a Bull, the Body of a Horſe, and the 'Head of an Aſs, reſult into a Man.

'In Morality, and that is ſeen both in Vertues and Vices: For neither can many Actions of Liberality, Meekneſs and Sobriety, riſe up into a 'Reſult of Fortitude; neither can many Actions 'of Malice, Drunkenneſs and Covetouſneſs, reſult into Treaſon.

'In Law 'tis ſo too: For be there never ſo many particular Crimes, yet there is no Law in 'this Kingdom, nor any where elſe that I know, 'that makes a Reſult of different Crimes to be 'Treaſon, where none of the Particulars are Treaſon by Law. So this imaginary Reſult is a Monſter in Nature, in Morality and in Law; and if 'it be nouriſhed, will devour all the Safety of the 'Subject of England, which now ſtands ſo well 'fenced by the known Law of the Land. And 'therefore I humbly deſire your Lordſhips, not 'for mine, but for the Publick's ſake, to weigh this 'Buſineſs well, before this Gap be made ſo wide, 'as there will hardly be Power left again to ſhut it.

'2. My ſecond Reaſon is joined to the Anſwer 'of an Objection: For when this Reſult was 'ſpoken of, it was added, That the Particulars 'charged againſt me, are of the ſame kind, and 'do all tend to the Subverſion of Law and Religion, and ſo become Treaſon. But, Firſt, ſuppoſe that all the Particulars charged, do tend 'to the Subverſion of Law, yet that cannot make 'them to be all of one kind: For all Crimes 'tend more or leſs to the Overthrow of Vertue; 'yet no Man can ſay, that all Crimes are of the 'ſame kind. Secondly, Be they of the ſame, or 'different kinds; yet neither all, nor any of theſe 'charged againſt me, do tend to the Subverſion of 'the Law: For 'tis one thing to break, diſlike or 'ſpeak againſt ſome particular Laws, and quite 'another to labour the Subverſion of the whole 'Body of the Law, and the Frame of Government. And that I have done this by Conſpiracy, Force, 'or any overt Action, is not ſo much as offered in 'Proof. And for the Breach of any particular 'Law, if I be guilty, I am to be puniſhed by the 'Sanction of that Law which I have broken.

'3. Thirdly, Whereas it hath been ſaid, That 'many Actions of the ſame kind make a Habit. 'That's true: But what then? For, Firſt, the 'Actions urged againſt me, are not of the ſame 'kind, but exceeding different. Secondly, If the 'Habit be treaſonable, then all thoſe particular 'Actions which bred that Habit, muſt be ſeveral 'Treaſons, as well as the Reſult or Habit it ſelf; 'whereas it hath been granted all along, that my 'particular Actions are not Treaſons. And, Thirdly, 'a Habit in it ſelf, neither is nor can be Treaſon; 'for all Treaſon is either Thought, Word or Overt 'Act; but no Habit is either of theſe, 'therefore not Treaſon. For a * Habit is that in the Soul which enclines the Powers of it, and makes 'a Man apt and ready to think, ſpeak, or do that 'to which he is habituated. So an ill Habit againſt Sovereign Power, may make a Man apt 'and forward to fall into Treaſon; but Treaſon 'it is not. * Tho. 1. 2æ. q. 50. A. 5.

'4. Fourthly, Nor can this Reſult be Treaſon 'at the Common Law, by which alone, I conceive, 'there is no Treaſon at all this day in England: 'For the main end of that excellent Statute of 25 'Edw. 3. was for the Safety of the Subject, againſt 'the manifold Treaſons which variouſly fell upon them by the Common Law; and bounded 'all Treaſons, and limited them to the things expreſſed to be Treaſon in and by that Statute. 'And in all times of difficulty ſince, Recourſe 'hath ſtill been had to that Statute: And to that 'Statute I refer my ſelf, with this; That this Reſult muſt be ſomething within this Statute, or 'ſome other known Statute, or elſe it cannot be 'Treaſon: And no Proof at all hath been ſo much 'as offered, that this Reſult is Treaſon by any 'Law.

'My Lords, I do with all humble Submiſſion 'deſire, that when the Reply is made to this Matter of Fact, a Day may be aſſigned for my Counſel to be heard in Matter of Law, in all and 'every Particular which they ſhall find neceſſary 'for my juſt Defence.

'And now, my Lords, I do in all Humility lay 'my ſelf low at God's Mercy-ſeat, to do with 'me as he pleaſes; and under God, I ſhall rely 'upon your Lordſhips Juſtice, Honour and Clemency, of which I cannot doubt. And without 'being farther tedious to your Lordſhips (who 'have with very honourable Patience heard me 'through this long and tedious Tryal) I ſhall conclude with that which St. Auguſtine ſaid to Romanianus, a Man that had tried 'both Fortunes as well as I: * If the Providence of God reaches down to us '(as moſt certain it doth) Sic tecum agi oportet, ſicut agitur: It muſt ſo be done with thee (and ſo with me 'alſo) as it is done. And under that Providence, 'which will, I doubt not, work to the beſt to 'my Soul that loves God, I repoſe my ſelf. * S. Aug. l. 1. cont. Academ. c. 1. S. Mat. 10. 29. Rom. 8. 28.

Here ended my Recapitulation, and with it the Work of that Day: And I was ordered to appear again the Saturday following, to hear Mr. Brown ſum up the whole Charge againſt me. But upon Tueſday, Septemb. 3. this was put off, to give Mr. Brown more time, to Wedneſday, Septemb. 11.

ON Wedneſday, Septemb. 11. Mr. Brown made in the Lords Houſe, a Sum or Brief of the Charge which was brought againſt me, and touched, by the way, at ſome things in my Recapitulation. But in regard I might not anſwer him, I took no perfect Notes, but ſtood ſtill, and poſſeſſed my Soul in Patience; yet wondring at the bold, free, frequent, and moſt falſe Swearing that had been againſt me. When Mr. Brown had ended, I humbly deſired again, that my Counſel might be heard in Point of Law. And they were hereupon ordered to deliver in Writing under their Hands, what Points of Law they would inſiſt upon, and that by Saturday, Septemb. 14.

This Day my Counſel, according as they were ordered, delivered into the Lords Houſe, theſe two Points following, by way of Queſtion. Firſt, Whether in all, or any of the Articles charged againſt me, there be contained any Treaſon by the eſtabliſhed Laws of this Kingdom? Secondly, Whether the Charge of the ſaid Impeachment and Articles, did contain ſuch Certainty and Particularity as is required by Law, in a Caſe where Treaſon is charged? This Day I petitioned the Lords, that my Counſel might have acceſs to, and take Copies of all ſuch Records as they thought neceſſary for my Defence; which was granted and order'd accordingly.

My Counſels Queries having been formerly ſent down to the Houſe of Commons, they were there referred to a Committee of Lawyers to conſider of: And on Friday, Septemb. 27. they were earneſtly called upon to haſten their Report. And on Friday, Octob. 4. Mr. Nicolas made a great noiſe about me in the Houſe, and would have had me preſently cenſured in the Houſe; and no leſs would ſerve his turn, but that I muſt be hanged; and was at Suſ. per Coll. till upon the Reaſons before given, that if they went on this way, they muſt condemn me unheard; this violent Clamour ceaſed for that time. And a Meſſage was ſent up to the Lords for my Counſel to be heard, as touching the firſt Queſtion concerning Treaſon; but not concerning any Exception that they ſhall take againſt the Articles in point of Certainty. This Meſſage the Lords took into preſent Conſideration, and order'd it accordingly: And appointed the Friday following, being Octob. 11. for my Counſel to be heard, and my ſelf to be preſent.

This Day, according to this Order of the Lords, I and my Counſel attended. My Counſel were Mr. Hern and Mr. Hale of Lincoln's-Inn, and Mr. Gerard of Gray's-Inn. When we were called into the Houſe, and the Lords ſettled in their Places, Mr. (a) John Hern (who was the Man that ſpake what all had reſolved on) delivered his Argument very freely and ſtoutly, proving that nothing which I have either ſaid or done according to this Charge, is Treaſon, by any known eſtabliſhed Law of this Kingdom. The Argument follows in theſe Words, according to the Copy which Mr. Hern himſelf delivered me.

My Lords,

A ſhort Introduction.

'THE Work of this Day, we humbly conceive, is in many reſpects of very great and high Concernment.

'1. In that it concerns Matter of Life, a thing of the higheſt Conſequence.

'2. The Life of an Archbiſhop, a Perſon who had attained the higheſt Dignity conferred in the Church of England.

'3. Thoſe happy Laws, many Years ſince enacted and confirmed by ſeveral Parliaments, to be the Boundaries what was Treaſon; a Crime before ſo various, as it had no Bounds; and ſo odious, that the Puniſhment of it was an infamous Death, a total Confiſcation, with a Brand of Infamy to all Poſterity.

'4. In that the Charge againſt him moves from no leſs a Body than the whole Commons of England, which preſents him now a Priſoner at this Bar before your Lordſhips, in the High and Supreme Court of Judicature in Parliament.

'And if any thing ſhall fall from us, ſubject to any doubtful Conſtruction, we ſhall humbly crave your Lordſhips Pardon, and Leave to make our Explication: For as there is upon us a Duty to be wary, not to offer any thing which may miniſter juſt Offence; ſo neither may we be unfaithful, to omit what may juſtly tend to our Client's Defence.

The Charge, upon what it conſiſts.

'The Charge againſt him, we find to be made up of two ſeveral Parcels of Articles, exhibited by the Honourable Houſe of Commons.

The Titles of the ſeveral Parcels of the Articles, upon which the Charge againſt the ABp was made up.

'1. The firſt, In Maintenance of their Accuſation, whereby he ſtands charged with High Treaſon.

'2. The latter intitled, Farther Articles of Impeachment of High Treaſon, and divers High Crimes and Miſdemeanours; for all which Matters and Things they have impeached him of High Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanours, tending to the Subverſion of Religion, Laws and Liberties, and to the utter Ruin of this Church and Commonwealth.

The Straits upon his Counſel by reaſon of the mix'd Charge, without diſtinguiſhing what was intended to be a Treaſon, what a Miſdemeanour.

'Concerning this Charge, and the Archbiſhop's Defence he hitherto made before your Lordſhips, we (by your Lordſhips Command aſſigned his Counſel) neither have nor could (by reaſon of the mix'd Charge, without diſtinguiſhing what was thereby intended to be a Charge of Treaſon, and what of Miſdemeanour only) be farther uſeful to him, than to adviſe the Form of his Plea and Anſwer, which we received from him, as to all the Matters of Fact, to be a Not Guilty.

'We have not in all or any the Facts charged or evidenced againſt him, in any ſort intermeddled. But the ſame (how proved and how appliable to the Charges, without mention of any of them) ſhall wholly leave to your Lordſhips Notes and Memories.

'What Defence he hath offered hitherto, hath been wholly his own: he without us in that, and we without conſulting him in the Work of this Day.

'Wherein, having received your Lordſhips Commands, we did preſent in writing the Points in Law we then humbly conceived fit for us to inſiſt upon.

(a) The Lord Chancellor Finch told me, that this Argument was not Mr. Hern's, (though he pronounced it) for he could not argue; but it was Mr. Hale, afterward Lord Chief Juſtice. And he ſaid farther, that being then a young Lawyer, he ſtood behind Mr. Hern, when he ſpoke at the Bar of the Lords Houſe, and took Notes of it; and that it will be publiſhed among his Reports W. S; A. C.

'I. Whe-

The two Points preſented by Counſel in writings, to be inſiſted upon for his Defence in point of Law.

'I. Whether in all, or any the 'Articles charged againſt him, there 'was contained any Treaſon by the 'eſtabliſhed Laws of this Kingdom.

'II. Whether the Charge of the 'ſaid Impeachment and Articles, did 'contain ſuch Certainty and Particu-'larity, as is required by Law in a 'Caſe where Treaſon is charged.

The firſt only admitted.

'But being enjoined by your ho-'nourable Order, to ſpeak only to 'the former; we ſhall, as in Duty 'becomes, conform thereunto.

The Method propoſed.

'For our Method herein ſhall fol-'low the Courſe holden in the Reply 'made upon the whole Articles, 'whereby we conceived the Charges contained in 'them were reduced to theſe three Generals.

The three general Charges.

'1. A traitorous Endeavour to 'ſubvert the Fundamental Laws of 'the Realm; and inſtead thereof, to 'introduce an Arbitrary and Tyran-'nical Government againſt Law; contained in the 'firſt Original and firſt Additional Articles.

'2. Secondly, A traitorous Endeavour to ſub-'vert God's true Religion by Law eſtabliſhed; 'and inſtead thereof, to ſet up Popiſh Superſtition 'and Idolatry: this contained in the ſeventh Ori-'ginal and ſeventh Additional Articles.

'3. Thirdly, That he laboured to ſubvert the 'Rights of Parliament, and the antient Courſe of 'Parliamentary Proceedings, and by falſe and ma-'licious Slanders to incenſe his Majeſty againſt 'Parliaments. And this contained in the four-'teenth Original and tenth Additional Articles.

'All other the Articles, we humbly conceive 'to be but Inſtances, conducing and applied to 'ſome of thoſe Generals.

'Concerning thoſe three General Heads of the 'Charge, we ſhall crave leave to propoſe two 'Queſtions to be debated.

Two general Queſtions to be inſiſted upon.

'1. Whether there be at this day 'any other Treaſon, than what is 'declared by the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. 'cap. 2. or enacted by ſome ſubſe-'quent particular Statute; which we humbly 'conceive, and ſhall endeavour to ſatisfy your 'Lordſhips, there is not any.

'2. Whether any the Matters in any of the Ar-'ticles charged, contain any of the Treaſons de-'clared by that Law, or enacted by any ſubſe-'quent Law; which we likewiſe conceive they do 'not. And for the clearing of both theſe, ſhall 'humbly inſiſt, That,

'(1.) An Endeavour to ſubvert the Laws, an 'Endeavour to ſubvert Religion, a labouring to 'ſubvert the Rights of Parliaments; are not 'Treaſons, either within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. 'or by any other particular Statute.

'(2.) That not any of the Particulars, inſtan-'ced in any other the Articles, is a Treaſon 'within the Statute 25 Ed. 3. or any other Sta-'tute.

In maintenance of our firſt Tenet upon the firſt Queſtion.

'And to make good our Tenet 'upon our firſt Queſtion, ſhall hum-'bly offer,

'That before this Statute of 25 'Ed. 3. Treaſons at the Common 'Law were ſo general and uncer-'tain, that almoſt any Crime, by Inferences and 'Conſtructions, might be, and was often extended 'to be a Treaſon; inſomuch as we find in 22° of 'the Book of Aſſize, killing the King's Meſſen-'ger was Treaſon. And in the Parliament-Roll, '21 Ed. 3. num. 15. accroaching the Royal Power '(wherein every Exceſs was ſubject to a Conſtruc-'tion of Treaſon) was Treaſon; for which di-'vers having ſuffered, the Commons in Parlia-'ment finding how miſchievous and deſtructive 'it was to the Subject, petitioned it might be 'bounded and declared. And this, not to give 'any liberty, but to give bounds to it; one while 'it being conſtrued an Accroachment of Royal 'Power, as in the Caſe of the Earl of Lancaſter, 'temp. Ed. 2. for being over-popular with the Peo-'ple; and in the ſame King's Reign to Spencer, 'for being over-gracious with the King.

The Uncertainty of what was, or was not Treaſon, produced the Law of 25 Edw. 3.

'The Senſe of theſe and other 'Miſchiefs by the Uncertainty of 'Treaſon, brought on this Law of '25 Ed. 3. And the Benefit of it to 'the Subject, ſays Sir Ed. Coke upon 'his Collections of the Pleas of the 'Crown, begot that Parliament the 'Name of (a) Parliamentum Benedic-'tum; and that, except Magna Charta, no other 'Act of Parliament had more Honour given it by 'the King, Lords, and Commons.

The Act of 25 Ed. 3. the Rule in Parliament to judge Treaſons by.

'And this Law hath been in all 'times the Rule to judge Treaſons 'by, even in Parliament; and there-'fore in the Parliament-Roll, 1 H. 4. 'num. 144. the Tryal and Judgment in 'Caſes of Impeachment of Treaſon, 'is prayed by the Commons might 'be according to the antient Laws. 'And in the Parliament-Roll 5 H. 4. 'num. 12. in the Caſe of the then Earl 'of Northumberland, this Statute of '25 Ed. 3. was the Guide and Rule 'by which the Lords judged, in a 'Caſe endeavoured to have been ex-'tended to be a Treaſon, the ſame to be no 'Treaſon.

Parliament-Roll 1 H. 4. num. 144. the Prayer of the Commons.

Parliament-Roll, 5 H. 4. num. 12. Caſe of E. of Northumberland.

'And it is, as we conceive, very 'obſervable, That if at any time 'the Neceſſity or Exceſs of the 'Times produced any particular 'Laws in Parliament, for making 'of Treaſons not contained in that 'Law of 25 Ed. 3. yet they returned and fixed in 'that Law.

Treaſons particularly enacted after 25 Ed. 3. ſtill reduced to that Law.

'Witneſs the Statute of 1 H. 4. 'cap. 10. whereby all thoſe Facts 'which were made Treaſons mean 'between in the divided time of R. 2. 'were reduced to this of Ed. 3.

Treaſons made in the divided time of R. 2. reduced per Stat. 1 H. 4. c. 10.

'In the time of H. 8. wherein ſe-'veral Offences were enacted to be 'Treaſons, not contained in the Sta-'tute of 25 Ed. 3. the ſame were all 'ſwept away by the Statute of 1 Ed. 6. cap. 12.

Made in the time of H. 8. reduced 1 Ed. 6. c. 12.

'And again, where in the time of 'Ed. 6. ſeveral Treaſons were enact-'ed, they were all repealed, and by 'Act made 1 Mariæ 1. none other 'Offence left to be Treaſon, than 'what was contained and declared 'by the Statute of 25 Ed. 3.

Made in the time of Ed. 6. reduced by the Act of 1 Mariæ, c. 10.

(a) The Parliament of 25 Ed. 3. by reaſon of that Law called Parliamentum Benedictum, and that no Law had deſervedly more Honour than Magna Charta.

'And

From 1 H. 4. to this day, no Judgment in Parliament given [redacted] Treaſ[redacted] contained in that Law.

'And from 1 H. 4. to Queen Mary, and from thence downward, 'we find not any Judgment hath 'been given in Parliament, for any 'Treaſon not declared and contained 'in that Law, but by Bill.

This Law in all times the Standard to judge Treaſons by.

'Thus in Succeſſion of all Times, 'this Statute of 25 Ed. 3. in the 'Wiſdom of former Parliaments, 'hath ſtood and been the conſtant 'fixed Rule for all Judgments in Ca-'ſes of Treaſon.

'We ſhall now obſerve, what Offences are in 'and by that Law declared to be Treaſons; 'whereby your Lordſhips will examine, whether 'you find any of them in the Charge of theſe Ar-'ticles: For which purpoſe we ſhall deſire this 'Statute of 25 Ed. 3. be read.

'The Treaſons by that Act declared, are,

Treaſons declared per Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2.

'1. Compaſſing and imagining 'the Death of the King, Queen, 'or Prince, and declaring the ſame 'by ſome Overt-Act.

'2. Murdering the Chancellor, Treaſurer, &c.

'3. Violating the Queen, the King's eldeſt 'Daughter, or the Prince's Wife.

'4. Levying War againſt the King.

'5. Or adhering to the King's Enemies, within 'the Realm or without, and declaring the ſame 'by ſome Overt-Act.

'6. Counterfeiting the Seals and Coin.

'7. Bringing in Counterfeit Coin.

Stat. 25 Ed. 3. may admit no Conſtruction by Equity or Inference to make other Treaſon than thereby declared.

'Next, We ſhall lay for a ground, 'that this Act ought not be conſtrued 'by Equity or Inference.

Reaſons why not.

'1. For that it is a declarative 'Law, and no Declaration ought to 'be upon a Declaration.

'2. It was a Law provided to ſe-'cure the Subject, for his Life, Li-'berty, and Eſtate; and to admit 'Conſtructions and Inferences upon 'it, were to deſtroy the Security 'provided for by it.

'3. It hath been the conſtant Opinion in all 'times, both in Parliament and upon Judicial De-'bates, that this Act muſt be literally conſtrued, 'and not by Inference or Illation: nor would it 'be admitted in a Particular declared by this 'Law to be Treaſon; which a Man would have 'thought might have been conſiſtent with it.

'Counterfeiting the Coin of the Kingdom, 'is by this Law declared Treaſon.

Inſtances where it would not.

'Waſhing, Filing, and Clipping 'the Coin, is an Abuſe, an Abaſing, 'and not making it current: yet in '3 H. 5. when the Queſtion was in 'Parliament, whether that Offence 'was Treaſon within the Statute of '25 Ed. 3. it is declared by a ſpe-'cial Act then made, 3 H. 5. cap. 6. That foraſ-'much as before that time great doubt and ambi-'guity had been, whether thoſe Offences ought 'to be adjudged Treaſon, or not, inaſmuch as 'mention is not thereof made in the Declaration 'of the Articles of Treaſon by that Statute of '25 Ed. 3. the ſame was by that particular Act 'made Treaſon, which before was none: and 'counterfeiting of foreign Coin made current here, 'an equal Miſchief with counterfeiting of the 'Coin of this Realm; yet becauſe the words of 'the Statute are his Money, this not Treaſon until Stat. 3 H. 5. cap. 6.

'the Act of 1 Mariæ cap. 6. made 'it ſo. And Sir Ed. Coke in his Book 'before-mentioned, ſaith, A com-'paſſing to levy War, is not a Trea-'ſon within that Law, unleſs it pro-'ceed into Act; but only to compaſs the Death 'of the King: Yet if a Conſtructive Treaſon ſhould 'be admitted, it might happily without any great 'ſtraining be inferred, That compaſſing to levy 'War is in ſome ſort a Compaſſing of the King's 'Death: and of this kind many more Inſtances 'may be given.

1 M. cap. 6. Coke Collections Pleas of the Crown.

'So that the Reſult of all this is, That what-'ſoever is not declared to be a Treaſon within 'the Letter of this Law, may not be adjudged a 'Treaſon, by Inference, Conſtruction or other-'wiſe.

'Having done with this firſt, we now ſhall 'come to our ſecond Queſtion.

'Whether any the Matters in all, 'or any the Articles charged, con-'tain any the Treaſons declared by 'that Law, or enacted by any ſubſequent Law; 'wherein, although the Charges may appear to be 'great and enormous Crimes; yet we ſhall endea-'vour, and hope to ſatisfy your Lordſhips, the ſame, 'nor any of them, are Treaſons by any eſtabliſhed 'Law of the Kingdom. For clearing whereof, 'we ſhall purſue the Order firſt propoſed.

2. Queſtion.

'Firſt, That an Endeavour to ſubvert Funda-'mental Laws, is not Treaſon by any Law in this 'Kingdom eſtabliſhed: and particular Act to 'make it Treaſon there is none; ſo as we muſt 'then return to apply thoſe former general Obſer-'vations of that Act of 25 Ed. 3. to this Particular; 'and ſhall add for Reaſons,

'1. That it is not compriſed within any the 'Words of that Law, nor may by any Conſtructi-'on or Inference be brought within it, for the 'Reaſons formerly alledged.

'2. Becauſe an Endeavour to ſubvert Laws, is 'of ſo great a Latitude and Uncertainty, that 'every Action not warranted by Law, may be 'thereby extended to be a Treaſon.

'In the ſixth Report, in Mildmay's 'Caſe, Fol. 42. where a Conveyance 'was made in Tail, with a Proviſo, 'if he did go about or attempt to 'diſcontinue the Entail, the ſame ſhould be void: 'It was reſolved the Proviſo was void; and the 'principal Reaſon was, That theſe Words, at-'tempt or go about, are Words uncertain and void 'in Law. And the Words of the Book are very 'obſervable, viz. God defend, that Inheritances and 'Eſtates of Men ſhould depend upon ſuch Incertainties; 'for that miſera eſt Servitus, ubi Jus eſt vagum, & quod non definitur in Jure quid fit conatus; 'and therefore the Rule of the Law doth decide this 'Point. Non efficit conatus niſi ſequitur effectus; 'and the Law doth reject Conations and Goings about, 'as things uncertain, which cannot be put in iſſue. 'Theſe are the Words of the Book: And if 'ſo conſiderable in Eſtates, your Lordſhips, we 'conceive, will hold it far more conſiderable 'in a Caſe of Life, which is of higheſt Conſe-'quence.

Mildmay's Caſe, 6 Report Coke, Fol. 42.

Objection. Anſwer.

'And if it ſhould be ſaid this Law 'of 25 Ed. 3. takes notice of Com-'paſſing and Imagining: We anſwer, 'it is in a Particular declared by 'that Law to be Treaſon, in compaſſing the Death 'of the King: But this of endeavouring to ſub-

'vert

'vert Laws, not declared by that or any other 'Law to be a Treaſon.

'And if it ſhould be granted, that this Law 'might in any Caſe admit any other Fact to be 'Treaſon by Inference or Conſtruction, other than 'is therein particularly declared, which we con-'ceive it cannot:

'Yet it is not imaginable, that a Law intro-'duced purpoſely to limit and aſcertain Crimes 'of ſo high Conſequence, ſhould by Conſtruc-'tion or Inference be ſubject to a Conſtruction 'of admitting ſo uncertain and indefinite a thing, 'as an Endeavour to ſubvert the Law is, it 'being not compriſed within the Letter of that 'Law.

'3. That the Subverſion of the Law is an im-'poſſible thing; therefore an Endeavour to do an 'Act which cannot be effected, cannot be Trea-'ſon.

'4. That in all times the Endeavouring to ſub-'vert the Laws hath been conceived no determi-'nate Crime, but rather an Aggravation only of a 'Crime than otherwiſe: And therefore hath been 'uſually joined as an Aggravation or Reſult of 'Crimes below Treaſon.

Parliament-Roll, 28 H. 6. n. 28, to 47. In the Caſe of the Duke of Suffolk.

'As appears in the Parliament-Roll, '28 H. 6. num. 28. to num. 47. in the 'Caſe of the Duke of Suffolk, where the 'Commons in Parliament having pre-'ferred Articles of Treaſon againſt 'him, did not make that any part of 'their Charge. Yet in the ſame Parli-'ament, and within few Days after, the firſt being 'in February, the latter in March, exhibiting other 'Articles againſt him, they therein charged all the 'Miſpriſions, Offences, and Deeds, therein men-'tioned, to have been the Cauſe of the Subverſion 'of Laws and Juſtice, and the Execution there-'of; and nigh likely to tend to the Deſtruction of 'the Realm. So as it appears it was then con-'ceived an Offence of another nature, and not a 'Treaſon.

Articles, Cardinal Woolſey in Parliament, 21 H. 8. Indictment K. Bench Ligham, 23 H. 8.

'And it appears as well by the Ar-'ticles exhibited in Parliament, 21 'H. 8. againſt Cardinal Woolſey, as 'by Indictment in the King's-Bench 'againſt Ligham, 23 H. 8. Rot. 25. 'That the Cardinal did endeavour to 'ſubvert Antiquiſſimas Leges hujus Regni, Univerſumq; hoc Regnum Angliæ Legibus Imperialibus ſubjugare: which although 'it be a Charge of ſubverting the antient Laws 'of the Kingdom, and to introduce new and 'arbitrary Laws; yet neither upon the Articles 'or Indictment was the ſame imputed to be 'Treaſon; but ended in a Charge of a Premu-'nire.

Empſon, 1 H. 8.

'And if it ſhall be ſaid that 'Empſon, 1 H. 8. had Judgment, and 'died for it, upon an Indictment 'in London; we anſwer,

'1. This was not the Subſtance of the Indict-'ment, but only an Aggravation.

'2. And if charged, it is with an actual ſubvert-'ing, not with an Endeavour to ſubvert the Laws; 'and is joined with divers other Offences.

'3. Which is a full Anſwer, The Indictment up-'on which he was tried was Paſchæ 2 H. 8. at Nor-'thampton, and was for levying War againſt the 'King, a Treaſon declared by the Law of 25 Ed. 3. 'upon which he was convicted and ſuffered; and 'no Proceeding upon the other Indictment ever 'had.

'And as to the ſecond general 'Charge of endeavouring to ſubvert 'Religion:

Anſwer to the ſecond general Charge of endeavouring to ſubvert Religion.

'This no more than that former of 'ſubverting the Laws is any Treaſon, 'within any Law eſtabliſhed in this 'Kingdom.

'And herein, as to the Charge of the Endea-'vour, we ſhall rely upon what hath been al-'ready ſaid upon the former.

'With this further:

'That until that happy Reformation, begun in 'the Time of King Edward VI. there was ano-'ther Frame of Religion eſtabliſhed by Law; 'which was conceived until then to have been 'the True Religion; and any Endeavour to 'change or alter it, proſecuted with great Extre-'mities. Yet was not any Attempt to alter it con-'ceived to be a Treaſon; but ſeveral ſpecial Acts 'of Parliament were made for particular Puniſh-'ments againſt Perſons who ſhould 'attempt the Alteration thereof; Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 5. 2 H. 5. c. 7. 'witneſs the Statute of 5 R. 2. c. 5. 'and 2 H. 5. c. 7.

'In which latter, although mention is made of 'endeavouring to deſtroy and ſubvert the Chriſtian 'Faith, yet was not the Offence made or decla-'red to be Treaſon. And at this day Hereſy, of 'what kind ſoever, is not puniſhable, but ac-'cording to the old Courſe of the Law.

'And we may add the Statute of '1 Edw. 6. cap. 12. that of 1 Mar. 12. Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. 1 Mar. c. 12. 'which makes it but Felony to at-'tempt an Alteration of Religion by 'Force: The worſt kind of Attempt certainly.

'To the third and laſt general 'Charge, labouring to ſubvert the 'Rights of Parliaments. To the 'labouring to do it, we ſhall add 'nothing to what hath been ſaid to 'the Charge of Endeavour in the 'two former; only thus much we 'ſhall obſerve:

Anſwer to the third general Charge, labouring to ſubvert and incenſe the King againſt Parliaments.

'That in the Parliament of 11 R. 2. Articles againſt the Duke of Ireland, and others, 11 R. 2. 'amongſt the many Articles preferr'd 'againſt the Duke of Ireland, and 'others, the 14th Article contains a 'Charge much of this nature, viz. 14 Article. 'That when the Lords and others in diverſ Parliaments, had moved to have a good Government 'in the Realm, they had ſo far incenſed the King, that 'he cauſed divers to depart from his Parliament; ſo 'that they durſt not, for fear of Death, adviſe for 'the good of the Kingdom. Yet when the Lords came 'to ſingle out the Articles, what was, or what 'was not Treaſon, That, although a Charge tran-'ſcending this, was none of the Articles by them 'declared to be Treaſon.

'My Lords, having done with 'theſe Generals, it remains only that 'we apply our ſelves to thoſe other 'Articles which we conceive were 'inſiſted upon as Inſtances conducing 'and applied to ſome of the Gene-'rals we have handled:

Anſwer to the particular Articles inſiſted upon principally in the Charge.

'Wherein, if the Generals be not Treaſon, the 'particular Inſtances cannot be: And on the other 'ſide, if the Inſtances fall ſhort of Treaſons, the 'Application to thoſe Generals cannot make them 'Treaſons.

'We ſhall only ſingle out two Particulars, and 'in thoſe be very brief, in that moſt which hath 'been ſaid to the former Generals is appliable to 'them;

'them; inaſmuch as none of them is declared to 'be a Treaſon by the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. or by 'any other Law enacted.

The firſt Particular.

'1. The firſt of theſe in the 10th 'Original Article, viz. That he hath 'traitorouſly endeavoured to recon- 'cile the Church of England with the 'Church of Rome. Which, if it be any Treaſon, 'muſt be a Treaſon within the Statute of 5 Jac. cap. 4. whereby is provided, That if any Man 'ſhall put in practice to reconcile any of his Ma- 'jeſty's Subjects to the Pope or See of Rome, the 'ſame is enacted to be Treaſon; which we con- 'ceive clearly is none of this Charge.

Differences between the Matters charged, and the Fact made Treaſon by the Statute 3 Jac. c. 4.

'(1) Firſt, For that here only is 'charged an Endeavour; there a 'putting in practice.

'(2.) Here a Reconciling of the 'Church of England with the Church 'of Rome; there a Reconciling ſome 'of his Majeſty's Subjects to the 'See of Rome. And a Reconciling 'with, may as well be a Reducing of that of Rome 'to England, as England to Rome.

The ſecond Particular.

'The ſecond, in the 7th Additio- 'nal Article, For wittingly and wil- 'lingly receiving and harbouring di- 'vers Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, name- 'ly, Sancta Clara and Monſieur St. Giles.

'Which Offence, as to the harbouring Prieſts 'and Jeſuits, born within his Majeſty's Domi- 'nions, by the Statute of 27 Eliz. cap. 2. is made 'Felony, not Treaſon; and extends only to Prieſts 'Engliſh born, which theſe are not charged to 'be.

'My Lords, we have now gone through thoſe 'Articles wherein we conceive the Treaſons char- 'ged were intended, and have endeavoured to 'make it appear, That none of the Matters in any 'of the Articles charged are Treaſon within the 'Letter of any Law.

'And if not ſo, then they cannot by Inference 'or Parity of Reaſon, be heighten'd to a Trea- 'ſon.

'It is true, the Crimes, as they are laid in the 'Charge, are great and many.

'Yet if the Laws of this Realm, which have 'diſtinguiſhed Crimes, and accordingly given them 'ſeveral Names, and inflicted Puniſhments, raiſe 'none of theſe to a Treaſon;

Number of Crimes below Treaſon or Felony, cannot make a Treaſon.

'That we humbly conceive will 'be worthy of your Lordſhips Conſi- 'deration in this Caſe; and that 'their Number cannot make them 'exceed their Nature. And if they 'be but Crimes and Miſdemeanours 'apart, below Treaſon or Felony, 'they cannot make a Treaſon by putting them to- 'gether.

'Otherwiſe the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. which we 'have ſo much inſiſted upon, had been fruitleſs 'and vain; if after all that Exactneſs any Num- 'ber of Miſdemeanours (in themſelves no Treaſon) 'ſhould by Complication produce a Treaſon, and 'yet no mention made of it in that Law, much 'leſs any Determination thereby, that any Num- 'ber, or what Number, and of what Nature of 'Crimes, below Treaſon, ſhould make a Trea- 'ſon.

'It is true, my Lords, That by the Statute of '25 Ed. 3. there is a Clauſe in theſe Words:

Power to declare Treaſon, per Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. Wherein we conceive there is no Power to declare an Offence below a Felony to be a Treaſon.

'It is accorded, That if any other Caſe, 'ſuppoſed Treaſon, which is not therein 'ſpecified, doth happen before any Juſtices, 'the Juſtices ſhall tarry without any go- 'ing to Judgment of the Treaſon, until 'the Cauſe be ſhewed and declared before 'the King and his Parliament, whether 'it ought to be judged. Treaſon or Fe- 'lony.

'And that hereby might ſeem to 'be inferred, That there ſhould be 'ſome other Treaſons than are mentioned in that 'Law, which may be declared in Parliament.

'But, my Lords, we ſhall obſerve,

'1. If ſuch Declaration look only forward, then 'the Law, making it Treaſon, precedes the Of- 'fence, and is no more than an enacting Law.

'If it look backward to the Offence paſt, then 'it appears by the very Clauſe it ſelf, of 25 Edw. 3. 'it ſhould be at the leaſt a Felony at the Common 'Law; and that a Crime or Crimes below a Fe- 'lony, were never intended to be by this Law 'to be declared, or to be heighten'd to a Treaſon. 'And we find not any Crime declared Treaſon 'with a Retroſpect, unleſs it were a Felony be- 'fore. And in the late Caſe of the Earl of Straf- 'ford, attainted by Bill, there is a Treaſon within 'this Law charged, and declared by the Bill of 'his Attainder to have been proved.

'2. Secondly, We are not now in caſe of a De- 'claration of a Treaſon, but before your Lordſhips 'only upon an Impeachment; and in ſuch caſe we 'humbly conceive the Law already eſtabliſhed, as 'it hath been, ſo it will be the Rule. (a)

'Thus, my Lords, we have gone through that 'Part which belongs to us, directed us by your 'Lordſhips, viz.

'Whether in all or any the Articles exhibited 'before your Lordſhips, there is contained any 'Treaſon by any eſtabliſhed Law of this Kingdom, 'without meddling at all with the Facts or Proof 'made of them; which, together with our weak 'Endeavours, we humbly ſubmit to your Lord- 'ſhips great Judgment. And for any Authorities 'cited by us, are ready (if ſo commanded) to pro- 'duce them.

Here this Day ended; and I had a few Days reſt. But on Tueſday, October 22. being a Day made ſolemn for Humiliation, my Chamber at the Tower was ſearched again for Letters and Papers; but nothing found.

After this, there went up and down all about London and the Suburbs, a Petition for the bringing of Delinquents to Juſtice; and ſome Preachers exhorted the People to be zealous in it, telling them it was for the Glory of God, and the Good of the Church. By this means they got many Hands of Men which little thought what they went about. In this Petition, none were named but my ſelf and the Biſhop of Ely; ſo their Drift was known to

Concerning the Proviſo in 25 Edw. 3. (laſt mentioned) it is obſervable, That Mr. Lane, in the Lord Strafford's Tryal, ſaith, That that Clauſe of Proviſion, 25 Edw. 3. is quite taken away by 5 Hen. 8. cap. 4. & 20. So that no Treaſon is now to be reckoned, but what is literally contained in 25 Ed. 3. See for this Whitlock's Memoirs, p. 43. See alſo Burnet's Hiſt. none none but their own Party; and was undoubtedly ſet on foot to do me Miſchief. Whoſe Deſign this was, God knows; but I have cauſe to ſuſpect Mr. Pryn's Hand in it. This barbarous way of the People's clamouring upon great Courts of Juſtice, as if they knew not how to govern themſelves and the Cauſes brought before them, is a moſt unchriſtian Courſe, and not to be endured in any well-govern'd State. This Petition, with a Multitude of Hands to it, was delivered to the Houſe of Commons on Monday, October 28. Concerning which I ſhall obſerve this, That neither the Lord Mayor nor the Sheriffs made any Stop to this illegal and blood-thirſty Courſe, though it were publickly known, and the People exhorted to ſet Hands to it in the Pariſh-Churches. What this, and ſuch-like Courſes as theſe, may bring upon this City, God alone knows, whom I humbly pray to ſhew it Mercy.

November 1. This Day, being All-hallan-Day, a Warrant came to the Lieutenant from the Houſe of Commons to bring me to their Bar, to hear the Evidence formerly ſummed up, and given againſt me in the Lords Houſe. I knew no Law nor Cuſtom for this; for though our Votes, by a late Act of Parliament, be taken away, yet our Baronies are not: And ſo long as we remain Barons, we belong to the Lords Houſe, and not to the Commons. Yet how to help my ſelf, I knew not: For when the Warrant came to me, the Lords Houſe was riſen, and I was commanded to the Houſe of Commons the next Morning before the Lords came to ſit; ſo I could not petition them for any Privilege. And had I done it, I doubt it would have been interpreted for an Endeavour to make a Breach between the Houſes: And ſhould I have under any Pretence refuſed to go, Mr. Lieutenant would have carried me.

Therefore on Saturday, November 2. I went, according to the Warrant, to the Houſe of Commons. So ſoon as ever I was come to the Bar, Mr. Speaker told me, There was an Ordinance drawn up to attaint me of High-Treaſon; but that they would not paſs it till they had heard a Summary of the Charge which was laid againſt me; and that I was ſent for to hear it alſo. I humbly beſought them that my Counſel and my Sollicitor (who were always preſent with me in the Lords Houſe) might ſtand now by me: But it would not be granted. Then Mr. Brown, by Order from the Speaker, delivered the Collection and Sum of the Charge againſt me; much at one with that which he formerly made in the Lords Houſe. Now I took Notes of it as exactly as I could. He had no ſooner done, but Mr. Speaker preſſed me to make Anſwer preſently. I humbly beſought the Houſe I might not be put to that, the Charge being long and various; but that I might have Time, and that my Counſel might be heard for Matter of Law. I was commanded to withdraw. And when I was called in again, I received an Order peremptory, to anſwer the Monday Seven-night after to ſuch Things as the Reporter was miſtaken in. But not a Word of hearing my Counſel. I returned to my Priſon.

This Wedneſday, November 6. I got my Prayer-Book, by the Help of Mr. Hern and Mr. Brown, out of Mr. Pryn's Hands, where it had been ever ſince the laſt of May, 1643.

Monday, November 11. I came to the Houſe of Commons again; and, according to their peremptory Order, made my Anſwer to the Summary Charge which Mr. Brown made againſt me. But here I ſhall advertiſe the Reader, That, to avoid troubleſome and tedious Repetition, I ſhall not ſet down my Anſwer at large, as there I ſpake it; becauſe there is nothing in it but what is in my former Anſwers, the Beginning and the End only excepted. But it was neceſſary for me then to make a whole and an entire Anſwer, becauſe the Houſe of Commons had then heard no part of my Defence. But I preſume the charitable Reader will look upon my Anſwers in their proper place, rather than be troubled a ſecond time with the ſame Thing. Yet becauſe Mr. Brown went a different way in his Summary from the Charge lately given, I ſhall repreſent a Skeleton of my Anſwer, with all the Limbs of it entire, that it may be ſeen, as it were, together; though I report nothing which hath been already ſaid. And thus I began:

My Defence in the Houſe of Commons.

'MR. Speaker, I was here November 2. It was the firſt time that ever I came within theſe Doors. And here then you gave me the moſt uncomfortable Breakfaſt that ever I came to; namely, That this Honourable Houſe had drawn up an Ordinance againſt me of High Treaſon: But that before they would proceed farther, I ſhould hear the Sum of the Charge which was againſt me; which was the Cauſe I was ſent for then: And to give my Anſwer to that which was then ſaid, or rather miſtaken in ſaying and inferring, is the cauſe of my coming now.

'1. And, Firſt, Mr. Speaker, I give Thanks to this Honourable Houſe that they have given me leave to ſpeak for my ſelf. 2. Secondly, I do humbly deſire if any Word or Thing ſhould be miſtaken or unadviſedly expreſſed by me, (which ſhall be ſore againſt my Will) I may have Liberty to recall and expound my ſelf. 3. Thirdly, That you will favourably conſider into what Straits I am caſt; that after a long and tedious Hearing, I muſt now come to anſwer to a Sum or an Epitome of the ſame Charge; which how dangerous it may be for me, all Men that know Epitomes cannot but underſtand.

'Mr. Speaker, I am come hither to make a Brief of my Anſwer to a Sum of my Charge; wherein I may receive as much Detriment by my own Brief, for want of larger Expreſſion, as by the other of my Charge, by Omiſſion or Miſtake: Yet ſince your Command is upon me, I ſhall, without farther Preface, (which I conceive would be as tedious to you, as to me troubleſome) addreſs my ſelf, and with as much Brevity as the many Heads of the Charge will bear. And that my Anſwer may be the clearer both to this Honourable Houſe, and to the Gentleman who reported the Charge, I ſhall follow every Thing in the ſame Order he proceeded in: So far forth, at leaſt, as an old ſlow Hand could take them, a heavy Heart obſerve them, and an old decayed Memory retain them.

'This worthy Gentleman hath preſſed all things as hardly againſt me, as the Cauſe can any way bear; That was his Duty to this Honourable Houſe, and it troubles me not: But his Carriage and Expreſſions were civil towards me, in this my great Affliction; and for this I render him humble and hearty Thanks, having from other Hands pledged my Saviour in Gall and 'Vinegar, and drunk up the Cup of the Scornings 'of the People to the very bottom.

'This Gentleman began with four Generals, 'which he ſaid I complained of, and I ſay I had 'cauſe ſo to do. 1. The firſt Complaint was, 'That I had lain three Years in Priſon before I was 'heard. And this, he ſaid, was my own Fault, 'becauſe I delayed the putting in of my full An'ſwer when I was called. But herein he is quite 'miſtaken: For I could not anſwer till I was 'called, and I was not called in three Years; 'nor then could I plead to more Articles than 'were put to me.' [Nor did this delay three Months of the three Years: Yet this Gentleman in his Reply ſaid ſtill, it was my Fault, becauſe I did not petition to be brought to hearing. But this, under favour, is a weaker Reaſon than the former. For the Condition of the Times conſidered, neither my Counſel, nor my other Friends, nor my ſelf, could think that a fit or a diſcreet way. Beſides, it is well known, that had I petitioned I could not have been heard, my buſineſs being in a manner caſt aſide, till Mr. Pryn's Malice, actuated by a Search into my own Papers, undertook it.] '2. The Gentleman ſaid, my ſe'cond Complaint was, That my Papers were ſeized: 'But he ſaid, that was done by Authority. And 'I never denied that: But that which he added 'is much miſtaken; namely, That I ever ſeized 'any Man's Papers without Authority, or by my 'own Power; but what was done in that kind, 'was by the joint Authority of that Court, in 'which I then ſat. Nor was my Complaint gene'ral, that my Papers were ſeized; but that the 'Papers prepared for my Defence were taken 'from me, and not reſtored when I needed 'them, and petitioned for them. 3. He ſaid, 'my third Complaint was, That many of the Wit'neſſes produced againſt me were Separatiſts. I did 'indeed complain of this, and I had abundant 'Cauſe ſo to do: For there was ſcarce an active 'Separatiſt in England, but ſome way or other his 'Influence was into this Buſineſs againſt me. And 'whereas the Gentleman ſaid, The Witneſſes were 'ſome Aldermen, and ſome Gentlemen, and Men of 'Quality: That's nothing; for both Gentlemen, 'and Aldermen, and Men of all Conditions, (the 'more's the pity) as the Times now go, are Se'paratiſts from the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the 'Church of England eſtabliſhed by Law. And I 'would to God ſome of my Judges were not. '4. My fourth Complaint, he ſaid, was, of the ex'ceſſive Number of the Witneſſes. And he added, 'That if I would not have ſo many Witneſſes, 'I ſhould not have given occaſion for it, by com'mitting ſo many Crimes. But, Firſt, whether I 'have committed ſo many Crimes as are urged a'gainſt me, is yet in queſtion. And, Secondly, 'tis one thing to give cauſe, and another thing 'to give occaſion: For an Occaſion may be ta'ken, when 'tis pretended as given. And ſo I 'hope it will be found in my Caſe. But the thing 'here miſtaken is, That theſe are all ſaid to be 'legal Witneſſes; whereas almoſt all of them have, at 'ſome time or other, been before me as their Judge, 'either at Star-Chamber, or Council-Table, or High-'Commiſſion, or as Referee. And then I humbly 'deſire it may be conſidered; Firſt, How impoſſi'ble it is for a Judge to pleaſe all Men. Secondly, How improbable it is, that Witneſſes diſ'pleaſed, ſhould be indifferent in their Teſtimony. 'And, Thirdly, how hard it is to convince a Man 'by ſuch intereſted Witneſſes, now (upon the 'matter) becoming Judges of him 'that judged them. And (as St * Auguſtine ſpeaks) Quomodo poteſt, how is 'it poſſible for one that is contentious and 'evil, to ſpeak well of his Judge?

* Quomodo poteſt malus litigator laudare Judices? Aug. Epiſt. 166.

'From theſe Generals the Gentleman paſſed to the Particulars of the Charge; 'and he cauſed the 7, 8, 9, 10, 11th Original Arti'cles, and the 7th Additional to be read. That 'done, he divided the Charge into two main Heads: 'The one, an Endeavour in me to ſubvert the 'Laws of the Kingdom; and the other, a like 'Endeavour to alter the true Proteſtant Religion in'to Popery. The Evidence given in the Lords 'Houſe, began at the Laws, and ended in Reli'gion; but this Gentleman in his Sum, both there 'and here, began with Religion, and ended with 'the Laws.

'I. The Charge concerning Religion, he ſaid, 'would bear two Parts; the Ceremonial, and the 'Subſtantial Part of Religion.

'(1.) And he profeſſed he would begin at the 'Ceremonial, where having firſt charged in gene'ral, the Statute of the 3 and 4 of Ed. 6. c. 10. for 'the Deſtruction of Images, he gave theſe particu'lar Inſtances following, to ſhew my Intention to 'alter Religion.

'1. The ſetting up of coloured Glaſs with Pic'tures in the Windows of my Chappel; the Com'munion-Table Altar-wiſe; Candleſticks thereon, 'with Reverence and Bowings.

'2. A Bible in my Study with the five Wounds 'of Chriſt wrought upon the Cover in Needle-'Work.

'3. Three Pictures in my Gallery; the Ecce Ho'mo; the Four Latin Fathers, and the Hiſtory '(St. John 10.) of the true Shepherd entring in by 'the Door, and the Thief by the Window.

'4. The Crucifix hung up in the Chappel at 'White-Hall on Good Friday; and what happened 'there upon Dr. Brown's coming in, and doing 'Reverence.

'5. The Copes and Bowings uſed in Cathedral 'Churches ſince my time.

'6. The Ceremonies uſed at his Majeſty's Co'ronation.

'7. The Abuſes in the Univerſities, eſpecially 'Oxford.

'1. The Titles given me from thence.

'2. Divers Particulars in the new Statutes.

'3. Images countenanced there, by me, in di'vers Chappels.

'4. The Picture of the Virgin Mary at St. Ma'ry's Church-Door.

'5. Nothing to be done without me in Con'gregations.

'8. The Ceremonies in ſome Pariſh-Churches, 'and ſome puniſhed for neglect of them. Inſtan'ces in ſome of Beckington, ſome of Lewes, and in 'Mr. Chancy of Ware.

'9. That I preferred no Men, but ſuch as were 'active for the Ceremonies.

'10. Paſſages expunged out of Books, if contra'ry to theſe Courſes; as that in Dr. Featly's Ser'mons concerning Images.

'11. Bibles with Pictures in them.

'12. The ſevere Puniſhment of Mr. Workman of 'Glouceſter, only for a Sermon againſt Images.

'13. Words ſpoken to take Biſhop Jewell's Works 'and the Book of Martyrs, out of ſome Pariſh-'Churches.

'14. The Conſecration of Cree-Church, and St. 'Giles in the Fields. In all which, as I humbly con-'ceive,

'ceive, here's nothing (eſpecially my Anſwers be'ing taken to them) that can co-operate to any 'Alteration of Religion. Nor is there any Trea-
'ſon, were all that is urged true.

'(2.) From hence, Mr. Speaker, this worthy 'Gentleman paſſed over from the Ceremonies, to
'thoſe things which, he ſaid, concerned the Sub-
'ſtance of Religion: In which the Particulars
'which he charged were theſe;

'1. A Doubtfulneſs, if not a Denial of the Pope's
'being Antichriſt.

'2. Diſlike of the Name, the Idol of Rome.

'3. The Alteration of ſome Paſſages in the Pub-
'lick Prayers appointed for Novemb. 5. and the 'Coronation-Day.

'4. The Antichriſtian Yoke left out of the Brief
'for the Palatinate, with an Expreſſion, as if we 'and thoſe Reformed Churches were not of the
'ſame Religion.

'5. That Men were puniſhed for praying for 'the Queen and Prince.

'6. That the Church of Rome is a true Church.

'7. That the Communion-Table or Altar is the 'Chief Place; for there's hoc eſt Corpus meum.

'8. Reſtraint of all Books againſt Popery. In-'ſtances in a Book of Biſhop Carleton's: One ten-
'dred by Sir Edward Hungerford. Dr. Clark's Ser-
'mons. Dr. Jones. None called in but Sales. That 'I my ſelf did expunge ſome Paſſages out of a Ser-
'mon of Dr. Sibtborp's. Popiſh Books ſeized, re-
'delivered to the Owners. That for theſe I muſt
'anſwer for my Chaplains, ſince John Archbiſhop
'of York was fined for his Commiſſary's Act againſt
'the Biſhop of Durham; who having a Patent,
'could not ſo eaſily be put out of his place, as I
'might change my Chaplains.

'9. Three Miniſters in my Dioceſs ſuſpended
'for not reading the Book of Recreations on the Lord's 'Day.

'10. The Feoffment for buying in of Impropria-
'tions, overthrown, to the Hindrance of Preach-
'ing, and Scandal to Religion.

'11. Incroachment upon the Lord Chamberlain
'for naming of Chaplains to the King; and upon
'the Maſter of the Wards for giving of Benefi-
'ces.

'12. Familiarity with Prieſts and Jeſuits, S.
'Clara and Monſieur S. Giles.

'13. The Teſtimonies of Mr. Chaloner, Sir Henry
'Mildmay, and his Brother Mr. Anthony, what O'pinion was held of me beyond the Seas, for my 'cunning introducing of Popery.

'14. That an Offer was made unto me to be 'a Cardinal. And thus far this Gentleman pro-
'ceeded in Points of Religion.

'But becauſe there hath paſſed divers things
'done at and by the Council-Table, the Courts of 'Star-Chamber, and High-Commiſſion, and in Con-
'vocation; and becauſe many more things ſo done,
'are to come in the next Head concerning the 'Law; I humbly crave leave, for avoiding tedi-
'ous Repetition, to ſay it once for all, That no
'Act done by any of theſe, either by full Conſent
'or major Part, which involves the reſt, ought to 'be charged ſingly againſt me: And that for theſe
'Reaſons following;

'1. Firſt, Becauſe this is not peccare cum multis:
'For they meet not there in a Relation as multi,
'but as unum Aggregatum, as Bodies made one
'by Law. And therefore the Acts done by them,
'are Acts of thoſe Bodies, not of any one Man
'ſitting in them. And in this Senſe a Parliament
'is one Body conſiſting of many; and the Acts
'done by it are Acts of Parliament. For which
'(ſhould any of them prove amiſs) no one Man
'is anſwerable, though many times one Man
'brings in the Bill.

'2. Secondly, Becauſe I could ſway no Man's 'Vote in any of thoſe places (though this hath
'been often urged againſt me, as an over-potent
'Member) for my Vote was either laſt, or laſt ſave
'one, in all theſe Places; ſo I could not lead.
'Nor is there any ſo much as ſhew of Proof of'fered, that I moved, or prepared any Man to
'a Sentence one way or other, in any one of theſe
'Courts or Places.

'3. Thirdly, Becauſe in thoſe Courts of Judica-
'ture, there was the Aſſiſtance of able Judges,
'Lawyers and Divines for Direction. And how 'can that be a Treaſon in me, which is not made
'ſo much as a Miſdemeanour in any of the 'reſt?

'4. Fourthly, Becauſe the Act of this preſent
'Parliament, which hath taken away the Star-
'Chamber, and the High-Commiſſion, and bounded
'the Council-Table, looks forward only, and pu-
'niſhes no Man for any Act paſt; much leſs
'doth it make any Man's Actions done in them
'to be Treaſon: And I am no way excluded from
'the Benefit of that Act.

'5. Laſtly, Becauſe in all my Proceedings, both 'in the High-Commiſſion and elſewhere, I kept
'ſtrictly to the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the 'Church of England eſtabliſhed by Law, againſt
'both Papiſts and other Sectaries. And under
'this Government, and Doctrine of this Church,
'it hath pleaſed God, now for above Fourſcore
'Years together, to bleſs this Kingdom and Peo'ple above other Nations. And I pray God, if 'we forſake the one, it prove not a Cauſe to de'prive us of the other.

'II. And now, Mr. Speaker, I ſhall follow this 'worthy Gentleman, as he went on to the ſe-
'cond General Head, the Subverſion of the Laws.
'And here, when he had cauſed the 1, 2, 3, 5, and '14th Original Articles to be read, as alſo the
'2, 9, and 10th Additionals; he then ſaid, That 'I had labour'd this Subverſion by my Counſels,
'and by my Actions.

'(1.) By my Counſels firſt; of which he gave 'three Inſtances.

'1. The Vote of the Council-Table to aſſiſt the 'King in extraordinary ways, if the Parliament
'ſhould prove peeviſh and refuſe: And this out
'of my Diary at Decemb. 5. 1639.

'2. The Paſſage in the Epiſtle before my Speech
'in the Star-Chamber; Not one way of Government,
'ſince the Humours of the People were in continual
'Change.

'3. A Speech at Council-Table, That now the 'King might uſe his own Power, &c. witneſſed
'only by Sir Henry Vane the Elder.

'(2.) From my Counſels, Proceed was made
'to my Actions; where the Particulars were;

'1. That I attempted to ſet Proclamations a'bove the Law.

'2. That I was for all illegal Projects at the 'Council-Table; inſtanced in Incloſures, in Ship-
'Money, and Sir John Corbett's Commitment.

'3. The taking down of the Houſes about St.
'Paul's, with the large Commiſſion for the Re'pair of the Weſt-End.

'4. The ſtopping of two Brewers in their Trade,
'being in Weſtminſter, and pretended to annoy
'the Court.

'5. Things done by me as Referee; instanced 'in a Case between Rich and Pool, and another of 'one Symmes.

'6. Obstructing the Course of Law, by sending 'to Judges; instanced in the Parishioners of Beckington, in the Case of Ferdinando Adams; in Sir Henry Martyn's Case about an Attorney at Law; Judge Richardson's Words in Mr. Huntley's Case; and Baron Trevor's Words in Grafton's Case.

'7. The punishing Men that came in a legal Way; instanced in the Case of Newcomin and Burrowes; that I said in the High-Commission, I hoped to see the Clergy exempt again the next Hundred Years: The two Church-Wardens of Chesham, with Words concerning Sir Thomas Dacres.

'8. The Case of Prohibitions; and Mr. Wheeler's Note out of a Sermon of mine concerning them.

'9. That no Pope ever claimed so much Jurisdiction, not from the King.

'10. The Canons; and I the main Man; the over-grown Member again.

'11. The Statutes of Oxford enforced a second time; Nevil's Case of Merton-College instanced in.

'12. Books printed that are against the Law; instanced in Cowel's Interpreter, and Dr. Manwaring's Sermons.

'13. The Alteration of the King's Oath at his Coronation.

'14. My Enmity to Parliaments. To all which, as I then gave sufficient Answers, so I hope the courteous Reader hath found them at large in their several Places. And for this last concerning Parliaments, I humbly and heartily desire, that this may be taken notice of, and remembred, That there is not in any one of these Paper-Proofs produced against me, any one thing that offers to take away any Rights of Parliaments, rightly understood; much less any that offers to take away Parliaments themselves; which is a continued Mistake all along this particular Charge. And if any rash or unweighed Words have fallen from me, yet these cannot be extended to the disannulling of Parliaments, or their Privileges in any kind, which I defended in Print long since, before I could foresee any of this Danger threatning me. It is in my Book * against Fisher: It was read in the Lords House, and I humbly desire I may read it here.

* Cont. Fisher, p. 211.

And it was read.

'After this, it was inferred by this worthy Gentleman, what a great Offender I was, and greater than Cardinal Woolsey. Mr. Speaker, I have seen the Articles against the Cardinal, and sure somebody is mistaken; for some of them are far greater than any thing that is proved against me. In which (I thank Christ for it) my Conscience is at peace; whereas the Cardinal confessed himself guilty of them all, and yet no thought of Treason committed; and a Præmunire was all that was laid upon him.

'Then he gave a touch, That † in Edward III's time, there was a Complaint, that too much of the Civil Government was in the hands of the Bishops; and that in the 45th Year of his Reign, they were put out, and Laymen put in. But, First, this concerns not me. Secondly, The late Act of this Parliament hath taken sufficient Order with that Calling for meddling in Civil Affairs. Thirdly, The Time is memorable when this was done: it was in the Forty and Fifth Year of Edward III. that's enough.

† Anno 45. Ed. 3.

'Mr. Speaker, I shall draw towards an end. Yet not forgetting what Ordinance you told me was drawn up against me; if that which I have now said may any way satisfy this Honourable House to make stay of it, or to mitigate it, I shall bless God and you for it. And I humbly desire you to take into consideration my Calling, my Age, my former Life, my Fall, my Imprisonment long and strict; that these Considerations may move with you. In my Prosperity (I bless God for it) I was never puffed up into Vanity, whatever the World may think of me. And in these last full Four Years durance, I thank the same God, * gravem Fortunam constanter tuli; I have with decent Constancy borne the weight of a pressing Fortune: And I hope God will strengthen me unto, and in the end of it.

* Tacit. l. 6. Annal.

'Mr. Speaker, I am very † aged, considering the Turmoils of my Life; and I daily find in my self more Decays than I make shew of: and the Period of my Life, in the Course of Nature, cannot be far off. It cannot but be a great Grief unto me, to stand at these Years thus charged before ye: Yet give me leave to say thus much without offence, Whatsoever Errors or Faults I may have committed by the way, in any my Proceedings, through human Infirmity; as who is he that hath not offended, and broken some Statute-Laws too by Ignorance, or Misapprehension, or Forgetfulness, at some sudden time of Action? yet if God bless me with so much Memory, I will die with these Words in my Mouth; That I never intended, much less endeavoured, the Subversion of the Laws of the Kingdom, nor the bringing in of Popish Superstition upon the true Protestant Religion established by Law in this Kingdom.

† Annum jam agens septuagesimum secundum.

'And now, Mr. Speaker, having done with the Fact, I have but this one thing to put to the Consideration of this Honourable House. My Charge hath been repeated, I confess, by a very worthy, and a very able Gentleman: But Ability is not absolute in any. The Evidence given against me before the Lords, was (as by the Law it ought to be) given in upon Oath: But the Evidence now summed up, and presented to this Honourable House, is but upon the Collection and Judgment of one Man, how able or intire soever: and what he conceived is proved against me, is but according to his Judgment and Memory; which perhaps may differ much from the Opinion and Judgment of the Judges themselves, who heard the Evidence at large. Nor was this Gentleman himself present every Day of my Hearing; and then for those Days in which he was absent, he can report no more here, than what others have reported to him. So for so much, his Repetition here is but a Report of a Report of Evidence given; and at the best but a Report of Evidence, and not upon Oath. And, I suppose, never any Jurors, who are Tryers of the Fact in any Case, Civil or Criminal, did ever ground their Verdict upon an Evidence only reported before them, and which themselves heard not.

'And if this manner of Proceeding shall be thought less considerable in my Person, yet I humbly desire it may be thoroughly weighed in the prudent Judgment of this Honourable House,

'the great Preſerver of the Laws and Liberties of 'the Subject of England, how far it doth or may 'trench upon theſe in future Conſequences, if 'theſe great Boundaries be laid looſe and open.

'And becauſe my Infirmities are many and 'great, which Age and Grief have added to 'thoſe which are naturally in me, I moſt humbly 'deſire again, That my Counſel may be heard for 'point of Law, according to the former Con-'ceſſion of this Honourable Houſe: For I aſſure 'myſelf, upon that which hath been pleaded to 'the Lords, That no one, nor all of the things 'together which are charged againſt me, if 'proved, (which I conceive they are not) can 'make me guilty of High Treaſon, by any known 'eſtabliſhed Law of this Kingdom.

'The Sum of all is this: Upon an Impeach-'ment ariſing from this Houſe, I have pleaded 'Not Guilty. Thereupon Iſſue hath been joined, 'and Evidence given in upon Oath. And now I 'muſt humbly leave it to you, your Wiſdom and 'Juſtice, whether it ſhall be thought fit, and juſt, 'and honourable, to judge me here, only upon a 'Report, or a Hearſay, and that not upon Oath.'

Here ended the heavy Buſineſs of this Day. I was exceeding faint with ſpeaking ſo long; and I had great Pain and Soreneſs in my Breaſt for almoſt a Fortnight after: then, I thank God, it wore away. I was commanded to withdraw, and to attend the Houſe again on Wedneſday, Nov. 13. 1644. which I did. Then Mr. Brown made a Reply to my Anſwer: the Reply had ſome great Miſtakes in it, but elſe was for the moſt part but a more earneſt affirming of what he had delivered. And I conceived I was not to anſwer to his Reply, but that he was to have the laſt Speech: for ſo it was always carried, during my Hearing in the Lords Houſe. Therefore being diſmiſſed, I went away: And I was no ſooner gone, but the Houſe called for the Ordinance which was drawn up againſt me, and without hearing my Counſel, or any more ado, voted me guilty of High Treaſon. And yet, when I came that day to the Houſe, all Men, and many of the Houſe themſelves, did much magnify my Anſwer before given: I will forbear to ſet down in what Language, becauſe it was high; and as no time can be fit for Vanity, ſo leaſt of all was this time for me. And vain I muſt needs be thought, ſhould I here relate what was told me from many and good hands. But it ſeems the Clamour prevailed againſt me.

On Saturday, Novemb. 16. this Ordinance was paſſed the Houſe of Commons ſuddenly, and with ſo great deliberation, as you have heard, was tranſmitted to the Lords, and by them the Debate concerning it put off to Friday Novemb. 22. Then the Earl of Pembroke began more fully to ſhew his canker'd Humour againſt me: how provoked, I proteſt I know not, unleſs by my ſerving him far beyond his Deſert. There, among other coarſe Language, he beſtowed (as I am informed) the Raſcal and the Villain upon me: and told the Lords, they would put off giving their Conſent to the Ordinance, till the Citizens would come down, and call for Juſtice, as they did in my Lord Straſford's Caſe. Was there not Juſtice and Wiſdom in this Speech? Hereupon the Buſineſs was put off to Saturday, Novemb. 23. and then to Friday, Novemb. 29. But then upon Thurſday, Novemb. 28. Mr. Strowd came up with a Meſſage from the Commons, to quicken the Lords in this Buſineſs: And at the end of his Meſſage, he let fall, That they ſhould do well to agree to the Ordinance, or elſe the Multitude would come down and force them to it. At this, ſome Lords very honourably took exception; and Mr. Strowd durſt not bide it, that this was any part of the Meſſage delivered him by the Houſe of Commons. But the matter was paſſed over, and Mr. Strowd not ſo much as checked. This, it may be, was thought ſeaſonable by ſome, to hearten on the Violence of the Earl of Pembroke.

The Buſineſs not long heard on Friday, was put off again to Monday Decemb. 2. and the Houſe of Lords put into a Committee, to examine Particulars by their Notes: the Earl of Northumberland on the Wool-Sack during the Debate, which continued, more or leſs, ſome days. Where their own Notes failed, they called to Mr. Brown, Clerk of their Houſe, for his. But at laſt, finding him very ready and quick for any thing that was charged againſt me, but loth to be known what Anſwer I gave to any Point, ſome Lords obſerved it. And it did after appear, that the Notes which he put to the Lords, were not the Notes which himſelf took, but that he had a Copy given him, (whether by Mr. Pryn or any other, I know not) and I was informed that the Earl of Warwick had another Copy of the very ſame. This is marvellous juſt and honourable in that Earl; and moſt Chriſtian-like in Mr. Brown. It may be, he learned it out of the Notes which his Father-in-Law takes at Sermons.

Upon Monday, December 16. there was (the Times conſidered) a very full Houſe of Lords; about twenty preſent, and my Buſineſs largely debated, and ready to come to the Queſtion. I wiſh with all my heart it had, while the Houſe was ſo full. But the Earl of Pembroke fell again into his wonted Violence, and asked the Lords what they ſtuck at? And added, What, ſhall we think the Houſe of Commons had no Conſcience in paſſing this Ordinance? Yes, they knew well enough what they did. One of the Wits hearing this excellent Paſſage of the Earl's, proteſted, if ever he lived to ſee a Parliament in Bedlam, this prudent Earl ſhould be Speaker, if he were able to procure him the Place.

In the mean time this unhappy Clamour of his, put the Buſineſs off again to the next day, being Tueſday, Decemb. 17. Then there were but fourteen Lords in the Houſe. My Buſineſs was aſſumed, and propoſed in three Queſtions, and I was voted guilty of the Fact in all three. Namely, Guilty of endeavouring to ſubvert the Laws; to overthrow the Proteſtant Religion; and that I was an Enemy to Parliaments. Then it being put to the Judges, whether this were Treaſon or no; the Judges unanimouſly declared, that nothing which was charged againſt me was Treaſon, by any known and eſtabliſhed Law of the Land, with many things to and fro concerning this Buſineſs.

On Tueſday, Dec. 24. Chriſtmas-Eve, the Lords had a Conference with the Commons about it. In which they declared, that they had diligently weighed all things that were charged againſt me, but could not by any one of them, or all, find me guilty of Treaſon. And therefore deſired that the Argument made by my Counſel might be anſwered. And if it could be made appear unto them by any Law to be Treaſon, they would then proceed farther, as in Honour and Juſtice they ſhould find fit. Then came Chriſtmas-Day, Dec. 25. the laſt Wedneſday in the Month, and a moſt ſolemn Faſt kept on it, with as ſolemn an Ordinance for the due Obſervance of this Faſt, and againſt the manner of keeping of that Day in former Superſtitious Times.

imes. A Faſt never before heard of in Chriſtendom.

After this Conference, Mr. Serjeant Wilde ſpeaking freely to ſome Friends about this Buſineſs, told them, he wonder'd the Lords ſhould ſo much diſtruſt their Judgments, as to deſire a Conference about it. To ſee how good Wits agree! Surely, I believe he was of the Earl of Pembroke's Counſel, or the Earl of his, they jump ſo together. It ſeems in theſe Mens Opinions, the Houſe of Commons can neither err in Conſcience nor Judgment. Howſoever, that Houſe thought it fit the Lords ſhould be ſatisfied, that I was by Law guilty of High Treaſon: and to that end ſent up a Committee, Jan. 2. 1644. to make proof of it to their Lordſhips. At this Meeting, two Judges were preſent, Juſtice Reeves and Judge Bacon. The Managers of the Buſineſs againſt me, were three Lawyers, Mr. Brown, Serjeant Wilde, and Mr. Nicolas. Neither myſelf nor any of my Counſel there. What this will effect upon the Lords, Time muſt diſcover, as it doth the Effects of other Eclipſes. And thus far I had proceeded in this ſad Hiſtory by Jan. 3. 1644. The reſt ſhall follow, as it comes to my knowledge.

[H. W. Next day, the Archbiſhop receiving the News that the Bill of Attainder had paſſed in the Houſe of Lords, broke off his Hiſtory, and prepared himſelf for Death. I ſhall therefore ſupply the Hiſtory from the Accounts of Mr. Ruſhworth, and Dr. Heylin.]

A Supplement to the preceding Tryal, taken from the Hiſtorical Collections of John Ruſhworth, Par. 3. Vol. 2. p. 834.

THE Reaſons of the Commons for the Attainder of the Archbiſhop, were at a Conference Jan. 2. by Serjeant Wilde, Mr. Brown, and Mr. Nicolas, communicated to the Lords; who thereupon, on the 4th of January, paſſed the Ordinance of Attainder: whereby it was ordained, that he ſhould ſuffer Death, as in Caſes of High Treaſon. And on the 6th of January it was ordered by both Houſes, that he ſhould ſuffer accordingly on Friday the 10th. But on the 7th, the Lords at a Conference acquainted the Commons with a Letter and Petition from the Archbiſhop, and a Pardon to him from the King, dated the 12th of April, 19 Car. of which he deſired the benefit: but the ſame was over-ruled and rejected. His Petition was, that in caſe he muſt die, Dr. Stern, Dr. Heywood, and Dr. Martin, might be permitted to be with him before and at his Death, to adminiſter Comfort to his Soul; and that the Manner of his Execution might be altered to Beheading. To which the Lords agreed, but the Commons then refuſed both; only granted, that Dr. Stern, and Mr. Marſhal, and Mr. Palmer, ſhould go to him; and one or both of the latter to be conſtantly preſent, whilſt Dr. Stern was with him. But the next day, upon another Petition of his, ſetting forth Reaſons, from his being a Divine, a Biſhop, one that had had the Honour to ſit in the Houſe of Peers, and of the King's moſt Honourable Privy-Council, &c. praying in thoſe regards, not to be expoſed to ſuch an ignominious Death; the Commons conſented to remit the reſt of the Sentence, and that he ſhould ſuffer Death by being beheaded. Accordingly on the 10th of January he was conducted from the Tower to the Scaffold on Tower-Hill; where being arrived, holding a Paper in his hand, he ſpake to the People as followeth.

[Then followeth the Archbiſhop's Speech and Prayer, and other Circumſtances of his Execution, verbatim, as they were printed in a Pamphlet of three Sheets in 4*to*, London, 1644.]

A Supplement to the preceding Tryal, taken out of Dr. Heylin's Cyprianus Anglicus, or his Life of Archbiſhop Laud, pag. 527, &c.

THE Bill of Attainder of the Archbiſhop paſſed in the Houſe of Commons, Nov. 13. 1644. But yet the Buſineſs was not done; for the Lords ſtuck at it: ſome of which, having not extinguiſhed all the Sparks of Humanity, began to find themſelves compaſſionate of his Condition, not knowing how ſoon it ſhould or might be made their own, if once diſfavoured by the Grandees of that potent Faction. For the Ordinance having been tranſmitted to the Houſe of Peers, and the Houſe of Peers deliberating ſomewhat long upon it, it was voted on Decemb. 4. That all Books, Writings, and Evidences, which concerned the Tryal, ſhould be brought before the Lords in Parliament; to the end, that they might ſeriouſly and diſtinctly conſider of all Particulars amongſt themſelves, as they came before them. But meaning to make ſure work of it, they had in the mean time (after no ſmall Evaporations of Heat and Paſſion) prepared an Ordinance, which they ſent up to the Lords, importing the diſplacing of them from all thoſe Places of Power and Command which they had in the Army. Which being found too weak to hold, they fall upon another and a likelier Project, which was to bring the Lords to ſit in the Commons Houſe, where they were ſure they ſhould be inconſiderable both for Power and Number. And to effect the ſame with more ſpeed and certainty, they had recourſe to their old Arts, drawing down Watkins with his general Muſter of Subſcriptions, and putting a Petition into his hands, to be tendred by him to the Houſes, that is, themſelves: wherein it was required amongſt other things, That they ſhould vigorouſly proceed unto the Puniſhment of all Delinquents; and that for the more quick Diſpatch of Publick Buſineſs of State, the Lords would pleaſe to vote and ſit together with the Commons. On ſuch uncertain Terms, ſuch a tickliſh Tenure, did they then hold their Place and Power in Parliament, who ſo officiouſly complied with the Houſe of Commons, in depriving the Biſhops of their Vote, and the Church's Birthright. And this was it which helped them in that time of need. And yet not thinking this Device ſufficient to fright their Lordſhips to a preſent Compliance, Strowd was ſent up with a Meſſage from the Houſe of Commons, to let them know, that the Londoners would ſhortly bring a Petition with 20000 Hands to obtain that Ordinance. By which ſtale and common Stratagem, they wrought ſo far on ſome weak Spirits, the reſt withdrawing themſelves, (as formerly in the Caſe of the Earl of Strafford) that in a thin and ſlender Houſe, not above ſix or ſeven in number, it was paſs'd at laſt. The day before, they paſs'd the Ordinance for eſtabliſhing their new Directory, which in effect was nothing but a total Abolition of the Common-Prayer-Book; and thereby ſhewed unto the World, how little hopes they had of ſettling their new Form of Worſhip, if the Foundation of it it were not laid in the Blood of this famous Prelate, who had ſo ſtoutly ſtood up for it againſt all Novelliſm and Faction, in the whole Courſe of his Life. It was certified by ſome Letters to Oxon, and ſo reported in the Mercurius Aulicus of the following Week, That the Lord Bruce (but better known by the Name of the Earl of Elgin) was one of the Number of thoſe few Lords, who had voted to the Sentence of his Condemnation. The others, which concurred in that fatal Sentence, being the Earls of Kent, Pembroke, Salisbury, and Bolingbroke, together with the Lord North, and the Lord Gray of Werk. But whatſoever may be ſaid of the other ſix, I have been advertiſed lately from a very good Hand, that the ſaid Lord Bruce hath frequently diſclaimed that Action, and ſolemnly profeſſed his Deteſtation of the whole Proceedings, as moſt abhorrent from his Nature, and contrary to his known Affections, as well unto his Majeſty's Service, as the Peace and Preſervation of the Church of England.

Mr. Harbottle Grimſtone's Speech on a Debate touching the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Dec. 18. 1640.

Mr. Speaker,

THERE hath been preſented to the Houſe a moſt faithful and exact Report of the Conference we had with the Lords yeſterday, together with the Opinion of the Committees that we imployed in the Service, That they conceived it fit that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſhould be ſequeſtred; and I muſt ſecond the Motion. And with the Favour of this Houſe I ſhall be bold to offer my Reaſons, why I conceive it more neceſſary we ſhould proceed a little further than the Deſire of a bare Sequeſtration only.

Mr. Speaker, Long Introductions are not ſuitable to weighty Buſineſſes: We are now fallen upon the great Man, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury: Look upon him as he is in Highneſs, and he is the Sty of all peſtilential Filth, that hath infeſted the State and Government of this Commonwealth: Look upon him in his Dependencies, and he is the only Man, the only Man that hath raiſed and advanced all thoſe that, together with himſelf, have been the Authors and Cauſers of all our Ruins, Miſeries, and Calamities we now groan under. Who is it but he only that hath brought the Earl of Strafford to all his great Places and Imployments? A fit Spirit and Inſtrument to act and execute all his wicked and bloody Deſigns in theſe Kingdoms. Who is it but he only that brought in Secretary Windebank into this Place of Service, of Truſt, the very Broker and Pander to the Whore of Babylon?

Who is it, Mr. Speaker, but he only that hath advanced all our Popiſh Biſhops? I ſhall name but ſome of them, Biſhop Manwaring, the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, the Biſhop of Oxford, and Biſhop Wren, the leaſt of all theſe Birds, but one of the moſt unclean ones. Theſe are the Men that ſhould have fed Chriſt's Flock; but they are the Wolves that have devoured them: The Sheep ſhould have fed upon the Mountains; but the Mountains have eaten up the Sheep. It was the Happineſs of our Church, when the Zeal of God's Houſe eat up the Biſhops, glorious and brave Martyrs, that went to the Stake in Defence of the Proteſtant Religion; but the Zeal of the Biſhops hath been only to perſecute and eat up the Church.

Who is it, Mr. Speaker, but this great Archbiſhop of Canterbury that hath ſat at the Helm, to ſteer and manage all the Projects that have been ſet on foot in this Kingdom this ten Years laſt paſt? And rather than he would ſtand out, he hath moſt unworthily trucked and chaffered in the meaneſt of them. As, for Inſtance, that of Tobacco, whereby Thouſands of poor People have been ſtripp'd and turned out of their Trades, for which they have ſerved as Apprentices. We all know he was the Compounder and Contractor with them for the Licences, putting them to pay Fines and a Fee-farm Rent to uſe their Trade. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, he might have ſpent his Time much better, and more for his Grace in the Pulpit, than thus ſherking and raking in the Tobacco-Shops. Mr. Speaker, we know what he hath been charged withal in this Houſe, Crimes of a dangerous Conſequence, and of a tranſcendent Nature, no leſs than the Subverſion of the Government of this Kingdom, and the Alteration of the Proteſtant Religion; and this is not upon a bare Information only, but much of it is come before us already upon clear and manifeſt Proofs: And there is ſcarce any Grievance or Complaint come before us in this Place, wherein we do not find him intermentioned, and, as it were, twiſted into it; like a buſy angry Waſp, his Sting is in the Tail of every Thing. We have this day likewiſe heard the Report of the Conference yeſterday, and it is the Accuſation which the Scotch Commiſſioners have charged him withal; and we do all know he is guilty of the ſame, if not more, here in this Kingdom.

Mr. Speaker, He hath been the great and common Enemy of all Goodneſs and Good Men; and it is not ſafe that ſuch a Viper ſhould be near his Majeſty's Perſon, to diſtil his Poiſon into his ſacred Ears; nor is it ſafe for the Commonwealth that he ſit in ſo eminent a Place of Government, being thus accuſed. We know what he did in the Earl of Strafford's Caſe: This Man is the corrupt Fountain, that hath corrupted all the Streams; and till the Fountain be purged, we can never expect nor hope to have clear Channels. I ſhall be therefore bold to offer my Opinion; and if I err, it is the Error of my Judgment, and not my want of Zeal and Affection to the publick Good: I conceive it is moſt neceſſary and fit that we ſhould now take up a Reſolution to do ſomewhat, to ſtrike while the Iron is hot, and to go up to the Lords in the Names of the Commons of this Houſe, and in the Names of the Commons of England, and to accuſe him of High Treaſon; and to deſire their Lordſhips his Perſon may be ſequeſtred, and that in convenient Time we may bring up his Charge.

December 18. 1640. This Day the Archbiſhop of Canterbury was voted by the Houſe of Commons to be a Traytor; and Mr. Hollis was ſent to the Lords to accuſe him of High Treaſon: Which he did immediately; aſſuring the Lords, that in convenient Time there ſhould be a Charge put in againſt him, to make good the Accuſation; deſiring that he might be ſequeſtred from the Houſe, and committed to ſafe Cuſtody. Upon which he was committed to the Cuſtody of the Gentleman Uſher, and ſequeſtred from ſitting in Parliament till he cleared himſelf of this Accuſation.

The Archbiſhop being called to the Bar as a Delinquent, deſired their Lorſhips to give him leave to go home and fetch Papers, whereby to enable him to make his Defence to his Charge: Which the Houſe granted, and that he ſhould take his own Time this Afternoon to ſort his Papers; but directed that it ſhould be done in the Preſence of the Gentleman Uſher, and afterwards to return to the Houſe of the Gentleman Uſher this Night, and to be in ſafe Cuſtody.

The Lords further ordered, That no Member of their Houſe ſhall viſit the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury without Leave of the Houſe.

Ibid. p. 195. Feb. 26. 1640. This Day the engroſſed Articles againſt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury were read, and ordered to be ſent up to the Lords; and were carried up by Mr. Pym, Mr. Hampden, and Mr. Maynard.

And Mr. Pym coming to the Lords Bar to preſent them, ſpake as followeth:

Mr. Pym's Speech.

My Lords,

I Am commanded by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, now aſſembled for the Commons in Parliament, to deliver to your Lordſhips theſe Articles, in maintenance of their Charge againſt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Their Deſire is, That firſt your Lordſhips would be pleaſed to hear the Articles read; and then I ſhall endeavour to preſent to you the Senſe of the Commons concerning the Nature of the Charge, and the Order of their Proceedings.

[The Articles being the ſame as printed in the Biſhop's own Account (except ſome few Variations, which are there noted) are here omitted. Vide antea, p. 375.]

Ibid. p. 199. The Articles being read, Mr. Pym proceeded as follows:

My Lords,

There is an Expreſſion in the Scripture which I will not preſume either to underſtand, or to interpret; yet to a vulgar Eye it ſeems to have an Aſpect ſomething ſuitable to the Perſon and Cauſe before you. It is a Deſcription of the evil Spirits, wherein they are ſaid to be Spiritual Wickedneſſes in high Places: Crimes acted by the ſpiritual Faculties of the Soul, the Will and Underſtanding, exerciſed about ſpiritual Matters, concerning God's Worſhip, and the Salvation of Man, ſeconded with Power, Authority, Learning, and many other Advantages, do make the Party who commits them very ſuitable to that Deſcription, Spiritual Wickedneſſes in high Places. Theſe Crimes, my Lords, are various in their Nature, heinous in their Quality, and univerſal in their Extent. If you examine them Theologically, as they ſtand in oppoſition to the Truth of God, they will be found to be againſt the Rule of Faith, againſt the Power of Godlineſs, againſt the Means of Salvation.

If you examine them Morally, as they ſtand in oppoſition to the Light of Nature, to right Reaſon, and the Principles of human Society, you will then perceive Pride without any Moderation; ſuch a Pride as that is which exalts it ſelf above all that is called God: Malice without any Provocation; Malice againſt Virtue, againſt Innocence, againſt Piety: Injuſtice, without any Means of Reſtitution; even ſuch Injuſtice as doth rob the preſent Times of their Poſſeſſions, the future of their Poſſibilities.

If they be examined, my Lords, by legal Rules in a Civil Way, as they ſtand in oppoſition to the publick Good, and to the Laws of the Land, he will be found to be a Traytor againſt his Majeſty's Crown, an Incendiary againſt the Peace of the State; he will be found to be the higheſt, the boldeſt, and moſt impudent Oppreſſor that ever was, an Oppreſſor both of King and People.

This Charge, my Lords, is diſtributed and conveyed into fourteen ſeveral Articles, as you have heard; and thoſe Articles are only general, it being the Intention of the Houſe of Commons (which they have commanded me to declare) to make them more certain and particular by preparatory Examinations, to be taken with the Help of your Lordſhips Houſe, as in the Caſe of my Lord of Strafford. I ſhall now run through them with a light Touch, only marking in every of them ſome ſpecial Point of Venom, Virulency, and Maliguity.

1. The firſt Article, my Lords, doth contain his Endeavour to introduce into this Kingdom an arbitrary Power of Government, without any Limitations or Rules of Law. This (my Lords) is againſt the Safety of the King's Perſon, the Honour of his Crown, and moſt deſtructive to his People. Thoſe Cauſes which are moſt perfect, have not only a Power to produce Effects, but to conſerve and cheriſh them. The ſeminary Virtue, and the nutritive Virtue in Vegetables, do proceed from the ſame Principles. It was the Defect of Juſtice, and the Reſtraining of Oppreſſion and Violence, that firſt brought Government into the World, and ſet up Kings, the moſt excellent way of Government; and by the Maintenance of Juſtice all kinds of Government receive a ſure Foundation and Eſtabliſhment. It is this that hath in it an Ability to preſerve and ſecure the Royal Power of Kings, yea, to adorn and increaſe it.

2. In

2. In the ſecond Article, your Lordſhips may obſerve abſolute and unlimited Power defended by Preaching, by Sermons, and other Diſcourſes printed and publiſhed upon that Subject. And truly (my Lords) it ſeems to be a prodigious Crime, that the Truth of God and his holy Law ſhould be perverted to defend the Lawleſſneſs of Men; that the holy and ſacred Function of the Miniſtry, which was ordained for Inſtruction of Mens Souls in the Ways of God, ſhould be ſo abuſed, that the Miniſters are become the Trumpets of Sedition, the Promoters and Defenders of Violence and Oppreſſion.

3. In the third Article, my Lords, you have the Judges, who under his Majeſty are the Diſpenſers and Diſtributers of Juſtice, frequently corrupted by Fear and Sollicitation: You have the Courſe of Juſtice, in the Execution of it, ſhamefully obſtructed. And if a wilful Act of Injuſtice in a Judge be ſo high a Crime, in the Eſtimate of the Law, as to deſerve Death; under what Burden of Guilt doth this Man lie, who hath been the Cauſe of great Numbers of ſuch voluntary and wilful Acts of Injuſtice?

4. In the fourth Article he will be found in his own Perſon to have ſold Juſtice in Cauſes depending before him; and by his wicked Counſel endeavouring to make his Majeſty a Merchant of the ſame Commodity, only with this Difference, that the King by taking Money for Places of Judicature ſhould ſell it in groſs, whereas the Archbiſhop ſold it by retail.

5. In the fifth Article there appears a Power uſurped of making Canons, of laying Obligations on the Subjects in the nature of Law: And this Power abuſed to the making of ſuch Canons as are in the Matter of them very pernicious, being directly contrary to the Prerogative of the King, and the Liberty of the People. In the manner of preſſing of them, may be found Fraud and Shuffling; in the Concluſion, Violence and Conſtraint, Men being forced by Terror and Threatning to ſubſcribe to all. Which Power, thus wickedly gotten, they labour to eſtabliſh by Perjury, enjoining ſuch an Oath for the maintenance of it, as can neither be taken nor kept with a good Conſcience.

6. In the ſixth Article you have the King robbed of his Supremacy; you have a Papal Power exerciſed over his Majeſty's Subjects in their Conſciences, and in their Perſons; you have Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction claimed by an incident Right, which the Law declares to proceed from the Crown.

And herein your Lordſhips may obſerve, That thoſe who labour in Civil Matters to ſet up the King above the Laws of the Kingdom, do yet in Eccleſiaſtical Matters endeavour to ſet up themſelves above the King. This was firſt procured by the Archbiſhop to be extrajudicially declared by the Judges, and then to be publiſhed in a Proclamation: In doing whereof, he hath made the King's Throne but a Foot-ſtool for his own and their Pride.

7. You have, my Lords, in the ſeventh Article Religion undermined and ſubverted; you have Popery cheriſhed and defended; you have this ſeconded with Power and Violence, by ſevere Puniſhment upon thoſe which have oppoſed this miſchievous Intention: And by the ſubtle and eager Proſecution of theſe Men, hath the Power of Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, of the Star-Chamber and Council-Table, been often made ſubſervient to his wicked Deſigns.

8. My Lords, you may obſerve in the eighth Article, great Care taken to get into his own hand the Power of nominating to Eccleſiaſtical Livings and Promotions: You have as much miſchievous, as much wicked Care taken in the diſpoſing of theſe Preferments, to the Hindrance and Corruption of Religion. And by this Means, my Lords, the King's ſacred Majeſty, inſtead of Sermons fit for Spiritual Inſtructors, hath often had Invectives againſt his People, Encouragement to Injuſtice, or to the Overthrow of the Laws. Such Chaplains have been been brought into his Service as have, as much as may be, laboured to corrupt his own Houſhold, and been eminent Examples of Corruption to others; which hath ſo far prevailed, as that it hath exceedingly tainted the Univerſities, and been generally diſperſed to all the chief Cities, the greateſt Towns and Auditories of the Kingdom. The grievous Effects whereof are moſt manifeſt to the Commons Houſe, there being divers hundred Complaints there depending in the Houſe againſt ſcandalous Miniſters; and yet I believe the hundredth Part of them is not yet brought in.

9. The ninth Article ſets out the like Care to have Chaplains of his own, that might be Promoters of this wicked and traitorous Deſign, Men of corrupt Judgments, of corrupt Practices, extremely addicted to Superſtition. And to ſuch Mens Care hath been committed the licenſing of Books to the Preſs: By means whereof, many have been publiſhed that are full of Falſhood, of Scandals, ſuch as have been more worthy to be burnt by the Hand of the Hangman in Smithfield, (as I think one of them was) than to be admitted to come into the Hands of the King's People.

10. In the tenth Article it will appear how he, having made theſe Approaches to Popery, comes now to cloſe and join more nearly with it: He confederates with Prieſts and Jeſuits; he, by his Inſtruments, negotiates with the Pope at Rome, and hath Correſpondence with them that he authoriſed from Rome here; he hath permitted a Roman Hierarchy to be ſet up in this Kingdom. And tho he hath been ſo careful, that a poor Man could not go to the Neighbour-Pariſh to hear a Sermon, when he had none at home, could not have a Sermon repeated, nor Prayer uſed in his own Family, but he was a fit Subject for the High-Commiſſion Court; yet the other hath been done in all parts of the Realm, and no notice taken of it by any Eccleſiaſtical Judges or Courts.

11. My Lords, you may perceive Preaching ſuppreſs'd in the eleventh; divers godly and orthodox Miniſters oppreſſed in their Perſons and Eſtates. You have the King's loyal Subjects baniſhed out of the Kingdom; not as Elimelech, to ſeek for Bread in foreign Countries, by reaſon of the great Scarcity which was in Iſrael; but travelling abroad for the Bread of Life, becauſe they could not have it at home, by reaſon of the ſpiritual Famine of God's Word, cauſed by this Man and his Partakers. And by this means you have had the Trade, the Manufactory, the Induſtry of many Thouſands of his Majeſty's Subjects carried out of the Land.

It is a miſerable Abuſe of the Spiritual Keys, to ſhut up the Doors of Heaven, and to open the Gates of Hell; to let in Profaneneſs, Ignorance, Superſtition, and Error. I ſhall need ſay no more: Theſe Things are evident, and abundantly known to all.

12. In the twelfth Article, my Lords, you have a Diviſion endeavour'd between this and the foreign Reformed Churches. The Church of Chriſt is one Body; and the Members of Chriſt have a mutual Relation, as Members of the ſame Body. Unity with God's true Church every where, is not only the Beauty, but the Strength of Religion; of which Beauty and Strength he hath ſought to deprive this Church, by his manifold Attempts to break this Union. To which purpoſe he hath ſuppreſſed the Privileges granted to the Dutch and French Churches: he hath denied them to be of the ſame Faith and Religion with us: and many other ways hath he declared his Malice to thoſe Churches.

13. In the thirteenth Article, as he hath ſought to make an Eccleſiaſtical Diviſion of Religious Difference between us and foreign Nations, ſo he hath ſought to make a Civil Difference between us and his Majeſty's Subjects of the Kingdom of Scotland: And theſe he hath promoted by many Innovations there, preſſed by himſelf and his own Authority. When they were uncapable of ſuch Alterations, he adviſed his Majeſty to uſe Violence. He hath made private and publick Collections towards the Maintenance of the War, which he might juſtly call his own War; and with an impudent Boldneſs hath ſtruck Tallies in the Exchequer for divers Sums of Money procured by himſelf, pro Defenſione Regni; when by his Counſels the King was drawn to undertake, not a Defenſive, but an Offenſive War.

14. He hath, laſtly, thought to ſecure himſelf and his Party, by ſeeking to undermine Parliaments, and thereby hath laboured to bereave this Kingdom of the Legiſlative Power, which can only be uſed in Parliaments; and that we ſhould be left a Kingdom, without that which indeed makes and conſtitutes a Kingdom, and is the only means to preſerve and reſtore it from Diſtempers and Decays. He hath hereby endeavoured to bereave us of the higheſt Judicatory; ſuch a Judicatory, as is neceſſary and eſſential to our Government, ſome Caſes of Treaſon, and others concerning the Prerogative of the Crown, and Liberty of the People. It is the ſupreme Judicatory, to which all difficult Caſes reſort from other Courts. He hath ſought to deprive the King of the Love and Counſel of his People, and of that Aſſiſtance which he might have from them; and likewiſe to deprive the People of that Relief of Grievances, which they moſt humbly expect from his Majeſty.

My Lords, The Parliament is the Cabinet wherein the chiefeſt Jewels both of the Crown and Kingdom are depoſited. The great Prerogative of the King, and Liberty of the People, are moſt effectually exerciſed and maintained by Parliaments. Here, my Lords, you cannot paſs by this Occaſion of great Thanks to God and his Majeſty for paſſing the Bill, whereby the frequent Courſe of Parliaments is eſtabliſhed; which I aſſure myſelf he will by experience find to be a ſtrong Foundation both of his Honour and of his Crown.

This is all, my Lords, I have to ſay to the Particulars of the Charge. The Commons deſire your Lordſhips, that they may have the ſame way of Examination that they had in the Caſe of the Earl of Strafford; that is, to examine Members of all kinds, of your Lordſhips Houſe and their own, and others, as they ſhall ſee cauſe: and thoſe Examinations to be kept ſecret and private, that they may with more advantage be made uſe of when the matter comes to tryal. They have declared, That they reſerve to themſelves the Power of making Additional Articles; by which they intend to reduce his Charge to be more particular and certain, in reſpect of the ſeveral Times, Occaſion, and other Circumſtances of the Offences therein charged. And that your Lordſhips would be pleaſed to put this Cauſe in ſuch a quick way of Proceeding, that theſe great and dangerous Crimes, together with the Offenders, may be brought to a juſt Judgment.

Upon the reading of theſe Articles, the Lords made an Order, That the Archbiſhop ſhould, on Monday following, being the firſt of March, be removed from Mr. Maxwell's, and ſent to the Tower; and that he and the Earl of Strafford ſhould not come together.

An Ordinance of the Lords and Commons, aſſembled in Parliament, concerningt he Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Part 3. Vol. 2. p. 320.

Die Martis, 16 Maii 1643.

'WHereas William Laud, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, ſtandeth impeached in this preſent Parliament for High Treaſon, and for divers other great Offences and Miſdemeanours; and by reaſon of many great and weighty Buſineſſes he cannot yet be brought to Tryal for the ſaid Offences and Miſdemeanours; and he, in reſpect of his ſaid Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury, hath power to give and collate fit Clerks to divers Parſonages, Vicaridges, Prebends, and other Eccleſiaſtical Promotions and Preferments; and if any of them ſhould become void, and he left to prefer whom he pleaſe to the ſame, the ſame may prove very inconvenient, he beſtowing them upon unfit and unworthy Perſons.

'Be it therefore ordered and ordained, by the Lords and Commons in this preſent Parliament, That in caſe any of the aforeſaid Parſonages, Vicaridges, Prebends, or other Eccleſiaſtical Promotions or Preferments, now be, or ſhall hereafter, and before the Tryal of the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop, become void; That the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſhall forbear to preſent or collate any Perſon or Perſons thereunto, without the Leave and Order of both Houſes of Parliament. And it is further ordered and ordained, That the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop ſhall, from time to time, until his ſaid Tryal, preſent and collate ſuch fit Perſon or Perſons, to every ſuch Parſonage, Vicaridge, Prebend, and other Eccleſiaſtical Preferment, as aforeſaid, which now are, or hereafter before his ſaid Tryal ſhall become void, as by both Houſes of Parliament ſhall be nominated and appointed. And it is further ordered by the ſaid Lords and Commons in Parliament, That all Archdeacons, Regiſters, and other Officers, Miniſters, and Perſons whatſoever, ſhall forbear to give or make any Admiſſion, Inſtitution, Collation, or Induction of any Perſon or Perſons whatſoever, which by the ſaid Archbiſhop ſhall be preſented in or to any ſuch Parſonage, Vicaridge, Prebend, or other Eccleſiaſtical Preferment, other than ſuch Perſon and Perſons as ſhall be nominated and appointed by both Houſes of Parliament as aforeſaid. And it is laſtly ordered, That the Lord Archbiſhop, and the Church-wardens of every Pariſh, and other Officers of the Church, where any Parſo-

'ſonage,

'ſonage, Vicaridge, Prebend, or other Eccleſiaſti-
'cal Promotions or Preferments, in the Donation
'or Gift of the ſaid Archbiſhop, are; ſhall with-
'in two months after the reſpective Avoidance
'thereof, give notice of ſuch Avoidance to the 'Lord Speaker of the Houſe of Peers, for the 'time being.'

An Ordinance of the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament, That all the Temporal Livings, Dignities, and Eccleſiaſtical Promotions, belonging unto William Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, be forthwith ſequeſtred by and unto the Parliament.

'WHereas by an Ordinance of Parliament,
'of the 16th of May 1643, the Archbiſhop
'of Canterbury is required from time to time, until 'his Tryal, to collate ſuch fit Perſons unto any
'Eccleſiaſtical Preferment in his Patronage, as
'ſhall by both Houſes be nominated unto him;
'and, in purſuance of the ſaid Ordinance, ano'ther Ordinance of the Lords and Commons paſt
'the 20th of the ſame Month, requiring the ſaid
'Archbiſhop to collate upon Edward Corbet, Fellow
'of Merton-College in Oxford, the Rectory of Char-
'tham in the County of Kent, void by Death of
'Dr. Bargrave, the laſt Incumbent: and whereas
'the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury refuſeth Obe-
'dience to the ſaid Ordinance, it is therefore or'dered, and be it ſo ordained by the Lords and
'Commons in Parliament, That all the Tempo-
'ralties of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury be here-
'by ſequeſter'd by and unto the Parliament, and
'William Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury be ſuſ-
'pended ab Officio & Beneficio, & omni & omnimoda
'Juriſdictione Archiepiſcopali, until he be either
'convicted or acquitted of High-Treaſon, for 'which he ſtands now accuſed. And whatſoever
'Livings, Dignities, or Eccleſiaſtical Promotions,
'in the ſaid Archbiſhop's Gift or Collation, are,
'or hereafter ſhall be void, ſhall henceforth be in-
'ſtituted or inducted into by the Archbiſhop's
'Vicar-General, or any other having Authority in 'his behalf, upon the Nomination and Recom'mendation of both Houſes of Parliament, during 'the time of the Suſpenſion and Sequeſtration a-
'foreſaid. And upon this Ordinance it is or-

Ibid. p. 817. Octob. 23. 1643. Additional Articles were carried up to the Houſe of Lords, of this tenour.

Further Articles of Impeachment by the Commons aſſembled in Parliament againſt William Laud Archbiſhop of Canterbury, of High Treaſon, and divers High Crimes and Miſdemeanours, as followeth.

I. THAT the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to introduce an Arbitrary Government within this Realm, and to deſtroy Parliaments, in the third and fourth Year of his Majeſty's Reign that now is, a Parliament being then called and ſitting at Weſtminſter, traitorouſly and maliciouſly cauſed the ſaid Parliament to be diſſolved, to the great Grievance of his Majeſty's Subjects, and Prejudice of this Commonwealth. And ſoon after the Diſſolution thereof, gave divers Propoſitions under his Hand to George then Duke of Buckingham, caſting therein many falſe Aſperſions upon the ſaid Parliament, calling it a factious Parliament, and falſly affirming that it had caſt many Scandals upon his Majeſty, and had uſed him like a Child in his Minority; ſtiling them Puritans, and commending the Papiſts for harmleſs and peaceable Subjects.

II. That within the ſpace of ten Years laſt paſt, the ſaid Archbiſhop hath treacherouſly endeavoured to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws of this Realm; and to that end hath in like manner endeavoured to advance the Power of the Council-Table, the Canons of the Church, and the King's Prerogative, above the Laws and Statutes of the Realm. And for manifeſtation thereof, about ſix Years laſt paſt, being then a Privy-Counſellor to his Majeſty, and ſitting at the Council-Table, he ſaid, That as long as he ſat there, they ſhould know, that an Order of that Board ſhould be of equal force with a Law or Act of Parliament. And at another time uſed theſe words, That he hoped e'er long, that the Canons of the Church and the King's Prerogative ſhould be of as great power as an Act of Parliament. And at another time ſaid, That thoſe that would not yield to the King's Power, he would cruſh them to pieces.

III. That the ſaid Archbiſhop, to advance the Canons of the Church, and Power Eccleſiaſtical, above the Law of the Land, and to pervert and hinder the Courſe of Juſtice, hath at divers times within the ſaid time, by his Letters, and other undue Means and Sollicitations uſed to Judges, oppoſed and ſtopped the granting of his Majeſty's Writs of Prohibition, where the ſame ought to have been granted for ſtay of Proceedings in the Eccleſiaſtical Court: whereby Juſtice hath been delayed and hindred, and the Judges diverted from doing their Duties.

IV. That for the end and purpoſe aforeſaid, about ſeven Years laſt paſt, a Judgment being given in his Majeſty's Court of King's-Bench againſt one Burley a Parſon, being a Man of bad Life and Converſation, in an Information upon the Statute of 21 Hen. 8. for wilful Non-Reſidency; the ſaid Archbiſhop, by Sollicitations and other undue Means uſed to the Judges of that Court, cauſed Execution upon the ſaid Judgment to be ſtayed: and being moved therein, and made acquainted with the bad Life and Converſation of the ſaid Parſon, he ſaid, That he had ſpoken to the Judges for him, and that he would never ſuffer a Judgment to paſs againſt any Clergyman by Nihil dicit.

V. That the ſaid Archbiſhop about eight Years laſt paſt, being then alſo a Privy-Counſellor to his Majeſty, for the end and purpoſe aforeſaid, cauſed Sir John Corbet of Stoke in the County of Salop Baronet, then a Juſtice of Peace of the ſaid County, to be committed to the Priſon of the Fleet, where he continued Priſoner for the ſpace of half a year or more, for no other cauſe, but for calling for the Petition of Right, and cauſing it to be read at the Seſſions of the Peace for that County, upon a juſt and neceſſary Occaſion. And during the time of his ſaid Impriſonment, the ſaid Archbiſhop without any Colour of Right, by a Writing under the Seal of his Archbiſhoprick, granted away a parcel of the Glebe-Land of the Church of Adderly in the ſaid County, whereof the ſaid Sir John Corbet was then Patron, unto Robert Viſcount Kilmurrey, without the Conſent of the ſaid Sir John, or the then Incumbent of the ſaid Church: which ſaid Viſcount Kilmurrey built a Chappel upon the ſaid parcel of Glebe-Land, to the great prejudice of the ſaid Sir John Corbet, which hath cauſed great Suits and Contentions between them. And whereas the ſaid Sir John Corbet had a Judgment againſt Sir James Stonehouſe Knight, in an Action of Waſte, in his Majeſty's Court of Common-Pleas at Weſtminſter, which was afterwards affirmed on a Writ of Error in the King's-Bench, and Execution thereupon awarded; yet the ſaid Sir John by means of the ſaid Archbiſhop could not have the effect thereof, but was committed to Priſon by the ſaid Archbiſhop and others at the Council-Table, until he had ſubmitted himſelf unto the Order of the ſaid Table, whereby he loſt the benefit of the ſaid Judgment and Execution.

VI. That whereas divers Gifts and Diſpoſitions of divers Sums of Money were heretofore made by divers charitable and well-diſpoſed Perſons, for the buying in of divers Impropriations for the Maintenance of preaching the Word of God in ſeveral Churches; the ſaid Archbiſhop about eight Years laſt paſt wilfully and maliciouſly cauſed the ſaid Gifts, Feoffments, and Conveyances made to the Uſes aforeſaid, to be overthrown in his Majeſty's Court of Exchequer, contrary to Law, as things dangerous to the Church and State, under the ſpecious pretence of buying in Appropriations; whereby that pious Work was ſuppreſſed and trodden down, to the great Diſhonour of God, and Scandal of Religion.

VII. That the ſaid Archbiſhop at ſeveral times, within theſe ten Years laſt paſt, at Weſtminſter, and elſewhere within this Realm, contrary to the known Laws of this Land, hath endeavoured to advance Popery and Superſtition within the Realm: And for that end and purpoſe hath wittingly and willingly received, harboured, and relieved divers Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits; namely, one called Sancta Clara, alias *Dampor*t, a dangerous Perſon and Franciſcan Friar: who having written a Popiſh and Seditious Book, entitled, Deus, Natura, Gratia, wherein the Thirty nine Articles of the Church of England, eſtabliſhed by Act of Parliament, were much traduced and ſcandalized; the ſaid Archbiſhop had divers Conferences with him, while he was writing the ſaid Book: and did alſo provide Maintenance and Entertainment for one Monſieur S. Giles, a Popiſh Prieſt, at Oxford, knowing him to be a Popiſh Prieſt.

VIII. That the ſaid Archbiſhop about four Years laſt paſt, at Weſtminſter aforeſaid, ſaid, That there muſt be a Blow given to the Church, ſuch as had not been yet given, before it could be brought to Conformity; declaring thereby his Intention to be, to ſhake and alter the true Proteſtant Religion eſtabliſhed in the Church of England.

IX. That in or about the Month of May 1640. preſently after the Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament, the ſaid Archbiſhop, for the Ends and Purpoſes aforeſaid, cauſed a Synod or Convocation of the Clergy to be held for the ſeveral Provinces of Canterbury and York, wherein were made and eſtabliſhed by his means and procurement divers Canons and Conſtitutions Eccleſiaſtical; contrary to the Laws of this Realm, the Rights and Privileges of Parliament, the Liberty and Propriety of the Subject, tending alſo to Sedition, and of dangerous conſequence. And among other things, the ſaid Archbiſhop cauſed a moſt dangerous and illegal Oath to be therein made and contrived, the Tenour whereof followeth in theſe words: ---That I A. B. do ſwear that I do approve the Doctrine and Diſcipline or Government eſtabliſhed in the Church of England, as containing all things neceſſary to Salvation; and that I will not endeavour by myſelf or any other, directly or indirectly, to bring in any Popiſh Doctrine, contrary to that which is ſo eſtabliſhed: Nor will I ever give my Conſent to alter the Government of this Church by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, and Archdeacons, &c. as it ſtands now eſtabliſhed, and as by Right it ought to ſtand; nor yet ever ſubject it to the Uſurpations and Superſtitions of the See of Rome. And all theſe things I do plainly and ſincerely acknowledge and ſwear, according to the plain and common Senſe and Underſtanding of the ſame words, without any Equivocation, or mental Evaſion, or ſecret Reſervation whatſoever. And this I do heartily, willingly, and truly upon the Faith of a Chriſtian; ſo help me God in Jeſus Chriſt. Which Oath the ſaid Archbiſhop himſelf did take, and cauſed divers other Miniſters of the Church to take the ſame, upon pain of Suſpenſion and Deprivation of their Livings, and other ſevere Penalties; and did alſo cauſe Godfrey, then Biſhop of Glouceſter, to be committed to Priſon for refuſing to ſubſcribe to the ſaid Canons, and to take the ſaid Oath: and afterward the ſaid Biſhop ſubmitting himſelf to take the ſaid Oath, he was ſet at liberty.

X. That a little before the calling of the laſt Parliament, Anno 1640. a Vote being then paſſed, and a Reſolution taken at the Council-Table, by the Advice of the ſaid Archbiſhop, for aſſiſting of the King in Extraordinary Ways, if the ſaid Parliament ſhould prove peeviſh, and refuſe to ſupply his Majeſty; the ſaid Archbiſhop wickedly and maliciouſly adviſed his Majeſty to diſſolve the ſaid Parliament, and accordingly the ſame was diſſolved: And preſently after the ſaid Archbiſhop told his Majeſty, That now he was abſolved from all Rules of Government, and left free to uſe extraordinary Ways for his Supply.

For all which Matters and Things, the ſaid Commons aſſembled in Parliament, in the name of themſelves and of all the Commons of England, do impeach the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury of High Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanours, tending to the Subverſion of our Religion, Laws, and Liberties, and to the utter Ruin of this Church and Commonwealth. And the ſaid Commons by proteſtation ſaving to themſelves the liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any further or other Accuſation or Impeachment againſt the ſaid William Laud Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and alſo of replying to the Anſwer that he ſhall make unto the ſaid Articles, or any of them; or offering Proof of the Premiſes, or any other Impeachments or Accuſations that ſhall be exhibited by them, as the Cauſe ſhall (according to the Courſe of Parliament) require: do pray that he the ſaid William Laud, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, may may be called to answer the said several Crimes and Misdemeanours, and receive such condign Punishment as the same shall deserve; and that such further Proceedings may be upon every of them had and used against him, as is agreeable to Law and Justice.

Die Lunæ, 23 Octob. 1643.

ORdered, &c. That the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury shall put in his Answer in writing into this House by the 30th Day of this Instant October, unto the particular Articles in maintenance of their former Impeachment of High Treason, and divers High Crimes and Misdemeanours, brought up from the House of Commons against him, and remaining now before the Lords in Parliament.

The Archbishop being served with this Order the same Day, the next Morning sent this Petition (written with his own Hand) to the Lords.

To the Honourable the Lords assembled in the High Court of Parliament, the Humble Petition of William Laud Archbishop of Canterbury.

Humbly sheweth,

THAT he hath received your Lordships Order of October 23. 1643. with a Copy of the Articles charged against him, and requiring him to make answer.

Most humbly prayeth, That according to an Order of that Honourable House, he may have Counsel assigned him, and that Master Hearne and Master Chute may be his Counsel, and may have free liberty to come unto him; and that he may have some Money out of his Estate to fee his Counsel, and defray his other Charges, he having been for this last whole Year burdensome to his Friends. And further, That he may have all his Papers and Books, most of which belong to his Defence, which Master Pryn took from him by Order from the Lords, delivered unto him, that he may be able to answer for himself. That also he may have Time and Means to send for his Witnesses, which can hardly be done in the time limited: and that he may have his Servants about him, to send about his necessary Occasions. And lastly, That he may have longer time, the Articles being large and many. And he shall ever pray, &c.

William Cant.

Which Petition being read in the Lords House October 24. 1643. this Order was made.

Die Martis, 24 Octob. 1643.

UPON the reading of the Petition of the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury this Day in the House, it is ordered, &c. That time is given him until Monday the sixth of November for the putting in his Answer in writing into this House unto the particular Articles brought up from the House of Commons, in maintenance of their former Impeachment of High Treason, and divers High Crimes and Misdemeanours against him. That Master Hearne and Master Chute are hereby assigned of Counsel for the drawing up of his Answer, who are to be permitted to have free Access in and out to him. That this House doth hereby recommend to the Committee of Sequestrations, that the said Lord Archbishop shall have such Means afforded him out of his Estate, as will enable him to pay his Counsel, and defray his other Charges. That when his Lordship shall set down particularly what Papers and Writings are necessary for his Defence that should be restored unto him, their Lordships will take it into their Consideration. That upon his Lordship's nominating who shall be his Sollicitor, the Lords will return their Answer. And for the Witnesses, when a Day shall be appointed for his Lordship's Tryal, this House will give such Directions therein as shall be just.

Die Sabbati, 28 Octob. 1643.

ORdered, &c. That Master Hales is hereby appointed to be of Counsel with the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, with his other Counsel already appointed for the drawing of his Answer to the Charge of the House of Commons against him. And that Master W. Dell, Richard Cobb, and Master George Smith, his Lordship's Servants, shall have liberty to attend the said Archbishop's several Affairs, and be permitted to come in and out unto him, as there shall be occasion.

After which, Octob. 31. he exhibited this Petition to the Lords.

To the Right Honourable the Lords assembled in Parliament, the Humble Petition of William Archbishop of Canterbury.

Most humbly sheweth,

THAT your Petitioner having presented against him, by the Honourable House of Commons, to your Lordships, an Impeachment, intitled, Further Articles of Impeachment by the Commons assembled in Parliament, of High Treason, and divers High Crimes and Misdemeanours; to which by your Honourable Order of the 24th of October annexed, he is directed to put in his Answer in writing by Monday the 6th of November; and hath thereby Counsel assigned him to draw up the same.

That your Petitioner's Counsel, upon reading of the Articles, finding that as well in the Frame as the Conclusion thereof, the Matters of Crime and Misdemeanours are so interwoven with References to the Matters thereby charged as Treason, as they cannot take upon them to distinguish them: and conceiving it not to have been your Lordship's Intention by their Assignments that they should advise an Answer to any part of the Impeachment charged against your Petitioner as Treason, do forbear to advise your Petitioner's Answer to the said Articles, without some Declaration first had, which of the said Articles are intended to be a Charge of High Treason, and which of them of Crimes and Misdemeanours; without which, your Petitioner is like to be deprived of the Assistance of Counsel, granted by your Lordship's Order.

Your Petitioner humbly beseecheth your Lordships, in this so heavy a Charge on him, from so Great and Honourable a Body, in such a Strait of Time, That it may be declared, which of the said Articles are intended to be Charges of Crimes and Misdemeanours only, in which your Petitioner may have the Assistance of his Counsel assigned him, to advise him in his Answer thereunto: And that your Lordships will be further honourably pleaſed to inlarge your Petitioner in the Time allotted for his Anſwer. And your Petitioner ſhall pray, &c.

William Cant.

Upon which Petition, this Order was formed.

Die Martis, 31 Octob.

ORdered, &c. That the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſhall have time to put in his Anſwer to the Impeachment of the Houſe of Commons, until Monday the 13th of November next. And that this Houſe doth forbear to declare any Opinion concerning the ſeveral Articles of the ſaid Impeachment, but leaves it to his Counſel to do and adviſe as his Counſel ſhall think moſt fitting.

Die Veneris, 10 Novemb. 1643.

ORdered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower, or his Deputies, ſhall bring in ſafety the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury before their Lordſhips on Monday the 13th of this Inſtant November, by Ten of the clock in the Morning, to put in his Anſwer into the Houſe to the Impeachment of the Houſe of Commons, remaining now before the Lords in Parliament; and this to be a ſufficient Warrant in that behalf.

To the Gentleman-Uſher, &c.

On the 13th of November, the Archbiſhop appearing at the Lords Bar in Perſon, put in this following Anſwer to the Additional Articles exhibited againſt him.

The Humble Anſwer of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to the further Articles of Impeachment of High Treaſon and divers High Crimes and Miſdemeanours exhibited againſt him by the Honourable Houſe of Commons, according to Direction of an Order of this Honourable Houſe of the 13*th of* Octob. laſt.

ALL Advantages of Exception to the ſaid Articles of Impeachment, to this Defendant, ſaved and reſerved, this Defendant humbly ſaith, That he is not guilty of all or any the Matters by the ſaid Impeachment charged, in ſuch manner and form as the ſame are by the ſaid Articles of Impeachment charged.

Alſo upon his Motion the ſame Day to the Lords, this Order was made in the favour of him.

Die Lunæ, 13 Novemb. 1643.

ORdered by the Lords in Parliament, That the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury's Counſel ſhall provide themſelves to adviſe him in point of Law, in all the Articles of the whole Charge; and for the Matter of Fact, when the Cauſe comes to be proſecuted by the Houſe of Commons, as there ſhall be need, their Lordſhips will give further Directions in due time.

On the 11th of December 1643, the Houſe of Commons made this enſuing Order.

11 Decembr. 1643.

ORdered, That the Committee for the Tryal of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury do meet this Afternoon at Two of the clock in the Star-Chamber, to prepare the Evidence againſt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and to ſummon ſuch Witneſſes as are needful, and prepare the Buſineſs fit for Tryal, and to acquaint the Houſe when they are ready; and this they are to do with all convenient ſpeed they can, and have power to ſend for Parties, Witneſſes, Papers, Records, &c. And the Care thereof is particularly committed unto Serjeant Wilde.

Die Mercurii, 3 Jan. 1643.

IT is this Day ordered by the Lords in Parliament, That this Houſe will proceed againſt William Laud Archbiſhop of Canterbury upon the Impeachment brought up from the Houſe of Commons for High Crimes and Miſdemeanours, on Monday Morning next at Ten of the clock, being the Eighth of this Inſtant January 1643. At which time the ſaid Archbiſhop is to prepare himſelf for his Defence.

To the Gentleman-Uſher attending this Houſe, or his Deputy, to be delivered to the Lieutenant of the Tower, or his Deputy, for the Archbiſhop.

Jan. 3. 1643. A Meſſage ſent from the Lords by Sir Robert Rich and Mr. Page, The Lords commanded us to put you in mind, that the Archbiſhop of Canterbury hath put in his Plea to the Impeachment of this Houſe ſent up to the Lords ſome time ſince, which they deſire you to take into Conſideration what is fit to be done in it.

Jan. 5. The Houſe of Commons deſired the Lords to appoint a Committee to examine ſome Witneſſes upon Oath, againſt the Archbiſhop, in the preſence of the Committee of the Commons; which was granted.

On the ſixth of January, the Archbiſhop preferred a Petition to the Lords, written with his Secretary Mr. Dell's Hand, and ſubſcribed with his own, as follows.

To the Right Honourable the Lords aſſembled in the High Court of Parliament, the Humble Petition of William Laud Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Priſoner in the Tower.

Humbly ſheweth,

THAT your Petitioner having received your Lordſhips Command, by your Honourable Order of the 3d of this Inſtant January, annexed, to attend and anſwer the Impeachments againſt your Petitioner, from the Honourable Houſe of Commons, on Monday the 8th of this Inſtant January, which is but five days diſtance, and at a time when two of his three Counſel aſſigned are out of Town, and your Petitioner's Witneſſes reſiding in ſeveral remote places, cannot be ſummoned in ſo ſhort a time, nor willing happily to come upon their Summons, without Warrant from your Lordſhips:

Your Petitioner's moſt humble Suit to your Lordſhips is, That you will honourably vouchſafe him ſome more convenient time to ſend for his Counſel and Witneſſes, to teſtify in the Matters of Fact charged againſt him; and withal to grant the Petitioner your Honourable Order, to command the Witneſſes ſummoned to attend at the time by your Lordſhips to be appointed. Which his humble Requeſt, your Petitioner had ſooner preſented to your your Lordſhips, but that no Sitting hath been (as your Petitioner is informed) until this Day, ſithence your Honourable Order in this behalf made known to him. And your Petitioner ſhall pray, &c.

William Cant.

Sabbati, 6 Jan. 1643.

WHereas the Houſe formerly appointed Monday, being the 8th of this Inſtant January, 1643. to proceed againſt William Laud, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, upon the Impeachment brought up againſt him from the Houſe of Commons for High Treaſon, and High Crimes and Miſdemeanours; upon reading the Petition of the ſaid Archbiſhop, it is this Day ordered by the Lords in Parliament, to the end that the Counſel and Witneſſes of the ſaid Archbiſhop may have competent Time to attend the Hearing of the Cauſe, That this Houſe will reſpite the Proceedings againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop, upon the ſaid Impeachment, until Tueſday the 16th of this Inſtant January, 1643. at Ten of the clock in the Morning. At which Time the ſaid Archbiſhop is peremptorily appointed to provide his Witneſſes, and prepare his Defence unto the ſaid Impeachments.

To the Gentleman-Uſher, &c.

In purſuance whereof, on the 15th of January an Order was made, commanding the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring up his Priſoner accordingly. Who being brought to the Lords Houſe at the Time appointed, about Three a clock that Afternoon the Lords ſent down this Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, thus enter'd in their Journal.

16 Jan. 1643.

A Meſſage from the Lords, by Sir Robert Rich and Mr. Page, to acquaint the Houſe that they are ready to hear the Charge upon the Impeachment againſt the Biſhop of Canterbury.

Upon this Meſſage, the Committee of the Houſe of Commons, appointed to manage the Evidence againſt him, went up to the Lords Houſe. And then the Archbiſhop being brought to the Bar, after he had there kneeled a little ſpace, was commanded to ſtand up. Which Ceremony ended, Mr. Maynard, one of the Committee, deſired the Lords that the Original and Additional Articles of Impeachment againſt the Archbiſhop might be read; which being read accordingly by the Clerk, he then prayed that the Archbiſhop's ſeveral Anſwers to theſe Articles might likewiſe be read. Whereupon the Speaker of the Lords Houſe commanding them to be read, the Clerk read only his forementioned Anſwer to the Additional Articles; but no Anſwer to the Original, there being never any Anſwer put in unto them.

Hereupon Mr. Maynard ſpake to the Lords to this effect:

Mr. Maynard's Speech on this occaſion.

My Lords,

IT now appears to your Lordſhips how unwilling the Archbiſhop is (out of Conſciouſneſs of his own Guilt) to come to his Tryal, that in all this ſpace, from his firſt Impeachment, he hath not ſo much as put in any Anſwer to the Original Articles, though he had long ſince Counſel aſſigned him for that purpoſe. My Lords, this is none of the Commons fault, but his own: For your Lordſhips well know that the Commons can take no notice what is done in the Houſe of Peers in a Parliamentary way, but by a Meſſage from your Lordſhips, who, after our Articles exhibited, were to call upon the Archbiſhop for an Anſwer to them. And your Lordſhips ſending us ſeveral Meſſages heretofore, that the Archbiſhop had put in his Anſwer to the Articles, and that you were ready to hear our Charge againſt him, and appointing this Day for his Tryal, the Commons thereupon conceived that he had formerly put in his Plea and Anſwer, in due Form, to all their Articles: But the contrary now appearing both to your Lordſhips and us, it is impoſſible for us to proceed at this time on his Tryal, there being no Iſſue joined upon the Original Articles, for want of an Anſwer to them; and to proceed upon the Additionals before any Anſwer given to the Originals, will be very prepoſterous. Wherefore we humbly pray your Lordſhips to order that the Archbiſhop may forthwith put in his Anſwer both to the Original and Additional Articles, by the Advice of his Counſel, or otherwiſe, in ſuch a ſort as he will ſtand to it: And then we ſhall without any Delay join Iſſue with him, proceed on in his Tryal and Evidence againſt him, when your Lordſhips ſhall appoint.

The Archbiſhop deſired the Lords that he might adviſe with his Counſel, whether the Articles were certain and particular enough to be anſwered unto; and that if their Lordſhips ſhould over-rule him to put in his Anſwer to them, he might have convenient Time to do it.

Upon this, all being commanded to withdraw, the Lords, after ſome ſhort Debate among themſelves, and upon reading the Archbiſhop's Petition to have Mr. Gerrard of Gray's-Inn aſſigned for his Counſel, to join with thoſe formerly aſſigned him, made this enſuing Order:

Die Martis, 16 Jan. 1643.

UPON the reading the Petition of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, it is this Day ordered by the Lords in Parliament, That Mr. Richard Gerrard of Gray's-Inn be added to the former Counſel aſſigned to the ſaid Archbiſhop, to be likewiſe of his Counſel.

It is alſo ordered by the Lords in Parliament, That William Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſhall put in his Anſwer in Writing into this Houſe, to the firſt and further Articles of Impeachment brought up from the Houſe of Commons againſt him by Monday Morning next peremptorily; and that the ſame Counſel formerly aſſigned him ſhall be of Counſel with him.

On the 19th of January the Archbiſhop ſent this Petition to the Lords.

To the Right Honourable the Lords aſſembled in Parliament, the humble Petition of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Priſoner in the Tower;

Sheweth,

THAT whereas your Petitioner having formerly anſwered the particular Articles exhibited bited againſt him by the Honourable Houſe of Commons; and now by your Lordſhips Order, of the 16th of this Inſtant, is commanded to put in his Anſwer to the firſt and further Articles of Impeachment brought up againſt him by Monday Morning next; for the doing whereof, his former Counſel is aſſigned him.

That your Petitioner having adviſed with his Counſel concerning the firſt Articles, which were exhibited now almoſt three Years ſithence, finding upon Peruſal and Debate of the ſame that the ſaid former Articles are ſuch, that no Anſwer can be made thereunto, nor your Petitioner in any wiſe enabled to prepare for his Defence to the ſame, as they now ſtand:

That foraſmuch as the ſaid Articles of Impeachment import no leſs than a Charge of High Treaſon; and foraſmuch as your Petitioner is by his Counſel informed that (eſpecially in Caſes of Life) the Defendant is allowed to offer to the Court, where the ſame depends, his Exceptions by his Counſel before any Plea pleaded:

Your Petitioner moſt humbly beſeecheth your Lordſhips to appoint a Day for the hearing of your Petitioner's Counſel concerning the ſame. And your Petitioner ſhall pray, &c.

William Cant.

What Anſwer the Lords returned to this Petition, I find not; but on the 20th of January they made an Order for the Lieutenant to bring him up on the Monday following, to put in his Anſwer according to their Order of the 16th.

And in purſuance thereof, on the 22d of January the Archbiſhop perſonally appearing at the Lords Bar, did put in this following Anſwer both to the Commons Original and Additional Articles.

The Humble Anſwer of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury to the firſt and further Articles of Impeachment brought up by the Honourable Houſe of Commons againſt him, and by Order of the Right Honourable the Lords in Parliament of the 16th of this Inſtant directed to be put in.

AS to the thirteenth Article of the firſt Articles, and the Matters therein charged, and all other Matters and Things in the ſame, or any of the reſt of the ſaid Articles, contained, which concern any Act of Hoſtility, whether between the King and his Subjects, or between Subject and Subject, or which may be conceived to ariſe upon the coming of any Engliſh Army againſt Scotland, or upon any Action, Attempt, Aſſiſtance, Counſel, or Device having relation thereunto, and falling out by the occaſion of the late Troubles, preceding the late Concluſion of the Treaty, and Return of the Scotiſh Army into Scotland; this Defendant ſaith, That it is enacted by an Act made during the ſitting of this preſent Parliament, that the ſame, and whatſoever hath enſued thereupon, whether trenching upon the Laws and Liberties of the Church and Kingdom, or upon his Majeſty's Honour and Authority, in no time hereafter may be called in queſtion, or reſented as a Wrong national or perſonal, and that no mention be made thereof in time coming, neither in Judgment, nor out of Judgment; but that it be held and reputed as though never ſuch Things had been thought or wrought, as by the ſaid Act may more at large appear: with this, That this Defendant doth aver, That he is none of the Perſons excepted by the ſaid Act; or the ſaid Offences charged upon this Defendant, any of the Offences excepted by the ſaid Act.

And as to all the reſt and further Articles, this Defendant, ſaving to himſelf all Advantages of Exception to the ſaid Articles, humbly ſaith, He is not guilty of all or any the Matters by the ſaid Articles charged, in ſuch Manner and Form as the ſame are by the ſaid Articles charged againſt him.

William Cant.

The ſame Day the Lords, by Sir Robert Rich and Mr. Page, ſent down this Anſwer of the Archbiſhop's to the Houſe of Commons; which was read, and ordered to be referred to the Committee appointed to manage the Evidence againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop, and accordingly delivered to Serjeant Wilde.

And it was further, the ſame Day, ordered by the Commons, That the ſaid Committee, appointed to manage the Evidence at the Tryal of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, do peremptorily meet this Afternoon, at Three of the clock, in the Court of Wards, upon the Diſtribution of the Parts of the Evidence.

Die Lunæ, 4 Martii, 1643.

A Meſſage to be ſent to the Lords to deſire them to appoint a Day for the Tryal of the Biſhop of Canterbury. Mr. Serjeant Wilde went up to the Lords, to appoint a Day for the Tryal of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Serjeant Wilde brings Anſwer, That the Lords have appointed to-morrow ſeven-night for the Tryal of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

For which purpoſe the Lords made the following Order.

Die Lunæ, 4 Martii, 1643.

ORdered, That the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſhall appear before their Lordſhips on Tueſday the 12th of this Inſtant March, at Nine of the clock in the Morning. At which Time this Houſe will proceed againſt the Archbiſhop upon the firſt and further Articles of Impeachment, brought up from the Houſe of Commons againſt him for High Treaſon, and High Crimes and Miſdemeanors: whereof the ſaid Archbiſhop is hereby to take notice, and provide himſelf accordingly.

After this, the Archbiſhop petitioning the Commons Houſe, That Sir Henry Mildmay, a Member thereof, might be examined as a Witneſs for him at his Tryal; this Order was thereupon conceived.

9 Martii, 1644.

THE humble Petition of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, deſiring that Sir Henry Mildmay may be examined as a Witneſs in his Buſineſs, he being to come to his Tryal on Tueſday next, was this Day read; and it is ordered according to his Petition, That he ſhall be examined as a Witneſs at the Tryal of the ſaid Biſhop accordingly. It was likewiſe then ordered, That divers Members of the Houſe of Commons ſhall be examined as Witneſſes

Witneſſes againſt him; and that the Lords be moved by Serjeant Wilde, that ſome Members and Attendants of the Lords Houſe be examined at the Archbiſhop's Tryal. And that it be referred to the Committee of Sequeſtrations, to conſider of ſome convenient Recompence for ſuch Clerks, Sollicitors, and others, as have been or ſhall be imployed in the tranſcribing of Breviats, and other Services done by them to the Committee for the Biſhop of Canterbury's Tryal.

On Thurſday the 12th of March, 164¾. being the Day appointed for the Commencement of his Tryal, the Archbiſhop about Three of the clock in the Afternoon was brought by the Lieutenant of the Tower and Uſher of the Black-Rod to the Bar in the Lords Houſe; where after he had kneeled a little Space, the Lord Gray of Werk, Speaker pro tempore, commanded him to riſe up. And the Committee of the Houſe of Commons, appointed to manage the Evidence at his Tryal, demanded that the ſeveral Articles of their Impeachment againſt him might be read. Whereupon one of the Clerks of the Lords Houſe read both the Original and Additional Articles before mentioned, and after that his Anſwer, Plea, and Demurrer thereunto.

The Archbiſhop then deſired the Lords that the Houſe of Commons might give in all their Charge and Evidence to all the Articles againſt him together, before he ſhould be put to give his Anſwer to any particular Charge, becauſe he was antient, his Memory very ſhort, and the Articles general; and that he might anſwer all his Charge together, and not each Day's Evidence by piece-meal. To which, on the behalf of the Commons, it was anſwered by Mr. Maynard;

I. That if the Archbiſhop's Memory was ſo bad, it would be far worſe for him to charge it with anſwering many Particulars, and the whole Evidence againſt him together, than to anſwer every particular Charge each Day, as it ſhould be given in againſt him, whilſt it was freſh in Memory.

II. That it might and would be a great Inconvenience to have Witneſſes croſs-examined upon other Days than thoſe whereon they gave in their Teſtimony againſt the Priſoner.

III. That the Lords themſelves would find it difficult to paſs their Judgment upon all the Charge together, without hearing his punctual Anſwer to every particular Proof as it ſhould be given in Evidence, whilſt it was freſh in their Memories.

IV. Becauſe elſe all the Witneſſes, which were very many, muſt of neceſſity attend, and be kept in Town from the firſt to the laſt Day of his Tryal; which would be a very great Charge and Inconvenience.

V. In the Earl of Strafford's Caſe, this very Parliament, he was put to anſwer every Day to the particular Evidence given againſt him on the ſame Day.

Upon which Reaſons, the Houſe of Peers ordered that the Archbiſhop ſhould make his particular Anſwer to every particular Charge on the ſame Day it was given in againſt him.

Then the Archbiſhop deſired that the Houſe of Commons would ſever the Articles which were Treaſon from thoſe other Articles which were matter of Crime and Miſdemeanor only; that ſo he might know which of them were Treaſon, and which not. Hereto Mr. Maynard anſwered, That this they might not do, becauſe they were now only to try the Matter of Fact, not Law; and becauſe all the Articles taken together, not each or any particular Article by it ſelf, made up the Treaſon wherewith he was charged; to wit, His Endeavours to ſubvert and deſtroy Religion, the fundamental Laws of the Land, and Government of the Realm, and to bring in Popery and an arbitrary Tyrannical Government againſt Law.

Then, as an Introduction to the Proof of the Charge, Serjeant Wilde ſpake to the Houſe of Peers as followeth.

Serjeant Wilde's Speech.

My Lords,

THIS great Cauſe of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, after a long and painful Travail, is now come to the Birth; of which it may be truly ſaid, as it was in a like Caſe, Repertum eſt hodierno die facinus, quod nec Poeta fingere, nec Hiſtrio ſonare, nec Mimus imitari potuerit.

For if all the Oppreſſions, all the pernicious Practices and Machinations, which have been in each Time to ruinate our Religion, Laws, and Liberties, were loſt, I think here they might have been found and drawn out again to the Life. So that your Lordſhips, who have been the great Aſſertors of our Liberties, and ſtood ſo faſt to the Rules and Principles of your noble Progenitors, (which others have ignobly deſerted) may after a long Conflict with ſo many great and matchleſs Difficulties, ſay now as a great Commander once did upon an extraordinary Danger, Tandem par animo meo periculum video. Here is a Cauſe proportionable to your ſelves, apt and proper for the Juſtice and Power of this Honourable Court.

Had they been Faults of common Frailty, Error, or Incogitancy, which this Man hath committed, we ſhould gladly have ſtepped back, and caſt a Cloak over them; but being ſo wilful, ſo univerſal, ſo deſtructive to the Laws of God and Man, ſo comprehenſive of all the Evils and Miſeries which now we ſuffer, the Sin would lie upon our own Heads, if we ſhould not call for Juſtice. Which that it hath been ſo long uncalled for, (not deferred or delayed) I ſuppoſe no Man will think ſtrange, who conſiders the preſent Diſtractions, the Death and Diſperſion of our Witneſſes, the Loſs of ſome of our Members who have been imployed and taken pains in this Buſineſs, the Multitude of Diverſions we have had, and have daily, occaſioned by the Acts and Influences of this Meteor.

But the Truth ſurvives, and Matter enough ſurvives; ſo copious and ſo full of Variety, that if all the Particulars ſhould be examined for his three Years Impriſonment, which he complains of, there would be three Years time of Tryal and Hearing of the heavy Charge that lies againſt him, a Charge of High Treaſon. Treaſon in all and every part: Treaſon in the higheſt Pitch and Altitude. For what greater Treaſon can there be, than to betray the whole Realm, and to ſubvert the very Foundations, leaving nothing for Poſterity but a Curſe upon him that ſhall go about to build again?

That which of it ſelf is ſo heinous, is much more enhanced and aggravated by the Quality of the Perſon, a Churchman, a great Prelate, a Man in great Truſt, Place, and Authority in Church and Commonwealth.

A Man indued with ſo great Gifts of Nature, and ſo many of Grace and Favour from his Majeſty; and for all theſe to be perverted to a contrary end, even to the Deſtruction of the Publick, and the ruin of the Womb that bare him, how deep a Dye do theſe impoſe upon this foul Crime?

How Churchmen in all Ages (as hath been often obſerved) ſhould come to be the archeſt Seedſmen of Miſchief, and principal Actors in all the great Diſtractions and Alterations that have happened, is a Deſtiny that may ſeem ſtrange. But the Reaſon is, (Ex bono Theologo malus Medicus) their intermeddling with temporal Things and Matters heterogeneal to their Calling, wherein God is pleaſed to ſmite them with Blindneſs, and to infatuate their Counſel. Whereof a perfect Pattern we have in this great Prelate; who, by abuſing his Profeſſion, and making the Buſineſs of State the cuſtomary Subject of all his Endeavours, became the Author of all the illegal and tyrannical Proceedings in the Star-Chamber, High-Commiſſion Court, and other Courts; of all the Innovations in Doctrine and Diſcipline, of the ſuppreſſing of godly Miniſters and Preaching; of the advancing of others, who were the Promoters of Popery and Arbitrary Power; and indeed, of all the Concuſſions and Diſtractions in Church and State, whereby Religion hath been joſtled out, Laws and Parliaments trodden down with Contempt.

For Matter of Religion, ſurely thoſe Times were happy, when by the Magnanimity of Princes, and the Wiſdom and Piety of our Predeceſſors, the Antichriſtian Yoke of Popery was ſhaken off.

And now after ſo many bloody Maſſacres in France, ſuch fiery Perſecutions here in Queen Mary's Days, ſo many treacherous Conſpiracies in time of Queen Elizabeth, that execrable and horrid Powder-Plot in the Time of the late King James, ſuch Streams and Rivers of Blood in Germany and Ireland, and other Parts of the Chriſtian World, ever ſince by thoſe reſtleſs and cruel Firebrands of all Miſchief: for any Man now to go about to rebuild theſe Walls of Jericho, and to reduce us to thoſe rotten Principles of Error and Darkneſs, how can it be expected better than that the People ſhould be even ready to ſtone him, as they did him that did but act the part of Bellerophon in Rome?

But to avoid this Danger, he conveys this Poiſon in a gilded Pill, with Baits and Pretences of Reconciliation; a pleaſing Snare, Laqueus Diaboli ad miſerorum animas ad infernum detrudendas.

A Bead-Roll of Particulars might be recited, wherein this Reconcilement was to be wrought in Points of Free-Will, Merits, Juſtification, Univerſal Grace, Purgatory; and, in effect, all the reſt.

To draw on theſe, there muſt be an introducing of Popiſh Ceremonies in all the Particulars contained in the Maſs-Books, and Pontificals themſelves: And to make way for theſe, the Book of Sports muſt be publiſhed, and preſſed beyond the King's Intention or Declaration, which was but a civil Command: But he ſubjoins Eccleſiaſtical Penalties, even the ſharpeſt, Suſpenſion, Deprivation, and the like; theſe executed on divers good and godly Men with a high Hand. Thus a Liberty proclaimed not to Captives, but to profane Caitiffs; this Day ſet apart by God ab æterno, expoſed and proſtituted to all Looſeneſs and Irreligion, and that by a Law: This Lamb taken out of his Boſom.

Jehoſaphat ſends Prieſts and Levites into all the Cities and Tribes to inſtruct them: This Prelate ſends Declarations and Injunctions to corrupt them, and to extinguiſh the Lamp and Light of Religion. In the former Acts, he deſtroys the Proteſtant; in this, Religion it ſelf. In the one, he leaves Superſtition; in the other, nothing but Atheiſm and Profaneneſs: In the one, he deſtroys Presbyters, as did Diocleſian; in the other, Presbyterium, as did the Apoſtate Julian. Yet to ſhew his Love to Religion, (the Pope's only) he holds Correſpondency with thoſe of Rome, Cardinal Barberino, Panzani, Con, Roſetti, the Pope's Nuncios, Sir Toby Matthews, Saint Clara, Saint Giles, the moſt dangerous and deſperate Jeſuits, and many others ejuſdem Farinæ. And by all theſe Steps and Rounds he makes a Ladder for himſelf to climb up to the Papal Dignity; in example of Anſelme, whom (though famous for his Contumacy and Rebellion) yet he calls him his worthy Predeceſſor, (as was Becket alſo) and is contented to take upon him the Plenitude of Power, the Title of Holineſs, of Archangel of this Church, the Lineal Succeſſor of Gregory the Firſt, (rather of Gregory the Seventh;) and for all this was well worthy to have theſe great Offers made him, recorded in his own Memorials, by thoſe that had Ability to perform it, (viz.) a Cardinal's Cap. But ſuch was his Modeſty to forbear it; becauſe, though Rome be a true viſible Church in his Opinion, yet ſomething dwelt with him that hindered it for a time, to wit, I ſuppoſe his dwelling here.

For his Attempts againſt the Laws, the Subject's Birth-right, and the Rights of Parliaments, their chief Support and Refuge, how little regard he had to them, how much he did deſpiſe and abhor them, making it his Ambition to prefer the Contemners and Abuſers of them, and to ſet up his Canons and Conſtitutions above them, impoſing of unjuſt and unlawful Oaths, Exactions, Monopolies, all ſorts of Oppreſſions, ſtopping of Prohibitions and Courſe of Juſtice, reſcinding of Acts of Parliament, advancing of Proclamations, and all kind of Arbitrary Power above the Laws of God or Man; is fully expreſſed in the Articles, and will more fully appear in the Evidence. To conclude, Naaman was a great Man; but he was a Leper. This Man's Leproſy hath ſo infected all, as there remains no other Cure but the Sword of Juſtice; which we doubt not but your Lordſhips will ſo apply, that the Commonwealth ſhall yet live again and flouriſh.

When the Serjeant had done, the Archbiſhop deſired that he might have Liberty to ſpeak a few Words, to wipe off that Dirt which had been caſt upon him; which the Lords granting, he made an Oration, which he had prepared for that occaſion, holding it written in a Paper in his Hand.

[Which being printed in his own Account (vid. antea, p. 382.) is here omitted.]

The Heads of the Charge againſt the Archbiſhop.

THE Charge againſt the Archbiſhop was declared by the Managers to conſiſt of many various particular Crimes of high Nature, but reducible to one general Head, to wit, High Treaſon againſt the King and Kingdom; thus expreſſed in the firſt Original and ſecond Additional Articles, That he hath traitorouſly endeavoured to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws and Government of the Kingdom of England; and inſtead thereof, to introduce an Arbitrary and and Tyrannical Government. This General they diſtributed into four ſpecifical Branches in the Articles of his Impeachment; under which all the particular capital Offences and grand Miſdemeanours, which they ſhould give in Evidence againſt him, were comprehenſible, viz.

1. His Traitorous Endeavours and Practices to alter and ſubvert God's true Religion by Law eſtabliſhed in this Realm; and inſtead thereof, to ſet up Popiſh Superſtition and Idolatry, and reconcile us to the Church of Rome; the Particulars whereof are ſpecified in the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th Original, and the 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th Additional Articles.

2. His Traitorous Uſurpation of a Papal and Tyrannical Power in the Church of England in all Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, in Prejudice and Derogation of his Majeſty's Royal Prerogative, and the Subjects Liberties, comprized in the ſixth Original Article.

3. His Traitorous Attempts and Endeavours to ſubvert the Fundamental Temporal Laws, Government, and Liberties of the Realm, and Subjects of England; and inſtead thereof, to introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government, againſt the Law and Subjects Liberties; expreſſed in the 1ſt, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, and 13th Original, and 1ſt, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, and 10th Additional Articles.

4. His Traitorous Endeavours to ſubvert the Rights of Parliament, and antient Courſe of Parliamentary Proceedings, and by falſe and malicious Slanders, to incenſe his Majeſty againſt Parliaments; contained in the 14th Original, and 1ſt, 9th, and 10th Additional Articles.

To make out all theſe:

The firſt Part of the Evidence, upon the 1ſt, 2d, 3d, and 4th Original, and the 2d, 3d, 4th, and 10th Additional Articles, was managed by John Maynard Eſq; one of the Commons Houſe; wherein four whole Days, namely, March 13, 16, and 18. Anno 1643. and March 28. 1644. were ſpent; the Forenoons of them in the Evidence and Proofs, the Afternoons in the Archbiſhop's Anſwers and Mr. Maynard's Replies unto them.

The ſecond Part of the Evidence was proſecuted by Robert Nicolas Eſq; a Member alſo of the Houſe of Commons, which took up three whole Days, viz. April 16. and May the 4th, and the 16th. Morning and Evening in the Proof of the 5th and 6th Original, and 9th Additional Articles, and in the Anſwers and Replies upon them.

The third Part, touching Religion, (contained in the 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th Original, and 6th and 7th Additional Articles) was carried on and managed by John Wilde, Serjeant at Law, of the Commons Houſe, for four whole Days, (to wit, May the 20th and 27th, and June the 6th and 11th;) and then, by reaſon of Mr. Serjeant's Sickneſs, purſued by Mr. Nicolas five entire Days more, (viz. June the 17th, 20th, and 27th, and July the 20th and 24th.)

The fourth and laſt Part of the Evidence (in Proof of the 14th Original, and 1ſt and 10th Additional Articles) was given in by Mr. Nicolas on the 29th of July, and concluded the ſame Day.

After all the Evidence thus given, and the Anſwers and Replies thereunto ſeverally and reſpectively made, the Archbiſhop moved that he might have Liberty to make a general Recapitulation of his whole Defence before the Lords; which accordingly he performed the 2d of September, 1644. To which Samuel Brown Eſq; a Member of the Houſe of Commons, replied, on the 11th of September, ſumming up the principal Parts of the Evidence given againſt him at the Lords Bar, and endeavouring to anſwer and invalidate the Archbiſhop's Allegations and Defences: Who the ſame Day praying the Lords that his Counſel might be heard in Point of Law in his behalf, and their Lordſhips conſenting thereunto, the Managers for the Houſe of Commons deſired that they might firſt have notice what Matters of Law the ſaid Archbiſhop's Counſel would inſiſt upon, that ſo they might prepare themſelves to make reply. Whereupon it was ordered that they ſhould ſpeak to this Point of Law, Whether in all or any of the Articles charged againſt him, there were any Treaſon contained? Which was argued at the Lords Bar by Mr. John Hern, as the Mouth of his Counſel, October the 11th, and replied unto by the Managers.

The Tryal of Connor Lord Macguire, Feb. 10. 1644. in the 20*th Year of King* Charles the Firſt.

BY the Indictment the Priſoner at the Bar is charged, That he, together with Sir Phil. O-Neale, Philip O-Relly, Roger Moore Eſq; Roger Macguire Eſq; Toole O-Coule Clerk, (being a Roman Prieſt,) Hugh Macmahune, and divers other Perſons, falſe Traytors, unknown, as a falſe Traytor againſt the King's Majeſty, his ſupreme Leige Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor conſidering his Duty or Allegiance, but being ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, intending altogether to withdraw, blot out, and extinguiſh the cordial Love and due Obedience which faithful Subjects owe to their Sovereign; did on the 20th of October, 17 Car. at Dublin in Ireland, in the Parts beyond the Seas, and at divers other Times, both before and after, as well at Dublin as elſewhere, falſly, maliciouſly, and traitorouſly conſpire, imagine, and compaſs utterly to deprive and diſinherit the King's Majeſty of his Royal Eſtate and Kingdom of Ireland; to bring his Majeſty's Perſon to Death and Deſtruction; to raiſe Sedition, and breed and cauſe miſerable Slaughter and Deſtruction amongſt the King's Subjects throughout all the whole Kingdom; to make an Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt the King his Sovereign; to levy publick, open, bloody, and fierce War againſt the King in that Kingdom; to change and alter, according to their own Wills, the Government of the Kingdom, and the Religion there eſtabliſhed, and totally to ſubvert the well-ordered State of that Commonwealth; to procure and bring in divers Strangers and Foreigners (not being the King's Subjects) in a warlike manner to invade that Kingdom of Ireland, and to levy War there.

And in execution of theſe their wicked Treaſons and traitorous Conſpiracies, 20 Octob. 17 Car. the Defendant, Connor Macguire, at Dublin, and divers other Times and Places, by one Toole O-Coule, and divers other Meſſengers, by him ſent to Owen O-Neale, being then in Flanders, did move and incite Phil. O-Neale to levy and raiſe an Army in Flanders, and thence to bring that Army over into Ireland in an hoſtile manner, to invade that Kingdom.

And further, to put in execution their traitorous Purpoſes, the Defendant, together with Hugh Macmahune, Phil. O-Neale, Philip O-Relly, Roger Moore, Roger Macguire, and Toole O-Coule the Prieſt, 20 Oct. 17 Car. at Dublin, and divers other Times and Places in Ireland, before and after, did traitorouſly conſpire to enter into, ſeize, get into their own power, and ſurprize the King's Caſtle at Dublin, and all other the King's Caſtles and Forts in that Kingdom, and the Magazine therein. And at the ſame time unlawfully and traitorouſly did endeavour and actually attempt to gain into their poſſeſſion and power, and to ſurprize the ſaid Caſtle of Dublin, and the Munition therein.

That the Defendant, with the other Perſons named, Philip O-Neale and others, further to bring to paſs their moſt horrid wicked Treaſons and Conſpiracies, on the 22d of October, 17 Car. at Charlemont, and other Places, before and after, being armed and arrayed with a great Multitude in a warlike manner, with Banners diſplayed, Drums, Swords, Staves, Guns, and other invaſive and defenſive Weapons, did falſly and traitorouſly prepare and levy open, fierce, and bloody War againſt the King's Majeſty; and the ſame 22d of October ſeized and ſurprized the King's Fort at Charlemont, and then and there maliciouſly and traitorouſly did kill and murder Toby Lord Caulfield, Francis Davies, and others of the King's Subjects, that were Proteſtants.

That the Defendants, 4 Junii, 18 Car. at the Caſtles of Keilagh and Cragan, and other Times and Places, before and after, levied War, ſeized and ſurprized thoſe Caſtles, and did kill and murder Owen Powell and William Coſens, and many other of the King's Proteſtant Subjects in that Kingdom.

Which ſeveral Offences are laid againſt his Duty and Allegiance, againſt the Peace of the King's Crown and Dignity, in manifeſt Breach and Contempt of the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom.

The Defendant pleaded Not guilty. And being demanded how he would be tried;

The Copy of the Plea.

HE pleaded the Statute of Magna Charta, 10 Feb. 9 Hen. 3. That none ſhould be condemned but by Tryal of his Peers; and pleaded the Statute of 10 Hen. 7. That all the Statutes made in England ſhould from thenceforth be in force in Ireland.

And pleaded, That before the Time of the ſeveral Treaſons charged in the Indictment, Bryan Macguire, his Father, by Letters Patents was created Baron of Enniskillen, in Ireland, to him and the Heirs Males of his Body: By force whereof, his Father was ſeized of the Barony in Fee-Tail, and 1 Feb. 12 Car. died ſo ſeized; after whoſe Death the Barony deſcended to the Defendant, by virtue whereof he was a Baron of Ireland. And that at a Parliament held at Dublin, 16 March, 16 Car. which was there continued till the 7th of Aug. after, and then adjourned to the 9th of November following, and then prorogued to the 24th of Feb. thence next following, and from thence continued till the 24th of June, 18 Car.

That he was as one of the Noblemen and Peers of that Parliament; and that the 23d of October, 17 Car. he was arreſted and impriſoned upon pretence of the ſeveral Treaſons in the Indictment mentioned, and there continued till the 12th of June, 18 Car. when he was brought againſt his Will to Weſtminſter, and thence committed to the Tower of London in ſtrict Cuſtody. And averred his Plea, and prayed that he might be tried and judged by his Peers in Ireland.

Whereunto the King's Counſel demurred in Law, and the Defendants joined in the Demurrer.

Upon this Plea of the Lord Macguire, the beginning of Hillary Term, Judge Bacon delivered his Judgment, That a Baron of Ireland was triable by a Jury in this Kingdom. After which, the Houſe of Commons declared their Aſſent unto his Opinion in this following Vote.

Die Sabbati, 8 Feb. 1644.

REſolved upon the Queſtion, That the Houſe doth approve of the Judgment given by Maſter Juſtice Bacon, in over-ruling the Plea of the Lord Macguire, and of the Manner of the Tryal upon the Indictment of High Treaſon in the King's-Bench; and the Judge is hereby required to proceed ſpeedily thereupon, according to Law and Juſtice. The Lords Concurrence to be deſired herein; Maſter Recorder is appointed to carry it up.

Upon this Vote of the Honourable Houſe of Commons, the Houſe of Peers afterwards declared their Concurrence; and thereupon this enſuing Order was paſſed by both Houſes of Parliament.

Die Lunæ, 10 Feb. 1644.

ORdered by the Lords and Commons in Parliament aſſembled, That the ſaid Houſes do approve of the Judgment given by Maſter Juſtice Bacon, in over-ruling the Plea of the Lord Macguire, and of the Manner of the Tryal upon the Indictment of High Treaſon in the King's-Bench; and the Judge is hereby required to proceed ſpeedily thereupon, according to Law and Juſtice.

ON

ON Monday, Febr. 10. the Lord Macguire was brought from the Tower of London, by the Guard belonging thereunto, unto the King's-Bench Bar; where he was arraigned by the Name of Connor Macguire, alias Cornelius Macguire Esq; (for his Plea of Peerage was found invalid, and so declared by the Court; and that Opinion of the Judge was since assented unto, and confirmed by both Houses of Parliament.) At his coming to the Bar, the Prisoner spake as followeth.

Macguire. I do humbly move, that I may have time allowed me by this Court to send for my Witnesses.

Judge. You have had a long time; you were indicted about the beginning of the last Term, you might have prepared Witnesses the last Term.

Mac. I did not expect a Tryal.

Judge. You should expect it at your peril.

Mac. I was told, when I came into the Kingdom, that I might have Witnesses.

Judge. The Proof lies upon the King's part.

Mac. Though the Proof be of the King's part, yet I must have time to clear myself.

Judge. But if every Man should ask so much time as you require, he should never come to his Tryal.

Serj. Whitfield. Mr. Justice Bacon, we know that my Lord Macguire was indicted here the last Term; he was arraigned at this Bar, he pleaded Not Guilty, he could not but expect that he had then been tryed, if it had not been for the Plea of Peerage that he then put in: upon which he knows there was a deliberate Dispute, and he could not tell but that there would be an end before this time; and if he had had any Witnesses, he might have sent for them the last Term. But it is a very unusual Course, especially in that he could not but expect that he should be tryed before this time; but then the Court did conceive this was a legal Information. No Place is mentioned by the Prisoner where the Witnesses should be, nor are they named who they are, nor any particular thing that they should testify; but the Proof lies clear on our part: there's no Justification in Treason; if we prove that this Lord hath committed Treason, there's no Justification of that, by any Witnesses he can produce, Judge. The Lord Grey, that was Lord-Deputy of Ireland, committed his Treasons in Ireland, for which he was brought over hither, and try'd here; yet the Court did not stay for his sending over into Ireland for Witnesses.

Mac. I desire Witnesses.

Judge. What can your Witnesses say for you? Can they say thus much, That you did not conspire, as this Indictment charges you? That there was no taking of these Castles? Can they swear in the Negative? The Proof lies in the Affirmative on the King's part.

Mac. They may be mis-informed.

Judge. Who may be mis-informed?

Mac. The Court. I have been kept close Prisoner a long time, and could not provide my Witnesses.

Serj. Whitfield. If we were not tyed to that, to nothing but his own Confession, there's enough to condemn him: for that he says he was kept close Prisoner, he might have desired that the last Term.

Serj. Roll. If we go upon your own Examination, the Witnesses concurring with that, what can you have?

Judge. If you had Witnesses here, we would hear them; but to stay upon a mere verbal Supposal for those Witnesses in Ireland, they may be in that Rebellion too, and they will never come hither, and so the matter must never come to a Tryal.

Mac. I desire that it may be the next Term.

Judge. We cannot protract Time; they are the King's Witnesses, there are (I suppose) divers here, many Witnesses of the King's come out of Ireland; if you will ask them any Questions for your Defence, you shall. There are many Witnesses of the King's that know how things were in Ireland, the Court shall put them to speak.

Mac. I humbly desire to have a formal Tryal.

Judge. In what respect do you mean? I think it is so now. Now you are come to be arraigned, and the Evidence is to come in against you, I conceive it is a formal one.

Then the Prisoner was required to hold up his Hand at the Bar; and it was demanded, if he would challenge any of the Jury that were to pass upon him in the Matter of Life and Death.

Then the Jury being called, he looked upon them, and challenged those which did appear, being twenty three; there being only one absent. Being demanded whether his Challenge was peremptory or no? he answered it was, for Causes best known to himself.

Jury challenged.

Sir William Brownelow Kt. and Baronet.	John Pawlet Gent.
	Thomas Poltock Gent.
Sir Henry Row,	Henry Smith Gent.
Sir Matthew Howland.	Francis Child Gent.
Thomas Marsh Esq;	Edward Wilford Gent.
Thomas Wilcox Esq;	William Vincent Gent.
William Lane Esq;	John Barnes.
Edward Rogers Esq;	John Arnold.
Edward Claxton Esq;	John Huckfley Esq;
Richard Zachary Esq;	Sir James Harrington Kt.
Humphrey Westwood Esq;	Thomas Moore Esq;
John Jackson Esq;	Henry Arundell Gent.

Serj. Whitfield. The Prisoner hath challenged all the Jury that does appear; twenty three appears, and he hath challenged them, and his Challenge is for Causes best known to himself, which is a peremptory Challenge. Truly, it is that which the Law doth allow, and we do not oppose it; but we do desire that we may have another Writ returnable to-morrow.

Judge. You must have a Venire Facias.

Serj. Whitfield. This Cause is a Cause of very great weight, there are many Witnesses that have long attended in Court, we are informed that some of them are gone away into Ireland; that there is the Sheriff of Dublin, and some others that are now present in Court, that cannot be here, if we should defer this Tryal, as the Prisoner doth desire: and we do desire that it may be referred till to-morrow, we shall be ready to give in Evidence against him.

Judge. He hath spent three Days this Term already, this is the fourth: we would have proceeded now, but for his peremptory Challenge; but if we stay till to-morrow, he must be content to be try'd by a meaner Jury.

Mr. Pryn. This being a publick Case, we desire a speedy progress in it: our Witnesses have been long detained here, and cannot attend till the next Term, some of them being to depart within 2 days.

Judge. A publick Case must have publick Justice on both sides: for your Witnesses, you shall stay your Witnesses here. We must do that which the Law doth allow.

Serj.

Serj. Whitfield. The Law does allow of his peremptory Challenge; we desire to have a new Writ, and that it may be returnable to-morrow. For the doing of it, we shall leave it to those that are to prosecute it, and to the Sheriff. We see that this Cause cannot be try'd this day, we desire we may have a speedy end of it; there have been many Days spent in it, and we that are of Counsel for the King do desire, that we may confer together, departing the Court for some time; and when we have conferred together, we will return to the Court again, and then we will propound to you what Course we do desire for the speedy Tryal of this Cause.

To this Motion the Judge assented, and Serjeant Whitfield and the rest of the Counsel went to consult together about it; and after a short stay, upon their return, Serj. Whitfield spake thus:

Serj. Whitfield. We that are Counsel for the King have consulted together with the Clerk of the Crown, and the Secretary; we have withdrawn ourselves, and perused several Precedents, and we do find by several Precedents, that whereas a peremptory Challenge shall be, it is in the power of the Court to order the Course of Tryal, and the Course is this: There goes a Writ to the Sheriff, that he shall distrain all them that make default, and that he shall amove those that are challenged by the Prisoner; and further, that he shall return so many more for the Tryal. This we conceive to be the constant Course of this Court; and in this case my Lord Macguire having challenged 23 of the 24, we are to distrain the other that made default, and to amove the 23 that he hath challenged of them, and have a Tales returnable to-morrow for a new Jury.

Serj. Roll. That was in Standish's Case and Friar's Case.

Judge. I know the Court may grant a Tales, but the matter is, whether it can be done so soon as to-morrow or no, if the Sheriff can do it to-morrow.

Serj. Whitfield. We do find this in the Precedent of Friar, that in 3 Hen. 7. the Jury did appear on Friday, and all those that did appear were challenged, and there was a Distringas returned the next Day, which was Saturday. It may be immediate.

Judge. Then make your Distringas against to-morrow morning, make out a Quadraginta Tales against to-morrow.

Mac. I desire I may not be so severely dealt with.

Judge. It hath been so oftentimes, and the Court doth proceed in these Cases de die in diem, from day to day; and there is no difficulty in the granting of it, but whether the Sheriff can return it so soon. If the King's Counsel will have it to-morrow, the other Businesses of the Court must be put off.

Hereupon the Prisoner was discharged, and a Rule granted to the Lieutenant of the Tower, to bring him again the next day.

On Tuesday, Febr. 11. the Lord Macguire was again brought to the King's-Bench Bar, where he made a Motion that his Plea of Peerage might be referred to another Court. To which it was answered;

Serj. Whitfield. We know not for what end this Motion is, and we know this, that this is no time for my Lord to make this Request; for you know how far we have proceeded: He hath been arraigned, and indicted of High Treason, and one Jury he challenged, the other is returned, so as now he is in the way of his Tryal; we are now to proceed with such Evidence as we have, to prosecute instantly. We do not desire this to be produced again, and if it be, we know not how it could be material one way or other.

After this, the Lord Macguire further urged the Court to the former purpose: to which it was answered, That he was then brought to his Tryal as a Prisoner upon the Indictment, and that both the Lords and Commons had approved of the Opinion of the Court therein.

Mac. Please you Sir, one word more: I desire to appeal to the Lords.

Serj. Whitfield. When one is come here, to appeal to the Lords, that was never known: now you have put yourself upon the Country.

Mac. Under favour, I conceive I may, to an higher Court.

Judge. It cannot be granted, the Lords approved it: if you would have gone to an higher Court before, you might have taken your Course; now the Jury is returned, and you are appointed to be try'd here.

After this, the Lord Macguire desired further to appeal; to which the Answer was:

Serj. Whitfield. Here lies no such Appeal here: you are out of the Ecclesiastical Court, there is no such Plea here; you are now upon the middle of your Tryal, we desire you may go on, you have challenged 23 of the Jury already.

Judge. We have no such Course in the Common Law; if a Man will appeal from me, I cannot let him appeal to any Man.

Upon this, these of the Jury following were named, which he challenged; viz. George Hanger Esq; Sir Michael Wharton, James Hawley Esq; George Smith Esq; Edmund Besley Esq; William Ewrsby Esq; Stephen Bourman Gent. George Weaver-Basset, J. Nicolls the younger, Henry Walker Gent. Randolph Nicoll, Andrew Brent. Upon his challenging of these, which being added to the rest, make 35 in all, the other Jury being about to be called, the Lord Macguire moved:

Mac. Under favour, I conceive, that my Lands being sequestred, those Men that have bought my Lands, should not pass upon my Tryal; and therefore I desire they may make answer to it upon Oath, whether any of them have adventured or no.

Serj. Whitfield. To desire that a whole Jury may be demanded such a Question upon their Oath, is that that hath not been known. If my Lord Macguire have cause now against any, he hath run out the Liberty which the Law gave him, to challenge 35 peremptorily. Now if he should challenge any more, he must make a particular Challenge to every particular Man that comes to be sworn, and he must have such a Challenge notwithstanding as is warrantable by Law; but this general Challenge is not warrantable by Law, and if it were particular, it were not warrantable neither.

Serj. Roll. If you will challenge any more, the Law does not debar you to shew cause.

Mac. I conceive, that any that have given Money for Ireland for my destruction, ought not to pass against me.

Serj. Whitfield. This is for the King, this is for no particular Person whatsoever.

Mac. I beseech you hear me in it.

Judge. You know this, that the King cannot grant it without the Consent of both Houses, and in this case it may be put to the Jury to try upon their Oath. Thus far I shall agree, that if any of this this Jury be to have any particular Benefit in Ireland, of Land or Goods by his Attainder, it is good; but if his Lands come to the King, and that the King is no way bound to give it any of them, it is no Challenge: look the Statute.

Mr. Pryn. Under favour, Mr. Juſtice Bacon, it doth not appear to the Court, that the Priſoner hath any Lands or Goods in Ireland; and therefore no ſuch Queſtion is to be demanded of the Jury.

Judge. You may make needleſs Diſputes upon it.

Then the Jury being accordingly required to anſwer upon Oath, whether they had adventured, or had any ſhare in Ireland for the Rebels Land; Macguire deſired the Queſtion might be, Whether they themſelves, their Children, or Brothers? But that would not be agreed unto, as being unreaſonable. Then the Jury following was ſworn: I. Carpenter, John Cooper, A. Cordall, Rich. Atkinſon, Joſias Hendall, William Greenwood, William Barnes, Robert Stiles, George Norfolk, Edw. Hudſon, John Wait, Eſah Risby. The Oath which they took, was this:

You ſhall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Connor Macguire Eſq; now Priſoner at the Bar, and a true Verdict give according to your Evidence.

The Jury being ſworn, Macguire moved that he might have a Jury of 24; to which it was anſwered;

Judge. There have been 40 named.

Mac. Under favour, I conceive, I ought to be try'd by 24; there were ſo many returned at firſt.

Judge. They returned 24; that is, becauſe if any of them did fail, and ſome may be challenged, then there might be twelve left.

Mac. Under favour, I conceive, there ſhould be 24 now left for my Tryal.

Judge. You are deceived in that. You challenged 23, and ſo there were 40 more added; now you have challenged 12 of this 40, and out of them there remains ſo many as will make up a Jury of 12.

Then the Court proceeded to his Tryal, and the Indictment againſt him was read. After which, the Court proceeded, ſaying: Gentlemen of the Jury, Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and to his Arraignment he hath pleaded Not Guilty, and thereupon put himſelf upon his Country; and your Charge is, to inquire whether he be guilty of the Indictments, or any of them: If you find him not guilty, you are to declare it; if guilty, then you are to give in Evidence againſt him.

M.N. Mr. Judge Bacon. You obſerve by the Record that hath been read to you, that the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted of ſeveral Treaſons, wherein it is found, That Connor Macguire, &c. as before in the Indictment. Now Gentlemen, you of the Jury, if it ſhall be proved to you, that the Priſoner at the Bar is guilty of all, or any of theſe Treaſons, then you are to give your Evidence.

Then theſe Witneſſes following were ſworn to give in Evidence againſt the Priſoner: The Lord Blaney, Lady Calfield, Sir Arthur Loftus, Sir John Temple, Sir William Stewart, Sir Francis Hamilton, Sir Edward Borlacey, Sir William Cole, Sir Charles Coot, Mrs. Wordrofe, John Carmicks, Walter Gubſon, M. Bunbury, Captain Michael Balfoure, Captain Berisford.

Sir William Cole's Teſtimony.

Serj. Whitfield. You know, Sir William Cole, a great many of their Names, which you have heard, that were Conſpirators with this Lord; what Religion were they of?

Sir W. Cole. They were all Papiſts.

Serj. Whitfield. Who were they?

Sir W. Cole. The Lord Macguire, Sir Philom O-Neale, Roger Moor, &c.

Serj. Whitfield. Sir Francis Hamilton, upon what occaſion was it, that the Conſpirators got an Order to view the Magazine?

Sir F. Hamilton. I was a Member of the Houſe of Commons there, and I remember very well, there came a Meſſage from the Houſe of Lords to the Houſe of Commons, to let them know, that there was ſome Plot for the blowing up of the Parliament-Houſe in Ireland; and they ſent a Meſſage, to deſire that they might ſearch under the Parliament-Houſe: and there was a Search made, and (as I remember) the Lord Macguire was one of the Committee from the Houſe of Lords made ſearch there; but what they found, I do not know. Afterwards they deſired that they might ſearch the Caſtle of Dublin, and other Magazines.

Counſel. What was the Cauſe.

Sir F. Hamilton. There was a Coachman of my Lord of Strafford's, that had uttered ſome big Words, (as was given out) That the Parliament-Houſe ſhould be blown up: but what was the ground, I am perſuaded in my Conſcience, it was to know where the Store and Ammunition lay, that they might know where to ſurprize it.

Sir William Steward's Teſtimony.

I was one of the Committee that was ſent by the Parliament, and by Order from the Houſe of Lords, to ſearch the Parliament-Houſe, and the Lord Macguire was one of the Lords: they made a very ſtrict Search, and then they inquired for the King's Magazine, and I believe my Lord Macguire now here was one of the Committee that went to ſearch for the Houſe of Lords, and he did ſearch very narrowly, and they were deſirous to know where the Store was.

The Lord Blaney's Teſtimony.

Counſel. Whether this Search were moved by the Lord Finghall, and what was the end of it?

Ld Blaney. So near as I can, I will give you the buſineſs; it is ſo long ago. This I remember, that there was one of the Lords Houſe, whether it were my Lord Finghall or my Lord Macary, moved it, I cannot certainly depoſe, but I am ſure it was one of them. The Occaſion was, one of the Earl of Strafford's Coachmen ſaid, he hoped to ſee ſome of the Lords blown up for it; it was about a Fortnight after the Earl of Strafford was beheaded here. Thereupon they got an Order for it, and ſo they went down, and they did not find the Powder, but they made as narrow a Search as ever any was. I aſked what the meaning was of this, for we had ſtrange Cenſures of it ourſelves. Says of them the Lord Clamorris, they are afraid of a Powder-Plot of the Proteſtants. I anſwered, that I had heard of a Powder-Plot of the Papiſts, but never of the Proteſtants in my Life. But if you ask the reaſon of it, it was to aſſure themſelves of their Strength, for we found by woful Experience afterwards it was their end. My Lord Borlace ſaid, Let them not be afraid, for upon my Honour there is no Powder below. It's a great Houſe, the Houſe of Commons ſit on one ſide, and the Lords on the other, and the Block-houſe in the middle.

Counſel.

Counſel. What Religion is my Lord Finghall and my Lord Clamorris of?

Ld Blaney. The Lord Finghall is a Papiſt, and Clamorris a peſtiferous Papiſt.

Serj. Whitfield. All Papiſts. We ſhall now read the Examination of the manner of his taking, and then his own Examination. The firſt we ſhall read, is this of Mr. Woodcock, that was Sheriff of Dublin; he was in Town, but he could not ſtay, but he was examined before this Court.

The Information of John Woodcock, the 27th of October 1644. taken upon Oath before J. Bacon.

THE ſaid Examinate depoſeth and ſaith, That he being one of the Sheriffs of the ſaid City of Dublin, in the Year 1641, having notice given him in the Night upon the 22d of October in the ſame Year, of ſome great Deſign intended, did by virtue of his Office walk up and down the City that Night; and coming to the Houſe of one Nevill, a Chirurgeon in Caſtle-ſtreet, he underſtood by the ſaid Nevill, that the Lord Macguire with ſome ten or twelve others were there: this Examinate told him, it was fit for his Gueſts to be in bed at that time of night; but the ſaid Nevill did bring this Examinate word, that the Lord Macguire and his Company were then going to bed. The ſaid Examinate departed, ſetting a Watch near his Houſe; by which Watch he was informed, that the ſaid Lord Macguire and the reſt were gone from the Houſe, and were at the Houſe of one Kerne a Taylor: whereupon he ſearched the ſaid Houſe, and there found ſome Hatchets with the Helves newly cut off cloſe to the Hatchets, five Petronels, five or ſix Swords, three or four ſmall Piſtols, five or ſix Skeines, with other Arms of the Lord Macguire's in an Houſe of Office in the ſaid Houſe; in another place divers Pole-Axes, and alſo behind a Hen-rooſt ſome great Weapons with ſharp Pikes of Iron in one end of them: the ſaid Kerne affirming, that he knew nothing of any of the Particulars before mentioned, nor how they came in his Houſe. The ſaid Examinate ſhewed all the ſaid Inſtruments unto the ſaid Lords Juſtices and Council of Ireland; and thereupon the ſaid Lords Juſtices and Council commanded Search to be made for the ſaid Lord Macguire. Upon which, the ſaid Examinate ſearching narrowly for him, at laſt found him in a Cock-loft, with a Cloke wrapt about him, ſtanding by a Bed, the Door lock'd upon him, there being no Key to be found; as alſo the Maſter of the Houſe flying away, and making an eſcape to the Enemy.

After this, the Lord Macguire's own Examination was read, taken the 26th of March 1642. (for as Sir John Temple declared to the Court, the Lord Macguire was then brought to the Council-Board, and they could get nothing out of him) whereupon he was ſent back to Priſon for that time.

The Examination of Connor Lord Macguire, Baron of Enniskillen, taken before us, Charles Lord Lambert, and Sir Robert Meredith Kt. Chancellor of his Majeſty's Court of Exchequer, the 26th Day of March, 1642. by direction of the Right Honourable the Lord Juſtices and Council.

WHO being examined, ſaith, That about the time when Mr. John Bellew came out of England with the Commiſſion for the Continuance of the preſent Parliament, Roger Moor, in the ſaid Moor's Chamber, in the Houſe of one Peter de Coſtres of this City, acquainted him this Examinate, That if the Iriſh would riſe, they might make their own Condition, for the regaining of their own Lands, and Freedom of their Religion. At which time the ſaid Moor alſo acquainted him this Examinate, That he had ſpoken with ſundry of Leinſter, who would be ready for that purpoſe: and withal told him this Examinate, That he was aſſured a good part of Conaught would do the like; and thereupon moved this Examinate to join likewiſe with them, with all he could make: unto which Motion, he this Examinate yielded. And the next day following, there was a Meeting in his the ſaid Moor's Chamber aforeſaid, where were Col. Mac-Bryan, Macmahone, Tirelagh O-Neal, Philip Mac-Hugh O Rely, this Examinate, and Roger Moor; where Diſcourſe was had on that Buſineſs, yet nothing concluded on, ſave that Roger Moor and the reſt ſhould go and prepare their Parties. And this Examinate further ſaith, That about May laſt he this Examinate, Roger Moor, Philip O-Rely, and Roger Macguire this Examinate's Brother, diſpatched a Prieſt, one Toole O-Coule, who lived in Leinſter, unto Owen O-Neale into Flanders, to acquaint him with the Buſineſs concerning the general Rebellion then in preparation; which ſaid Prieſt returned about a Month before the time appointed for execution thereof. And the Anſwer which the ſaid Prieſt brought from the ſaid Owen O-Neale, was, That he would (within fifteen days after the People were up) be with him, with his beſt Aſſiſtance and Arms. And it being demanded why the ſaid Owen ſhould bring Arms, conſidering that the Caſtle of Dublin was to be taken, with the Arms therein; this Examinate anſwered, That they ſo provided for Arms, that they might not want any, in caſe they could not take the ſaid Caſtle, whereof they doubted. And this Examinate acknowledgeth, That the Caſtle of Dublin was to have been ſurprized by himſelf, Capt. Bryan O-Neale, Capt. Con O-Neale, Capt. Macmahone, one Owen O-Rely, Roger Moor, Hugh Macmahone, Col. Plunket, and Capt. Fox; and likewiſe further acknowledgeth, That Hugh Mac-Phelim, Captain Con O-Neale, and Bryan O-Neale, brought from Owen O-Neale, out of Flanders, the very ſame Meſſage which the ſaid Prieſt brought. And this Examinate further ſaith, That he was told by Roger Moor, that a great Man was in the Plot, but he might not name him for the preſent. And at another time, and during the ſitting of the Parliament the laſt Summer, he this Examinate was informed by one John Barnwell a Franciſcan Fryar, then reſident in this City, That thoſe of the Pale were alſo privy unto the Plot, (meaning the preſent Rebellion.) And laſtly ſaith, That of thoſe Perſons who came to attend him this Examinate for the Surprize of the ſaid Caſtle of Dublin, only Cohonogh Macguire was privy unto the Buſineſs in hand; and that the laſt Meeting (when the Day appointed for execution thereof was reſolved on) was at Logh-Roſſe, where were preſent only Ever Macmahone, Vicar-General of the Dioceſs of Clogher; Thomas Mac-Kearnan, a Fryar of Dundalk; Sir Phelim O-Neale, Roger Moor, and Bryan O-Neale.

Concordat cum Originali, Ex. per Parl. Harris. Charles Lambert, Robert Meredith.

This being read, and opened unto the Jury, being the L. Macguire's free and voluntary Confeſſion, which he afterwards acknowledged ſince his coming to the Tower, viz.

Memo-

Memorandum, That this within-written being ſhewed and read unto the within-named Lord Macguire, and himſelf having peruſed the ſame, his Lordſhip did acknowledge the ſame to be true in all things, ſaving that he doth not now acknowledge that Barnard told him, That thoſe of the Pale were privy to the Plot; neither doth acknowledge, that Cohonagh Macguire was privy to the Plot before his coming to Dublin.

This Examination and Acknowledgment was made and taken the 22*d Day of* June, 1642. Anno Regni Caroli Regis decimo octavo, before us, John Bramſton, Thomas Mallet.

In the Preſence of John Conyers, William Ayloffe, Nathaniel Finch.

June 24. 1642. The Examination of Connor Lord Macguire, Baron of Enniskillen, taken before Sir John Bramſtone Knight, Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench.

WHO ſaith, That he is of the Age of 26 Years and upwards, and that he was born in the County of Fermanagh in Ireland; and ſaith, That his Examination taken at Dublin the 26th Day of March, 1642. before Charles Lord Lambert, and Sir Robert Meredith, with his Acknowledgment thereof the 22d of June, before Judge Bramſtone and Juſtice Mallet, is true, in ſuch manner as in the ſaid Examination and Acknowledgement is expreſſed. Connor Macguire.

The Examination of Cornelius Macguire, Lord Baron of Enniskillen in Ireland, taken before Iſaac Pennington Eſquire, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, and Laurence Whitaker Eſquire, two of his Majeſty's Juſtices of the Peace for the County of Middleſex, the firſt Day of October, 1644.

HE denieth the receiving of any Letters or Meſſages out of England before the Rebellion, nor did he ever hear of any. He ſaith, he was but a mean Inſtrument in the Deſign in Ireland; he confeſſeth he intended to ſeize upon the Caſtle of Dublin, and the Magazine there, and keep it till they had Redreſs of ſome Grievances, which they purpoſed to propound to the Parliament there; one whereof was, to have a Toleration of the Roman Catholick Religion. He confeſſeth, that he came accidentally to Philip O-Rely's Houſe, as he came up to Dublin; and, as he remembreth, Macmahone was then there: and that his Intention of coming up to Dublin, was to put the aforeſaid Deſign in execution, and that then and there they had ſpeech about that Deſign; but he remembreth not the Particulars: which Deſign was to be put in execution the 23d Day of October in that Year; and that he was taken there that very Day, being Saturday, upon Search made for him, carried before the Lords Juſtices, examined, committed, and ſent over into England.

He ſaith further, That he made his eſcape out of the Tower of London upon Sunday the 18th of Auguſt laſt, about four of the Clock in the Morning. Laurence Whitaker, Iſaac Pennington.

John Carmick's Teſtimony.

THAT upon the 21ſt of October 1641. Fergus O-Howen, one of the Followers of Brian Macguire Eſquire, came to his Chamber in the Caſtle of Enniskillen; and after he endeavoured to bind him to keep ſecret a Matter of great Concernment, which Fergus ſaid he had to diſcloſe, and particularly to conceal it from Sir William Cole, and all other Engliſhmen; this Examinate told him, He would be ſecret ſo far as it went with his Allegiance and Conſcience. He diſcovered unto the ſaid Examinate, That the L. Macguire and Hugh Oge Macmahone, accompanied with ſeveral Iriſhmen of the Counties of Fermanagh and Monaghan, did take their journies out of the ſaid Counties upon the 19th and 20th Days of October 1641, to the City of Dublin, with Reſolution and Intent to murder and kill his Highneſs's Lords Juſtices, and Council of the Kingdom of Ireland, and the reſt of the Proteſtants there; and alſo to poſſeſs themſelves of the City of Dublin, and to put all the Proteſtants there likewiſe to the Sword: and that to that effect there were other great Men, and others of the Papiſts of that Kingdom to repair unto, and meet them in Dublin on Saturday, the 23d of Octob. 1641. or thereabouts. And that all the Caſtles, Forts, Sea-Ports and Holds that were in the Poſſeſſion of the Proteſtants in the ſeveral Counties and Provinces in the Kingdom of Ireland, were then alſo deſigned and reſolved to be ſurprized and taken by the Iriſh Papiſts, and the Proteſtants in every of thoſe Caſtles, Forts, Sea-Ports and Holds, to be then alſo put all to the Sword by the Iriſh Papiſts in Ireland, in their own ſeveral Parts and Limits, by Men thereunto chiefly and particularly appointed by the Contrivers thereof: and that eſpecially the Town and Caſtle of Enniskillen, with the reſt, would be taken, and all the Proteſtants in it put to the Sword; and therefore adviſed the Examinate to get himſelf and Goods out of the Town: Whereat the Examinate ſmiling, Fergus bid him not to ſlight it, for he could aſſure thoſe things would come to paſs in ſeven Days, or elſe he would be bound to loſe his Head. Whereupon the ſaid Fergus O Howen departed, and the Examinate acquainting Sir William Cole with it, there came one Flartagh Mac-Hugh, a Gentleman and Freeholder of that County, and affirms to the ſame effect to Sir William Cole, that the Plot for ſurprizing the City and Caſtle of Dublin, the Caſtle of Enniskillen, and all the Caſtles and Strengths in Ireland, was to be put in full execution by the Papiſts, Octob. 22. and 23. 1641. throughout the ſaid Kingdom; and that Brian Mac-Conaght Macguire, Eſq; did ſend him the ſaid Flartagh Mac-Hugh to give notice and warning thereof to the ſaid Sir William Cole, whom he earneſtly deſired to be upon his Guard upon Friday the 22d and Saturday the 23d of October; for the L. Macguire was gone with Macmahone and others that Week with purpoſe to poſſeſs themſelves of the Caſtle and City of Dublin: And the L. Macguire had written his Letters to Con O-Bourke, Owen O-Roreicke, Martagh Oge O-Fantagon, and others, to go on with that Plot in thoſe Parts; and had appointed his Brother Rori Macguire (in his abſence) to command the Iriſh Papiſts of the County of Fermanagh, for the ſurprizing of the Caſtles and Houſes of the Proteſtants. Of all which Sir William advertiſed the Lords Juſtices and Council of Ireland the ſame Day. And this Examinate ſaith, That Captain Mac-Hugh, ſeven or eight Days before the Rebellion brake forth, declared, That the L. Macguire poſted Letters, and rode up and down to divers Gentlemen and others of that County, to be very active in the buſineſs: That it was averred upon the Oaths of Flartagh Mac-Hugh,

John Oge Mac-Hugh, and Terlagh Oge Mac-Hugh, before the ſaid Sir William Cole, That 150 Men were appointed to ſurprize the Caſtle of Enniskillen, under the Leading of Don Macguire and Rori Macguire, who were to murder the ſaid Sir William Cole, and his Wife, Children and Servants, and throw them over the Wall into the River, and then to do the like unto the Proteſtants in the Town and Corporation of Enniskillen: For which Service they were not only to have the Spoil and Riches of the ſaid Caſtle and Town, but to have alſo the Barony of Clanawley granted and confirmed in Fee to them and their Heirs, from the ſaid Lord Macguire and his Heirs. The Examinate then alſo produced a Letter written in Iriſh, from the Lord Macguire, to his Couſin Brian Macguire, wherein taking notice that he was abundantly inclined to the Engliſh, which did very much trouble him; and therefore deſired him to baniſh ſuch Thoughts out of his mind, and not to purſue thoſe Reſolutions which in the end might be his own Deſtruction, as he thought it would be to all thoſe that did not appear.

Preſently after, upon the 29th of October, one Captain Rori Macguire took upon him the managing of all Buſineſſes in his abſence; he fortifies firſt the Caſtle-Haſen, the Houſe wherein he dwelt himſelf, he took in the Caſtle of one Edward Aldrith, Eſq; he put out all the Engliſh there; he went to the Town, burnt that, but kill'd none of the Men; went thence to another Place, and hanged one Eleazar M. one that was Clerk of the Peace of the County; and from thence he went to Newton, four Miles off from it, took in the Town, ſtrip'd and diſarmed all the Proteſtants that were in the Church, the next Day after march'd away, and kill'd and deſtroyed moſt of the Engliſh in thoſe Parts; murder'd Arthur Champion, Eſq; and many more. Two and Twenty Caſtles were ſeized upon, and the Church of Monah, with 18 Proteſtants burnt in it: 764 Proteſtants were deſtroyed in that County; and I did hear there was about 152000, that they had deſtroyed in that Province of Ulſter, in the firſt four Months of the Rebellion.

John Carmick.

Then Sir William Cole (being preſent in Court) gave in his Evidence, much to the ſame effect as in Carmick's Teſtimony.

Serj. W. We deſire to ſhorten, we have a great many Witneſſes; we ſhall go upon theſe Particulars: 1. Captain O-Neale's landing in Ireland, and what he brought with him. 2. Guilo and Crocan. Laſtly, How long beſieged, and how many murdered.

Then Sir William Steward gave in Teſtimony to this effect:

That Con Owen O-Neale landed in July the ſame Year the Rebellion began, brought many Commanders, much Arms and Ammunition; many of his Commanders, nine of the chief of them, were taken Priſoners at one Battle.

Serj. W. It is his own Confeſſion, that he ſent a Prieſt over to fetch Arms to come into Ireland.

[Then the Lady Calfield was deſired to declare her Knowledge concerning the taking of Charlemont-Caſtle.]

Lady Calfield. The 23d of October 1641. Sir Phelim O-Neale and others came into the Caſtle, they ſeized upon all, murdered his Servants; and thoſe that were alive, they bound them, and put them in Priſon; and at that time Sir Phelim O-Neale himſelf, and other of his Companions, told her, That Dublin-Caſtle and City, and moſt other Forts of Ireland were ſurprized by their Confederates the Papiſts; and that he was ſorry for his Couſin the Lord Macguire, and that he was afraid he was taken.

Serj. W. What was done with my Lord Calfield?

Lady Calfield. He was murdered; he beg'd for his Life, and they durſt not but do it.

Serj. W. When Sir Phelim O-Neale had taken my Lord Calfield, then they got this Lady to write to the Lords Juſtices, that my Lord Macguire might be exchanged for her Son, but that would not be; and thereupon they murdered my Lord Calfield, Francis Davis, and others.

Mrs. Mary Wordrofe's Teſtimony.

That he came on Friday Night about 10 or 11 a clock to break into the Caſtle; I hearing the noiſe, asked what was the matter? I went to call up ſome of our Gentlemen; when I came in again, they had taken ſome of our Gentlemen and bound them.

She alſo teſtified the murdering of the Lord Calfield, Francis Davis and others; and the former Words concerning the Lord Macguire.

Serj. W. Theſe two Witneſſes prove that of Charlemont, how far the Rebels owned the Lord Macguire, as to endeavour his Exchange. We ſhall now come to the other Caſtles, how long they beſieged them, and who was murdered.

Walter Gubſon's Teſtimony.

They beſieged it a quarter of a Year before they took it; divers of the chief Conſpirators, and Powell and Coſens took the Caſtle by force in an hoſtile manner.

Sir Francis Hamilton's Teſtimony.

Philip O-Rely came to the Caſtle, to Guilo and Crogan Caſtles, and they lay before it a quarter of a Year with 2000 or 3000 Men, ſometimes 1500, but never leſs.

Sir Charles Coote's Teſtimony concerning the Generality of the Rebellion.

Sir Phelim O-Neale and Roger Moore were the Actors in the Maſſacres, and by publick Directions of ſome in place, and of the Titulary Biſhops, for the ſending of an exact Account of what Perſons were murdered throughout all Ulſter, a fourth Part of the Kingdom of Ireland, to the Pariſh-Prieſts in every Pariſh; and they ſent in a particular Account of it; and the Account was an Hundred Four Thouſand Seven Hundred in one Province, in the firſt three Months of the Rebellion.

Serj. W. What ſay you concerning the general Council and the Pope's Bull?

Sir Charles Coote. The Supreme Council, they took up a new Form of Government upon them of their own; and by this Authority it was granted to the Lady Macguire, that ſhe ſhould have the Rent of ſuch Lands in Recompence of the Loſs that he was at in their Cauſes. They have made ſeveral Judges of their own Courts: They print, they coin, they do all in their own Names.

The Copy of the Pope's Bull.

Ad futuram Rei Memoriam.

Vrbanus Octavus, &c.

HAving taken into our ſerious Conſideration the great Zeal of the Iriſh towards the propagating of the Catholick Faith, and the Piety of the the Catholick Warriors in the ſeveral Armies of that Kingdom (which was for that ſingular Fervency in the true Worſhip of God, and notable Care had formerly in the like Caſe, by the Inhabitants thereof, for the Maintenance and Preſervation of the ſame Orthodox Faith, called of old, the Land of Saints;) and having got certain Notice how, in Imitation of their godly and worthy Anceſtors, they endeavour by force of Arms to deliver their thralled Nation from the Oppreſſions and grievous Injuries of the Hereticks, wherewith this long time it hath been afflicted, and heavily burdened, and gallantly do in them what lieth to extirpate, and totally root out thoſe Workers of Iniquity, who in the Kingdom of Ireland had infected, and always ſtriving to infect the Maſs of Catholick Purity with the peſtiferous Leven of their heretical Contagion: We therefore being willing to cheriſh them with the Gifts of thoſe ſpiritual Graces, whereof by God we are ordained the only Diſpoſers on Earth, by the Mercy of the ſame Almighty God, truſting in the Authority of the bleſſed Apoſtles Peter and Paul; and by virtue of that Power of binding and looſing of Souls, which God was pleaſed (without our deſerving) to confer upon us; to all and every one of the faithful Chriſtians in the foreſaid Kingdom of Ireland now, and for the time militating againſt the Hereticks, and other Enemies of the Catholick Faith, they being truly and ſincerely penitent, after Confeſſion, and the ſpiritual refreſhing of themſelves with the ſacred Communion of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, do grant a full and plenary Indulgence, and abſolute Remiſſion for all their Sins, and ſuch as in the holy Time of Jubilee is uſual to be granted to thoſe that devoutly viſit a certain Number of privileged Churches, within and without the Walls of our City of Rome: by the Tenor of which preſent Letters, for once only and no more, we freely beſtow the Favour of this Abſolution upon all and every one of them; and withal, deſiring heartily all the Faithful in Chriſt, now in Arms as aforeſaid, to be Partakers of this moſt precious Treaſure.

To all and every one of theſe foreſaid faithful Chriſtians, we grant Licence, and give Power to chuſe into themſelves, for this effect, any fit Confeſſor, whether a Secular Prieſt, or a Regular of ſome Order; as likewiſe any other ſelected Perſon approved of by the Ordinary of the Place: who, after a diligent hearing of their Confeſſions, ſhall have Power to liberate and abſolve them from Excommunication, Suſpenſion, and all other Eccleſiaſtical Sentences and Cenſures by whomſoever, or for what Cauſe ſoever pronounced, or inflicted upon them; as alſo from all Sins, Treſpaſſes, Tranſgreſſions, Crimes and Delinquencies, how heinous and atrocious ſoever they be, not omitting thoſe very Enormities in the moſt peculiar Caſes, which by any whatſoever former Conſtitutions of ours, or of our predeceſſor Popes (than which we will have theſe to be no leſs valued in every Point) were deſigned to be reſerved to the Ordinary, or to the Apoſtolick See: from all which the Confeſſor ſhall hereby have Power granted him to abſolve the foreſaid Catholicks at the Bar of Conſcience, and in that Senſe only. And furthermore, we give them power to exchange what Vow or Vows ſoever they were formerly aſtricted to (thoſe of Religion and Chaſtity excepted) into any other pious and good Work or Works, impoſed or to be impoſed on them, and every one of them to perform in all the aforeſaid Caſes, by a wholeſom Penance, according to the Mind and Will of the Confeſſor.

Therefore, by the Tenor of theſe preſent Letters, and by the Virtue of that holy ſtrict Obedience, wherein all Chriſtians are bound unto us, we charge and command all and every one of the Reverend Brethren, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Eccleſiaſtical Prelates, and whatſoever Ordinaries of Places now reſiding in Ireland, together with all Vicars, Subſtitutes and Officials under them; or theſe failing, we command all ſuch to whom in thoſe Places the Care of Souls is incumbent; that as ſoon as they ſhall have received the Copies of theſe our Letters, they ſhall forthwith, without any Stop or Delay, publiſh them, and cauſe them to be publiſhed throughout all their Churches, Dioceſſes, Provinces, Countries, Cities, Towns, Lands, Villages, and Places whatſoever.

Nevertheleſs, we do not intend by theſe preſent Letters, where any publick or ſecret Irregularity is made known, or any Defection, Apoſtacy, Incapacity or Inability in any manner of way contracted, to diſpenſe therewith, or grant to any other any Power or Faculty of Diſpenſation, Rehabilitation, or reſtoring the Delinquent to his former Condition, though but at the Bar of Conſcience: Neither can nor ſhould theſe our preſent Letters avail or be ſteadable to thoſe, who by us and the Apoſtolick See, or by any Prelate or Eccleſiaſtick Judge, have been excommunicated, ſuſpended, interdicted, or declared, and publickly denounced to have juſtly incurred the Sentences and Cenſures of the Church, till firſt they have ſatisfied and agreed with the Parties therein concerned, notwithſtanding all other Conſtitutions and Apoſtolical Ordinations; whereby, nevertheleſs, the Faculty of Abſolution in theſe, as well as other expreſſed Caſes, is ſo reſerved to his Holineſs the Pope for the time being, that no kind of Jubilee, nor Power of granting ſuch Indulgences can in any ſort avail, unleſs expreſs mention be made of the Fault or Faults in particular, and the whole Tenor of them fully deduced by an individual Relation from word to word, and not by general Clauſes importing the ſame thing. This, or ſome other requiſite Form of the like nature being carefully obſerved, we in that caſe eſpecially, expreſly and namely, by the effect of theſe Preſents, do totally aboliſh and remit them all and every one of them their Offences, notwithſtanding any thing to the contrary.

Now that theſe principal Letters of ours, which cannot be conveniently brought to every Place, may the ſooner come to the notice of all, our Will and Pleaſure is, That any whatſoever Copies or Tranſumpts, whether written or printed, that are ſubſcribed by the Hand of a Publick Notary, and which have the Seal of ſome eminent Perſon in Eccleſiaſtical Dignity affixed thereunto, be of the ſame Force, Power and Authority, and have the like Credit in every reſpect given unto them, as would be to theſe our principal Letters if they were ſhewn and exhibited.

Dated at Rome in the Vatican, or St. Peter's Palace, the 25th of May 1643. and in the twentieth Year of our Pontificat.

M. A. Maraldus.

Serj. Whitfield. We have troubled you with a long Relation of the Actions of the Confederates with the Lord Macguire, though not done in his own Perſon, and his own particular Act; but for this that was done by the Generality, I heard my Lord ſay at the Bar, What's that to me? Yes, my Lord, this is to you; you were one of the Conſpirators in the firſt Plot, and you contrived the buſineſs. And that had been Treaſon alone, to ſend the Prieſt to fetch Owen O-Neale into Ireland with Arms and Soldiers: but you contrived this, and conſpired it, and you are as guilty in Law, in all theſe cruel Murders and Burnings in every Place: For the Law of England is, in Treaſon you are all Principals and no Acceſſaries. Your Son was there, your Lady is rewarded; for the ſupreme Council they have taken care of you: Why! becauſe you were one of the firſt Complotters of it; and this will light upon you, and fall very heavy. And for your Exchange, it was propounded for the Lord Calfield; but when they could not have that agreed upon, then what becomes of the poor Lord Calfield? murdered too! And you ſee what Incouragement you have from the Complotters, and from the Devil too; for they were both together in it. And now you have ſeen the Indictment fully made good.

Then the Lord Macguire proceeded to make his Defence, wherein he firſt of all denied his Examination, (although teſtified, as before, by ſo many credible Witneſſes) and ſaid, That he knew no ſuch Examination.

That at the time of his Apprehenſion at Dublin, he came about his own particular Occaſions, as his Eſtate was in Danger, if he did not follow it; That becauſe he was found about the City, he was therefore apprehended; That his Lodging was not within the City, but he lodged without the City; That he did lodge at Mr. Nevil's Houſe formerly, but not at this time; That for ſome of the Places mentioned, where he ſhould be about the Conſpiracy, he had not been there a Year before, he was certain of it. For the Number of Proteſtants that were mentioned to be ſlain, he ſaid he did not think there were ſo many Proteſtants in the whole Kingdom; That he was continually either at his own Houſe, or at Dublin, and knew nothing of the Plot, but by Hear-ſay.

Judge. You confeſs in your Examination, when the Day was for the Riſing, that you were in the Conſpiracy, and appointed for the taking of Dublin-Caſtle; and that you were taken when you came about it: alſo you rode about it, and provided Arms.

Mac. I was in the Houſe in the Cock-loft where I was taken, I did not know where any Army was.

Serj. Whitfield. My Lord Macguire does forget himſelf, what he acknowledges under his own Hand.

Then the Examination being ſhewed him, he ſaid, There's my Name, but not my Hand.

Judge. I am ſorry to hear it; I did rather expect that you ſhould have acknowledged it: Here are two able Witneſſes that can teſtify it againſt you; your denying your own Hand, which is ſo manifeſtly proved, will be a great Diſcredit to what you ſay: You acknowledged it at two ſeveral Times.

Mac. What did I acknowledge?

Judge. You ſay that you came to Dublin to ſettle your Eſtate: By your own Examination you acknowledge, That the Caſtle of Dublin was to be ſurprized by your ſelf.

Judge. It is now time we ſhould draw to the Jury: You hear my Lord Bramſton and my Brother Finch here juſtify it to you.

Then my L. Macguire's Examination was ſhewed to my L. Blaney, being preſent in Court, demanding whether he thought it to be Macguire's Hand, or no?

Lord Blaney. It is my Lord's own Hand, he hath written to me many Letters.

Mac. I don't think I have written many Letters to your Lordſhip.

Judge. Gentlemen of the Jury, you may go to the buſineſs; if there were nothing but that you ſee in this Caſe, but what is in the Examination, if you believe it to be his; his Confeſſion does acknowledge it: You hear this by the Teſtimony of my Lord Bramſton and my Brother Finch expreſly, that were preſent when he did acknowledge it, and ſet his Hand to it; and yet you ſee, though it is here proved by my Lord Blaney, he denies it. If you find this to be true, here is Teaſon enough, and too much too; for he does here confeſs, That Roger Moore did acquaint him, That if the Iriſh did riſe, they might make their own Conditions for regaining their Lands: And he acquainted him, That he had ſpoken with ſundry in Leinſter, that would be ready for that purpoſe; and that a great part of Conaught would do the like: and then moved him (this Lord) the Priſoner at the Bar, to join likewiſe with him, which he did; ſo then was the Plot. The next Day they met; he goes to Moore's Chamber again, where Col. Mac-Brian, Mac-Mahone and others had Diſcourſe again about it: Then he ſays, That they did ſend over to Owen O-Neale, to acquaint him concerning the general Rebellion in Ireland, then in preparation. He confeſſes expreſly, That being demanded why the ſaid Owen ſhould bring over Arms, ſeeing the Caſtle of Dublin was to be ſurprized? he anſwered, That they ſo provided Arms, that they might not want any thing, if they ſhould not take it, whereof they doubted. And then you have him acknowledging, That the Caſtle of Dublin was to be ſurprized by himſelf, and Captain Brian O-Neale, and others. Theſe Words ſhew here expreſly, That the Day whereon the Execution was appointed, by the L. Macguire's own Confeſſion, he was come to Dublin for the ſurprize of the Caſtle. So that it is apparent, that he was about this Plot expreſly. If this be true, That you did conſpire to make War or Rebellion within that Kingdom, though you were taken your ſelf before it was executed, yet it was your own Conſpiracy: And beſides, endeavouring after that to bring it to Perfection, by ſending over for Arms; all theſe do diſcover your own Intention to execute it.

Mac. I confeſs it not, I refer my ſelf to the Jury.

Judge. Gentlemen, you are to know, That to conſpire to raiſe a War, if any of that Conſpiracy do act it, as you ſee here Sir Phelim O-Neale did, if you obſerve the Teſtimony of my Lady Calfield, he came and ſurprized the Caſtle of Charlemont, and then it was given out, That my Lord Macguire had taken Dublin; ſo that though it did not take effect, that which is done by any, is Teſtimony enough.

Go together and conſider of it.

Upon this the Jury went together, and ſtaying a ſhort ſpace, returned their Verdict, which was, That they found him guilty of all the Treaſons according to the Indictment.

Clerk. Connor Macguire, alias Cornelius Macguire, thou haſt been indicted for ſeveral High Treaſons, and thou haſt been arraigned. Upon the Arraignment thou haſt pleaded, Not Guilty; and for thy Tryal haſt put thy ſelf upon the Country, which Country have have found thee guilty, according to the Indictment; therefore prepare thy ſelf to receive the Sentence.

Macg. I deſire to know by what Law?

Judge. The Law is well enough known: That is a Treaſon within the Statute without doubt.

Macg. I was not tried by my Peers.

Judge. This is a general Exception, formerly annexed in your Plea: If you can ſhew ſome particular Cauſe alſo, you ſhall be heard.

Macg. I deſire Counſel to adviſe me.

Judge. When you did put in a Plea therein, you had Counſel to adviſe you in your Plea, and to argue it: Now your Time is paſt for Counſel; you muſt have none aſſigned to pick Holes in the Indictment.

Macg. I deſire the Court would conſider of it before they proceed to Sentence.

Judge. You offer nothing to the Court that is of any difficulty: You had Counſel whether you ſhould be tried by your Peers, or the Jury here; which Jury are to try any Man under a Nobleman in this Kingdom.

Macg. I deſire to know under what Seal you thus proceed againſt me; for I think you ſit here by the new Seal.

Judge. What Seal do you mean? I ſit here by virtue of the old, by order of Parliament.

Macg. Under favour, I conceive that the Ordinance of Parliament for the new Seal, makes all done by the old Seal to be void.

Judge. Here is nothing done but by good Authority, and the Parliament's Approbation.

Macg. I conceive the Ordinance for the new Seal cuts off all Proceedings of the old.

Judge. My Authority is not cut off: I was made by the old Seal, before there was any new Seal, and ſo I am continued by the Parliament; and the Parliament did take notice that I have been allowed to ſit. Beſides this, there is nothing done in this Court by the new Seal: The Sheriffs are here by a Charter, and that comes in from Year to Year; and there is no Seal in order of Execution.

Judge. Well, if you have nothing to ſay for your ſelf, I am to pronounce Sentence, as I am a Miniſter of Juſtice. You have been indicted here for ſeveral Treaſons contained in your Indictment, as was here of late read unto you; and you have had a fair Proceeding, and very deliberately: For your Indictment came in about Alhallowmas laſt, three Weeks or a Month before the end of the laſt Term, three Weeks at leaſt. You then made a Queſtion, Whether you ought to be tried by your Peers in Ireland, or a Jury here? The Court did ſo far deliberate in it, as to allow you Counſel to plead with the beſt Advantage you could: And afterwards, this Term, there hath been two Arguments at the Bar on each ſide; where hath been ſaid as much for you as can be. The Court over-ruled that, and ſo you are tried by a Jury; and you had the Liberty to challenge them, and had all the Advantages that the Law will afford, and take all the Exceptions you could. Truly, for my part, I ſee that there is not any one of them for me to ſway the Judgment: The Treaſon and the Offences that you are charged withal are very heinous, your Crimes very impious; great Deſtruction hath followed upon your Plot, which the Jury have found you guilty of. What a mighty cruel War and great Devaſtation in that Kingdom? Moſt horrid to ſpeak or rehearſe! It is fitter for you now to bethink your ſelf what your Offences are, and prepare your ſelf for Death, rather than ſeek to mask or put colours upon thoſe Things which are ſo manifeſtly proved to all the World. And now you are found guilty; and therefore there is no Contradiction or Gain-ſaying will avail you: You ought to repent, and pray to God to forgive that Offence whereof you are guilty. The Judgment that I am by the Law to pronounce againſt you, is this: Connor Macguire Eſq; you being found guilty of the Treaſons whereof you are indicted, your Judgment is, That you ſhall be carried from hence to the Place from whence you came, that is, the Tower, and from thence to Tyburn, the Place of Execution; and there you ſhall be hanged by the Neck, and cut down alive, your Bowels taken out, and burnt before your Face, your Head to be cut off, your Body to be divided into four Quarters, and the Head of your Body to be ſet up and diſpoſed of as the State ſhall appoint. And the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

After Judgment pronounced, the King's Counſel demanded of him whether he would have any Miniſters come to him, to prepare him for his end, and to adviſe him for the good of his Soul.

Macg. I deſire none of them: But I deſire I may be ſent Priſoner to Newgate.

Counſel. His Reaſon is, Becauſe there are ſome Popiſh Prieſts there.

Judge. That cannot be: Your Judgment is to return to the Tower; where you may have Miniſters (if you pleaſe) to return to adviſe you for your Soul.

Macg. I deſire you that ſome Gentlemen of my own Religion may have Acceſs to me, to confer with me; and ſome who are my Fellow-Priſoners in the Tower, to ſpeak with me in my Keeper's Preſence.

Judge. You muſt name ſomebody in particular.

Macg. I deſire to confer with Mr. Walter Mountague. [Belike he knew him to be a Popiſh Prieſt or Jeſuit.]

Judge. You muſt prepare your ſelf to die againſt Saturday next.

Macg. I deſire a Fortnight's Time to prepare my ſelf.

Judge. That is too long a Space, and I cannot grant it; but you ſhall have convenient Time.

Macg. I deſire you that I may have three Days notice at leaſt, to prepare my ſelf.

Judge. You ſhall have three Days warning; but however delay no Time to prepare your ſelf.

Macg. I deſire my Execution may be altered, and not according to the Judgment; and that I may not be hanged, and quartered.

Judge. This lies not in my power to grant: But here are ſome Members of the Houſe of Commons in Court, and you were beſt addreſs your ſelf to them, that they may acquaint the Houſe with your Deſires.

Macg. I ſhall deſire the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, ſo many as are here, to move the Houſe in my behalf, that I may have a Fortnight's Time to prepare my ſelf, and that the Manner of my Execution may be changed.

Sir John Clotworthy. My Lord, I have been your School-Fellow heretofore, and have found ſome Ingenuity in you; and I have ſeen ſome Letters of yours, importing ſome Remorſe of Conſcience in you for this Fact; and I ſhould be glad to diſcern the like Ingenuity in you ſtill: And ſhall move the Houſe that you may have ſome Miniſters appointed to come to you; and likewiſe acquaint them with your other Deſires.

Then the Priſoner departing from the Bar, Mr. Pryn adviſing him to confer with ſome godly Miniſters ſters for the Good and Comfort of his Soul; he anſwered, That he would have none at all, unleſs he might have ſome Romiſh Prieſts of his own Religion.

To which Mr. Pryn replied, My Lord, theſe Romiſh Prieſts are the chief Inſtruments who have adviſed you to plot and perpetrate thoſe execrable Treaſons for which you are now condemned, and have brought upon you that ſhameful Judgment of a Traytor, the Execution whereof you even now ſo earneſtly deprecated. Since then they have proved ſuch evil deſtructive Counſellors to you in your Life, you have great Reaſon to diſclaim them with their bloody Religion, and to ſeek out better Adviſers for you at your Death, leſt you eternally loſe your Soul as well as your Life, for the Blood of thoſe many thouſand Innocents which have been ſhed by your means. To which he, pauſing a little, anſwered, That he was reſolved in his Way. Whereupon another Lawyer ſaid, My Lord, you were beſt to hear both ſides. To which he anſwered, in an obſtinate manner, I am ſettled on one ſide already, and therefore I deſire not to confer with any other. And ſo departed thro' the Hall towards the Tower, the People crowding and running about to behold his Perſon.

After the Sentence pronounced againſt the Lord Macguire, as before ſaid, he petitioned the Parliament as followeth:

To the Right Honourable the Commons now aſſembled in Parliament, the humble Petition of the Lord Macguire;

Humbly ſheweth,

THAT your Petitioner ſtands condemned for his Life, and adjudged to be drawn, hanged, and quartered: The Performance whereof (he humbly conceives) in ſome more favourable manner, will be ſatisfactory to Juſtice. And foraſmuch as your Petitioner hath hitherto enjoyed the Degree and Dignity of a Lord, which he humbly conceives your Lordſhips are well acquainted with;

In tender Conſideration whereof, he deſireth that your Honours will graciouſly be pleaſed in Mercy to mitigate the Rigour of his Sentence, and turn it to that Degree which moſt befits the Denomination he hath: And as he hath been looked on by the Eye of Juſtice in his Condemnation, ſo in this Particular he may be pitied, and have Mercy. And he ſhall ever pray, &c.

Cornelius Macguire.

This Petition was rejected by the Parliament; and the Lord Macguire hanged, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn, on Thurſday, Feb. 20. according to the Sentence of the Court.

King Charles his Tryal; begun Saturday, January 20. and ended on Saturday, January 27. 1648. Licenſed by Gilbert Mabbot.

ON Saturday, being the 20th Day of January, 1648. the Lord Preſident of the High Court of Juſtice, with near fourſcore of the Members of the ſaid Court, having ſixteen Gentlemen with Partizans, and a Sword, and a Mace, with their and other Officers of the ſaid Court, marching before them, came to the Place ordered to be prepared for their ſitting at the Weſt-end of the great Hall at Weſtminſter; where the Lord Preſident in a Crimſon-Velvet Chair, fixed in the midſt of the Court, placed himſelf, having a Desk with a Crimſon-Velvet Cuſhion before him; the reſt of the Members placing themſelves on each ſide of him upon ſeveral Seats, or Benches, prepared and hung with Scarlet for that purpoſe; and the Partizans dividing themſelves on each ſide of the Court before them.

The Court being thus ſat, and Silence made, the great Gate of the ſaid Hall was ſet open, to the end that all Perſons, without Exception, deſirous to ſee or hear, might come into it; upon which the Hall was preſently filled, and Silence again ordered.

This done, Colonel Thomlinſon, who had the Charge of the Priſoner, was commanded to bring him to the Court; who within a quarter of an hour's ſpace brought him, attended with about twenty Officers with Partizans, marching before him, there being other Gentlemen, to whoſe Care and Cuſtody he was likewiſe committed, marching in his Rear.

Being thus brought up within the Face of the Court, the Serjeant at Arms, with his Mace, receives and conducts him ſtrait to the Bar, having a Crimſon-Velvet Chair ſet before him. After a ſtern looking upon the Court, and the People in the Galleries on each ſide of him, he places himſelf, not at all moving his Hat, or otherwiſe ſhewing the leaſt reſpect to the Court; but preſently riſes up again, and turns about, looking downwards upon the Guards placed on the left ſide, and on the Multitude of Spectators on the right ſide of the ſaid great Hall. After Silence made among the People, the Act of Parliament for the trying of Charles Stuart, King of England, was read over by the Clerk of the Court, who ſat on one ſide of a Table covered with a rich Turky-Carpet, and placed at the Feet of the ſaid Lord Preſident; upon which Table was alſo laid the Sword and Mace.

After reading the ſaid Act, the ſeveral Names of the Commiſſioners were called over, every one who was preſent, being eighty, as aforeſaid, riſing up, and anſwering to his Call.

Having again placed himſelf in his Chair, with his Face towards the Court, Silence being again ordered, the Lord Preſident ſtood up, and ſaid:

Ld Preſident. Charles Stuart, King of England, the Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament being deeply ſenſible of the Calamities that have been brought upon this Nation, (which is fixed upon you as the principal Author of it) have reſolved to make Inquiſition for Blood; and according to that Debt and Duty they owe to Juſtice, to God, the Kingdom, and themſelves, and according to the Fundamental Power that reſts in themſelves, they have reſolved to bring you to Tryal and Judgment; and for that purpoſe have conſtituted this High Court of Juſtice, before which you are brought.

This ſaid, Mr. Cook, Attorney for the Commonwealth (ſtanding within a Bar on the right hand of the Priſoner) offered to ſpeak: but the King having a Staff in his hand, held it up, and laid it upon the ſaid Mr. Cook's ſhoulder two or three times, bidding him hold. Nevertheleſs, the Lord Preſident ordering him to go on, he ſaid:

Mr. Cook. My Lord, I am commanded to charge Charles Stuart, King of England, in the name of the Commons of England, with Treaſon and High Miſdemeanours; I deſire the ſaid Charge may be read.

The ſaid Charge being delivered to the Clerk of the Court, the Lord Preſident ordered it ſhould be read; but the King bid him hold. Nevertheleſs, being commanded by the Lord Preſident to read it, the Clerk begun, and the Priſoner ſat down again in his Chair, looking ſometimes on the High Court, ſometimes up to the Galleries; and having riſen again, and turned about to behold the Guards and Spectators, ſat down, looking very ſternly, and with a Countenance not at all moved, till theſe words, viz. Charles Stuart to be a Tyrant and Traytor, &c. were read; at which he laughed, as he ſat, in the face of the Court.

The Charge being read, the Lord Preſident replied:

Ld Preſident. Sir, You have now heard your Charge, containing ſuch Matter as appears in it; you find, that in the Cloſe of it, it is prayed to the Court, in the behalf of the Commons of England, that you anſwer to your Charge. The Court expects your Anſwer.

King. I would know by what Power I am called hither; I was not long ago in the Iſle of Wight, how I came there, is a longer Story than I think is fit at this time for me to ſpeak of; but there I enter'd into a Treaty with both Houſes of Parliament, with as much publick Faith as it's poſſible to be had of any People in the world. I treated there with a number of honourable Lords and Gentlemen, and treated honeſtly and uprightly; I cannot ſay but they did very nobly with me, we were upon the concluſion of the Treaty. Now I would know by what Authority, I mean lawful; there are many unlawful Authorities in the World, Thieves and Robbers by the Highways; but I would know by what Authority I was brought from thence, and carried from place to place, and I know not what: and when I know what lawful Authority, I ſhall anſwer. Remember I am your King, your lawful King, and what Sins you bring upon your heads, and the Judgment of God upon this Land; think well upon it, I ſay, think well upon it, before you go further from one Sin to a greater: therefore let me know by what lawful Authority I am ſeated here, and I ſhall not be unwilling to anſwer. In the mean time, I ſhall not betray my Truſt; I have a Truſt committed to me by God, by old and lawful Deſcent, I will not betray it, to anſwer to a new unlawful Authority: therefore reſolve me that, and you ſhall hear more of me.

Ld Preſident. If you had been pleaſed to have obſerved what was hinted to you by the Court, at your firſt coming hither, you would have known by what Authority; which Authority requires you, in the name of the People of England, of which you are elected King, to anſwer them.

King. No Sir, I deny that.

Ld Preſident. If you acknowledge not the Authority of the Court, they muſt proceed.

King. I do tell them ſo, England was never an Elective Kingdom, but an Hereditary Kingdom for near theſe thouſand Years; therefore let me know by what Authority I am called hither: I do ſtand more for the Liberty of my People, than any here that come to be my pretended Judges; and therefore let me know by what lawful Authority I am ſeated here, and I will anſwer it; otherwiſe I will not anſwer it.

Ld Preſident. Sir, How really you have managed your Truſt, is known: your way of Anſwer is to interrogate the Court, which beſeems not you in this Condition. You have been told of it twice or thrice.

King. Here is a Gentleman, Lieutenant-Colonel Cobbet; ask him, if he did not bring me from the Iſle of Wight by force. I do not come here as ſubmitting to the Court: I will ſtand as much for the Privilege of the Houſe of Commons, rightly underſtood, as any Man here whatſoever. I ſee no Houſe of Lords here, that may conſtitute a Parliament; and the King too ſhould have been. Is this the bringing of the King to his Parliament? Is this the bringing an end to the Treaty in the publick Faith of the World? Let me ſee a legal Authority warranted by the Word of God the Scriptures, or warranted by the Conſtitutions of the Kingdom, and I will anſwer.

Ld Preſident. Sir, You have propounded a Queſtion, and have been anſwered. Seeing you will not anſwer, the Court will conſider how to proceed: in the mean time, thoſe that brought you hither, are to take charge of you back again. The Court deſires to know, whether this be all the Anſwer you will give, or no.

King. Sir, I deſire that you would give me, and all the World, Satisfaction in this: let me tell you, it is not a ſlight thing you are about. I am ſworn to keep the Peace, by that Duty I owe to God and my Country, and I will do it to the laſt Breath of my Body; and therefore you ſhall do well to ſatisfy firſt God, and then the Country, by what Authority you do it: if you do it by an uſurped Authority, you cannot anſwer it. There is a God in Heaven, that will call you, and all that give you Power, to account. Satisfy me in that, and I will anſwer; otherwiſe I betray my Truſt, and the Liberties of the People: and therefore think of that, and then I ſhall be willing. For I do avow, that it is as great a Sin to withſtand lawful Authority, as it is to ſubmit to a tyrannical, or any other ways unlawful Authority: and therefore ſatisfy me that, and you ſhall receive my Anſwer.

Ld Preſident. The Court expects you ſhould give them a final Anſwer, their purpoſe is to adjourn to Monday next, if you do not ſatisfy yourſelf, tho we do tell you our Authority; we are ſatisfied with our Authority, and it is upon God's Authority and the Kingdom's, and that Peace you ſpeak of will be kept in the doing of Juſtice, and that's our preſent Work.

King. For anſwer, let me tell you, you have ſhewn no lawful Authority to ſatisfy any reaſonable Man.

Ld

Ld Preſident. That is, in your Apprehenſion; we are ſatisfied that are your Judges.

King. 'Tis not my Apprehenſion, nor yours neither, that ought to decide it.

Ld Preſident. The Court hath heard you, and you are to be diſpoſed of as they have commanded.

The Court adjourns to the Painted-Chamber, on Monday at Ten of the clock in the Forenoon, and thence hither.

It is to be obſerved, That as the Charge was reading againſt the King, the Head of his Staff fell off, which he wonder'd at; and ſeeing none to take it up, he ſtoops for it himſelf.

As the King went away, facing the Court, he ſaid, I do not fear that, (meaning the Sword.) The People in the Hall, as he went down the Stairs, cry'd out, ſome, God ſave the King, and moſt for Juſtice.

At the High Court of Juſtice ſitting in Weſtminſter-Hall, Monday Jan. 22. 1648.

OYes made; Silence commanded; the Court call'd, and anſwer'd to their Names.

Silence commanded upon pain of Impriſonment, and the Captain of the Guard to apprehend all ſuch as make diſturbance.

Upon the King's coming in, a Shout was made.

Command given by the Court to the Captain of the Guard, to fetch and take into his cuſtody thoſe who make any diſturbance.

Mr. Sollicitor. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, my Lord Preſident; I did at the laſt Court, in the behalf of the Commons of England, exhibit and give into this Court a Charge of High Treaſon, and other high Crimes againſt the Priſoner at the Bar; whereof I do accuſe him in the name of the People of England: and the Charge was read unto him, and his Anſwer required. My Lord, He was not then pleaſed to give an Anſwer, but inſtead of anſwering, did there diſpute the Authority of this high Court. My humble Motion to this high Court in behalf of the Kingdom of England, is, That the Priſoner may be directed to make a poſitive Anſwer, either by way of Confeſſion or Negation; which if he ſhall refuſe to do, that the Matter of the Charge may be taken pro confeſſo, and the Court may proceed according to Juſtice.

Ld Preſident. Sir, You may remember at the laſt Court you were told the Occaſion of your being brought hither, and you heard a Charge read againſt you, containing a Charge of High Treaſon and other high Crimes againſt this Realm of England: you heard likewiſe, that it was prayed in the behalf of the People, that you ſhould give an Anſwer to that Charge, that thereupon ſuch Proceedings might be had, as ſhould be agreeable to Juſtice. You were then pleaſed to make ſome Scruples concerning the Authority of this Court, and knew not by what Authority you were brought hither; you did divers times propound your Queſtions, and were as often anſwer'd, That it was by Authority of the Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament, that did think fit to call you to account for thoſe high and capital Miſdemeanours wherewith you were then charged. Since that the Court hath taken into conſideration what you then ſaid, they are fully ſatisfied with their own Authority, and they hold it fit you ſhould ſtand ſatisfied with it too; and they do require it, that you do give a poſitive and particular Anſwer to this Charge that is exhibited againſt you: they do expect you ſhould either confeſs or deny it; if you deny, it is offer'd in the behalf of the Kingdom to be made good againſt you: their Authority they do avow to the whole World, that the whole Kingdom are to reſt ſatisfied in, and you are to reſt ſatisfied with it. And therefore you are to loſe no more time, but to give a poſitive Anſwer thereunto.

King. When I was here laſt, 'tis very true, I made that Queſtion; and truly if it were only my own particular Caſe, I would have ſatisfied myſelf with the Proteſtation I made the laſt time I was here againſt the Legality of this Court, and that a King cannot be try'd by any ſuperiour Juriſdiction on Earth: but it is not my Caſe alone, it is the Freedom and the Liberty of the People of England; and do you pretend what you will, I ſtand more for their Liberties. For if Power without Law may make Laws, may alter the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, I do not know what Subject he is in England, that can be ſure of his Life, or any thing that he calls his own: therefore when that I came here, I did expect particular Reaſons to know by what Law, what Authority you did proceed againſt me here. And therefore I am a little to ſeek what to ſay to you in this particular, becauſe the Affirmative is to be proved, the Negative often is very hard to do: but ſince I cannot perſuade you to do it, I ſhall tell you my Reaſons as ſhort as I can.

My Reaſons why in Conſcience and the Duty I owe to God firſt, and my People next, for the Preſervation of their Lives, Liberties, and Eſtates, I conceive I cannot anſwer this, till I be ſatisfied of the Legality of it.

All Proceedings againſt any Man whatſoever—

Ld Preſident. Sir, I muſt interrupt you, which I would not do, but that what you do is not agreeable to the Proceedings of any Court of Juſtice: You are about to enter into Argument, and diſpute concerning the Authority of this Court, before whom you appear as a Priſoner, and are charged as an high Delinquent; if you take upon you to diſpute the Authority of the Court, we may not do it, nor will any Court give way unto it: you are to ſubmit unto it, you are to give a punctual and direct Anſwer, whether you will anſwer your Charge or no, and what your Anſwer is.

King. Sir, By your favour, I do not know the Forms of Law; I do know Law and Reaſon, tho I am no Lawyer profeſs'd, but I know as much Law as any Gentleman in England; and therefore (under favour) I do plead for the Liberties of the People of England more than you do: And therefore if I ſhould impoſe a Belief upon any Man, without Reaſons given for it, it were unreaſonable; but I muſt tell you, that that Reaſon that I have, as thus informed, I cannot yield unto it.

Ld Preſident. Sir, I muſt interrupt you, you may not be permitted: you ſpeak of Law and Reaſon, it is fit there ſhould be Law and Reaſon, and there is both againſt you. Sir, the Vote of the Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament, it is the Reaſon of the Kingdom, and they are theſe that have given to that Law, according to which you ſhould have ruled and reign'd. Sir, you are not to diſpute our Authority, you are told it again by the Court. Sir, it will be taken notice of, that you ſtand in contempt of the Court, and your Contempt will be recorded accordingly.

King.

King. I do not know how a King can be a Delinquent; but by any Law that ever I heard of, all Men (Delinquents, or what you will) let me tell you they may put in Demurrers againſt any Proceeding as legal: and I do demand that, and demand to be heard with my Reaſons; if you deny that, you deny Reaſon.

Ld Preſident. Sir, you have offer'd ſomething to the Court; I ſhall ſpeak ſomething unto you, the Senſe of the Court. Sir, neither you nor any Man are permitted to diſpute that Point; you are concluded, you may not demur to the Juriſdiction of the Court: if you do, I muſt let you know, that they over-rule your Demurrer; they ſit here by the Authority of the Commons of England, and all your Predeceſſors and you are reſponſible to them.

King. I deny that, ſhew me one Precedent.

Ld Preſident. Sir, you ought not to interrupt while the Court is ſpeaking to you. This Point is not to be debated by you, neither will the Court permit you to do it; if you offer it by way of Demurrer to the Juriſdiction of the Court, they have conſidered of their Juriſdiction, they do affirm their own Juriſdiction.

King. I ſay Sir, by your favour, that the Commons of England was never a Court of Judicature; I would know how they came to be ſo.

Ld Preſident. Sir, you are not to be permitted to go on in that Speech and theſe Diſcourſes.

Then the Clerk of the Court read as followeth:

Charles Stuart, King of England, You have been accuſed on the behalf of the Peeple of England of High Treaſon, and other high Crimes; the Court have determined that you ought to anſwer the ſame.

King. I will anſwer the ſame, ſo ſoon as I know by what Authority you do this.

Ld Preſident. If this be all that you will ſay, then Gentlemen you that brought the Priſoner hither, take charge of him back again.

King. I do require that I may give in my Reaſons why I do not anſwer, and give me time for that.

Ld Preſident. Sir, 'tis not for Priſoners to require.

King. Priſoners! Sir, I am not an ordinary Priſoner.

Ld Preſident. The Court hath conſidered of their Juriſdiction, and they have already affirmed their Juriſdiction; if you will not anſwer, we ſhall give order to record your Default.

King. You never heard my Reaſon yet.

Ld Preſident. Sir, your Reaſons are not to be heard againſt the higheſt Juriſdiction.

King. Shew me that Juriſdiction where Reaſon is not to be heard.

Ld Preſident. Sir, we ſhew it you here, the Commons of England; and the next time you are brought, you will know more of the Pleaſure of the Court; and, it may be, their final Determination.

King. Shew me where ever the Houſe of Commons was a Court of Judicature of that kind.

Ld Preſident. Serjeant, take away the Priſoner.

King. Well, Sir, remember that the King is not ſuffer'd to give in his Reaſons for the Liberty and Freedom of all his Subjects.

Ld Preſident. Sir, you are not to have liberty to uſe this Language: How great a Friend you have been to the Laws and Liberties of the People, let all England and the World judge.

King. Sir, under favour it was the Liberty, Freedom, and Laws of the Subject, that ever I took——defended myſelf with Arms; I never took up Arms againſt the People, but for the Laws.

Ld Preſident. The Command of the Court muſt be obey'd; no Anſwer will be given to the Charge.

King. Well, Sir!

And ſo he was guarded forth to Sir Robert Cotton's Houſe.

Then the Court adjourned to the Painted Chamber on Tueſday at Twelve a cloek, and from thence they intend to adjourn to Weſtminſter-Hall; at which time all Perſons concerned are to give their Attendance.

At the High Court of Juſtice ſitting in Weſtminſter-Hall, Tueſday Jan. 23. 1648.

OYes made, Silence commanded, the Court called, ſeventy three Perſons preſent.

The King comes in with his Guard, looks with an auſtere Countenance upon the Court, and ſits down.

The ſecond O Yes made, and Silence commanded.

Mr. Cook, Sollicitor-General. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, my Lord Preſident; This is now the third time, that by the great Grace and Favour of this High Court, the Priſoner hath been brought to the Bar before any Iſſue joined in the Cauſe. My Lord, I did at the firſt Court exhibit a Charge againſt him, containing the higheſt Treaſon that ever was wrought upon the Theatre of England; That a King of England, truſted to keep the Law, that had taken an Oath ſo to do, that had Tribute paid him for that end, ſhould be guilty of a wicked Deſign to ſubvert and deſtroy our Laws, and introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government, in defiance of the Parliament and their Authority, ſet up his Standard for War againſt his Parliament and People: and I did humbly pray, in the behalf of the People of England, that he might ſpeedily be required to make an Anſwer to the Charge.

But, my Lord, inſtead of making any Anſwer, he did then diſpute the Authority of this High Court. Your Lordſhip was pleaſed to give him a further Day, to conſider, and to put in his Anſwer; which Day being yeſterday, I did humbly move, that he might be required to give a direct and poſitive Anſwer, either by denying or confeſſion of it: but, my Lord, he was then pleaſed for to demur to the Juriſdiction of the Court; which the Court did then over-rule, and command him to give a direct and poſitive Anſwer. My Lord, Beſides this great Delay of Juſtice, I ſhall now humbly move your Lordſhip for ſpeedy Judgment againſt him. My Lord, I might preſs your Lordſhip upon the whole, that according to the known Rules of the Law of the Land, That if a Priſoner ſhall ſtand as contumacious in contempt, and ſhall not put in an iſſuable Plea, Guilty or Not Guilty of the Charge given againſt him, whereby he may come to a fair Tryal; That as by an implicit Confeſſion, it may be taken pro confeſſo, as it hath been done to thoſe who have deſerved more Favour than the Priſoner at the Bar has done. But beſides, my Lord, I ſhall humbly preſs your Lordſhip upon the whole Fact. The Houſe of Commons, the Supreme Authority and Juriſdiction of the Kingdom, they have declared, That it is notorious, that the Matter of the Charge is true, as it is in truth, my Lord, as clear as Chryſtal, and as the Sun that ſhines at Noon-day: which if your Lordſhip and the Court be not ſatisfied in, I have notwithſtanding, on the People of England's behalf, ſeveral Witneſſes to produce. And therefore I do humbly pray, and yet I muſt confeſs it is not ſo much I, as the innocent Blood that hath been ſhed, the Cry whereof is very great for Juſtice and Judgment; and therefore I do humbly pray, that ſpeedy Judgment be pronounced againſt the Priſoner at the Bar.

Ld Preſident. Sir, You have heard what is moved by the Counſel on the behalf of the Kingdom againſt. Sir, You may well remember, and if you do not, the Court cannot forget what dilatory Dealings the Court hath found at your hands. You were pleaſed to propound ſome Queſtions, you have had your Reſolution upon them. You were told over and over again, That the Court did affirm their own Juriſdiction; that it was not for you, nor any other Man, to diſpute the Juriſdiction of the ſupreme and higheſt Authority of England, from which there is no Appeal, and touching which there muſt be no Diſpute: yet you did perſiſt in ſuch Carriage, as you gave no manner of Obedience, nor did you acknowledge any Authority in them, nor the High Court that conſtituted this Court of Juſtice.

Sir, I muſt let you know from the Court, that they are very ſenſible of theſe Delays of yours, and that they ought not, being thus authorized by the ſupreme Court of England, to be thus trifled withal; and that they might in Juſtice, if they pleaſed, and according to the Rules of Juſtice, take advantage of theſe Delays, and proceed to pronounce Judgment againſt you: yet nevertheleſs they are pleaſed to give direction, and on their behalfs I do require you, that you make a poſitive Anſwer unto this Charge that is againſt you, Sir, in plain terms, for Juſtice knows no reſpect of Perſons; you are to give your poſitive and final Anſwer in plain Engliſh, whether you be guilty or not guilty of theſe Treaſons laid to your charge.

The King, after a little Pauſe, ſaid,

King. When I was here yeſterday, I did deſire to ſpeak for the Liberties of the People of England; I was interrupted: I deſire to know yet whether I may ſpeak freely or not.

Ld Preſident. Sir, You have had the Reſolution of the Court upon the like Queſtion the laſt day, and you were told, that having ſuch a Charge of ſo high a nature againſt you, and your Work was, that you ought to acknowledge the Juriſdiction of the Court, and to anſwer to your Charge. Sir, If you anſwer to your Charge, which the Court gives you leave now to do, tho they might have taken the advantage of your Contempt; yet if you be able to anſwer to your Charge, when you have once anſwered, you ſhall be heard at large, make the beſt Defence you can. But, Sir, I muſt let you know from the Court, as their Commands, that you are not to be permitted to iſſue out into any other Diſcourſes, till ſuch time as you have given a poſitive Anſwer concerning the matter that is charged upon you.

King. For the Charge, I value it not a ruſh, it is the Liberty of the People of England that I ſtand for. For me to acknowledge a new Court that I never heard of before, I that am your King, that ſhould be an Example to all the People of England for to uphold Juſtice, to maintain the old Laws; indeed I do not know how to do it. You ſpoke very well the firſt Day that I came here, (on Saturday) of the Obligations that I had laid upon me by God, to the maintenance of the Liberties of my People: the ſame Obligation you ſpake of, I do acknowledge to God that I owe to him, and to my People, to defend as much as in me lies the antient Laws of the Kingdom: therefore until that I may know that this is not againſt the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, by your favour I can put in no particular * Charge. If you will give me time, I will ſhew you my Reaſons why I cannot do it, and this——

Here being interrupted, he ſaid,

By your favour, you ought not to interrupt me: how I came here I know not, there's no Law for it to make your King your Priſoner. I was in a Treaty upon the publick Faith of the Kingdom, that was the known——two Houſes of Parliament that was the Repreſentative of the Kingdom; and when that I had almoſt made an end of the Treaty, then I was hurried away, and brought hither: and therefore——

Here the Lord Preſident ſaid, Sir, you muſt know the Pleaſure of the Court.

King. By your favour, Sir.

Ld Preſident. Nay, Sir, by your favour, you may not be permitted to fall into thoſe Diſcourſes; you appear as a Delinquent, you have not acknowledged the Authority of the Court, the Court craves it not of you: but once more they command you to give your poſitive Anſwer——Clerk, Do your Duty.

King. Duty, Sir!

The Clerk reads.

Charles Stuart, King of England, you are accuſed in the behalf of the Commons of England of divers high Crimes and Treaſons, which Charge hath been read unto you; the Court now requires you to give your poſitive and final Anſwer, by way of Confeſſion or Denial of the Charge.

King. Sir, I ſay again to you, ſo that I might give ſatisfaction to the People of England of the Clearneſs of my Proceeding, not by way of Anſwer, not in this way, but to ſatisfy them that I have done nothing againſt that Truſt that hath been committed to me, I would do it: but to acknowledge a new Court, againſt their Privileges, to alter the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, Sir you muſt excuſe me.

Ld Preſident. Sir, this is the third time that you have publickly diſown'd this Court, and put an affront upon it: How far you have preſerv'd the Privileges of the People, your Actions have ſpoke it; but truly, Sir, Mens Intentions ought to be known by their Actions, you have written your Meaning in bloody Characters throughout the whole Kingdom. But, Sir, you underſtand the Pleaſure of the Court.——Clerk, Record the Default.——And Gentlemen, you that took charge of the Priſoner, take him back again.

King. I will only ſay this one word more to you; If it were only my own Particular, I would not ſay any more, nor interrupt you.

Ld Preſident. Sir, you have heard the Pleaſure of the Court, and you are (notwithſtanding you will not underſtand it) to find that you are before a Court of Juſtice.

Then the King went forth with his Guard, and Proclamation was made, That all Perſons which had then appeared, and had further to do at the Court, might depart into the Painted Chamber; to which place the Court did forthwith adjourn, and intended to meet in Weſtminſter-Hall by Ten of the clock next Morning.

Cryer. God bleſs the Kingdom of England.

Wedneſday,

Wedneſday, January 24th 1648.

THis Day it was expected the High-Court of Juſtice would have met in Weſtminſter-Hall, about Ten of the Clock; but at the time appointed one of the Uſhers, by Direction of the Court (then ſitting in the Painted-Chamber) gave notice to the People there aſſembled, That in regard the Court was then upon the Examination of Witneſſes, in relation to preſent Affairs, in the Painted-Chamber, they could not ſit there; but all Perſons appointed to be there, were to appear upon further Summons.

The Proceedings of the High-Court of Juſtice ſitting in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Saturday the 27th of January 1648.

OYes made; Silence commanded; the Court called: Serjeant Bradſhaw Lord Preſident (in a Scarlet Robe) with Sixty-eight other Members of the Court.

As the King comes in, a Cry made in the Hall for Execution, Juſtice, Execution.

King. I ſhall deſire a Word to be heard a little, and I hope I ſhall give no Occaſion of Interruption.

Ld Preſident. You may anſwer in your time, hear the Court firſt.

King. If it pleaſe you, Sir, I deſire to be heard, and I ſhall not give any Occaſion of Interruption, and it is only in a word: a ſudden Judgment——

Ld Preſident. Sir, you ſhall be heard in due time, but you are to hear the Court firſt.

King. Sir, I deſire, it will be in order to what I believe the Court will ſay; and therefore, Sir, an haſty Judgment is not ſo ſoon recall'd.

Ld Preſident. Sir, you ſhall be heard before the Judgment be given, and in the mean time you may forbear.

King. Well, Sir, ſhall I be heard before the Judgment be given?

Ld Preſident. Gentlemen, it is well known to all, or moſt of you here preſent, that the Priſoner at the Bar hath been ſeveral times convented and brought before the Court to make anſwer to a Charge of Treaſon, and other high Crimes exhibited againſt him in the Name of the People of * England; to which Charge being required to anſwer, he hath been ſo far from obeying the Commands of the Court by ſubmitting to their Juſtice, as he began to take upon him to offer Reaſoning and Debate unto the Authority of the Court, and of the higheſt Court that conſtituted them to try and judge him: but being over-ruled in that, and required to make his Anſwer, he was ſtill pleaſed to continue contumacious, and to refuſe to ſubmit or anſwer. Hereupon the Court, that they may not be wanting to themſelves, to the Truſt repoſed in them, nor that any Man's Wilfulneſs prevent Juſtice, they have thought fit to take the Matter into their Conſideration; they have conſidered of the Charge, they have conſidered of the Contumacy, and of that Confeſſion, which in Law doth ariſe upon that Contumacy: They have likewiſe conſidered of the Notoriety of the Fact charg'd upon this Priſoner, and upon the whole matter they are reſolved, and have agreed upon a Sentence to be now pronounc'd againſt this Priſoner: But in reſpect he doth deſire to be heard, before the Sentence be read and pronounc'd, the Court hath reſolved that they will hear him. Yet, Sir, thus much I muſt tell you before-hand, which you have been minded of at other Courts, that if that you have to ſay, be to offer any Debate concerning Juriſdiction, you are not to be heard in it; you have offered it formerly, and you have indeed ſtruck at the Root, that is, the Power and the Supreme Authority of the Commons of England, which this Court will not admit a Debate of; and which indeed is an irrational thing in them to do, being a Court that acts upon Authority derived from them, that they ſhould preſume to judge upon their Superior, from whom there is no Appeal. But, Sir, if you have any thing to ſay in defence of your ſelf concerning the Matter charged, the Court hath given me in command to let you know they will hear you.

* Here a malignant Lady interrupted the Court, ſaying, Not half the People; but ſhe was ſoon ſilenced.

King. Since that I ſee that you will not hear any thing of Debate concerning that which I confeſs I thought moſt material for the Peace of the Kingdom, and for the Liberty of the Subject, I ſhall wave it; I ſhall ſpeak nothing to it, but only I muſt tell you, that this many a-day all things have been taken away from me, but that that I call more dear to me than my Life, which is my Conſcience and my Honour: And if I had reſpect to my Life more than the Peace of the Kingdom, the Liberty of the Subject, certainly I ſhould have made a particular Defence for my ſelf; for by that at leaſtwiſe I might have delayed an ugly Sentence, which I believe will paſs upon me. Therefore certainly, Sir, as a Man that hath ſome Underſtanding, ſome Knowledge of the World, if that my true Zeal to my Country had not overborne the Care that I have of my own Preſervation, I ſhould have gone another way to work than that I have done. Now, Sir, I conceive, that an haſty Sentence once paſs'd, may ſooner be repented than recalled; and truly, the ſelf-ſame Deſire that I have for the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Liberty of the Subject, more than my own Particular, does make me now at laſt deſire, that having ſomething for to ſay that concerns both, I deſire before Sentence be given, that I may be heard in the Painted-Chamber before the Lords and Commons. This Delay cannot be prejudicial to you, whatſoever I ſay; if that I ſay no Reaſon, thoſe that hear me muſt be Judges; I cannot be Judge of that that I have: if it be Reaſon, and really for the Welfare of the Kingdom, and the Liberty of the Subject, I am ſure on't, very well 'tis worth the hearing; therefore I do conjure you, as you love that that you pretend, I hope it's real, the Liberty of the Subject, the Peace of the Kingdom, that you will grant me the hearing before any Sentence be paſt. I only deſire this, that you will take this into your Conſideration, it may be you have not heard of it before-hand; if you will, I'll retire, and you may think of it: but if I cannot get this Liberty, I do here proteſt, that ſo fair Shews of Liberty and Peace, are pure Shews, and not otherwiſe, than that you will not hear your King.

Ld Preſident. Sir, you have now ſpoken.

King. Yes, Sir.

Ld Preſident. And this that you have ſaid is a further declining of the Juriſdiction of this Court, which was the thing wherein you were limited before.

King. Pray excuſe me, Sir, for my Interruption, becauſe you miſtake me; it is not a declining of it, you do judge me before you hear me ſpeak: I ſay it will not, I do not decline it, though I cannot acknowledge the Juriſdiction of the Court; yet, Sir, in this give me leave to ſay, I would do it, though I did not acknowledge it in this, I do proteſt it is not the declining of it, ſince I ſay, if that I do ſay any thing, but that that is for the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Liberty of the Subject, then the Shame is mine. Now I deſire that you will take this into your Conſideration; if you will, I'll withdraw.

Ld Preſident. Sir, this is not altogether new that you have moved unto us, not altogether new to us, though the firſt time in Perſon you have offered it to the Court. Sir, you ſay you do not decline the Juriſdiction of the Court.

King. Not in this that I have ſaid.

Ld Preſident. I underſtand you well, Sir, but nevertheleſs that which you have offered, ſeems to be contrary to that Saying of yours; for the Court are ready to give a Sentence: It is not as you ſay, That they will not hear your King; for they have been ready to hear you, they have patiently waited your Pleaſure for three Courts together, to hear what you would ſay to the Peoples Charge againſt you, to which you have not vouchſafed to give any Anſwer at all. Sir, this tends to a further Delay; truly, Sir, ſuch Delays as theſe, neither may the Kingdom, nor Juſtice well bear; you have had three ſeveral Days to have offered in this kind what you would have pleaſed. This Court is founded upon that Authority of the Commons of England, in whom reſts the ſupreme Juriſdiction; that which you now tender, is to have another Juriſdiction, and a co-ordinate Juriſdiction. I know very well you expreſs your ſelf, Sir, that notwithſtanding that you would offer to the Lords and Commons in the Painted-Chamber, yet nevertheleſs you would proceed on here, I did hear you ſay ſo. But, Sir, that you would offer there, whatever it is, it muſt needs be in delay of the Juſtice here; ſo as if this Court be reſolved, and prepared for the Sentence, this that you offer they are not bound in juſtice to grant: But, Sir, according to that you ſeem to deſire, and becauſe you ſhall know the further Pleaſure of the Court upon that which you have moved, the Court will withdraw for a time.

King. Shall I withdraw?

Ld Preſident. Sir, you ſhall know the Pleaſure of the Court preſently. The Court withdraws for half an Hour into the Court of Wards.

Serjeant at Arms. The Court gives Command, that the Priſoner be withdrawn; and they give order for his Return again.

The Court withdraws for half an Hour, and returns.

Ld Preſident. Serjeant at Arms, ſend for your Priſoner.

Sir, you were pleaſed to make a motion here to the Court to offer a Deſire of yours, touching the propounding of ſomewhat to the Lords in the Painted-Chamber, for the Peace of the Kingdom: Sir, you did, in effect, receive an Anſwer before the Court adjourned; truly, Sir, their Withdrawing and Adjournment was pro formâ tantum; for it did not ſeem to them that there was any Difficulty in the thing: they have conſidered of what you have moved, and have conſidered of their own Authority, which is founded, as hath been often ſaid, upon the ſupreme Authority of the Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament: The Court acts according to their Commiſſion. Sir, the Return I have to you from the Court, is this; That they have been too much delayed by you already, and this that you now offer, hath occaſioned ſome little further Delay; and they are Judges appointed by the higheſt Judges; and Judges are no more to delay, than they are to deny Juſtice: they are good Words in the great old Charter of England; Nulli negabimus, nulli vendemus, nulli deferemus Juſtitiam. There muſt be no Delay; but the truth is, Sir, and ſo every Man here obſerves it, that you have much delayed them in your Contempt and Default, for which they might long ſince have proceeded to Judgment againſt you; and notwithſtanding what you have offered, they are reſolved to proceed to Puniſhment, and to Judgment, and that is their unanimous Reſolution.

King. Sir, I know it is in vain for me to diſpute, I am no Sceptick for to deny the Power that you have; I know that you have Power enough: Sir, I confeſs, I think it would have been for the Kingdom's Peace, if you would have taken the pains for to have ſhewn the Lawfulneſs of your Power; for this Delay that I have deſired, I confeſs it is a Delay, but it is a Delay very important for the Peace of the Kingdom; for it is not my Perſon that I look on alone, it is the Kingdom's Welfare, and the Kingdom's Peace; it is an old Sentence, That we ſhould think on long before we have reſolved of great Matters ſuddenly. Therefore, Sir, I do ſay again, that I do put at your doors all the Inconveniency of an haſty Sentence. I confeſs I have been here now, I think, this Week; this Day eight Days was the Day I came here firſt, but a little Delay of a Day or two further may give Peace; whereas an haſty Judgment may bring on that Trouble and perpetual Inconveniency to the Kingdom, that the Child that is unborn may repent it: and therefore again, out of the Duty I owe to God, and to my Country, I do deſire that I may be heard by the Lords and Commons in the Painted-Chamber, or any other Chamber that you will appoint me.

Ld Preſident. Sir, you have been already anſwered to what you even now moved, being the ſame you moved before, ſince the Reſolution and the Judgment of the Court in it: and the Court now requires to know whether you have any more to ſay for your ſelf, than you have ſaid, before they proceed to Sentence?

King. I ſay this, Sir, That if you will hear me, if you will give but this Delay, I doubt not but I ſhall give ſome Satisfaction to you all here, and to my People after that; and therefore I do require you, as you will anſwer it at the dreadful Day of Judgment, that you will conſider it once again.

Ld Preſident. Sir, I have received Direction from the Court.

King. Well, Sir.

Ld Preſident. If this muſt be re-enforced, or any thing of this nature, your Anſwer muſt be the ſame; and they will proceed to Sentence, if you have nothing more to ſay.

King. Sir, I have nothing more to ſay, but I ſhall deſire, that this may be entred what I have ſaid.

Ld Preſident. The Court then, Sir, hath ſomething elſe to ſay to you; which, although I know it will be very unacceptable, yet notwithſtanding they are willing, and are reſolved to diſcharge their Duty.

Sir, You ſpeak very well of a precious Thing that you call Peace: And it had been much to be wiſhed that God had put it into your Heart, that you had as effectually and really endeavoured and ſtudied ſtudied the Peace of the Kingdom, as now in Words you ſeem to pretend: But, as you were told the other Day, Actions muſt expound Intentions; yet Actions have been clean contrary. And truly, Sir, it doth appear plainly enough to them, that you have gone upon very erroneous Principles: The Kingdom hath felt it to their Smart; and it will be no Eaſe to you to think of it: For, Sir, you have held your ſelf, and let fall ſuch Language, as if you had been no ways ſubject to the Law, or that the Law had not been your Superior. Sir, the Court is very well ſenſible of it, and I hope ſo are all the underſtanding People of England, that the Law is your Superior; that you ought to have ruled according to the Law; you ought to have done ſo. Sir, I know very well your pretence hath been that you have done ſo; but, Sir, the Difference hath been who ſhall be the Expoſitors of this Law: Sir, whether you and your Party, out of Courts of Juſtice, ſhall take upon them to expound Law, or the Courts of Juſtice, who are the Expounders? nay, the Sovereign and the High Court of Juſtice, the Parliament of England, that are not only the higheſt Expounders, but the ſole Makers of the Law? Sir, for you to ſet your ſelf with your ſingle Judgment, and thoſe that adhere unto you, to ſet your ſelf againſt the higheſt Court of Juſtice, that is not Law. Sir, as the Law is your Superior, ſo truly, Sir, there is ſomething that is ſuperior to the Law, and that is indeed the Parent or Author of the Law, and that is the People of England: For, Sir, as they are thoſe that at the firſt (as other Countries have done) did chuſe to themſelves this Form of Government, even for Juſtice ſake, that Juſtice might be adminiſter'd, that Peace might be preſerved; ſo, Sir, they gave Laws to their Governors, according to which they ſhould govern: and if thoſe Laws ſhould have proved inconvenient or prejudicial to the Publick, they had a Power in them, and reſerved to themſelves, to alter as they ſhall ſee cauſe. Sir, it is very true, what ſome of your ſide have ſaid, Rex non habet parem in regno, ſo they: This Court will ſay the ſame, while King, that you have not your Peer in ſome Senſe, for you are major ſingulis; but they will aver again that you are minor univerſis. And the ſame Author tells you, that in exhibitione juris, there you have no Power; but in quaſi minimus. This we know to be Law, Rex habet ſuperiorem, Deum & Legem, etiam & Curiam; and ſo ſays the ſame Author. And truly, Sir, he makes bold to go a little further, Debent ei ponere frænum, They ought to bridle him. And, Sir, we know very well the Stories of old: Thoſe Wars that were called the Barons War, when the Nobility of the Land did ſtand out for the Liberty and Property of the Subject, and would not ſuffer the Kings that did invade to play the Tyrants freer, but called them to account for it; we know that Truth, that they did frænum ponere. But, Sir, if they do forbear to do their Duty now, and are not ſo mindful of their own Honour, and the Kingdom's Good, as the Barons of England of old were, certainly the Commons of England will not be unmindful of what is for their Preſervation, and for their Safety; Juſtitiæ fruendi cauſa Reges conſtituti ſunt. This we learn; The End of having Kings, or any other Governors, it's for the enjoying of Juſtice; that's the End. Now, Sir, if ſo be the King will go contrary to that End, or any other Governor will go contrary to the End of his Government; Sir, he muſt underſtand that he is but an Officer in Truſt, and he ought to diſcharge that Truſt; and they are to take order for the Animadverſion and Puniſhment of ſuch an offending Governor.

This is not Law of yeſterday, Sir, (ſince the Time of the Diviſion betwixt you and your People) but it is Law of old. And we know very well the Authors and the Authorities that do tell us what the Law was in that Point upon the Election of Kings, upon the Oath that they took unto their People: And if they did not obſerve it, there were thoſe Things called Parliaments; the Parliaments were they that were to adjudge (the very Words of the Author) the Plaints and Wrongs done of the King and the Queen, or their Children; ſuch Wrongs eſpecially, when the People could have no where elſe any Remedy. Sir, that hath been the People of England's Caſe: They could not have their Remedy elſewhere but in Parliament.

Sir, Parliaments were ordained for that Purpoſe, to redreſs the Grievances of the People; that was their main End. And truly, Sir, if ſo be that the Kings of England had been rightly mindful of themſelves, they were never more in Majeſty and State than in the Parliament: But how forgetful ſome have been, Stories have told us; we have a miſerable, a lamentable, a ſad Experience of it. Sir, by the old Laws of England, I ſpeak theſe Things the rather to you, becauſe you were pleaſed to let fall the other Day, You thought you had as much Knowledge in the Law as moſt Gentlemen in England: It is very well, Sir. And truly, Sir, it is very fit for the Gentlemen of England to underſtand that Law under which they muſt live, and by which they muſt be governed. And then, Sir, the Scripture ſays, They that know their Maſter's Will, and do it not: What follows? The Law is your Maſter, the Acts of Parliament.

The Parliaments were to be kept antiently, we find in our old Author, twice in the Year, that the Subject upon any occaſion might have a ready Remedy and Redreſs for his Grievance. Afterwards, by ſeveral Acts of Parliament in the Days of your Predeceſſor, Edward the Third, they ſhould have been once a Year. Sir, what the Intermiſſion of Parliaments hath been in your Time, it is very well known, and the ſad Conſequences of it; and what in the Interim, inſtead of theſe Parliaments, hath been by you by an high and arbitrary Hand introduced upon the People, that likewiſe hath been too well known and felt. But when God by his Providence had ſo far brought it about, that you could no longer decline the calling of a Parliament, Sir, yet it will appear what your ends were againſt the antient and your native Kingdom of Scotland: The Parliament of England not ſerving your ends againſt them, you were pleaſed to diſſolve it. Another great Neceſſity occaſioned the calling of this Parliament; and what your Deſigns, and Plots, and Endeavours all along hath been, for the cruſhing and confounding of this Parliament, hath been very notorious to the whole Kingdom. And truly, Sir, in that you did ſtrike at all; that had been a ſure way to have brought about that that this Charge lays upon you, Your Intention to ſubvert the Fundamental Laws of the Land: For the great Bulwark of the Liberties of the People is the Parliament of England; and to ſubvert and root up that, which your Aim hath been to do, certainly at one Blow you had confounded the Liberties and the Property of England.

Truly,

Truly, Sir, it makes me call to mind; I cannot forbear to expreſs it; for, Sir, we muſt deal plainly with you, according to the Merits of your Cauſe, ſo is our Commiſſion: It makes me call to mind, (theſe Proceedings of yours) that that we read of a great Roman Emperor, by the way let us call him a great Roman Tyrant, Caligula, that wiſhed that the People of Rome had had but one Neck, that at one Blow he might cut it off. And your Proceedings hath been ſomewhat like to this: For the Body of the People of England hath been (and where elſe) repreſented but in the Parliament; and could you have but confounded that, you had at one Blow cut off the Neck of England. But God hath reſerved better Things for us, and hath pleaſed for to confound your Deſigns, and to break your Forces, and to bring your Perſon into Cuſtody, that you might be reſponſible to Juſtice.

Sir, we know very well that it is a Queſtion much on your ſide preſs'd, By what Precedent we ſhall proceed? Truly, Sir, for Precedents, I ſhall not upon theſe occaſions inſtitute any long Diſcourſe; but it is no new Thing to cite Precedents almoſt of all Nations, where the People (when Power hath been in their hands) have made bold to call their Kings to account; and where the Change of Government hath been upon occaſion of the Tyranny and Miſgovernment of thoſe that have been placed over them. I will not ſpend Time to mention either France, or Spain, or the Empire, or other Countries; Volumes may be written of it. But truly, Sir, that of the Kingdom of Arragon, I ſhall think ſome of us have thought upon it, where they have the Juſtice of Arragon, that is, a Man, tanquam in medio poſitus, betwixt the King of Spain and the People of the Country; that if Wrong be done by the King, he that is the King of Arragon, the Juſtice, hath Power to reform the Wrong; and he is acknowledged to be the King's Superior, and is the grand Preſerver of their Privileges, and hath proſecuted Kings upon their Miſcarriages.

Sir, what the Tribunes of Rome were heretofore, and what the Ephori were to the Lacedemonian State, we know, that is the Parliament of England to the Engliſh State: And though Rome ſeemed to loſe its Liberty when once the Emperors were; yet you ſhall find ſome famous Acts of Juſtice even done by the Senate of Rome; that great Tyrant of his Time, Nero, condemned and judged by the Senate. But truly, Sir, to you I ſhould not need to mention theſe foreign Examples and Stories: If you look but over Tweed, we find enough in your native Kingdom of Scotland: If we look to your firſt King Fergufius, that your Stories make mention of, he was an elective King: He died, and left two Sons, both in their Minority; the Kingdom made choice of their Uncle, his Brother, to govern in the Minority. Afterwards, the elder Brother giving ſmall Hopes to the People that he would rule or govern well, ſeeking to ſupplant that good Uncle of his that governed then juſtly, they ſet the elder aſide, and took to the younger. Sir, if I ſhould come to what your Stories make mention of; you know very well you are the hundred and ninth King of Scotland: For not to mention ſo many Kings as that Kingdom, according to their Power and Privilege, have made bold to deal withal, ſome to baniſh, and ſome to impriſon, and ſome to put to death, it would be too long; and, as one of your own Authors ſays, it would be too long to recite the manifold Examples that your own Stories make mention of. Reges, &c. (ſay they) we do create; we created Kings at firſt: Leges, &c. we impoſed Laws upon them. And as they are choſen by the Suffrages of the People at the firſt; ſo upon juſt occaſion, by the ſame Suffrages they may be taken down again. And we will be bold to ſay, that no Kingdom hath yielded more plentiful Experience than that your native Kingdom of Scotland hath done, concerning the Depoſition and the Puniſhment of their offending and tranſgreſſing Kings, &c.

It is not far to go for an Example near you: Your Grandmother ſet aſide, and your Father, an Infant, crowned. And the State did it here in England: Here hath not been a want of ſome Examples. They have made bold (the Parliament and the People of England) to call their Kings to account: There are frequent Examples of it in the Saxons Time, the Time before the Conqueſt. Since the Conqueſt there want not ſome Precedents neither; King Edward the Second, King Richard the Second, were dealt with ſo by the Parliament, as they were depoſed and deprived. And truly, Sir, whoever ſhall look into their Stories, they ſhall not find the Articles that are charged upon them, to come near to that Height and Capitalneſs of Crimes that are laid to your Charge; nothing near.

Sir, you were pleaſed to ſay the other Day wherein they diſſent; and I did not contradict it. But take all together, Sir; If you were as the Charge ſpeaks, and no otherwiſe, admitted King of England: but for that you were pleaſed then to alledge, how that almoſt for a thouſand Years theſe Things have been, Stories will tell you, if you go no higher than the time of the Conqueſt; if you do come down ſince the Conqueſt, you are the twenty fourth King, from William called the Conqueror, you ſhall find one half of them to come merely from the State, and not merely upon the Point of Deſcent. It were eaſy to be inſtanced to you; but Time muſt not be loſt that way. And truly, Sir, what a grave and learned Judge ſaid in his Time, and well known to you, and is ſince printed for Poſterity, That although there was ſuch a Thing as a Deſcent many times, yet the Kings of England ever held the greateſt Aſſurance of their Titles, when it was declared by Parliament. And, Sir, your Oath, the Manner of your Coronation, doth ſhew plainly, that the Kings of England, although it's true, by the Law the next Perſon in Blood is deſigned, yet if there were juſt Cauſe to refuſe him, the People of England might do it. For there is a Contract and a Bargain made between the King and his People, and your Oath is taken: And certainly, Sir, the Bond is reciprocal; for as you are the Liege Lord, ſo they Liege Subjects. And we know very well that hath been ſo much ſpoken of, Ligeantia eſt duplex. This we know now, The one Tie, the one Bond, is the Bond of Protection that is due from the Sovereign; the other is the Bond of Subjection that is due from the Subject. Sir, if this Bond be once broken, farewel Sovereignty; Subjectio trahit, &c.

Theſe Things may not be denied, Sir: I ſpeak it rather, and I pray God it may work upon your Heart, that you may be ſenſible of your Miſcarriages. For whether you have been, as by your Office you ought to be, a Protector of England, or the Deſtroyer of England, let all England judge, or all the World, that hath look'd upon it. Sir, though you have it by Inheritance in the way that is ſpoken of, yet it muſt not be denied that your Office was an Office of Truſt, and indeed an Office of the higheſt Truſt, lodged in any ſingle Perſon:

ſon: For as you were the grand Adminiſtrator of Juſtice, and others were, as your Delegates, to ſee it done throughout your Realms; if your greateſt Office were to do Juſtice, and preſerve your People from Wrong, and inſtead of doing that, you will be the great Wrong-doer your ſelf; if inſtead of being a Conſervator of the Peace, you will be the grand Deſturber of the Peace, ſurely this is contrary to your Office, contrary to your Truſt. Now, Sir, if it be an Office of Inheritance, as you ſpeak of, your Title by Deſcent, let all Men know that great Offices are ſeizable and forfeitable, as if you had it but for a Year, and for your Life. Therefore, Sir, it will concern you to take into your ſerious Conſideration your great Miſcarriages in this kind.

Truly, Sir, I ſhall not particularize the many Miſcarriages of your Reign whatſoever, they are famouſly known: It had been happy for the Kingdom, and happy for you too, if it had not been ſo much known, and ſo much felt, as the Story of your Miſcarriages muſt needs be, and hath been already.

Sir, that that we are now upon, by the Command of the higheſt Court, hath been and is to try and judge you for theſe great Offences of yours. Sir, the Charge hath called you Tyrant, a Traytor, a Murderer, and a publick Enemy to the Commonwealth of England. Sir, it had been well if that any of all theſe Terms might rightly and juſtly have been ſpared, if any one of them at all.

King. Ha!

Ld Preſident. Truly, Sir, We have been told, Rex eſt dum bene regit, Tyrannus qui populum opprimit: And if ſo be that be the Definition of a Tyrant, then ſee how you come ſhort of it in your Actions, whether the higheſt Tyrant, by that way of arbitrary Government, and that you have fought for to introduce, and that you have fought to put, you were putting upon the People? Whether that was not as high an Act of Tyranny as any of your Predeceſſors were guilty of, nay, many Degrees beyond it?

Sir, the Term Traytor cannot be ſpared. We ſhall eaſily agree it muſt denote and ſuppoſe a Breach of Truſt; and it muſt ſuppoſe it to be done by a Superior. And therefore, Sir, as the People of England might have incurred that reſpecting you, if they had been truly guilty of it, as to the Definition of Law; ſo on the other ſide, when you did break your Truſt to the Kingdom, you did break your Truſt to your Superior: For the Kingdom is that for which you were truſted. And therefore, Sir, for this Breach of Truſt, when you are called to account, you are called to account by your Superiors. Minimus ad majorem in judicium vocat. And, Sir, the People of England cannot be ſo far wanting to themſelves, which God having dealt ſo miraculouſly and glorioufly for; they having Power in their hands, and their great Enemy, they muſt proceed to do Juſtice to themſelves, and to you: For, Sir, the Court could heartily deſire that you would lay your Hand upon your Heart, and conſider what you have done amiſs, that you would endeavour to make your Peace with God. Truly, Sir, theſe are your High Crimes, Tyranny and Treaſon.

There is a third Thing too, if thoſe had not been, and that is Murder, which is laid to your Charge. All the bloody Murders that have been committed ſince this Time that the Diviſion was betwixt you and your People, muſt be laid to your Charge, that have been acted or committed in theſe late Wars. Sir, it is an heinous and crying Sin: And truly, Sir, if any Man will ask us what Puniſhment is due to a Murderer, let God's Law, let Man's Law ſpeak. Sir, I will preſume that you are ſo well read in Scripture, as to know what God himſelf hath ſaid concerning the ſhedding of Man's Blood: Gen. 9. Numb. 35. will tell you what the Puniſhment is: And which this Court, in behalf of the whole Kingdom, are ſenſible of, of that innocent Blood that has been ſhed, whereby indeed the Land ſtands ſtill defiled with that Blood; and, as the Text hath it, it can no way be cleanſed but with the ſhedding of the Blood of him that ſhed this Blood. Sir, we know no Diſpenſation from this Blood in that Commandment, Thou ſhalt do no Murder: We do not know but that it extends to Kings as well as to the meaneſt Peaſants, the meaneſt of the People; the Command is univerſal. Sir, God's Law forbids it; Man's Law forbids: Nor do we know that there is any manner of Exception, not even in Man's Laws, for the Puniſhment of Murder in you. 'Tis true, that in the Caſe of Kings every private Hand was not to put forth it ſelf to this Work, for their Reformation and Puniſhment: But, Sir, the People repreſented having Power in their hands, had there been but one wilful Act of Murder by you committed, had Power to have convented you, and to have puniſhed you for it.

But then, Sir, the Weight that lies upon you in all thoſe reſpects that have been ſpoken, by reaſon of your Tyranny, Treaſon, Breach of Truſt, and the Murders that have been committed; ſurely, Sir, it muſt drive you into a ſad Conſideration concerning your eternal Condition. As I ſaid at firſt, I know it cannot be pleaſing to you to hear any ſuch Things as theſe are mentioned unto you from this Court, for ſo we do call our ſelves, and juſtify our ſelves to be a Court, and a high Court of Juſtice, authorized by the higheſt and ſolemneſt Court of the Kingdom, as we have often ſaid: And although you do yet endeavour what you may to diſcourt us, yet we do take Knowledge of our ſelves to be ſuch a Court as can adminiſter Juſtice to you; and we are bound, Sir, in Duty to do it. Sir, all I ſhall ſay before the reading of your Sentence, it is but this; The Court does heartily deſire that you will ſeriouſly think of thoſe Evils that you ſtand guilty of. Sir, you ſaid well to us the other Day, You wiſhed us to have God before our Eyes. Truly, Sir, I hope all of us have ſo: That God that we know is a King of Kings, and Lord of Lords; that God with whom there is no reſpect of Perſons; that God that is the Avenger of innocent Blood: We have that God before us; that God that does beſtow a Curſe upon them that withhold their Hands from ſhedding of Blood which is in the caſe of guilty Malefactors, and that do deſerve Death: That God we have before our Eyes. And were it not that the Conſcience of our Duty hath called us unto this Place, and this Imployment, Sir, you ſhould have had no Appearance of a Court here. But, Sir, we muſt prefer the Diſcharge of our Duty unto God, and unto the Kingdom, before any other Reſpect whatſoever. And although at this time many of us, if not all of us, are ſeverely threaten'd by ſome of your Party, what they intend to do, Sir, we do here declare, That we ſhall not decline or forbear the doing of our Duty in the Adminiſtration of Juſtice, even to you, according to the Merit of your Offence, although God ſhould permit thoſe Men to effect all that bloody Deſign in hand againſt us. Sir, we will ſay, and we will declare it, as thoſe Children in the fiery Furnace, that would not worſhip the golden Image that Nebuchadnezzar had ſet up, That their God was able to deliver them from that Danger that they were near unto: But yet if he would not do it, yet notwithſtanding that they would not fall down and worſhip the Image. We ſhall thus apply it: That though we ſhould not be delivered from thoſe bloody Hands and Hearts that conſpire the Overthrow of the Kingdom in general, of us in particular, for acting in this great Work of Juſtice, though we ſhould periſh in the Work, yet by God's Grace, and by God's Strength, we will go on with it. And this is all our Reſolutions. Sir, I ſay for your ſelf, we do heartily wiſh and deſire that God would be pleaſed to give you a Senſe of your Sins, that you would ſee wherein you have done amiſs, that you may cry unto him, that God would deliver you from Blood-guiltineſs. A good King was once guilty of that particular Thing, and was clear otherwiſe, ſaving in the matter of Uriah. Truly, Sir, the Story tells us that he was a repentant King; and it ſignifies enough that he had died for it, but that God was pleaſed to accept of him, and to give him his Pardon, Thou ſhalt not die, but the Child ſhall die: Thou haſt given Cauſe to the Enemies of God to blaſpheme.

King. I would deſire only one Word before you give Sentence; and that is, That you would hear me concerning thoſe great Imputations that you have laid to my Charge.

Ld Preſident. Sir, You muſt give me now leave to go on; for I am not far from your Sentence, and your Time is now paſt.

King. But I ſhall deſire you will hear me a few Words to you: For truly, whatever Sentence you will put upon me in reſpect of thoſe heavy Imputations, that I ſee by your Speech you have put upon me; Sir, It is very true, that -----

Ld Preſident. Sir, I muſt put you in mind: Truly, Sir, I would not willingly, at this time eſpecially, interrupt you in any thing you have to ſay, that is proper for us to admit of; but, Sir, you have not owned us as a Court, and you look upon us as a ſort of People met together; and we know what Language we receive from your Party.

King. I know nothing of that.

Ld Preſident. You diſavow us as a Court; and therefore for you to addreſs your ſelf to us, not acknowledging us as a Court to judge of what you ſay, it is not to be permitted. And the truth is, all along, from the firſt time you were pleaſed to diſavow and diſown us, the Court needed not to have heard you one Word: For unleſs they be acknowledged a Court, and ingaged, it is not proper for you to ſpeak. Sir, we have given you too much Liberty already, and admitted of too much Delay, and we may not admit of any farther. Were it proper for us to do, we ſhould hear you freely, and we ſhould not have declined to hear you at large, what you could have ſaid or proved on your behalf, whether for totally excuſing, or for in part excuſing thoſe great and heinous Charges that in whole or in part are laid upon you. But, Sir, I ſhall trouble you no longer, your Sins are of ſo large a Dimenſion, that if you do but ſeriouſly think of them, they will drive you to a ſad Conſideration of it, and they may improve in you a ſad and ſerious Repentance: And that the Court doth heartily wiſh that you may be ſo penitent for what you have done amiſs, that God may have Mercy, at leaſt wiſe, upon your better Part: Truly, Sir, for the other, it is our Parts and Duties to do that that the Law preſcribes. We are not here jus dare, but jus dicere. We cannot be unmindful of what the Scripture tells us, For to acquit the Guilty is of equal Abomination, as to condemn the Innocent: We may not acquit the Guilty. What Sentence the Law affirms to a Traytor, Tyrant, a Murderer, and a publick Enemy to the Country, that Sentence you are now to hear read unto you; and that is the Sentence of the Court.

The Lord Preſident commands the Sentence to be read; make an O yes, and command Silence while the Sentence is read.

O yes made: Silence commanded.

The Clerk read the Sentence, which was drawn up in Parchment:

WHereas the Commons of England in Parliament had appointed them an High Court of Juſtice, for the Trying of Charles Stuart, King of England, before whom he had been three times convented; and at the firſt time a Charge of High Treaſon, and other Crimes and Miſdemeanors, was read in the behalf of the Kingdom of England, &c.

Here the Clerk read the Charge.

Which Charge being read unto him, as aforeſaid, he the ſaid Charles Stuart was required to give his Anſwer: But he refuſed ſo to do; and ſo expreſs'd the ſeveral Paſſages at his Tryal in refuſing to anſwer.

For all which Treaſons and Crimes this Court doth adjudge, That the ſaid Charles Stuart, as a Tyrant, Traytor, Murderer, and a publick Enemy, ſhall be put to Death, by the ſevering his Head from his Body.

After the Sentence read, the Lord Preſident ſaid,

This Sentence now read and publiſhed, it is the Act, Sentence, Judgment, and Reſolution of the whole Court.

Here the Court ſtood up, as aſſenting to what the Preſident ſaid.

King. Will you hear me a Word, Sir?

Ld Preſident. Sir, you are not to be heard after the Sentence.

King. No, Sir?

Ld Preſident. No, Sir; by your favour, Sir. Guard, withdraw your Priſoner.

King. I may ſpeak after the Sentence -----

By your Favour, Sir, I may ſpeak after the Sentence ever.

By your Favour, (Hold!) the Sentence, Sir ---

I ſay, Sir, I do -----

I am not ſuffered for to ſpeak: Expect what Juſtice other People will have.

O Yes: All manner of Perſons that have any thing elſe to do, are to depart at this time, and to give their Attendance in the Painted-Chamber; to which Place this Court doth forthwith adjourn it ſelf.

Then the Court roſe, and the King went with his Guard to Sir Robert Cotton's, and from thence to Whitehall.

The

The Speech Cook deſign'd to have delivered, if the King had pleaded.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip,

MY Lord Preſident, and this High Court, erected for the moſt Comprehenſive, Impartial, and Glorious Piece of Juſtice, that ever was acted and executed upon the Theatre of England, for the trying and judging of Charles Stuart, whom God in his Wrath gave to be a King to this Nation, and will, I truſt, in great Love, for his notorious Prevarications and Blood-guiltineſs, take him away from us: He that hath been the Original of all Injuſtice, and the principal Author of more Miſchiefs to the Free-born People of this Nation, than the beſt Arithmetician can well enumerate, ſtands now to give an account of his Stewardſhip, and to receive the Good of Juſtice, for all the Evil of his Injuſtice and Cruelty. Had he ten thouſand Lives, they could not all ſatisfy for the numerous, horrid, and barbarous Maſſacres of Myriads, and Legions of innocent Perſons, which by his Commands, Commiſſions, and Procurements, (or at leaſt all the World muſt needs ſay, which he might have prevented; and he that ſuffers any Man to be kill'd, when he may ſave his Life without danger of his own, is a Murderer) have been cruelly ſlain, and inhumanly murdered, in this renowned Albion: Anglia hath been made an Akeldama, and her younger Siſter Ireland a Land of Ire and Miſery. And yet this hard-hearted Man, as he went out of the Court down the ſtairs, Jan. 22. ſaid (as ſome of his Guard told me and others) That he was not troubled for any of the Blood that hath been ſhed, but for the Blood of one Man, (peradventure he meant Strafford.) He was no more affected with a Liſt that was brought into Oxford of five or ſix thouſand ſlain at Edgehill, than to read one of Ben. Johnſon's Tragedies. You Gentlemen Royaliſts that fought for him, if ye had loſt your Lives for his ſake, you ſee he would have no more pitied you by his own confeſſion, than you do a poor Worm: and yet what Heart but would cleave, if it were a Rock; melt, if it were Ice; break, if it were a Flint; or diſſolve, if it were a Diamond, to conſider that ſo much precious Proteſtant Blood ſhould be ſhed in theſe three Kingdoms, ſo many gallant valiant Men of all Sorts and Conditions to be ſacrificed and loſe their Lives, and many of them to die ſo deſperately in regard of their eternal Conditions; and all this merely and only for the ſatisfying and fulfilling of one Man's ſinful Luſt and wicked Will? A good Shepherd is he that lays down his Life, or ventures it to ſave the Sheep; but for one to be ſo proudly wedded to his own Conceits, as ſo maliciouſly to oppoſe his private Opinion againſt the publick Judgment and Reaſon of State, and to make head againſt the Parliament, who acknowledged him to be Head thereof, ſo far as to give him the Honour of the Royal Aſſent, in ſettling the Militia and Safety of the People: I ſay, for a Proteſtant Prince, ſo beloved at home, and feared abroad, that in love and by gentle means might have had any thing from the Parliament, for him to occaſion the ſhedding of ſo much Blood for a pretended Prerogative, as hereafter will appear nothing in effect but to fix and perpetuate an abſolute Tyranny; I can ſay no leſs, But, O Lucifer, from whence art thou faln! and what Hereticks are they in Politicks, that would have had ſuch a Man to live? Much more, that think his Actions to have merited Love and Praiſe from Heaven and Earth. But now to diſſect the Charge.

I. That the Kings of England are truſted with a limited Power to govern by Law, the whole Stream and Current of legal Authorities run ſo limpid and clear, that I ſhould but weary thoſe that know it already, and trouble thoſe that need not know the particular Caſes; for it is one of the Fundamentals of Law, That the King is not above the Law, but the Law above the King. I could eaſily deraign it from 1 Edw. 3. to the Juriſdiction of Courts, That the King has no more Power or Authority, than what by Law is concredited and committed to him: but the moſt famous Authority is Forteſcue, Chancellor to Henry VI. (and therefore undoubtedly would not clip his Maſter's Prerogative) who moſt judicially takes a difference between a Government wholly Regal and Seignoral, as in Turkey, Ruſſia, France, Spain, &c. and a Government Politick and Mix'd, where the Law keeps the Beam even between Sovereignty and Subjection, as in England, Denmark, Sweden, and Poland. The firſt, where the Edict of a Prince makes the Law, reſembles an impetuous Inundation of the Waters, whereby the Corn and Hay, and other Fruits of the Earth are ſpoiled, as when it is Midwinter at Midſummer; the latter is like a ſweet ſmooth Stream, running by the pleaſant Fields and Meadows. That by the Law of England the King ought not to impoſe any thing upon the People, or take any thing away from them to the value of a Farthing, but by common Conſent in Parliaments or National Meetings; and that the People of common Right and by ſeveral Statutes ought to have Parliaments yearly, or oftner if need be, for the redreſs of publick Grievances, and for the enacting of good and wholeſome Laws, and repealing of old Statutes of Omeri which are prejudicial to the Nation: And that the King hath not by Law ſo much Power as a Juſtice of Peace, to commit any Man to Priſon for any Offence whatſoever, becauſe all ſuch matters were committed to proper Courts and Officers of Juſtice: And if the King by his verbal Command ſend for any Perſon to come before him, if the Party refuſed to attend, and the Meſſenger endeavouring to force him, they fell to blows; if the Meſſenger killed the Party ſent for, this by the Law is Murder in him, but if he killed the Meſſenger, this was juſtifiable in him, being in his own defence, ſo as to ſue forth a Pardon of courſe: Theſe and many other Caſes of like nature are ſo clear and well known, that I will not preſume to multiply Particulars.

That the King took an Oath at his Coronation to preſerve the Peace of the Nation, to do Juſtice to all, and to keep and obſerve the Laws which the People have, himſelf confeſſes: And it was charged upon the late Archbiſhop, that he emaſculated the Oath, and left out very material Words; Which the People ſhall chuſe: which certainly he durſt not have done, without the King's ſpecial Command. And it ſeems to me no light Preſumption, that from that very day he had a Deſign to alter and ſubvert the fundamental Laws, and to introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government. But tho there had been no Oath, yet by ſpecial Office and Duty of his Place every King of England is obliged to act for the People's Good: for all Power, as it is originally in the People (he muſt needs be extreme ignorant, malicious, or a Self-deſtroyer, that ſhall deny it) ſo it is given forth for their Preſervation, nothing for their Deſtruction. For a King to rule by Luſt, and not by Law, is a Creature that was never of God's making, not of God's Approbation, but his Permiſſion: and tho ſuch Men are ſaid to be Gods on Earth, 'tis in no other ſenſe than the Devil is called the God of this World. It ſeems that one Paſſage which the King would have offered to the Court, (which was not permitted him to diſpute the Supreme Authority in the Nation; and ſtanding mute, the Charge being for High Treaſon, it is a Conviction in Law) was, That 1 Sam. 8. is a Copy of the King's Commiſſion, by virtue whereof, he as King might rule and govern as he liſt; that he might take the Peoples Sons, and appoint them for himſelf, for his Chariots, and to be his Horſemen, and take their Daughters to be his Confectionaries, and take their Fields, and Vine-yards, and Olive-yards, even the beſt of them, and their goodlieſt Young-men, and their Aſſes, and give them to his Officers, and to his Servants; which indeed is a Copy and Pattern of an abſolute Tyrant and abſolute Slaves, where the People have no more than the Tyrant will afford them. The Holy Spirit in that Chapter does not inſinuate what a good King ought to do, but what a wicked King would preſume to do. Beſides, Saul and David had extraordinary Callings, but all juſt Power is now derived from and conferred by the People: yet in the Caſe of Saul it is obſervable, that the People, out of pride to be like other Nations, deſired a King, and ſuch a King as the Heathens had, which were all Tyrants: for they that know any thing in Hiſtory, know that the firſt four Monarchs were all Tyrants at firſt, till they gained the Peoples Conſent. Nimrod the great Hunter was Ninus that built Nineveh, the firſt Tyrant and Conqueror that had no Title; and ſo were all Kingdoms, which are not Elective till the Peoples ſubſequent Conſent; and tho it be by Deſcent, yet 'tis a Continuation of a Conqueſt; till the People conſent and voluntarily ſubmit to a Government, they are but Slaves, and in reaſon they may free themſelves if they can. In France the King begins his Reign from the Day of his Coronation: The Archbiſhop asks the People, if he ſhall be King; the twelve Peers, or ſome that perſonate them, ſay, Yes: They girt the Sword about him, then he ſwears to defend the Laws. And is any thing more natural than to keep an Oath? And tho vertuous Kings have prevailed with the People to make their Crowns Hereditary, yet the Coronation ſhews the Shell that the Kernel hath been in. Samuel was a good Judge, and there was nothing could be objected againſt him, therefore God was diſpleaſed at their inordinate Deſire of a King: and it ſeems to me, that the Lord declares his diſlike of all ſuch Kings as the Heathens were, that is, Kings with an unlimited Power, that are not tied to Laws; for he gave them a King in his Wrath, therein dealing with them as the wiſe Phyſician with the diſtempered and impatient Patient, who deſiring to drink Wine, tells him the Danger of Inflammation; yet Wine he will have, and the Phyſician conſidering a little Wine will do but little hurt, rather than his Patient by fretting ſhould take greater hurt, preſcribes a little White-Wine: wherein the Phyſician doth not approve his drinking of Wine, but of two Evils chuſeth the leaſt. The Jews would have a King for Majeſty and Splendour, like the Heathens; God permits this, he approves it not: it ſeems to me, that the Lord renounces the very Genus of ſuch Kings as are there mentioned, and the old word Conning (by contraction King) does not ſignify Power or Force to do what he will, but a knowing, wiſe, diſcreet Man, that opens the Peoples Eyes, and does not lead them by the Noſes, but governs them with Wiſdom and Diſcretion for their own Good. Therefore, Gentlemen-Royaliſts, be not ſo mad as to miſconſtrue either the Oaths of Allegiance or Supremacy, or any League or Covenant, that any Man ſhould ſwear to give any one leave to cut his throat; the true meaning is, that the King of England was Supreme in this Land, in oppoſition to the Pope, or any other Prince or Potentate, as the words of the Oath do import, That no foreign State, Prince, or Potentate, &c. In caſe of any foreign Invaſion, the King was by Law to be Generaliſſimo, to command the People for their own Safety; and ſo it was expounded by the Parliament in 13 Eliz. which for ſome Reaſon of State was not permitted to be printed with the Statutes. Beſides, God told thoſe Kings whom he had formerly anointed, what their Duty was; not to exalt themſelves overmuch above their Brethren, to delight themſelves in the Law of God: Out of which I infer, that the Turks, Tartars, Muſcovites, French, Spaniards, and all People that live at the beck and nod of Tyrannical Men, may and ought to free themſelves from that Tyranny, if, and when, they can; for ſuch Tyrants that ſo domineer with a Rod of Iron, do not govern by God's permiſſive Hand of Approbation or Benediction, but by the permiſſive Hand of his Providence, ſuffering them to ſcourge the People, for Ends beſt known to himſelf, until he open a way for the People to work out their own Enfranchiſements.

But before I ſpeak of the War, it will be neceſſary for the Satisfaction of rational Men, to open and prove the King's wicked Deſign, wherewith he ſtands charged. Now that he had from the beginning of his Reign ſuch a Deſign and Endeavour ſo to tear up the Foundations of Government, that Law ſhould be no Protection to any Man's Perſon or Eſtate, will clearly appear by what follows.

1. By his not taking the Oath ſo fully as his Predeceſſors did, that ſo when the Parliament ſhould tender good Laws to him for the Royal Aſſent, he might readily anſwer that he was not by Oath obliged to confirm or corroborate the ſame.

2. By his diſhonourable and perfidious Dealing with the People at his Coronation, when he ſet forth a Proclamation, That in regard of the Infection then ſpread through the Kingdom, he promiſed to diſpenſe with thoſe Knights, that by an old Statute were to attend at the Coronation, who were thereby required not to attend; but did notwithſtanding within a few Months after take advantage of their abſence, and raiſed a vaſt Sum of Money out of their Eſtates at the Council-Table: where they pleading the ſaid Proclamation for their Juſtification, they were anſwered that the Law of the Land was above any Proclamation; like that Tyrant, that when he could not by Law execute a Virgin, commanded her to be deflowred, and then put to death.

3. By his altering the Patents and Commiſſions to the Judges, which having heretofore had their Places granted to them ſo long as they ſhould behave have themſelves well therein, he made them but during pleaſure; that if ſo the Judges ſhould not declare the Law to be as he would have it, he might with a wet Finger remove them, and put in ſuch as ſhould not only ſay, but ſwear, if need were, That the Law was as the King would have it. For when a Man ſhall give five or ten thouſand Pounds for a Judge's Place, during the King's Pleaſure, and he ſhall the next day ſend to him to know his Opinion of a Difference in Law between the King and Subject; and it ſhall be intimated unto him, That if he do not deliver his Opinion for the King, he is likely to be removed out of his Place the next day: which, if ſo, he knows not how to live, but muſt rot in a Priſon for the Money which he borrowed to buy his Place; as was well known to be ſome of their Caſes, who underhand and cloſely bought great Places, to elude the Danger of the Statute; whether this was not too heavy a Temptation for the Shoulders of moſt Men to bear, is no hard matter to determine. So as upon the matter, that very Act of his made the King at the leaſt a potential Tyrant; for when that ſhall be Law which a King ſhall declare himſelf, or which ſhall be declared by thoſe whom he chuſes, this brings the People to the very next Step to Slavery.

But that which doth irrefragably prove the Deſign, was his reſtleſs Deſire to deſtroy Parliaments, or to make them uſeleſs: And for that, who knows not but that there were three or four National Meetings in Parliament in the firſt four Years of his Reign, which were called for Supply, to bring Money into his Coffers, in point of Subſidies, rather than for any Benefit to the People, as may appear by the few good Laws that were then made? But that which is moſt memorable, is the untimely diſſolving of the Parliament in 4 Car. when Sir John Elliot and others (who managed a Conference with the Houſe of Peers concerning the Duke of Buckingham, who, amongſt other things, was charged concerning the Death of King James) were committed cloſe Priſoners to the Tower, where he loſt his Life by cruel Indurance; which I may not paſs over without a ſpecial Animadverſion: For ſure there is no Turk or Heathen but will ſay, that if he were any way guilty of his Father's Death, let him die for it.

I would not willingly be ſo injurious to the honeſt Reader, as to make him buy that again which he hath formerly met with in the Parliament's Declaration or elſewhere; in ſuch a caſe a marginal Reference may be ſufficient. Nor would I herein be ſo preſumptuous as to prevent any thing that happily may be intended in any Declaration for more general Satisfaction; but humbly to offer a Student's Mite, which ſatisfies my ſelf, with Submiſſion to better Judgments.

How the King firſt came to the Crown, God and his own Conſcience beſt knew. It was well known and obſerved at Court, that a little before he was a profeſſed Enemy to the Duke of Buckingham; but inſtantly upon the Death of King James, took him into ſuch ſpecial Protection, Grace and Favour, that upon the matter he divided the Kingdom with him. And when the Earl of Briſtol had exhibited a Charge againſt the ſaid Duke, the 13th Article whereof concerned the Death of King James, he inſtantly diſſolved that Parliament, that ſo he might protect the Duke from the Juſtice thereof, and would never ſuffer any legal Enquiry to be made for his Father's Death. The Rabbins obſerve, that that which ſtuck moſt with Abraham about God's Command to ſacrifice Iſaac, was this; Can I not be obedient, unleſs I be unnatural? What will the Heathens ſay, when they hear I have killed my only Son? What will an Indian ſay to this Caſe? A King hath all Power in his hand to do Juſtice: There is one accuſed upon ſtrong Preſumptions, at the leaſt, for poiſoning that King's Father; the King protects him from Juſtice: whether do you believe that himſelf had any hand in his Father's Death? Had the Duke been accuſed for the Death of a Beggar, he ought not to have protected him from a judicial Tryal. We know that by Law it is no leſs than Miſpriſion of Treaſon to conceal a Treaſon; and to conceal a Murder, ſtrongly implies a Guilt thereof, and makes him a kind of Acceſſary to the Fact. He that hath no Nature to do juſtice to his own Father, could it ever be expected that he ſhould do juſtice to others? Was he fit to continue a Father to the People, who was without natural Affection to his own Father? Will he love a Kingdom, that ſhewed no Love to himſelf, unleſs it was, that he durſt not ſuffer Inquiſition to be made for it? But I leave it as a Riddle, which at the Day of Judgment will be expounded and unriddled; for ſome Sins will not be made manifeſt till that Day, with this only, That had he made the Law of God his Delight, and ſtudied therein Night and Day, as God commanded his Kings to do; or had he but ſtudied Scripture half ſo much as Ben. Johnſon or Shakeſpear, he might have learnt, That when Amaziah was ſettled in the Kingdom, he ſuddenly did juſtice upon thoſe Servants which had killed his Father Joaſh: he did not, by any pretended Prerogative, excuſe or protect them, but delivered them up into the Hands of that Juſtice which the Horridneſs of the Fact did undoubtedly demerit. 2 King. 12.20. and 14. 1, 5.

That Parliament (4 Car.) proving ſo abortive, the King ſets forth a Proclamation, That none ſhould preſume to move him to call Parliaments, for he knew how to raiſe Monies enough without the Help of Parliaments; therefore in 12 Years refuſeth to call any. In which Interval and Intermiſſion, how he had oppreſſed the People by Incroachments and Uſurpations upon their Liberties and Properties; and what vaſt Sums of Money he had forcibly exacted and exhauſted by illegal Patents and Monopolies of all ſorts, I refer the Reader to that moſt judicious and full Declaration of the State of the Kingdom, publiſhed in the beginning of this Parliament. That Judgment of Ship-money did, upon the matter, formalize the People abſolute Slaves, and him an abſolute Tyrant: For if the King may take from the People, in caſe of Neceſſity, and himſelf ſhall be Judge of that Neceſſity, then cannot any Man ſay that he is worth 6 d. for if the King ſay that he hath need of that 6 d. then by Law he muſt have it. I mean that great Nimrod, that would have made all England a Foreſt; and the People, which the Biſhop calls his Sheep, to be his Veniſon to be hunted at his pleaſure. 27 Mar. 5 Car.

Nor does the common Objection, That the Judges and evil Counſellors, and not the King, ought to be reſponſible for ſuch Male-Adminiſtrations, Injuſtice and Oppreſſion, bear the weight of a Feather in the Ballance of right Reaſon. For, 1ſt, Who made ſuch wicked and corrupt Judges? Were they not his own Creatures? And ought not every Man to be accountable for the Works of his own Hands? He that does not hinder the doing of evil, if it lies in his power to prevent it, is guilty of it as a Commander thereof. He that ſuffered thoſe black Stars to inflict such barbarous Cruelties, and unheard-of Punishments, as Brandings, slitting of Noses, &c. upon honest Men, to the Dishonour of the Protestant Religion, and Disgrace of the Image of God shining in the Face of Man, he well deserved to have been so served. But, 2ly, he had the Benefit of those illegal Fines and Judgments. I agree, That if a Judge shall oppress I. S. for the Benefit of I. D. the King ought not to answer for this, but the Judge, unless he protect the Judge against the Complaint of I. S. and in that case he makes himself guilty of it. But when an unjust Judgment is given against I. S. for the King's Benefit, and the Fine to come immediately into his Coffers; he that receives the Money, must needs be presumed to consent to the Judgment. But, 3ly, mark a Machiavel-Policy; Call no Parliaments to question the Injustice and Corruption of Judges for the Peoples Relief; and make your own Judges, and let that be the Law that they declare; whether it be reasonable or unreasonable, it is no matter.

But then how came it to pass that we had any more Parliaments? Had we not a gracious King to call a Parliament when there was so much need of it, and to pass so many gracious Acts to put down the Star-Chamber, &c? Nothing less; it was not any voluntary free Act of Grace, not the least Ingredient or Tincture of Love or good Affection to the People, that called the short Parliament in 40. but to serve his own turn against the Scots, whom he then had designed to enslave; and those seven Acts of Grace which the King pass'd, were no more than his Duty to do, nor half so much, but giving the People a Taste of their own Grists; and he dissents with them about the Militia, which commanded all the rest: he never intended thereby any more Good and Security to the People, than he that stealing the Goose, leaves the Feathers behind him. But to answer the Question, thus it was:

The King being wholly given up to be led by the Counsels of a Jesuited Party, who endeavoured to throw a Bone of Dissension among us, that they might cast in their Net into our troubled Waters, and catch more Fish: For St. Peter's See persuaded the King to set up a new Form of Prayer in Scotland, and laid the Bait so cunningly, that whether they saw it or not, they were undone: If they saw the Mystery of Iniquity couched in it, they would resist, and so merit Punishment for rebelling; if they swallowed it, it would make way for worse. Well, they saw the Poison, and refused to taste it. The King makes War, and many that loved Honour and Wealth more than God, assisted him; down he went with an Army, but his Treasure wasted in a short time: fight they would not, for fear of an After-reckoning. Some Commanders propound, that they should make their Demands, and the King grants all, comes back to London, and burns the Pacification, saying, it was counterfeit: They reassume their Forces, he raises a second War against them, and was necessitated to call a Parliament, offering to lay down Ship-money for twelve Subsidies. They refuse; the King in high Displeasure breaks off the Parliament, and in a Declaration commands them not to think of any more Parliaments, for he would never call another.

There was a King of Egypt that cruelly oppress'd the People; they poor Slaves complaining to one another, he feared a Rising, and commanded that none should complain upon pain of cruel Death. Spies being abroad, they often met, but durst not speak, but parted with Tears in their Eyes; which declared that they had more to utter, but durst not: This struck him to greater Fears, he commanded that none should look upon one another's Eyes at parting; therefore their Griefs being too great to be smothered, they fetch'd a deep Sigh when they parted, which moved them so much to compassionate one another's Wrongs, that they ran in and killed the Tyrant. The long hatching Irish Treason was now ripe, and therefore it was necessary that England and Scotland should be in Combustion, lest we might help the Irish Protestants. Well, the Scots get Newcastle, he knew they would trust him no more, he had so often broke with them, therefore no hopes to get them out by a Treaty. Many Lords and the City petition for a Parliament; the King was at such a Necessity, that yield he must to that which he most abhorred, God had brought him to such a strait; he that a few Months before assumed the Power of God, commanding Men not to think of Parliaments, to restrain the free Thoughts of the Heart of Man, was constrained to call one, which they knew he would break off when the Scots were sent home; therefore got a Confirmation of it, that he should not dissolve it without the Consent of both Houses, of which he had no hopes, or by force, which he suddenly attempted; and the English Army in the North, was to have come up to confound the Parliament and this rebellious and disloyal City, as the King called it; and for their pains was promised Thirty Thousand Pounds and the Plunder, as by the Examinations of Colonel Goring, Legg, &c. doth most fully appear.

And here by the way, I cannot but commend the City-Malignants; he calls them Rebels, they call him a gracious King: He, by his Proclamation at Oxford, prohibits all Commerce and Intercourse of Trade between this populous City (the Life and Interest whereof consists in Trade, without which many Thousands cannot subsist) and other Parts of the Kingdom: still they do Good against Evil, and petitioning him so often to cut their Throats, are troubled at nothing so much as that they are not reduced to that former and a worse Bondage than when there was a Lord Warden made in the City, and the King sent for as much of their Estates as he pleased. But surely the Oxfordshire Men are more to be commended; for when the King had commanded by his Proclamation, That what Corn, Hay, and other Provision in the County of Oxford, could not be fetch'd into the said City for his Garison, should be consumed and destroyed by Fire, for fear it should fall into the hands of the Parliament's Friends; (a Cruelty not to be parallel'd by any Infidel, Heathen, or Pagan King; nor to be precedented amongst the most avowed and professed Enemies, much less from a King to his Subjects) they resolved never to trust him any more.

Darlingrub. 15 April, 20 Car.

But the great Question will be, What hath been the true Ground and Occasion of the War? Which unless I clear, and put it out of question, as the Charge imports, I shall fall short of what I chiefly aim at, viz. That the King set up his Standard of War, for the Advancement and Upholding of his personal Interest, Power, and pretended Prerogative, against the publick Interest of common Right, Peace and Safety: and thus I prove it.

1. He fought for the Militia by Sea and Land, to have it at his absolute Dispose, and to justify and maintain his illegal Commissions of Array; and this this he pretended was his Birthright by the Law of England: which if it were ſo, then might he by the ſame Reaſon command all the Money in the Kingdom; for he that carries the Sword, will command the Purſe.

2. The next thing that he pretended to fight for, was his Power to call Parliaments when he pleaſed, and diſſolve them when he liſt; if they will ſerve his turn, then they may ſit by a Law to inſlave the People: ſo that the People had better chuſe all the Courtiers and King's Favourites at firſt, than to trouble themſelves with ludibrious Elections, to aſſemble the Freeholders together, to their great Labour and Expence both of Time and Coin; and thoſe which are choſen Knights and Burgeſſes, to make great Preparations, to take long Journies to London themſelves and their Attendants, to ſee the King and Lords in their Parliament-Robes ride in State to the Houſe, and with Domitian, to catch Flies. And no ſooner ſhall there be any Breathings, or a Spirit of Juſtice ſtirring and diſcovered in the Houſe of Commons, but the King ſends the Black-Rod, and diſſolves the Parliament, and ſends them back again as wiſe as they were before, but not with ſo much Money in their Purſes, to tell Stories to the Freeholders of the Bravery of the King and Lords.

3. Well, but if this be too groſs, and that the People begin to murmur and clamour for another Parliament, then there goes out another Summons, and they meet, and ſit for ſome time, but to as much purpoſe as before; for when the Commons have preſented any Bill for Redreſs of a publick Grievance, then the King hath ſeveral Games to play to make all fruitleſs: As, firſt, his own negative Voice, that if Lords and Commons are both agreed, then he will adviſe; which (I know not by what ſtrange Doctrine) hath been of late conſtrued to be a plain Denial: though, under favour, at the firſt it was no more but to allow him two or three Days time to conſider of the Equity of the Law; in which time if he could convince them of the Injuſtice of it, then ought he by his Oath and by Law to conſent to it.

4. But if by this means the King had contracted hard Thoughts from the People, and that not only the Commons, but many of the Lords, that have the ſame noble Blood running in their Veins, as thoſe Engliſh Barons, whoſe Swords were the chief Inſtruments that purchaſed Magna Charta; then, that the King might be ſure to put ſome others between him and the People's Hatred, the next Prerogative that he pretended to have, was to be the ſole Judge of Chivalry, to have the ſole Power of conferring Honours, to make as many Lords as he pleaſed, that ſo he might be ſure to have two againſt one, if the Houſe of Commons (by reaſon of the Multitude of Burgeſſes, which he likewiſe pretended a Power to make as many Borough-Towns and Corporations as he pleaſed) were not pack'd alſo. And this is that glorious Privilege of the Engliſh Parliaments, ſo much admired for juſt nothing: For if this pretended Prerogative might ſtand for Law, as was challenged by his Adherents, never was there a purer Cheat put upon any People, nor a more ready way to enſlave them, than by Privilege of Parliament; being juſt ſuch a Mockery of the People, as that Mock-Parliament at Oxford was, where the King's Conſent muſt be the Figure, and the Repreſentative ſtand for a Cypher.

5. But then out of Parliament the People are made to believe, that the King hath committed all Juſtice to the Judges, and diſtributed the Execution thereof into ſeveral Courts; and that the King cannot ſo much as impriſon a Man, or impoſe any thing upon, nor take any thing away from the People, as by Law he ought not to do: But now ſee what Prerogative he challenges.

1. If the King have a mind to have any publick-ſpirited Man removed out of the way, this Man is killed, the Murderer known, a Letter comes to the Judge, and it may be, it ſhall be found but Manſlaughter; if it be found Murder, the Man is condemned, but the King grants him a Pardon, which the Judges will allow, if the Word Murder be in it: But becauſe it is too groſs to pardon Murder, therefore the King ſhall grant him a Leaſe of his Life for ſeven Years, and then renew it (like a Biſhop's Leaſe) as he did to Major Prichard, who was lately juſticed; who being a Servant to the Earl of Lindſey, murdered a Gentleman in Lincolnſhire, and was condemned, and had a Leaſe of his Life from the King, as his own Friends have credibly told me.

2. For matter of Liberty: The King or any Courtier ſends a Man to Priſon; if the Judge ſet him at liberty, then put him out of his place; a Temptation too heavy for thoſe that love Money and Honour more than God, to bear: therefore any Judgment that is given between the King and a Subject, 'tis not worth a Ruſh; for what will not Money do?

Next, he challenges a Prerogative to enhance and debaſe Monies, which by Law was allowed him, ſo far as to ballance Trade, and no further; that if Gold went high beyond Sea, it might not be cheap here, to have it all bought up and tranſported: but under colour of that, he challenges a Prerogative, That the King may by Proclamation make Leather current, or make a Sixpence go for Twenty Shillings, or Twenty Shillings for a Sixpence. Which, not to mention any thing of the Project of Farthings or Braſs Money, he that challenges ſuch a Prerogative, is a potential Tyrant: For if he may make my Twelve-pence in my Pocket worth but Two-pence, what Property hath any Man in any thing that he enjoys?

Another Prerogative pretended was, That the King may avoid any Grant; and ſo may cozen and cheat any Man by a Law. The Ground whereof is, That the King's Grants ſhall be taken according to his Intention; which, in a ſober Senſe, I wiſh that all Mens Grants might be ſo conſtrued according to their Intentions, expreſs'd by Word or Writing: But by this means, it being hard to know what the King intended, his Grants have been like the Devil's Oracles, taken in any contrary Senſe for his own Advantage.

1. Rep. In the famous Caſe of Altonwood's there is vouched the Lord Lovel's Caſe: That the King granted Lands to the Lord Lovel, and his Heirs Males, not for Service done, but for a valuable Conſideration of Money paid. The Patentee well hoped to have enjoyed the Land not only during his Life, but that his Heirs Males, at leaſt of his Body, ſhould have likewiſe enjoyed it: But the Judges finding, it ſeems, that the King was willing to keep the Money, and have his Land again, (for what other Reaſon, no mortal Man can fathom) reſolved that it was a void Grant, and that nothing paſſed to the Patentee. I might inſtance in many Caſes of like nature, throughout all the Reports. As one once made his boaſt, That he never made or paſt any Patent or Charter from the Crown, but he reſerved one ſtarting Hole or other, and knew how how to avoid it; and ſo merely to cozen and defraud the poor Patentee. So that now put all theſe Prerogatives together, 1. The Militia by Sea and Land: 2. A Liberty to call Parliaments when he pleaſed; and to adjourn, prorogue, or diſſolve them at pleaſure: 3. A negative Voice, that the People cannot ſave themſelves without him, and muſt cut their own Throats, if commanded ſo to do: 4. The Nomination and Making of all the Judges, that, upon peril of the Loſs of their Places, muſt declare the Law to be as he pleaſes: 5. A Power to confer Honours upon whom, and how he pleaſes; a covetous baſe Wretch for five or ten thouſand Pounds to be courted, who deſerves to be carted: 6. To pardon Murderers, whom the Lord ſays ſhall not be pardoned: 7. To ſet a Value and Price of Moneys as he pleaſes; that if he be to pay ten thouſand Pounds, he may make Leather by his Proclamation to be current that day, or five Shillings to paſs for twenty Shillings; and if to receive ſo much, twenty Shillings to paſs for five Shillings: And laſtly, A legal Theft to avoid his own Grants: I may boldly throw the Gantlet, and challenge all the Machiavels in the World to invent ſuch an exquiſite Platform of Tyrannical Domination, and ſuch a perfect Tyranny, without Maim or Blemiſh, as this is, and that by a Law, which is worſt of all. But the truth is, theſe are no legal Prerogatives, but Uſurpations, Incroachments, and Invaſions upon the People's Rights and Liberties: And this eaſily effected, without any great Depth of Policy; for 'tis but being ſure to call no Parliaments, or make them uſeleſs, and make the Judges Places profitable, and place Avarice upon the Bench, and no doubt but the Law ſhall ſound as the King would have it. But let me thus far ſatisfy the ingenuous Reader, That all the Judges in England cannot make one Caſe to be Law that is not Reaſon, no more than they can prove a Hair to be white that is black; which if they ſhould ſo declare or adjudge, it is a mere Nullity: For Law muſt be Reaſon adjudged, where Reaſon is the Genus; and the Judgment in ſome Court makes the Differentiæ. And I never found that the fair Hand of the Common Law of England ever reached out any Prerogative to the King above the meaneſt Man, but in three Caſes; 1. In Matters of Honour and Pre-eminence to his Perſon; and in Matters of Intereſt: That he ſhould have Mines Royal of Gold and Silver, in whoſe Land ſoever they were diſcovered; and Fiſhes Royal, as Sturgeons and Whales, in whoſe Streams or Water ſoever they were taken, which very rarely happened; or to have Tythes out of a Pariſh that no body elſe could challenge: For ſays the Law, The moſt noble Perſons are to have the moſt noble Things. 2. To have his Patents freed from Deceit, that he be not overreached or cozened in his Contracts, being imployed about the great and arduous Affairs of the Kingdom. 3. His Rights to be freed from Incurſion of Time, not to be bound up by any Statute of Nonclaim: For indeed Poſſeſſion is a vain Plea, when the Matter of Right is in queſtion; for Right can never die: And ſome ſuch honourable Privileges of mending his Plea, or ſuing in what Court he will; and ſome ſuch Prerogatives, of a middle indifferent Nature, that could not be prejudicial to the People. But that the Law of England ſhould give the King any ſuch vaſt, immenſe, precipitating Power, or any ſuch God-like State, That he ought not to be accountable for wicked Actions, or Male-adminiſtrations and Miſgovernment, as he hath challenged and averred in his Anſwer to the Petition of Right, or any ſuch Principles of Tyranny; which are as inconſiſtent with the People's Liberties and Safety as the Ark and Dagon, Light and Darkneſs, in an intenſive degree; is a moſt vain and irrational Thing to imagine. And yet that was the Ground of the War, as himſelf often declared; and that would not have half contented him, if he had come in by the Sword. But ſome rational Men object, How can it be Murder, ſay they, for the King to raiſe Forces againſt the Parliament, ſince there is no other way of determining Differences between the King and his Subjects, but by the Sword? For the Law is no competent Judge between two ſupreme Powers; and then if it be only a contending for each other's Right, where is the Malice that makes the killing of a Man Murder? Take the Anſwer thus: Firſt, How is it poſſible to imagine two ſupreme Powers in one Nation, no more than two Suns in one Firmament? If the King be ſupreme, the Parliament muſt be ſubordinate: If they ſupreme, then he ſubordinate. But then it is alledged, That the King challenged a Power only co-ordinate, that the Parliament could do nothing without him, nor he without them. Under favour, two Powers co-ordinate is as abſurd as the other: For though in quiet Times the Commons have waited upon the King, and allowed him a negative Voice in Matters of leſs Concernment, where Delay could not prove dangerous to the People; yet when the Com- ſhall vote that the Kingdom is in danger, unleſs the Militia be ſo and ſo ſettled, now if he will not agree to it, they are bound in Duty to do it themſelves. And 'tis impoſſible to imagine that ever any Man ſhould have the Conſent of the People to be their King upon other Conditions, (without which no Man ever had Right to wear the Diadem:) For Conqueſt makes a Title amongſt Wolves and Bears, but not amongſt Men.

When the firſt Agreement was concerning the Power of Parliaments, if the King ſhould have ſaid, Gentlemen, are you content to allow me any negative Voice, that if you vote the Kingdom to be in danger, unleſs ſuch an Act paſs, if I refuſe to aſſent, ſhall nothing be done in that Caſe? Surely no rational Man but would have anſwered, May it pleaſe your Majeſty, we ſhall uſe all dutiful Means to procure your Royal Aſſent: But if you ſtill refuſe, we muſt not ſit ſtill, and ſee our ſelves ruin'd; we muſt and will ſave our ſelves, whether you will or no. And will any Man ſay that the King's Power is diminiſhed, becauſe he cannot hurt the People? Or that a Man is leſs in Health that hath many Phyſicians to attend him? God is omnipotent, that cannot ſin; and all Power is for the People's Good: But a Prince may not ſay that is for the People's Good, which they ſee and feel to be for their Hurt. And as for the Malice, the Law implies that; as when a Thief ſets upon a Man to rob him, he hath no Spite to the Man, but Love to the Money: But it is an implied Malice, that he will kill the People unleſs they will be Slaves.

Q. But by what Law is the King condemned?

Reſp. By the Fundamental Law of this Kingdom, by the general Law of all Nations, and the unanimous Conſent of all rational Men in the World, written in every Man's Heart with the Pen of a Diamond in Capital Letters, and a Character ſo legible, that he that runs may read, viz. That when any Man is intruſted with the Sword for the Protection and Preſervation of the People, if this Man ſhall imploy it to their Deſtruction, which was put into his Hand for their Safety, by the Law of that Land he becomes an Enemy to that People, and deſerves

the moſt exemplary and ſevere Puniſhment that can be invented. And this is the firſt neceſſary Fundamental Law of every Kingdom, which by intrinſical Rules of Government muſt preſerve it ſelf. And this Law needed not be expreſs'd, That if a King become a Tyrant, he ſhall die for it; 'tis ſo naturally implied. We do not uſe to make Laws which are for the Preſervation of Nature; that a Man ſhould eat, and drink, and buy himſelf Clothes, and enjoy other natural Comforts? No Kingdom ever made any Laws for it. And as we are to defend our ſelves naturally, without any written Law, from Hunger and Cold, ſo from outward Violence. Therefore, if a King would deſtroy a People, 'tis abſurd and ridiculous to ask by what Law he is to die. And this Law of Nature is the Law of God, written in the fleſhly Tables of Mens Hearts; that, like the elder Siſter, hath a prerogative Right of Power before any poſitive Law whatſoever: And this Law of Nature is an undubitable Legiſlative Authority of it ſelf, that hath a ſuſpenſive Power over all human Laws. If any Man ſhall by expreſs Covenant, under Hand and Seal, give Power to another Man to kill him, this is a void Contract, being deſtructive to Humanity. And by the Law of England any Act or Agreement againſt the Laws of God or Nature, is a mere Nulity: For as Man hath no hand in the making of the Laws of God or Nature, no more hath he power to marr or alter them. If the Pilot of a Ship be drunk, and running upon a Rock; if the Paſſengers cannot otherwiſe prevent it, they may throw him into the Sea to cool him. And this Queſtion hath received Reſolution this Parliament. When the Militia of an Army is committed to a General, 'tis not with any expreſs Condition that he ſhall not turn the Mouths of his Cannons againſt his own Soldiers; for that is ſo naturally and neceſſarily implied, that it's needleſs to be expreſs'd: Inſomuch, as if he did attempt or command ſuch a Thing againſt the Nature of his Truſt and Place, it did ipſo facto eſtate the Army in a Right of Diſobedience; unleſs any Man be ſo groſly ignorant, to think that Obedience binds Men to cut their own Throats, or their Companions. Nor is this any Secret of the Law which hath lain hid from the beginning, and now brought out to bring him to Juſtice; but that which is connatural with every Man, and innate in his Judgment and Reaſon, and is as antient as the firſt King, and an epidemical binding Law in all Nations in the World: For when many Families agree, for the Preſervation of Human Society, to inveſt any King or Governor with Power and Authority; upon the acceptance thereof, there is a mutual Truſt and Confidence between them, that the King ſhall improve his Power for their Good, and make it his Work to procure their Safeties, and they to provide for his Honour; which is done to the Commonwealth in him, as the Sword and Enſigns of Honour, carried before the Lord Mayor, are for the Honour of the City. Now, as when any one of this People ſhall compaſs the Death of the Governor, ruling well, this is a Treaſon puniſhable with Death, for the Wrong done to the Community, and Anathema be to ſuch a Man; ſo when he or they that are truſted to fight the People's Battels, and to procure their Welfare, ſhall prevaricate, and act to the inſlaving or deſtroying of the People, who are their Liege Lords, and all Governors are but the People's Creatures, and the Work of their Hands, to be accountable as their Stewards, (and it not ſenſleſs for the Veſſel to ask the Potter by what Law he calls it to account?) this is High Treaſon with a Witneſs, and far more tranſcendent than in the former Caſe; becauſe the King was paid for his Service, and the Dignity of the Perſon does increaſe the Offence. For a great Man of noble Education and Knowledge to betray ſo great a Truſt, and abuſe ſo much Love as the Parliament ſhewed to the King, by petitioning him as good Subjects, praying him as good Chriſtians, adviſing him as good Counſellors, and treating with him as the great Counſel of the Kingdom, with ſuch infinite Care and Tenderneſs of his Honour, (a Courſe which God's People did not take with Rehoboam; they never petitioned him, but adviſed him; he refuſed their Counſel, and hearkened to young Counſellors, and they cry, To thy Tents, O Iſrael: and made quick and ſhort Work of it;) after all this, and much more Longanimity and Patience (which God exerciſes towards Man to bring him to Repentance) from the Lord to the Servant, for him not only to ſet up a Standard of War, in defiance of his dread Sovereign the People, (for ſo they truly were in Nature, though Names have befooled us) but to perſiſt ſo many Years in ſuch cruel Perſecutions; who with a Word of his Mouth might have made a Peace: If ever there were ſo ſuperlative a Treaſon, let the Indians judge. And whoſoever ſhall break and violate ſuch a Truſt and Confidence, Anathema Maranatha be unto them.

Com. F. Leiceſter's Caſe.

Q. But why was there not a written Law to make it Treaſon for the King to deſtroy the People, as well as for a Man to compaſs the King's Death?

Reſp. Becauſe our Anceſtors did never imagine, that any King of England would have been ſo deſperately mad, as to levy a War againſt the Parliament and People; as in the common Inſtance of Paricide, the Romans made no Law againſt him that ſhould kill his Father, thinking no Child would be ſo unnatural to be the Death of him who was the Author of his Life: But when a Child came to be accuſed for Murder, there was a more cruel Puniſhment inflicted, than for other Homicides; for he was thrown into the Sea in a great Leather Barrel, with a Dog, a Jackanapes, a Cock, and a Viper, ſignificant Companions for him, to be deprived of all the Elements, as in my Poor Man's Caſe, fol. 10. Nor was there any Law made againſt Parents that ſhould kill their Children; yet if any Man was ſo unnatural, he had an exemplary Puniſhment.

Obj. But is it not a Maxim in Law, That the King can do no Wrong?

Reſp. For any Man to ſay ſo, is Blaſphemy againſt the great God of Truth and Love: For only God cannot err; becauſe what he wills is right, becauſe he wills it. And 'tis a ſad thing to conſider how learned Men, for unworthy Ends, ſhould uſe ſuch Art to ſubdue the People, by Tranſportation of their Senſes, as to make them believe that the Law is, That the King can do no Wrong.

Firſt, for Law; I do aver it with Confidence, but in all Humility, that there is no ſuch Caſe to be found in Law, That if the King rob, or murder, or commit ſuch horrid Extravagancies, that it is no Wrong. Indeed the Caſe is put in Hen. 7. by a Chief Judge, That if the King kill a Man, 'tis no Felony, to make him ſuffer Death; that is, to be meant in ordinary Courts of Juſtice. But there is no doubt but the Parliament might try the King, or appoint others to judge him for it. We find Caſes in Law, that the King hath been ſued even in Civil Actions.

In

In 43 Edw. 3. 22. it is reſolved, That all manner of Actions did lie againſt the King, as againſt any Lord; and 24 Edw. 3. 23. Willy a learned Judge ſaid, That there was a Writ Præcipe Henrico Regi Angliæ.

Indeed E. 1. did make an Act of State, That Men ſhould ſue to him by Petition; but this was not agreed unto in Parliament: Thelwall, tit. Roye Digeſt of Writs, 71. But after, when Judges Places grew great, the Judges and Biteſheeps began to ſing Lullaby, and ſpeak Placentia to the King, that my Lord the King is an Angel of Light: now Angels are not reſponſible to Men, but God, therefore not Kings. And the Judges, they begin to make the King a God, and ſay, That by Law his Stile is Sacred Majeſty, tho he ſwears every hour; and Gracious Majeſty, tho gracious Men be the chief Objects of his Hatred; and that the King hath an Omnipotency and Omnipreſence.

But I am ſure there is no Caſe in Law, That if the King levy a War againſt the Parliament and People, that it is not Treaſon. Poſſibly that Caſe in H. 7. may prove, That if the King ſhould in his paſſion kill a Man, this ſhall not be Felony to take away the King's Life; for the Inconveniency may be greater to the People, by putting a King to death for one Offence and Miſcarriage, than the Execution of Juſtice upon him can advantage them. But what's this to a levying of War againſt a Parliament? Never any Judge was ſo devoid of Underſtanding, that he denied that to be Treaſon. But ſuppoſe a Judge that held his Place at the King's pleaſure did ſo, I am ſure never any Parliament ſaid ſo. But what if there had in dark Times of Popery been an Act made, That the King might murder, raviſh, burn and perpetrate all Miſchiefs, and play Reaks with impunity; will any Man that hath but Wit enough to meaſure an Ell of Cloth, or to tell Twenty, ſay, That this is an Obligation for Men to ſtand ſtill, and ſuffer a Monſter to cut their throats, and grant Commiſſion to rob at Suters-Hill; as ſuch and no better are all legal Thefts and Oppreſſions. The Doctor ſays, That a Statute againſt giving an Alms to a poor Man is void: He is no Student, I mean, was never bound Prentice to Reaſon, that ſays, A King cannot commit Treaſon againſt the People.

Obj. But are there not Negative Words in the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. That nothing elſe ſhall be conſtrued to be Treaſon, but what is there expreſs'd?

Reſ. That Statute was intended for the Peoples Safety, that the King's Judges ſhould not make Traytors by the dozens, to gratify the King or Courtiers; but it was never meant, to give liberty to the King to deſtroy the People: and though it be ſaid, That the King and Parliament only may declare Treaſon, yet no doubt if the King will neglect his Duty, it may be ſo declared without him; for when many are obliged to do any ſervice, if ſome of them fail, the reſt muſt do it.

Obj. But is there any Precedent, that ever any Man was put to death that did not offend againſt ſome written Law? For where there is no Law, there is no Tranſgreſſion.

Reſ. 'Tis very true, where there is neither Law of God, nor Nature, nor poſitive Law, there can be no Tranſgreſſion; and therefore that Scripture is much abuſed, to apply it only to Laws poſitive. For,

1. Ad ea quæ frequentius, &c. 'Tis out of the Sphere of all earthly Law-givers to comprehend and expreſs all particular Caſes that may poſſibly happen, but ſuch as are of moſt frequent concurrence; Particulars being different, like the ſeveral Faces of Men different from one another, elſe Laws would be too tedious: and as Particulars occur, rational Men will reduce them to general Reaſons of State, ſo as every thing may be adjudged for the Good of the Community.

2. The Law of England is Lex non ſcripta, and we have a Direction in the Epiſtle to the 3 Rep. That when our Law-Books are ſilent, we muſt repair to the Law of Nature and Reaſon. Hollingſhed, and other Hiſtorians, tell us, That in 20 H. 8. the Lord Hungerford was executed for Buggery, for which there was then no poſitive Law to make it Felony: and before any Statute againſt Witchcraft, many Witches have been hanged in England, becauſe it is Death by God's Law. If any Italian Mountebank ſhould come over hither, and give any Man Poiſon that ſhould lie in his Body above a Year and a Day, and then kill him, as it is reported they can give a Man Poiſon that ſhall conſume the Body in three Years; will any make ſcruple or queſtion to hang up ſuch a Raſcal? At Naples, the great Treaſurer of Corn being intruſted with many thouſand Quarters at three Shillings the Buſhel, for the common Good, finding an opportunity to ſell it for five Shillings the Buſhel to foreign Merchants, enriched himſelf exceedingly thereby; and Corn growing ſuddenly dear, the Council call'd him to account for it, who proffered to allow three Shillings for it, as it was delivered into his cuſtody, and hoped thereby to eſcape: but for ſo great a Breach of Truſt, nothing would content the People but to have him hang'd; and tho there was no poſitive Law for it, to make it Treaſon, yet it was reſolved by the beſt Politicians, that it was Treaſon to break ſo great a Truſt by the Fundamental Conſtitution of the Kingdom, and that for ſo great an Offence he ought to die, that durſt preſume to inrich himſelf by that which might endanger the Lives of ſo many Citizens; for as Society is natural, ſo Governours muſt of neceſſity, and in all reaſon provide for the Preſervation and Suſtenance of the meaneſt Member, he that is but as the little Toe of the Body Politick.

But concerning Ireland, where there were no leſs than 152000 Men, Women, and Children, moſt barbarouſly and ſatanically murdered in the firſt four Months of the Rebellion, as appeared by ſubſtantial Proofs, at the King's-Bench, at the Tryal of Macguire; if the King had a hand, or but a little-finger in that Maſſacre, every Man will ſay, Let him die the death: but how ſhall we be aſſured of that? How can we know the Tree, better than by its Fruits? For my own particular, I have ſpent many ſerious Thoughts about it, and I deſire in doubtful Caſes to give Charity the upper hand; but I cannot in my Conſcience acquit him of it. Many ſtrong Preſumptions, and ſeveral Oaths of honeſt Men, that have ſeen the King's Commiſſion for it, cannot but amount to a clear proof. If I meet a Man running down ſtairs with a bloody Sword in his hand, and find a Man ſtabbed in the Chamber, tho I did not ſee this Man run into the Body by that Man which I met, yet if I were of the Jury, I durſt not but find him guilty of the Murder; and I cannot but admire that any Man ſhould deny that for him, which he durſt never deny for himſelf. How often was that monſtrous Rebellion laid in his diſh? and yet he durſt never abſolutely deny it. Never was Bear ſo unwillingly brought to the ſtake, as he was to declare againſt the Rebels; and when he did once call them Rebels, he would ſuffer but forty Copies to be printed, and thoſe to be ſent to him ſeal'd: and he hath ſince above forty times called them his Subjects, and his good Subjects; and ſent to Ormond to give ſpecial Thanks to ſome of theſe Rebels, as Muskerry and Plunket: (which I am confident, by what I ſee of his Height of Spirit and undaunted Reſolution at his Tryal and ſince, acting the laſt part anſwerable to the former part of his Life; he would rather have loſt his Life, than to have ſent Thanks to two ſuch incarnate Devils, if he had not been as guilty as themſelves.) Queſtionleſs if the King had not been guilty of that Blood, he would have made a thouſand Declarations againſt thoſe Blood-hounds and Hell-hounds, that are not to be named but with Fire and Brimſtone, and have ſent to all Princes in the world for Aſſiſtance againſt ſuch accurſed Devils in the ſhape of Men: but he durſt not offend thoſe Fiends and Fire-brands; for if he had, I verily believe they would ſoon have produced his Commiſſion under his Hand and Seal of Scotland at Edinburgh, 1641. a Copy whereof is in the Parliament's hands, atteſted by Oath, diſperſed by Copies in Ireland, which cauſed the general Rebellion.

Obj. He did not give Commiſſion to kill the Engliſh, but to take their Forts, Caſtles, Towns and Arms, and come over and help him.

And is it like all this could be effected without the Slaughter of the poor Engliſh? Did the King ever call them Rebels, but in forty Proclamations wrung out of him by force, by the Parliament's Importunity? murdering the Proteſtants was ſo acceptable to him! And with this Limitation, That none ſhould be publiſhed without his further Directions, as appears under Nichols's Hand, now in the Parliament's cuſtody. But the Scots were proclaimed Rebels before they had killed a Man, or had an Army, and a Prayer againſt them enjoined in all Churches; but no ſuch matter againſt the Iriſh.

Well, when the Rebels were worſted in Ireland, the King makes war here to protect them, which but for his fair Words had been prevented; often calling God to witneſs, he would as ſoon raiſe war on his own Children: and Men from Popiſh Principles aſſiſt him. Well! we fought in jeſt, and were kept between winning and loſing: The King muſt not be too ſtrong, leſt he revenge himſelf; nor the Parliament too ſtrong, for the Commons would rule all; till Naſeby Fight, that then the King could keep no more Days of Thankſgiving ſo well as we. Then he makes a Ceſſation in Ireland, and many Iriſh came over to help him: Engliſh came over with Papiſts, who had ſcarce wiped their Swords ſince they had killed their Wives and Children, and had their Eſtates.

But thus I argue; The Rebels knew that the King had proclaimed them Traitors, and forty Copies were printed; and the firſt Clauſe of an Oath enjoined by the General Council of Rebels, was, To bear true Faith and Allegiance to King Charles, and by all means to maintain his Royal Prerogative, againſt the Puritans in the Parliament of England. Now is any Man ſo weak in his Intellectuals, as to imagine, That if the Rebels had without the King's Command or Conſent murdered ſo many Proteſtants, and he thereupon had really proclaimed them Rebels, that they would after this have taken a new Oath to have maintained his Prerogative? No, thoſe bloody Devils had more Wit than to fight in jeſt. If the King had once in good earneſt proclaimed them Rebels, they would have burnt their Scabbards, and would not have filled themſelves the King's and Queen's Army, as they did. And truly, that which the King ſaid for himſelf, That he would have adventured himſelf, to have gone in perſon into Ireland to ſuppreſs that Rebellion, is but a poor Argument to inforce any Man's Belief, that he was not guilty of the Maſſacre: for it makes me rather think, that he had ſome hopes to have returned in the head of 20 or 30000 Rebels, to have deſtroy'd this Nation. For when the Earl of Leiceſter was ſent by the Parliament to ſubdue the Rebels, did not the King hinder him from going? And were not the Clothes and Proviſions which were ſent by the Parliament for the Relief of the poor Proteſtants there, ſeiz'd upon by his Command, and his Men of War; and ſold or exchanged for Arms and Ammunition to deſtroy this Parliament? And does not every Man know, That the Rebels in Ireland gave Letters of Mart for taking the Parliament's Ships, but freed the King's, as their very good Friends? And I have often heard it credibly reported, that the King ſhould ſay, That nothing more troubled him, but that there was not as much Proteſtant Blood running in England and Scotland, as in Ireland. And when that horrid Rebellion begun to break forth, how did the Papiſts here triumph and boaſt, that they hoped e'er long to ſee London Streets run down in Blood? And yet I do not think, that the King was a Papiſt, or that he deſigned to introduce the Pope's Supremacy in Spiritual Things into this Kingdom: but thus it was; A Jeſuitical Party at Court was too prevalent in his Counſels, and ſome mungrel Proteſtants, that leſs hated the Papiſts than the Puritans, by the Queen's Mediation joined all together to deſtroy the Puritans; hoping that the Papiſts, and the Laodicean Proteſtant would agree well enough together. And laſtly, if it be ſaid, That if the King and the Rebels were never fallen out, what need had Ormond to make a Pacification or Peace with them by the King's Commiſſion, under the Great Seal of Ireland? Truly there hath been ſo much Daubing, and ſo little Plain-dealing, that I wonder how there comes to be ſo many Beggars.

Concerning the betraying of Rochel, to the inſlaving of the Proteſtant Party in France, I confeſs, I heard ſo much of it, and was ſo ſhamefully reproached for it in Geneva, and by the Proteſtant Miniſters in France, that I could believe no leſs than that the King was guilty of it. I have heard fearful Exclamations from the French Proteſtants againſt the King and the late Duke of Buckingham, for the betraying of Rochel. And ſome of the Miniſters told me ten Years ſince, That God would be revenged of the wicked King of England, for betraying Rochel. And I have often heard Deodati ſay, concerning Henry IV. of France, That the Papiſts had his Body, but the Proteſtants had his Heart and Soul; but for the King of England, the Proteſtants had his Body, but the Papiſts had his Heart: Not that I think he did believe Tranſubſtantiation, but I verily believe, that he loved a Papiſt better than a Puritan.

The Duke of Roan, who was an honeſt gallant Man, and the King's Godfather, would often ſay, That all the Blood which was ſhed in Dauphine, would be caſt upon the King of England's ſcore. For thus it was: The King ſent a Letter to the Rochellers by Sir William Beecher, to aſſure them, That he would aſſiſt them to the uttermoſt againſt the French King, for the Liberty of their Religion; conditionally, That they would not make any Peace without him: and Mountague was ſent into Savoy, and to the Duke of Roan, to aſſure them from the King, That 30000 Men ſhould be ſent out of England, to aſſiſt them againſt the French King, in three Fleets; one to land in the Iſle of Rhee, a ſecond in the River of Bourdeaux, and a third in Normandy. Whereupon the Duke of Roan being General for the Proteſtants, not ſuſpecting that the French durſt aſſault him in Dauphine, (becauſe the King of England was ready to invade him, as he had promiſed) drew out his Army upon diſadvantage: whereupon the French King employ'd all his Army into Dauphine againſt the Proteſtants, who were forced to retreat, and the Duke of Roan to fly to Geneva, and the Proteſtants to accept of Peace upon very hard Conditions, to ſtand barely at the King's devotion for their Liberties, without any cautionary Towns of Aſſurance, as formerly they had; being ſuch a Peace, as the Sheep make with the Wolves, when the Dogs are diſmiſs'd. And the Proteſtants have ever ſince cry'd out to this very day, It is not the French King that did us wrong, for then we could have borne it; but it was the King of England, a profeſs'd Proteſtant, that betray'd us. And when I have many times intreated Deodati and others, to have a good opinion of the King, he would anſwer me, That we are commanded to forgive our Enemies, but not to forgive our Friends.

There is a French Book printed about two Years ſince, called Memoires du Monſieur de Roan, where the King's horrid Perfidiouſneſs, and deep Diſſimulation, is very clearly unfolded and diſcovered. To inſtance but in ſome Particulars: The King having ſolemnly engaged to the Rochellers, that he would hazard all the Forces he had in his three Kingdoms, rather than they ſhould periſh; did in order thereunto, to gain Credulity with them, ſend out eight Ships to Sea, commanded by Sir John Pennington, to aſſiſt the Rochellers as was pretended, but nothing leſs intended; for Pennington aſſiſted the French King againſt the Rochellers, which made Sir Ferdinando Gorge to go away with the Great Neptune, in deteſtation of ſo damnable a Plot: and the Engliſh Maſters and Owners of Ships refuſing to lend their Ships to deſtroy the Rochellers, whom with their Souls they deſired to relieve, Pennington in a mad ſpite ſhot at them.

Soubiſe being Agent here in England for the French Proteſtants, acquainted the King how baſely Pennington had dealt, and that the Engliſh Ships had mowed down the Rochel Ships like Graſs, not only to the great danger and loſs of the Rochellers, but to the eternal diſhonour of this Nation, ſcandal of our Religion, and diſadvantage of the general Affairs of all the Proteſtants in Chriſtendom. The King ſeems to be diſpleaſed, and ſays, What a Knave is this Pennington! but whether it was not feigned, let all the World judge. But the thing being ſo plain, ſaid Soubiſe to the King, Sir, why did the Engliſh Ships aſſiſt the French King, and thoſe that would not, were ſhot at by your Admiral? The French Proteſtants are no Fools; how can I make them believe that you intend their Welfare? The King was much put to it for a ready Anſwer, but at laſt thus it was patch'd up; That the French King had a deſign to be revenged of Genoa for ſome former Affront, and that the King lent him eight Engliſh Ships to be employed for Genoa; and that ſailing towards Genoa, they met with ſome of the Rochellers accidentally, and that the Engliſh did but look on, and could not help it, not having any Commiſſion to fight at that preſent: wherein the Rochellers might and would have declined a Sea-fight, if they had not expected our aſſiſtance. But ſtill the poor Proteſtants were willing rather to blame Pennington than the King; who in great ſeeming Zeal, being Surety for the laſt Peace between the French King and his Proteſtant Subjects, ſends Devick to the Duke of Roan, to aſſure him, That if Rochel were not ſpeedily ſet at liberty, (which the French King had beſieged, contrary to his Agreement) he would employ his whole Strength, and in his own perſon ſee it perform'd. Which being not done, then the King ſends the Duke of Buckingham to the Iſle of Rhee, and gives new hopes of better Succeſs to Soubiſe; commanding the Admiral and Officers in the Fleet, in Soubiſe's hearing, to do nothing without his Advice. But when the Duke came to land at the Iſle of Rhee, many gallant Engliſhmen loſt their Lives, and the Duke brought back 300 Tuns of Corn from the Rochellers, which he had borrowed of them, pretending a Neceſſity for the Engliſhmen, which was but feign'd, knowing it was a City impregnable, ſo long as they had Proviſion within. I confeſs the Rochellers were not wiſe, to lend the Duke their Corn, conſidering how they had been dealt with. But what a baſe thing was it ſo to betray them, and to ſwear unto them, That they ſhould have Corn enough ſent from England, before they wanted it! And for a long time, God did miraculouſly ſend them in a new kind of Fiſh, which they never had before. But when the Duke came to Court, he made the honeſt Engliſh believe, that Rochel would ſuddenly be relieved, and that there was not the leaſt danger of the loſs of it: but Secretary Cook, an honeſt underſtanding Gentleman, and the only Friend at Court to the Rochellers, labouring to improve his Power to ſend ſome Succour to Rochel, was ſuddenly ſent away from Court upon ſome ſleeveleſs Errand, or as ſome ſay to Portſmouth, under colour of providing Corn for Rochel; but the Duke ſoon after went thither, and ſaid, His Life upon it, Rochel is ſafe enough. And the next day, Soubiſe being at Portſmouth, he preſs'd the Duke of Buckingham moſt importunately to ſend Relief to Rochel then or never. The Duke told him, that he had juſt then heard good News of the victualling of Rochel, which he was going to tell the King: which Soubiſe making doubt of, the Duke affirmed it by an Oath; and having the words in his mouth, he was ſtabb'd by Felton, and inſtantly died. The poor Rochellers ſeeing themſelves ſo betray'd, exclaim'd of the Engliſh, and were conſtrained thro Famine to ſurrender the City; yet new Aſſurances came from the King to the Duke of Roan, that he ſhould never be abandoned, and that he ſhould not be diſmay'd nor aſtoniſh'd for the Loſs of Rochel.

But Soubiſe ſpoke his mind freely at Court, that the Engliſh had betray'd Rochel, and that the Loſs of that City was the apparent Perdition and Loſs of thirty two Places of Strength from the French Proteſtants in Languedoc, Piedmont, and Dauphine: therefore it was thought fit that he ſhould have a Fig given him to ſtop his mouth. Well, not long after, two Capuchins were ſent into England to kill honeſt Soubiſe, and the one of them diſcovered the other. Soubiſe rewarded the Diſcoverer, and demanded Juſtice here againſt the other, who was a Priſoner; but by what means you may eaſily imagine, that aſſaſſinate Raſcal, inſtead of being whipt, or receiving ſome more ſevere Puniſhment, was releaſed, and ſent back into France with Money in his Purſe: and one of the Meſſengers that was ſent from Rochel to complain of thoſe abominable Treacheries, was taken here; and, as the Duke of Roan writes, was hanged for ſome pretended Felony or Treaſon: And much more to this purpoſe may be found in the Duke of Roan's Memorials. But yet I know many wiſe, ſober Men do acquit the King from the Guilt of the Loſs of Rochel, and lay it upon the Duke, as if it were but a Loſs of his Reputation. They ſay that the Duke of Buckingham agitated his Affairs neither for Religion, nor the Honour of his Maſter; but only to ſatisfy his Paſſion in certain fooliſh Vows which he made in France, enter'd upon a War: and that the Buſineſs miſcarried through Ignorance, and for want of Underſtanding to manage ſo difficult a Negotiation, he being unfit to be an Admiral or a General.

I confeſs that for many Years I was of that Opinion, and thought that the King was ſeduced by evil Counſel; and ſome thought that Buckingham and others ruled him as a Child, and durſt do what they liſt: But certainly he was too politick and ſubtile a Man to be ſwayed by any thing but his own Judgment. Since Naſeby Letters, I ever thought him Principal in all Tranſactions of State, and the wiſeſt about him but Acceſſaries: He never acted by any implicit Faith in State-matters, the proudeſt of them all durſt never croſs him in any Deſign, when he had once reſolved upon it. Is any Man ſo ſoft-brained to think that the Duke or Pennington durſt betray Rochel without his Command? Would not he have hanged them up at their Return, if they had wilfully tranſgreſſed his Commands? A thouſand ſuch Excuſes made for him, are but like Iriſh Quagmires, that have no ſolid Ground or Foundation in Reaſon: He was well known to be a great Student in his younger Days, that his Father would ſay, He muſt make him a Biſhop. He had more Learning and Dexterity in State-Affairs undoubtedly, than all the Kings in Chriſtendom: If he had had Grace anſwerable to his ſtrong Parts, he had been another Solomon; but his Wit and Knowledge proved like a Sword in a Mad-man's Hand; he was a Stranger to the Work of Grace and the Spirit of God: And all thoſe Meanders in State, his ſerpentine Turnings and Windings, have but brought him to Shame and Confuſion. But I am fully ſatisfied, none of his Council durſt ever adviſe him to any thing, but what they knew before he reſolved to have done; and that they durſt as well take a Bear by the Tooth, as do, or conſent to the doing of any thing, but what they knew would pleaſe him; they did but hew and ſquare the Timber, he was the Maſter-Builder that gave the Form to every Architecture: and being ſo able and judicious to diſcern of every Man's Merits, never think that the Duke or Pennington, or any Judge or Officer, did ever any thing for his Advantage without his Command, againſt Law or Honour.

Upon all which Premiſes, may it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I do humbly demand and pray the Juſtice of this High Court; and yet not I, but the innocent Blood that hath been ſhed in theſe three Kingdoms, demands Juſtice againſt him: This Blood is vocal, and cries aloud, and yet ſpeaks no better, but much louder than the Blood of Abel; for what Proportion hath the Blood of that righteous Man, to the Blood of ſo many Thouſands? If King Ahab and Queen Jezabel, for the Blood of one righteous Naboth, (who would not ſell his Inheritance for the full Value) were juſtly put to death; what Puniſhment does he deſerve, that is guilty of the Blood of Thouſands, and fought for a pretended Prerogative, that he might have any Man's Eſtate that he liked, without paying for it? This Blood hath long cried, How long Parliament, how long Army, will ye forbear to avenge our Blood? Will ye not do Juſtice upon the capital Author of all Injuſtice? When will ye take the proud Lion by the Beard, that defies you with imperious Exultations? What's the Houſe of Commons? What's the Army? As Pharaoh ſaid, Who is the Lord? And who is Moſes? I am not accountable to any Power on Earth; thoſe that were murdered at Brainford, knock'd on the Head in the Water, and thoſe honeſt Souls that were kill'd in cold Blood at Bolton and Leverpool in Lancaſhire, at Bartomley in Cheſhire, and many other Places, their Blood cries Night and Day for Juſtice againſt him; their Wives and their Children cry, Juſtice upon the Murderer, or elſe give us our Fathers and Huſbands again: Nay, ſhould the People be ſilent, the very Stones and Timber of the Houſes would cry for Juſtice againſt him. But, my Lord, before I pray Judgment, I humbly crave leave to ſpeak to two Particulars. 1. Concerning the Priſoner. When I conſider what he was, and how many Prayers have been made for him, though I know that all the World cannot reſtore him, nor ſave his Life, becauſe God will not forgive his temporal Puniſhment; yet if God in him will be pleaſed to add one Example more to the Church, of his unchangeable Love to his Elect in Chriſt, not knowing but that he may belong to the Election of Grace; I am troubled in my Spirit, in regard of his eternal Condition, for fear that he ſhould depart this Life without Love and Reconciliation to all thoſe Saints whom he hath ſcorned, under the notion of Presbyterians, Anabaptiſts, Independents and Sectaries. It cannot be denied, but that he hath ſpent all his Days in unmeaſurable Pride; that during his whole Reign he hath deported himſelf as a God, been depended upon, and adored as God; that hath challenged and aſſumed an Omnipotent Power, an earthly Omnipotence, that with the Breath of his Mouth hath diſſolved Parliaments; his Non placet hath made all the Counſels of that Supreme Court to become Abortives. Non curo hath been his Motto, who inſtead of being honoured as good Kings ought to be, and no more, hath been idolized and adored, as our good God only ought to be. A Man that hath ſhot all his Arrows againſt the Upright in the Land, hated Chriſt in his Members, ſwallowed down Unrighteouſneſs, as the Ox drinks Water; eſteemed the Needy as his Footſtool, cruſh'd honeſt publick-ſpirited Men, and grieved when he could not afflict the Honeſt more than he did; counted it the beſt Art and Policy to ſuppreſs the Righteous, and to give way to his Courtiers ſo to gripe, grind, oppreſs and over-reach the free People of the Land, that he might do what he liſt (the Remembrance whereof would pierce his Soul, if he knew the Preciouſneſs of it) but all Sins to an infinite Mercy, are equally pardonable: therefore my Prayer for this poor Wretch ſhall be, That God would ſo give him Repentance to Life, that he may believe in that Chriſt, whom he hath impriſoned, perſecuted, and murdered in the Saints; That he which hath lived a Tyrant, and hated nothing ſo much as Holineſs, may die a Convert, and in Love to the Saints in England; that ſo the Tears of the Oppreſſed and the Afflicted, may not be as ſo many fiery ſtinging Serpents, cauſing an eternal Deſpairing, continual Horror to this miſerable Man, when all Tyrants ſhall be aſtoniſh'd, and innocent Blood will affright more than twelve Legions of Devils. All the Hurt that I wish to him, is, That he may look the Saints in the face with Comfort; for the Saints must judge the World: And however it may be, he or his Adherents may think it a brave Roman Spirit, not to repent of any thing, nor express any Sorrow for any Sin, though never so horrid, taking more care and fear not to change their Countenance upon the Scaffold, than what shall become of them after Death; yet I beseech your Lordship, that I may tell him and all the Malignants now living, but this; Charles Stuart, unless you depart this Life in Love and Reconciliation to all those Saints and godly Men, whom you have either ignorantly or maliciously opposed, mock'd, and persecuted, and still scorn and jeer at, as Hereticks and Sectaries, there is no more Hopes for you ever to see God in Comfort, than for me to touch the Heavens with my Finger, or with a Word to annihilate this great Building, or for the Devil to be saved; which he might be, if he could love a Saint as such. No, Sir, it will be too late for you to say to those Saints, whom you have defied, Give me some of your Holiness, that I may behold God's angry Countenance: You can expect no Answer, but, Go buy, Sir, of those Soul-huckslers, your Bishops, which fed you with Chaff and Poison; and now you must feed upon Fire and Brimstone to all Eternity.

2. Concerning my self, I bear no more Malice to the Man's Person, than I do to my dear Father; but I hate that cursed Principle of Tyranny, that has so long lodged and harboured within him, which has turned our Waters of Law into Blood. And therefore, upon that malignant Principle, I hope this High-Court (which is an Habitation of Justice, and a Royal Palace of Principles of Freedom) will do speedy Justice; That this Lion which has devoured so many Sheep, may not only be removed out of the way, but that this Iron Scepter, which has been lifted up to break this poor Nation in pieces like a Potter's Vessel, may be wrested out of the Hands of Tyrants; That my honourable Clients (for whom I am an unworthy Advocate) the People of England, may not only taste, but drink abundantly of those sweet Waters of that Well of Liberty, which this renowned Army hath digg'd with their Swords, which was stop'd by the Philistines, the fierce Jew, and uncircumcised Canaanite; the Hopes whereof made me readily hearken to the Call to this Service, as if it had been immediately from Heaven, being fully satisfied, that the Prisoner was long since condemned to die by God's Law, (which being more noble and antient than any Law of Man, if there had been a Statute that he should not die, yet he ought to be put to death notwithstanding;) and that this High-Court was but to pronounce the Sentence and Judgment written against him. And though I might have been sufficiently discouraged, in respect that my Reason is far less than others of my Profession; yet considering that there are but two things desirable, to make a dumb Man eloquent, namely, a good Cause, and good Judges; the first whereof procures the Justice of Heaven, and the second, Justice upon Earth: and thinking that happily God might make use of one mean Man at the Bar, amongst other Learned Counsel, that more of his mind might appear in it, (for many times the less there is of Man, the more God's Glory does appear; and hitherto very much of the Mind of God hath appeared in this Action) I went as cheerfully about it, as to a Wedding. And that the Glory of this Administration may be wholly given to God, I desire to observe, to the Praise of his great Name, the Work of God upon my own Spirit, in his gracious Assistance and Presence with me, as a Return of Prayer, and Fruit of Faith; believing that God never calls to the acting of any thing so pleasing to him, as this most excellent Court of Justice is; but he is present with the Honourable Judges, and those that wait upon them. I have been sometimes of Counsel against Felons and Prisoners, but I never moved the Court to proceed to Judgment against any Felon, or to keep any Man in Prison, but I trembled at it in my Thoughts, as thinking it would be easier to give an account of Mercy and Indulgence, than of any thing that might look like Rigour: but now my Spirits are quite of another temper, and I hope it is Meat and Drink to good Men, to have Justice done; and Recreation to think what Benefit this Nation will receive by it.

And now, my Lord, I must, as the truth is, conclude him guilty of more transcendent Treasons, and enormous Crimes, than all the Kings in this part of the World have ever been. And as he that would picture Venus, must take the Eyes of one, the Cheeks of another beautiful Woman, and so other Parts, to make a compleat Beauty; so to delineate an absolute Tyrant, the Cruelty of Richard the Third, and all the Subtilty, Treachery, deep Dissimulation, abominable Projects, and dishonourable Shifts that ever were separately in any that swayed the English Scepter, conspired together to make their Habitation in this whited Wall. Therefore I humbly pray, That as he has made himself a Precedent in committing such horrid Acts, which former Kings and Ages knew not, and have been afraid to think of, That your Lordship and this High-Court, out of your sublime Wisdoms, and for Justice-sake, would make him an Example for other Kingdoms for the time to come, that the Kings of the Earth may hear and fear, and do no more so wickedly; that he which would not be a Pattern of Vertue, and Example of Justice in his Life, may be a Precedent of Justice to others by his Death.

A true Copy of the Journal of the High Court of Juſtice, for the Tryal of King CHARLES, as it was read in the Houſe of Commons, and atteſted under the Hand of Phelps, Clerk to that Court: Taken by J. Nalſon, LL. D. January the 4th, 1683. To which are added, by Mr. Nalſon, ſeveral Particulars that are omitted by Phelps.

An Act of the Commons of England, aſſembled in Parliament, for erecting of a High Court of Juſtice, for the Trying and Judging of Charles Stuart King of England.

Whereas it is notorious, That Charles Stuart, the now King of England, not content with thoſe many Encroachments which his Predeceſſors had made upon the People in their Rights and Freedoms, hath had a wicked Deſign totally to ſubvert the Antient and Fundamental Laws and Liberties of this Nation, and in their place to introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government; and that beſides all other evil Ways and Means to bring this Deſign to paſs, he hath proſecuted it with Fire and Sword, levied and maintained a cruel War in the Land, againſt the Parliament and Kingdom, whereby the Country hath been miſerably waſted, the publick Treaſure exhauſted, Trade decayed, thouſands of People murdered, and infinite other Miſchiefs committed: For all which high and treaſonable Offences, the ſaid Charles Stuart might long ſince juſtly have been brought to exemplary and condign Puniſhment. Whereas alſo, the Parliament well hoping that the Reſtraint and Impriſonment of his Perſon, after it had pleaſed God to deliver him into their hands, would have quieted the Diſtempers of the Kingdom, did forbear to proceed judicially againſt him; but found by ſad Experience, that ſuch their Remiſſneſs ſerved only to encourage him and his Complices in the Continuance of their evil Practices, and in raiſing of new Commotions, Rebellions and Invaſions: for Prevention therefore of the like or greater Inconveniences, and to the end no Chief Officer or Magiſtrate whatſoever may hereafter preſume traitorouſly and maliciouſly to imagine or contrive the Enſlaving or Deſtroying of the Engliſh Nation, and to expect Impunity for ſo doing; Be it ordained, and enacted by the Commons in Parliament, and it is hereby ordained and enacted by Authority thereof, That Thomas Lord Fairfax; Oliver Cromwell, Henry Ireton, Eſquires; Sir Hardreſs Waller, Knight; Philip Skippon, Valentine Wauton, Thomas Harriſon, Edward Whaley, Thomas Pride, Iſaac Ewer, Richard Ingoldsby, Henry Mildmay, Eſquires; Sir Thomas Honywood, Thomas Lord Grey of Grooby, Philip Lord Liſle, William Lord Mounſon; Sir John Danvers, Sir Thomas Maleverer Baronet; Sir John Bourchier, Sir James Harrington, Sir William Allanſon, Sir Henry Mildmay, Sir Thomas Wroth, Knights; Sir William Maſham, Sir John Barrington, Sir William Brereton, Baronets; Robert Wallop, William Hevening-ham, Eſquires; Iſaac Pennington, Thomas Atkins, Rowland Wilſon, Aldermen of the City of London; Sir Peter Wentworth Knight of the Bath; Henry Martin, William Purefoy, Godfrey Boſvile, John Trenchard, Herbert Morley, John Berkſtead, Matthew Thomlinſon, John Blackiſtone, Gilbert Millington, Eſquires; Sir William Conſtable Baronet; Edmond Ludlow, John Lambert, John Hutchinſon Eſquires; Sir Arthur Hazlerig, Sir Michael Liveſey, Baronets; Richard Salwey, Humphry Salwey, Robert Tichbourn, Owen Roe, Robert Manwaring, Robert Lilbourn, Adrian Scroop, Richard Dean, John Okey, Robert Overton, John Huſon, John Desborough, William Goff, Robert Duckenfield, Cornelius Holland, John * Carey, Eſquires; Sir William Armyn Baronet; John Jones Eſq; Miles Corbet, Francis Allen, Thomas Liſter, Benjamin Weſton, Peregrine Pelham, John Gourdon, Eſquires; Francis Thorp Serjeant at Law; John Nutt, Thomas Challoner, Algernon Sidney, John Anlaby, John Moore, Richard Darley, William Say, John † Aldred, John Fagg, James Nelthrop, Eſquires; Sir William Roberts, Knight; Francis Laſtels, Alexander Rigby, Henry Smith, Edmond Wild, James Challoner, Joſias Berners, Dennis Bond, Humphrey Edwards, Gregory Clement, John Fry, Thomas Wogan, Eſquires; Sir Gregory Norton Baronet; John Bradſhaw Serjeant at Law, Edmond Harvey, John Dove, John Ven, Eſquires; John Fowks Alderman of the City of London; Thomas Scot Eſq; Thomas Andrews Alderman of the City of London; William Cawley, Abraham Burrell, Anthony Stapeley, Roger Gratwick, John Downs, Thomas Horton, Thomas Hammond, George Fenwick, Eſquires; Robert Nicholas Serjeant at Law; Robert Reynolds, John Liſle, Nicholas Love, Vincent Potter, Eſquires; Sir Gilbert Pickering Bar. John Weaver, Roger Hill, John Lenthall, Eſquires; Sir Edward Bainton; John Corbet, Thomas Blunt, Thomas Boon, Auguſtine Garland, Auguſtine Skinner, John Dixwell, George Fleetwood, Simon Meyne, James Temple, Peter Temple, Daniel Blagrave, Eſquires; Sir Peter Temple, Knight and Baronet; Thomas Wayte, John Brown, John Lowry, Eſquires; ſhall be, and are hereby appointed and required to be Commiſſioners and Judges for the Hearing, Trying and Adjudging of the ſaid Charles Stuart.

Col. Tichbourne, one of the Commiſſioners of this Court, informeth the Court, That he was with Mr. Steel, Attorney of this Court, and found him in his Bed very ſick; and by reaſon thereof not like, as yet, to attend the Service of this Court, according to former Order. And deſired him, the ſaid Colonel, to ſignify, That he, the ſaid Mr. Steel, no way declineth the Service of the ſaid Court, out of any Diſaffection to it; but profeſſeth himſelf to be ſo clear in the Buſineſs, that if it ſhould pleaſe God to reſtore him, he ſhould manifeſt his good Affection to the ſaid Cauſe; and that it is an Addition to his Affliction, that he cannot attend this Court, to do that Service that they have expected from him, and as he deſires to perform.

The Court adjourned itſelf till to-morrow Two of the clock in the Afternoon.

This done, the Court command the Serjeant at Arms to ſend for the Priſoner: and thereupon, Col. Thomlinſon, who had the Charge of the Priſoner, within a quarter of an hour's ſpace brought him, attended by Col. Hacker, and two and thirty Officers with Partizans, guarding him to the Court, his own Servants immediately attending him.

Being thus brought up in the face of the Court, the Serjeant at Arms with his Mace receives him, and conducts him ſtraight to the Bar, having a crimſon Velvet Chair ſet before him. After a ſtern looking upon the Court, and the People in the Galleries on each ſide of him, he places himſelf in the Chair, not at all moving his Hat, or otherwiſe ſhewing the leaſt Reſpect to the Court; but preſently riſeth up again, and turns about, looking downwards upon the Guards placed on the left ſide, and on the Multitude of Spectators on the right ſide of the ſaid great Hall: the Guard that attended him, in the mean time dividing themſelves on each ſide the Court, and his own Servants following him to the Bar, ſtand on the left hand of the Priſoner.

The Priſoner having again placed himſelf in his Chair, with his Face towards the Court, and Silence being again ordered and proclaimed, the Lord Preſident in the name of the Court addreſſed himſelf to the Priſoner, acquainting him, That the Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament being deeply ſenſible of the Evils and Calamities that had been brought upon this Nation, and of the innocent Blood that had been ſpilt in it, which was fixed upon him as the principal Author of it, had reſolved to make Inquiſition for this Blood; and according to the Debt they did owe to God, to Juſtice, the Kingdom, and themſelves, and according to that Fundamental Power that reſted, and Truſt repoſed in them by the People, other Means failing through his Default, had reſolved to bring him to Tryal and Judgment; and had therefore conſtituted that Court of Juſtice, before which he was then brought, where he was to hear his Charge, upon which the Court would proceed according to Juſtice.

Hereupon Mr. Cook, Sollicitor for the Commonwealth, ſtanding within a Bar, with the reſt of the Counſel for the Commonwealth, on the right hand of the Priſoner, offered to ſpeak; but the Priſoner having a Staff in his hand, held it up, and ſoftly laid it upon the ſaid Mr. Cook's ſhoulder two or three times, bidding him hold. Nevertheleſs, the Lord Preſident ordering him to go on, Mr. Cook did, according to the Order of the Court to him directed, in the name and on the behalf of the People of England, exhibit a Charge of High Treaſon, and other High Crimes, and did therewith accuſe the ſaid Charles Stuart King of England; praying in the name and on the behalf aforeſaid, that the Charge might be accordingly received and read, and due Proceedings had thereupon. And accordingly preferred a Charge in writing, which being received by the Court, and delivered to the Clerk of the Court, the Lord Preſident in the name of the Court ordered it ſhould be read.

But the King interrupting the reading of it, the Court notwithſtanding commanded the Clerk to read it; acquainting the Priſoner, that if he had any thing to ſay after, the Court would hear him: whereupon the Clerk read the Charge, the Tenour whereof is as followeth, viz.

A Charge of High Treaſon, and other High Crimes, exhibited to the High Court of Juſtice by John Cook Eſq; Sollicitor-General, appointed by the ſaid Court, for and on the behalf of the People of England, againſt Charles Stuart King of England.

'THAT he the ſaid Charles Stuart being admitted King of England, and therein truſted with a limited Power to govern by and according to the Laws of the Land, and not otherwiſe; and by his Truſt, Oath and Office, being obliged to uſe the Power committed to him, for the Good and Benefit of the People, and for the Preſervation of their Rights and Liberties: yet nevertheleſs, out of a wicked Deſign to erect and uphold in himſelf an Unlimited and Tyrannical Power to rule according to his Will, and to over-

'overthrow the Rights and Liberties of the Peo'ple; yea, to take away and make void the Foun'dations thereof, and of all Redreſs and Remedy of

'cured many Thouſands of the free People of this 'Nation to be ſlain; and by Diviſions, Parties,
'and Inſurrections within this Land, by Invaſions
'from foreign Parts, endeavoured and procured
'by him, and by many other evil Ways and Means,
'he the ſaid Charles Stuart hath not only main'tained and carried on the ſaid War both by Land
'and Sea, during the Years before-mentioned, but
'alſo hath renewed or cauſed to be renewed the
'ſaid War againſt the Parliament and good Peo'ple of this Nation, in this preſent Year 1648, in
'the Counties of Kent, Eſſex, Surrey, Suſſex, *Mid-
'dleſex*, and many other Places of England and

'the ſaid Charles Stuart hath for that purpoſe given
'Commiſſion to his Son the Prince, and others;
'whereby, beſides Multitudes of other Perſons,
'many ſuch as were by the Parliament intruſted
'and employ'd for the Safety of the Nation, (be'ing by him or his Agents corrupted to the be'traying of their Truſt, and revolting from the 'Parliament) have had Entertainment and Com-
'miſſion for the continuing and renewing of War
'and Hoſtility againſt the ſaid Parliament and
'People, as aforeſaid. By which cruel and unna-
'tural Wars by him the ſaid Charles Stuart levied,
'continued and renewed as aforeſaid, much inno-
'cent Blood of the free People of this Nation hath 'been ſpilt, many Families have been undone, the 'publick Treaſury waſted and exhauſted, Trade
'obſtructed and miſerably decay'd, vaſt Expence
'and Damage to the Nation incurred, and many 'parts of this Land ſpoiled, ſome of them even
'to deſolation. And for further Proſecution of his
'ſaid evil Deſigns, he the ſaid Charles Stuart doth
'ſtill continue his Commiſſions to the ſaid Prince,
'and other Rebels and Revolters both Engliſh and 'Foreigners, and to the Earl of Ormond, and to
'the Iriſh Rebels and Revolters aſſociated with 'him; from whom further Invaſions upon this 'Land are threatned, upon the procurement and 'on the behalf of the ſaid Charles Stuart.

'All which wicked Deſigns, Wars, and evil

'aforeſaid.

'By all which it appeareth, that he the ſaid
'Charles Stuart hath been, and is the Occaſioner,
'Author, and Continuer of the ſaid unnatural,
'cruel and bloody Wars, and therein guilty of all
'the Treaſons, Murders, Rapines, Burnings,
'Spoils, Deſolations, Damages and Miſchiefs to

'Charles Stuart ſhall make to the Premiſes, or any 'of them, or any other Charge that ſhall be ſo
'exhibited; doth for the ſaid Treaſons and
'Crimes, on the behalf of the ſaid People of *Eng-
'land*, impeach the ſaid Charles Stuart, as a Ty-
'rant, Traytor, Murderer, and a publick and
'implacable Enemy to the Commonwealth of *Eng-
'land*; and pray that the ſaid Charles Stuart, King
'of England, may be put to anſwer all and every
'the Premiſes; and that ſuch Proceedings, Exa'minations, Tryals, Sentences and Judgments may 'be thereupon had, as ſhall be agreeable to Juſtice.

The Priſoner, while the Charge was reading, ſat down in his Chair, looking ſometimes on the High Court, and ſometimes on the Galleries; and roſe again, and turned about to behold the Guards and Spectators, and after ſat down, looking very ſternly, and with a Countenance not at all moved, till theſe words, viz. Charles Stuart to be a Tyrant, Traytor, &c. were read; at which he laughed, as he ſat, in the face of the Court.

The Charge being read, the Lord Preſident, in the name of the Court, demanded the Priſoner's Anſwer thereto.

But the Priſoner declining that, fell into a Diſcourſe of the late Treaty in the Iſle of Wight, and demanded, by what lawful Authority he was brought from the Iſle thither? upbraiding the Court with the many unlawful Authorities in the World, inſtancing in Robbers and Takers of Purſes; pleading his Kingſhip, and thereby a Truſt committed to him by God, by Deſcent, which he ſhould betray, together with the Liberties of the People, in caſe he ſhould anſwer to an unlawful Power, which he charged the Court to be, and that they were raiſed by an Uſurped Power; and affirmed, that he ſtood more for the Liberties of the People, than any of the Judges there ſitting: and again demanded, by what Authority he was brought thither?

To which it was replied by the Court, That had he been pleaſed to have obſerved what was declared to him by the Court at his firſt coming, and the Charge which he had heard read unto him, he might have informed himſelf by what Authority he was brought before them; namely, by the Authority of the Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament, on the behalf of the People of England: and did therefore again ſeveral times adviſe him to conſider of a better Anſwer; which he refuſed to do, but perſiſted in his Contumacy. Whereupon the Court at length told him, That they did expect from him a poſitive Anſwer to the Charge; affirming their Authority, and giving him to underſtand, that they were upon God's and the Kingdom's Errand, and that the Peace ſtood for, would be better had and kept when Juſtice was done, and that was their preſent Work: and adviſed him ſeriouſly to conſider what he had to do at his next Appearance; which was declared ſhould be upon Monday following, and ſo remanded him to his former Cuſtody.

The Priſoner all the time having kept on his Hat, departed, without ſhewing any the leaſt Reſpect to the Court: but going out of the Bar, ſaid, He did not fear that Bill; pointing to the Table where the Sword and Charge lay.

The Priſoner being withdrawn, three Proclamations were made, and the Court adjourned itſelf to the Painted Chamber on Monday Morning then next, at Nine of the clock; declaring, that from thence they intended to adjourn to the ſame place again.

But that the Reader may have the intire Relation of this deplorable Tragedy, I have from the moſt Authentick Prints inſerted at large the interlocutory Paſſages between the King and Bradſhaw, of which Mr. Phelps in his Journal gives only a ſuccinct Account; which take as follows.

His Majeſty with his wonted Patience heard all theſe Slanders and Reproaches, ſitting in the Chair, and looking ſometimes on the pretended Court, ſometimes up to the Galleries; and riſing again, turned about to behold the Guards and Spectators: then he ſat down, with a majeſtick and unmoved Countenance, and ſometimes ſmiling, eſpecially at thoſe words, Tyrant, Traytor, and the like.

Alſo the ſilver Head of his Staff happened to fall off, at which he wondered; and ſeeing none to take it up, he ſtooped for it himſelf.

The Charge being read, Bradſhaw began:

Sir, You have now heard your Charge read, containing ſuch Matters as appear in it; you find, that in the Cloſe of it, it is prayed to the Court, in the behalf of the Commons of England, that you anſwer to your Charge. The Court expects your Anſwer.

King. I would know by what Power I am called hither; I was not long ago in the Iſle of Wight, how I came there, is a longer Story than I think is fit at this time for me to ſpeak of; but there I enter'd into a Treaty with both Houſes of Parliament, with as much publick Faith as it's poſſible to be had of any People in the world. I treated there with a number of honourable Lords and Gentlemen, and treated honeſtly and uprightly; I cannot ſay but they did very nobly with me, we were upon a concluſion of the Treaty. Now I would know by what Authority, I mean lawful; there are many unlawful Authorities in the World, Thieves and Robbers by the Highways; but I would know by what Authority I was brought from thence, and carried from place to place, and I know not what: and when I know by what lawful Authority, I ſhall anſwer. Remember I am your King, your lawful King, and what Sins you bring upon your heads, and the Judgment of God upon this Land; think well upon it, I ſay, think well upon it, before you go further from one Sin to a greater: therefore let me know by what lawful Authority I am ſeated here, and I ſhall not be unwilling to anſwer. In the mean time, I ſhall not betray my Truſt; I have a Truſt committed to me by God, by old and lawful Deſcent, I will not betray it, to anſwer to a new unlawful Authority: therefore reſolve me that, and you ſhall hear more of me.

Bradſhaw. If you had been pleaſed to have obſerved what was hinted to you by the Court, at your firſt coming hither, you would have known by what Authority; which Authority requires you, in the name of the People of England, of which you are elected King, to anſwer.

King. No Sir, I deny that.

Bradſhaw. If you acknowledge not the Authority of the Court, they muſt proceed.

King. I do tell them ſo, England was never an Elective Kingdom, but an Hereditary Kingdom for near theſe thouſand Years; therefore let me know by what Authority I am called hither: I do ſtand more for the Liberty of my People, than any here that come to be my pretended Judges; and therefore let me know by what lawful Authority I am ſeated here, and I will anſwer it; otherwiſe I will not anſwer it.

Bradſhaw. Sir, How really you have managed your Truſt, is known: your way of Anſwer is to interrogate the Court, which beſeems not you in this Condition. You have been told of it twice or thrice.

King. Here is a Gentleman, Lieutenant-Colonel Cobbet; ask him, if he did not bring me from the Iſle of Wight by force. I do not come here as ſubmitting to the Court: I will ſtand as much for the Privilege of the Houſe of Commons, rightly underſtood, as any Man here whatſoever. I ſee no Houſe of Lords here, that may conſtitute a Parliament; and the King too ſhould have been. Is this the bringing of the King to his Parliament? Is this the bringing an end to the Treaty in the publick Faith of the World? Let me ſee a legal Authority warranted by the Word of God the Scriptures, or warranted by the Conſtitutions of the Kingdom, and I will anſwer.

Bradſhaw. Sir, You have propounded a Queſtion, and have been anſwered. Seeing you will not anſwer, the Court will conſider how to proceed: in the mean time, thoſe that brought you hither, are to take charge of you back again. The Court deſires to know, whether this be all the Anſwer you will give, or no.

King.

King. Sir, I desire that you would give me, and all the World, Satisfaction in this: let me tell you, it is not a slight thing you are about. I am sworn to keep the Peace, by that Duty I owe to God and my Country, and I will do it to the last Breath of my Body; and therefore you shall do well to satisfy first God, and then the Country, by what Authority you do it: if you do it by an usurped Authority, you cannot answer it. There is a God in Heaven, that will call you, and all that give you Power, to account. Satisfy me in that, and I will answer; otherwise I betray my Trust, and the Liberties of the People: and therefore think of that, and then I shall be willing. For I do avow, that it is as great a Sin to withstand lawful Authority, as it is to submit to a tyrannical, or any other ways unlawful Authority: and therefore satisfy God and me, and all the World in that, and you shall receive my Answer. I am not afraid of that Bill.

Bradshaw. The Court expects you should give them a final Answer, their purpose is to adjourn to Monday next: if you do not satisfy yourself, tho we do tell you our Authority; we are satisfied with our Authority, and it is upon God's Authority and the Kingdom's, and that Peace you speak of will be kept in the doing of Justice, and that's our present Work.

King. For answer, let me tell you, you have shewn no lawful Authority to satisfy any reasonable Man.

Bradshaw. That is, in your Apprehension; we are satisfied that are your Judges.

King. 'Tis not my Apprehension, nor yours neither, that ought to decide it.

Bradshaw. The Court hath heard you, and you are to be disposed of as they have commanded.

So commanding the Guard to take him away, his Majesty only replied, Well, Sir!

And at his going down, pointing with his Staff toward the (a) Ax, he said, I do not fear that.

As he went down the stairs, the People in the Hall cry'd out, God save the King! notwithstanding some were set there by the Faction to lead the Clamour for Justice. [Thus far Nalson.]

Sixty Two Commissioners present.

Here the Court sit private.

Ordered, That the Committee for nominating the Officers of this Court, together with the Committee for nominating the Guards, do consider of an Allowance for Diet of the Officers, and what other Satisfaction they shall have for their Service.

Col. Harvey informeth the Court, That he was desired to signify unto this Court, in the behalf of Mr. John Corbet, Member of this Court, that his Absence is not from any Disaffection to the Proceedings of this Court, but in regard of other especial Employment that he hath in the Service of the State.

Here the Court considered of the King's Carriage on the Saturday before, and of all that had then passed on the Court's behalf, and approved thereof, as agreeing to their Sense and Directions. And perceiving what the King aimed at, viz. to bring in question (if he could) the Jurisdiction of the Court, and the Authority whereby they sat; and considering that he had not in the interim acknowledged them in any sort to be a Court, or in any Judicial Capacity to determine of his Demand and Plea, and that through their sides he intended to wound (if he might be permitted) the Supreme Authority of the Commons of England, in their Representative, the Commons assembled in Parliament; after Advice with their Counsel learned in both Laws, and mature Deliberation had of the Matter,

Resolved, That the Prisoner should not be suffered to bring these things in question which he aimed at, touching that Highest Jurisdiction; whereof they might not make themselves Judges, and from which there was no Appeal. And therefore order and direct, viz.

Ordered, That in case the King shall again offer to fall into that Discourse, the Lord President do let him know, That the Court have taken into consideration his Demands of the last Day, and that he ought to rest satisfied with this Answer, That the Commons of England assembled in Parliament have constituted this Court, whose Power may not, nor should be permitted to be disputed by him, and that they were resolved he should answer his Charge.

That in case he shall refuse to answer, or acknowledge the Court, the Lord President do let him know, that the Court will take it as a Contumacy, and that it shall be so recorded.

That in caſe the King ſhall demand a Copy of the Charge, that he ſhall then declare his Intention to anſwer; and that declaring ſuch his Intention, a Copy be granted unto him.

That in caſe the King ſhall ſtill perſiſt in his Contempt, the Lord Preſident do give command to the Clerk to demand of the King in the name of the Court, in theſe words following, viz.

Charles Stuart, King of England, you are accuſed in behalf of the People of England, of divers High Crimes and Treaſons, which Charge hath been read unto you; the Court requires you to give a poſitive Anſwer, whether you confeſs or deny the Charge; having determined, that you ought to anſwer the ſame.

Seventy Commiſſioners preſent.

The Court being called, the Serjeant is commanded to fetch his Priſoner.

The King is again brought Priſoner to the Bar, as on Saturday before: Proclamation is made for Silence, whilſt Pleas of the Commonwealth were in hand; and Order given to the Captain of the Guard to take into his Cuſtody ſuch as ſhould diſturb the Court.

Mr. Sollicitor moved the Court, that the Priſoner might give a poſitive Anſwer to his Charge, or otherwiſe that the Court would take the Matter of it pro confeſſo, and proceed thereupon according to Juſtice. Which being preſſed by the Court upon the Priſoner, and their Judgment again made known unto him, That he was to anſwer his Charge, otherwiſe his Contumacy would be recorded:

The Priſoner, that notwithſtanding, ſtill inſiſted upon his former Plea, and that the Court had no Power, nor the Commons of England, who had conſtituted it, to proceed againſt him. Upon which the Clerk of the Court, by command, and according to former Order, required his Anſwer in the Form preſcribed: and the Priſoner ſtill refuſing to ſubmit thereto, his Default and Contempt were again recorded, the Priſoner remanded, and the Court adjourned it ſelf till the next Day, being Tueſday, at Twelve of the clock, to the Painted Chamber; withal, giving notice, That from thence they intended to adjourn to this Place again.

[Sunday having been ſpent in Faſting and ſeditious Preaching, according to the Mode of theſe impious Hypocrites, who uſed to preface Rebellion and Murder with the Appearance of Religion, the illuſtrious Sufferer was (as is before in Phelps's Journal related) placed before the infamous Tribunal, where their mercenary Sollicitor Cook opened the Tragick Scene thus, diſplaying his Talents of Impudence and Treaſon. Nalſon.]

Cook. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, my Lord Preſident; I did at the laſt Court, in the behalf of the Commons of England, exhibit and give into this Court a Charge of High Treaſon, and other high Crimes againſt the Priſoner at the Bar; whereof I do accuſe him in the name of the People of England: and the Charge was read unto him, and his Anſwer required. My Lord, He was not pleaſed to give an Anſwer, but inſtead of anſwering, did there diſpute the Authority of this high Court. My humble Motion to this high Court in the behalf of the Kingdom of England, is, That the Priſoner may be directed to make a poſitive Anſwer, either by way of Confeſſion or Negation; which if he ſhall refuſe to do, that then the Matter of Charge may be taken pro confeſſo, and the Court may proceed according to Juſtice.

Bradſhaw. Sir, You may remember at the laſt Court you were told the Occaſion of your being brought hither, and you heard a Charge read againſt you, containing a Charge of High Treaſon and other high Crimes againſt this Realm of England: you heard likewiſe, that it was prayed in the behalf of the People, that you ſhould give an Anſwer to that Charge, that thereupon ſuch Proceedings might be had, as ſhould be agreeable to Juſtice. You were then pleaſed to make ſome Scruples concerning the Authority of this Court, and knew not by what Authority you were brought hither; you did divers times propound your Queſtions, and were as often anſwer'd, That it was by Authority of the Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament, that did think fit to call you to account for thoſe high and capital Miſdemeanours wherewith you were then charged. Since that, the Court hath taken into conſideration what you then ſaid, they are fully ſatisfied with their own Authority, and they hold it fit you ſhould ſtand ſatisfied with it too; and they do require it, that you do give a poſitive and particular Anſwer to this Charge that is exhibited againſt you: they do expect you ſhould either confeſs or deny it; if you deny, it is offer'd in the behalf of the Kingdom to be made good againſt you: their Authority they do avow to the whole World, that the whole Kingdom are to reſt ſatisfied in, and you are to reſt ſatisfied with it. And therefore you are to loſe no more time, but to give a poſitive Anſwer thereunto.

King. When I was here laſt, 'tis very true, I made that Queſtion; and if it were only my own particular Caſe, I would have ſatisfied myſelf with the Proteſtation I made the laſt time I was here againſt the Legality of this Court, and that a King cannot be try'd by any ſuperiour Juriſdiction on Earth: but it is not my Caſe alone, it is the Freedom and the Liberty of the People of England; and do you pretend what you will, I ſtand more for their Liberties. For if Power without Law may make Laws, may alter the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, I do not know what Subject he is in England, that can be ſure of his Life, or any thing that he calls his own: therefore when that I came here, I did expect particular Reaſons to know by what Law, what Authority you did proceed againſt me here. And therefore I am a little to ſeek what to ſay to you in this particular, becauſe the Affirmative is to be proved, the Negative often is very hard to do: but ſince I cannot perſuade you to do it, I ſhall tell you my Reaſons as ſhort as I can.

My Reaſons why in Conſcience and the Duty I owe to God firſt, and my People next, for the Preſervation of their Lives, Liberties, and Eſtates, I conceive I cannot anſwer this, till I be ſatisfied of the Legality of it.

All Proceedings againſt any Man whatſoever——

Bradſhaw. Sir, I muſt interrupt you, which I would not do, but that what you do is not agreeable to the Proceedings of any Court of Juſtice: You are about to enter into Argument, and diſpute concerning the Authority of this Court, before whom you appear as a Priſoner, and are charged as an high Delinquent; if you take upon you to diſpute the Authority of the Court, we may not do it, nor will any Court give way unto it: you are to ſubmit unto it, you are to give a punctual and direct Anſwer, whether you will anſwer your Charge or no, and what your Anſwer is.

King. Sir, By your favour, I do not know the Forms of Law; I do know Law and Reaſon, tho I am no Lawyer profeſs'd, but I know as much Law as any Gentleman in England; and therefore (under favour) I do plead for the Liberties of the People of England more than you do: And therefore if I ſhould impoſe a Belief upon any Man, without Reaſons given for it, it were unreaſonable; but I muſt tell you, that by that Reaſon that I have, as thus informed, I cannot yield unto it.

Bradſhaw. Sir, I muſt interrupt you, you may not be permitted: you ſpeak of Law and Reaſon, it is fit there ſhould be Law and Reaſon, and there is both againſt you. Sir, the Vote of the Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament, it is the Reaſon of the Kingdom, and they are theſe too that have given that Law, according to which you ſhould have ruled and reign'd. Sir, you are not to diſpute our Authority, you are told it again by the Court. Sir, it will be taken notice of, that you ſtand in contempt of the Court, and your Contempt will be recorded accordingly.

King. I do not know how a King can be a Delinquent; but by any Law that ever I heard of, all Men (Delinquents, or what you will) let me tell you they may put in Demurrers againſt any Proceeding as legal: and I do demand that, and demand to be heard with my Reaſons; if you deny that, you deny Reaſon.

Bradſhaw. Sir, you have offer'd ſomething to the Court; I ſhall ſpeak ſomething unto you, the Senſe of the Court. Sir, neither you nor any Man are permitted to diſpute that Point; you are concluded, you may not demur to the Juriſdiction of the Court: if you do, I muſt let you know, that they over-rule your Demurrer; they ſit here by the Authority of the Commons of England, and all your Predeceſſors and you are reſponſible to them.

King. I deny that, ſhew me one Precedent.

Bradſhaw. Sir, you ought not to interrupt while the Court is ſpeaking to you. This Point is not to be debated by you, neither will the Court permit you to do it; if you offer it by way of Demurrer to the Juriſdiction of the Court, they have conſidered of their Juriſdiction, they do affirm their own Juriſdiction.

King. I ſay Sir, by your favour, that the Commons of England was never a Court of Judicature; I would know how they came to be ſo.

Bradſhaw. Sir, you are not to be permitted to go on in that Speech and theſe Diſcourſes.

Then the Clerk of the Court read,

Charles Stuart, King of England, You have been accuſed on the behalf of the People of England of High Treaſon, and other high Crimes; the Court have determined that you ought to anſwer the ſame.

King. I will anſwer the ſame, ſo ſoon as I know by what Authority you do this.

Bradſhaw. If this be all that you will ſay, then Gentlemen you that brought the Priſoner hither, take charge of him back again.

King. I do require that I may give in my Reaſons why I do not anſwer, and give me time for that.

Bradſhaw. Sir, 'tis not for Priſoners to require.

King. Priſoners! Sir, I am not an ordinary Priſoner.

Bradſhaw. The Court hath conſidered of their Juriſdiction, and they have already affirmed their Juriſdiction; if you will not anſwer, we will give order to record your Default.

King. You never heard my Reaſon yet.

Bradſhaw. Sir, your Reaſons are not to be heard againſt the higheſt Juriſdiction.

King. Shew me that Juriſdiction where Reaſon is not to be heard.

Bradſhaw. Sir, we ſhew it you here, the Commons of England; and the next time you are brought, you will know more of the Pleaſure of the Court; and, it may be, their final Determination.

King. Shew me where ever the Houſe of Commons was a Court of Judicature of that kind.

Bradſhaw. Serjeant, take away the Priſoner.

King. Well, Sir, remember that the King is not ſuffer'd to give in his Reaſons for the Liberty and Freedom of all his Subjects.

Bradshaw. Sir, you are not to have liberty to use this Language: How great a Friend you have been to the Laws and Liberties of the People, let all England and the World judge.

King. Sir, under favour it was the Liberty, Freedom, and Laws of the Subject, that ever I took——defended myself with Arms; I never took up Arms against the People, but for the Laws.

Bradshaw. The Command of the Court must be obey'd; no Answer will be given to the Charge.

King. Well, Sir!

Then Bradshaw ordered the Default to be recorded, and the Contempt of the Court; and that no Answer would be given to the Charge.

The King was guarded forth to Sir Robert Cotton's House.

The Court adjourned to the Painted Chamber on Tuesday at Twelve of the clock, and from thence they intend to adjourn to Westminster-Hall; at which time all Persons concerned, are to give their Attendance.

His Majesty not being suffered to deliver his Reasons against the Jurisdiction of their pretended Court, by word of Mouth, thought fit to leave them in Writing to the more impartial Judgment of Posterity, as followeth:

'HAving already made my Protestations, not only against the Illegality of this pretended Court, but also, That no earthly Power can justly call Me (who am your King) in question, as a Delinquent; I would not any more open my Mouth upon this Occasion, more than to refer my self to what I have spoken, were I in this case alone concerned: But the Duty I owe to God in the Preservation of the true Liberty of my People, will not suffer me at this time to be silent. For how can any free-born Subject of England, call Life, or any Thing he possesseth, his own, if Power without Right, daily make new, and abrogate the old Fundamental Law of the Land, which I now take to be the present Case? Wherefore, when I came hither, I expected that you would have endeavoured to have satisfied me concerning these Grounds which hinder me to answer to your pretended Impeachment: But since I see that nothing I can say will move you to it (though Negatives are not so naturally proved as Affirmatives) yet I will shew you the Reason why I am confident you cannot judge me, nor indeed the meanest Man in England: For I will not (like you) without shewing a Reason, seek to impose a Belief upon my Subjects.

Hereabout I was stop'd, and not suffered to speak any more concerning Reasons.

'There is no Proceeding just against any Man, but what is warranted either by God's Laws, or the municipal Laws of the Country where he lives. Now I am most confident, this Day's Proceeding cannot be warranted by God's Law; for, on the contrary, the Authority of Obedience unto Kings, is clearly warranted, and strictly commanded both in the Old and New Testament; which, if denied, I am ready instantly to prove.

'And for the Question now in hand, there it is said, That where the Word of a King is, there is Power; and who may say unto him, What dost thou? Eccl. 8. 4. Then for the Law of this Land, I am no less confident, that no learned Lawyer will affirm, That an Impeachment can lie against the King, they all going in his Name: And one of their Maxims is, That the King can do no wrong. Besides, the Law upon which you ground your Proceedings, must be either old or new; if old, shew it; if new, tell what Authority, warranted by the Fundamental Laws of the Land, hath made it, and when. But how the House of Commons can erect a Court of Judicature, which was never one it self, (as is well known to all Lawyers) I leave to God and the World to judge. And it were full as strange, that they should pretend to make Laws without King or Lords House, to any that have heard speak of the Laws of England.

'And admitting, but not granting, That the People of England's Commission could grant your pretended Power, I see nothing you can shew for that; for certainly you never asked the Question of the tenth Man in the Kingdom: and in this way you manifestly wrong even the poorest Plough-man, if you demand not his free Consent; nor can you pretend any Colour for this your pretended Commission, without the Consent at least of the major Part of every Man in England, of whatsoever Quality or Condition, which I am sure you never went about to seek; so far are you from having it. Thus you see that I speak not for my own Right alone, as I am your King, but also for the true Liberty of all my Subjects; which consists not in the Power of Government, but in living under such Laws, such a Government, as may give themselves the best Assurance of their Lives, and Property of their Goods. Nor in this must or do I forget the Privileges of both Houses of Parliament, which this Day's Proceedings do not only violate, but likewise occasion the greatest Breach of their publick Faith, that (I believe) ever was heard of: with which I am far from charging the two Houses; for all pretended Crimes laid against me, bear date long before this Treaty at Newport, in which I having concluded as much as in me lay, and hopefully expecting the Houses Agreement thereunto, I was suddenly surprized, and hurried from thence as a Prisoner: upon which account I am against my Will brought hither; where, since I am come, I cannot but, to my power, defend the antient Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom, together with my own just Right. Then, for any thing I can see, the Higher House is totally excluded. And for the House of Commons, it is too well known that the major Part of them are detained or deterred from sitting; so as, if I had no other, this were sufficient for me to protest against the Lawfulness of your pretended Court. Besides all this, the Peace of the Kingdom is not the least in my Thoughts; and what hopes of Settlement is there, so long as Power reigns without Rule or Law, changing the whole Frame of that Government, under which this Kingdom hath flourished for many hundred Years? (Nor will I say what will fall out, in case this lawless unjust Proceeding against me do go on.) And believe it, the Commons of England will not thank you for this Change; for they will remember how happy they have been of late Years under the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, the King my Father, and my Self, until the beginning of these unhappy Troubles, and will have cause to doubt that they shall never be so happy under any new. And by this time it will be too sensibly evident, that the Arms I took up, were only to defend the Fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, against those who 'have ſuppoſed my Power hath totally changed 'the antient Government.

'Thus having ſhewed you briefly the Reaſons 'why I cannot ſubmit to your pretended Authori- 'ty, without violating the Truſt which I have 'from God for the Welfare and Liberty of my 'People; I expect from you either clear Reaſons 'to convince my Judgment, ſhewing me that I am 'in an Error, (and then truly I will anſwer) or 'that you will withdraw your Proceedings.'

This I intended to ſpeak in Weſtminſter-Hall on Monday, January the 22*d; but, againſt Reaſon, was hindred to ſhew my Reaſons.*

Martis, 23 Jan. 1648. Painted Chamber.

The Court being called, the Serjeant is required to ſend for the Priſoner, who was accordingly brought to the Bar, where he took his Seat as formerly. Proclamation is thereupon made for Silence, while while the Pleas of the Commonwealth are in hand, and the Captain of the Guard commanded by Proclamation to take into cuſtody all that ſhall diſturb the Proceedings of the Court.

Mr. Sollicitor Cook addreſſing himſelf to the Court, repeated the former Delays and Contempts of the Priſoner, ſo as that no more needed on his part, but to demand Judgment; yet offered, notwithſtanding the Notoriety of the Facts charged, mentioned in the Commons Act appointing the Tryal, to prove the Truth of the ſame by Witneſſes, if thereto required: and therefore pray'd, and yet (he ſaid) not ſo much he, as the innocent Blood that had been ſhed, the Cry whereof was very great, that a ſpeedy Sentence and Judgment might be pronounced againſt the Priſoner at the Bar according to Juſtice.

Hereupon the Court putting the Priſoner in mind of former Proceedings, and that although by the Rules of Juſtice, if advantage were taken of his paſt Contempts, nothing would remain but to pronounce Judgment againſt him, they had nevertheleſs determined to give him leave to anſwer his Charge; which, as was told him in plain terms, (for Juſtice knew no Reſpect of Perſons) was to plead Guilty or Not Guilty thereto.

To which he made anſwer as formerly, That he would not acknowledge the Juriſdiction of the Court, and that it was againſt the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom; that there was no Law to make a King a Priſoner; that he had done nothing againſt his Truſt; and iſſued out into ſuch-like Diſcourſes.

Upon which, the Court's Reſolution was again remembred to him, and he told, That he had now the third time publickly diſowned and affronted the Court; That how good a Preſerver he had been of the Fundamental Laws, and Freedoms of the People, his Actions had ſpoken; That Mens Intentions were uſed to be ſhewed by their Actions, and that he had written his Meaning in bloody Characters throughout the Kingdom; and that he ſhould find at laſt, though at preſent he would not underſtand it, that he was before a Court of Juſtice.

Hereupon, in the manner appointed, the Clerk in the name of the Court demanding the Priſoner's Anſwer to his Charge, and the ſame refuſed, the Default was recorded, the Priſoner remanded, and the Court adjourned to the Painted Chamber.

Painted Chamber.

The Court, according to their former Adjournment from Weſtminſter-Hall, came together from thence into the Painted Chamber, where they ſat privately, and ordered as followeth:

Ordered, That no Commiſſioner ought, or ſhall depart from the Court, without the ſpecial Leave of the ſaid Court.

This Court took into conſideration the managing of the Buſineſs of the Court this day in the Hall, and the King's Refuſal to anſwer, notwithſtanding he had been three ſeveral times demanded and required thereunto; and have thereupon fully approved of what on the Court's part had then paſſed; and reſolved,

That notwithſtanding the ſaid Contumacy of the King, and Refuſal to plead, which in Law amounts to a ſtanding mute, and tacit Confeſſion of the Charge, and notwithſtanding the Notoriety of the Fact charged, the Court would nevertheleſs however examine Witneſſes, for the further and clearer Satisfaction of their own Judgments and Conſciences; the Manner of whoſe Examination was referred to further Conſideration the next ſitting, and Warrants were accordingly iſſued forth for ſummoning of Witneſſes.

Mr. Peters moveth the Court as a Meſſenger from the King, viz. That the King deſires he might ſpeak with his Chaplains that came unto him privately: but the Houſe of Commons having taken that into their conſideration, the Court conceived it not proper for them to intermeddle therein.

The Court adjourned itſelf till Nine of the clock to-morrow Morning, to this place.

What paſſed in the Hall more at large than is related by Phelps in this Day's Tranſactions, ſee in the following Diſcourſe.

The King being brought in by the Guard, looks with a majeſtick Countenance upon his pretended Judges, and ſits down.

After the ſecond O Yes, and Silence commanded, Cook began more inſolently:

Cook. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, my Lord Preſident; This is now the third time, that, by the great Grace and Favour of this High Court, the Priſoner hath been brought to the Bar, before any Iſſue joined in the Cauſe. My Lord, I did at the firſt Court exhibit a Charge againſt him, containing the higheſt Treaſon that ever was wrought upon the Theatre of England; That a King of England, truſted to keep the Law, that had taken an Oath ſo to do, that had Tribute paid him for that end, ſhould be guilty of a wicked Deſign to ſubvert and deſtroy our Laws, and introduce an Arbitrary and Tyrannical Government, in the defiance of the Parliament and their Authority, ſet up his Standard for War againſt the Parliament and People: and I did humbly pray, in the behalf of the People of England, that he might ſpeedily be required to make an Anſwer to the Charge.

But, my Lord, inſtead of making any Anſwer, he did then diſpute the Authority of this High Court. Your Lordſhip was pleaſed to give him a further Day, to conſider, and to put in his Anſwer; which Day being yeſterday, I did humbly move, that he might be required to give a direct and poſitive Anſwer, either by denying or confeſſion of it: but, my Lord, he was then pleaſed for to demur to the Juriſdiction of the Court; which the Court did then over-rule, and command him to give a direct and poſitive Anſwer. My Lord, Beſides this great Delay of Juſtice, I ſhall now humbly move your Lordſhip for ſpeedy Judgment againſt him. My Lord, I might preſs your Lordſhip upon the whole, that according to the known Rules of the Law of the Land, That if a Priſoner ſhall ſtand as contumacious in contempt, and ſhall not put in an iſſuable Plea, Guilty or Not Guilty of the Charge given againſt him, whereby he may come to a fair Tryal; that as by an implicit Confeſſion, it may be taken pro confeſſo, as it hath been done to thoſe who have deſerved more Favour than the Priſoner at the Bar has done. But beſides, my Lord, I ſhall humbly preſs your Lordſhip upon the whole Fact. The Houſe of Commons, the Supreme Authority and Juriſdiction of the Kingdom, they have declared, That it is notorious, that the Matter of the Charge is true, as it is in truth, my Lord, as clear as Chryſtal, and as the Sun that ſhines at Noon-

Noon-day: which if your Lordſhip and the Court be not ſatisfied in, I have notwithſtanding, on the People of England's behalf, ſeveral Witneſſes to produce. And therefore I do humbly pray, (and yet I muſt confeſs it is not ſo much I, as the innocent Blood that hath been ſhed, the Cry whereof is very great for Juſtice and Judgment; and therefore I do humbly pray) that ſpeedy Judgment be pronounced againſt the Priſoner at the Bar.

Bradſhaw went on in the ſame ſtrain:

Sir, You have heard what is moved by the Counſel on the behalf of the Kingdom againſt you. Sir, You may well remember, and if you do not, the Court cannot forget what dilatory Dealings the Court hath found at your hands. You were pleaſed to propound ſome Queſtions, you have had your Reſolution upon them. You were told over and over again, That the Court did affirm their own Juriſdiction; that it was not for you, nor any other Man, to diſpute the Juriſdiction of the ſupreme and higheſt Authority of England, from which there is no Appeal, and touching which there muſt be no Diſpute: yet you did perſiſt in ſuch Carriage, as you gave no manner of Obedience, nor did you acknowledge any Authority in them, nor the High Court that conſtituted this Court of Juſtice.

Sir, I muſt let you know from the Court, that they are very ſenſible of theſe Delays of yours, and that they ought not, being thus authorized by the ſupreme Court of England, to be thus trifled withal; and that they might in Juſtice, if they pleaſed, and according to the Rules of Juſtice, take advantage of theſe Delays, and proceed to pronounce Judgment againſt you: yet nevertheleſs they are pleaſed to give direction, and on their behalfs I do require you, that you make a poſitive Anſwer unto this Charge that is againſt you, Sir, in plain terms, (for Juſtice knows no reſpect of Perſons;) you are to give your poſitive and final Anſwer in plain Engliſh, whether you be guilty or not guilty of theſe Treaſons laid to your charge.

The King, after a little Pauſe, ſaid,

When I was here yeſterday, I did deſire to ſpeak for the Liberties of the People of England; I was interrupted: I deſire to know yet whether I may ſpeak freely or not.

Bradſhaw. Sir, You have had the Reſolution of the Court upon the like Queſtion the laſt day, and you were told, that having ſuch a Charge of ſo high a nature againſt you, your Work was, that you ought to acknowledge the Juriſdiction of the Court, and to anſwer to your Charge. Sir, If you anſwer to your Charge, which the Court gives you leave now to do, tho they might have taken the advantage of your Contempt; yet if you be able to anſwer to your Charge, when you have once anſwered, you ſhall be heard at large, make the beſt Defence you can. But, Sir, I muſt let you know from the Court, as their Commands, that you are not to be permitted to iſſue out into any other Diſcourſes, till ſuch time as you have given a poſitive Anſwer concerning the matter that is charged upon you.

King. For the Charge, I value it not a ruſh, it is the Liberty of the People of England that I ſtand for. For me to acknowledge a new Court that I never heard of before, I that am your King, that ſhould be an Example to all the People of England for to uphold Juſtice, to maintain the old Laws; indeed I know not how to do it. You ſpoke very well the firſt Day that I came here, (on Saturday) of the Obligations that I had laid upon me by God, to the maintenance of the Liberties of my People: the ſame Obligation you ſpake of, I do acknowledge to God that I owe to him, and to my People, to defend as much as in me lies the antient Laws of the Kingdom. Therefore until that I may know that this is not againſt the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, by your favour I can put in no particular Anſwer. If you will give me time, I will ſhew you my Reaſons why I cannot do it, and this——

Here being interrupted, he ſaid,

By your favour, you ought not to interrupt me: how I came here I know not, there's no Law for it to make your King your Priſoner. I was in a Treaty upon the publick Faith of the Kingdom, that was the known———two Houſes of Parliament that was the Repreſentative of the Kingdom; and when that I had almoſt made an end of the Treaty, then I was hurried away, and brought hither: and therefore——

Bradſhaw. Sir, you muſt know the Pleaſure of the Court.

King. By your favour, Sir.

Bradſhaw. Nay, Sir, by your favour, you may not be permitted to fall into thoſe Diſcourſes; you appear as a Delinquent, you have not acknowledged the Authority of the Court, the Court craves it not of you: but once more they command you to give your poſitive Anſwer——Clerk, Do your Duty.

King. Duty, Sir!

The Clerk reads:

Charles Stuart, King of England, you are accuſed, in the behalf of the Commons of England, of divers High Crimes and Treaſons; which Charge hath been read unto you: The Court now requires you to give your poſitive and final Anſwer, by way of Confeſſion or Denial of the Charge.

King. Sir, I ſay again to you, ſo that I might give ſatisfaction to the People of England of the Clearneſs of my Proceeding, not by way of Anſwer, not in this way, but to ſatisfy them that I have done nothing againſt that Truſt that hath been committed to me, I would do it: but to acknowledge a new Court, againſt their Privileges, to alter the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, Sir you muſt excuſe me.

Bradſhaw. Sir, this is the third time that you have publickly diſown'd this Court, and put an affront upon it: How far you have preſerv'd the Privileges of the People, your Actions have ſpoke it; but truly, Sir, Mens Intentions ought to be known by their Actions, you have written your Meaning in bloody Characters throughout the whole Kingdom. But, Sir, you underſtand the Pleaſure of the Court.——Clerk, Record the Default.——And Gentlemen, you that took charge of the Priſoner, take him back again.

King. I will only ſay this one word more to you; If it were only my own Particular, I would not ſay any more, nor interrupt you.

Bradſhaw. Sir, you have heard the Pleaſure of the Court, and you are (notwithſtanding you will not underſtand it) to find that you are before a Court of Juſtice.

Then the King went forth with the Guard; and Proclamation was made, That all Perſons which had then appeared, and had further to do at the Court, might depart into the Painted Chamber; to which place the Court did forthwith adjourn, and intended to meet at Weſtminſter-Hall by Ten of the clock next Morning.

Cryer. God bleſs the Kingdom of England.

Here the Court ſat private.

The Court ordered, That the Marſhal-Gen. of this Army, or his Deputy, do bring forthwith Mr. Holder Priſoner at Whitehall, to the end that he may teſtify his Knowledge of all ſuch Matters as ſhall be propounded unto him concerning the Charge againſt the King.

Mr. Henry Gouge and Mr. William Cuthbert, Witneſſes produced to the Charge againſt the King, were ſworn and examined.

The Witneſſes ſworn in open Court, and after examined by the Committee appointed for that purpoſe the 24th Inſtant, were now in open Court called, and their reſpective Depoſitions were read to them: who did avow their ſaid ſeveral Depoſitions, and affirm what was ſo read unto them reſpectively was true, upon the Oaths they had taken.

The Court being informed, that Major Fox, being of the Guard attending the Lord Preſident, is arreſted, and committed to the Keeper of Ludgate;

Ordered, That the ſaid Keeper do forthwith bring the ſaid Major before this Court, and attend this Court in Perſon himſelf.

Mr. Holder being brought before this Court according to the Order of this Day, and his Oath tendred unto him, to give Evidence to ſuch Matters as ſhould be propounded unto him concerning the Charge againſt the King; the ſaid Mr. Holder deſired to be ſpared from giving Evidence againſt the King.

Where-

Whereupon, the Commiſſioners finding him already a Priſoner, and perceiving that the Queſtions intended to be asked him, tended to accuſe himſelf, thought fit to wave his Examination, and remanded him (and accordingly did ſo) to the Priſon from whence he was brought.

The Depoſitions taken ut ſupra, are as followeth, viz.

Jan. 25. 1648.

William Cuthbert of Patrington in * Holderneſs Gent. aged 42 Years, or thereabouts, ſworn and examined, ſaith, That he, this Deponent, living at Hull-Bridge near Beverley, in July 1642, did then hear that Forces were raiſed, about three thouſand Foot, for the King's Guard under Sir Robert Strickland.

* Holderneſs is in the County of York.

And this Deponent further ſaith, That about the ſecond of July 1642, he ſaw a Troop of Horſe come to Beverley, being the Lord's-Day, about Four or Five of the clock in the Afternoon, called the Prince's Troop; Mr. James Nelthorp being then Major of the ſaid Town.

And this Deponent further ſaith, That he did ſee that Afternoon the ſaid Troop march from Beverley aforeſaid into Holderneſs, where they received Ammunition brought up by the River Humber unto them.

And this Deponent further ſaith, That the ſame Night, being Sunday, three came about three hundred Foot-Soldiers, (ſaid to be Sir Robert Strickland's Regiment) under the Command of Lieutenant-Col. Duncombe, and call'd the King's Guard, unto this Deponent's Houſe, call'd Hull-Bridge, near Beverley, about Midnight, and broke open, entred, and poſſeſſed themſelves of the ſaid Houſe; and that the Earl of Newport, the Earl of Carnarvan, and divers others came that Night thither to the ſaid Forces: And that the ſame Night (as this Deponent was then informed) Sir Tho. Gower, then High Sheriff of the ſaid County, came thither, and left there a Warrant for ſtaying all Proviſions from going to Hull to Sir John Hotham; which ſaid Warrant was then delivered to this Deponent, being Conſtable, by Lieut. Col. Duncombe.

And this Deponent further ſaith, That he was by the ſaid Forces put out of his Houſe, and did with his Family go to Beverley; and that after that, viz. the Thurſday following, to this Deponent's beſt remembrance, he did ſee the King come to Beverley, to the Lady Gee's Houſe there; where he, this Deponent, did often ſee the King, with Prince Charles and the Duke of York: and that the Trained-Bands were then raiſed in Holderneſs; who were raiſed (as was generally reported) by the King's Command.

And this Deponent further ſaith, That the Night after the ſaid Forces had, as aforeſaid, poſſeſſed themſelves of this Deponent's Houſe, Col. Legard's Houſe was plunder'd by them, being upon a Monday; which aforeſaid Entry of this Deponent's Houſe, was the firſt * Act of Hoſtility that was committed in thoſe parts.

* Sir John Hotham's keeping Hull as a Gariſon againſt the King, which was before this, was, it ſeems, no Act of Hoſtility, in this perjur'd Villain's account. Nalſ.

And this Deponent further ſaith, That after the ſaid Sir Robert Strickland's ſaid Company was gone from Hull-Bridge, having continued there about ten days, there then came to the ſaid Houſe Col. Wivel, with about ſeven hundred Foot-Soldiers, who then took up his Quarters at Hull-Bridge aforeſaid. And this Deponent further ſaith, That the Warrant he now produceth to this Court, is the ſame original Warrant aforeſaid ſpoken of.

And this Deponent further ſaith, That the General's Name of the ſaid Forces that were there, and raiſed as aforeſaid, was the Earl of Lindſey; and that this Deponent was brought before him the ſaid General, in the name of the King's Lord General, for holding Intelligence with Sir John Hotham, then Governour of Hull; and becauſe it was then informed to the ſaid General, that he this Deponent had Proviſions of Corn to ſend over unto Ireland, which he this Deponent was forbidden by the ſaid General to ſend unto Ireland, or any place elſe, without his or the King's Direction or Warrant firſt had in that behalf.

The aforeſaid Warrant, mentioned in the Depoſition of the ſaid William Cuthbert, is as followeth:

'IT is his Majeſty's Command, that you do not 'ſuffer any Victuals or Proviſion, of what ſort 'ſoever, to be carried into the Town of Hull 'without his Majeſty's ſpecial Licence firſt ob'tained. And of this you are not to fail at your 'Peril.

Dated at Beverley, 3 Julii, 1642.

Tho. Gower, Vi. Co.

* How is it poſſible this Fellow could ſwear the King ſpoke this to every Colonel, ſeeing it was as they paſſed by? and when his Colonel was paſſed by, he could hear no more. Nalſ.

And this Deponent ſaith, That he did ſee many ſlain at the Fight at Edge-Hill, and that afterwards he did ſee a Liſt brought in unto Oxford, of the Men which were ſlain in that Fight; by which it was reported, that there were ſlain 6559 Men.

And this Deponent further ſaith, Afterwards, in or about the Month of November 1642, he did ſee the King in the head of his Army at Hounſlow-Heath in Middleſex, Prince Rupert then ſtanding by him. And he this Deponent did then hear the King encourage ſeveral Regiments of Welſhmen (then being in the Field) which had run away at Edge-Hill, ſaying unto them, That he did hope they would regain their Honour at Brentford, which they had loſt at Edge-Hill.

That upon occaſion of ſome tampering by the King's Agents with the Independents in and about London, to draw them from the Parliament's Cauſe to the King's Party; and this being diſcovered by ſome of thoſe ſo tampered with, unto ſundry Members of the Committee of Safety, who directed a carrying rying on of a ſeeming Compliance with the King; he, this Deponent, did travel to Oxford in January 1643, having a ſafe Conduct under the King's Hand and Seal, which he this Deponent knoweth to be ſo; for that the King did own it when he was told that this Deponent was the Man that came to Oxon with that ſafe Conduct.

And for their better Encouragement, the King promiſed in the Word of a King, That if they, the Independents, would turn to him, and be active for him againſt the Parliament, as they had been active for them againſt him, then he would grant them whatſoever Freedom they would deſire. And the King did then refer this Deponent unto the Earl of Briſtol, for the further proſecuting of the ſaid Buſineſs.

And the ſaid Earl thereupon (this Deponent being withdrawn from the King) did declare unto this Deponent, and willed him to impart the ſame unto the Iudependents for their better Encouragement, That the King's Affairs proſpered well in Ireland; That the Iriſh Subjects had given the Rebels (meaning the Parliament's Forces) a great Defeat; That the King had ſent the Lord Byron with a ſmall Party towards Cheſhire, and that he was greatly multiplied, and had a conſiderable Army, and was then before Namptwich, and would be ſtrengthened with more Soldiers out of Ireland, which were come and expected daily. And when this Deponent was to depart out of Oxford, four ſafe Conducts with Blanks in them, for the inſerting of what Names this Deponent pleaſed, were delivered to him, under the King's Hand and Seal. And one Ogle was ſent out of Oxon with this Deponent, to treat about the delivering up of Aliſbury to the King, it being then a Gariſon for the Parliament, and at the ſame time Oxford was a Gariſon for the King.

Sixty ſeven Commiſſioners preſent.

The Priſoner is brought to the Bar, and Proclamation is again (as formerly) made for Silence; and the Captain of the Guard ordered to take into his Cuſtody all ſuch as ſhould diſturb the Court.

The Preſident ſtood up with an Intention of Addreſs to the People, and not to the Priſoner, who had ſo often declined the Juriſdiction of the Court; which the Priſoner obſerving, moved he might be heard before Judgment given. Whereof he received Aſſurance from the Court, and that he ſhould be heard after he had heard them firſt.

Whereupon the Court proceeded, and remember'd the great Aſſembly then preſent of what had formerly paſſed betwixt the Court and the Priſoner; the Charge againſt him in the Name of the People of England exhibited to them, being a Court conſtituted by the ſupreme Authority of England; his Refuſal three ſeveral Days and Times to own them as a Court, or to anſwer to the Matter of his Charge; his thrice recorded Contumacy, and other his Contempts and Defaults in the precedent Courts. Upon which the Court then declared, That they might not be wanting to themſelves, or to the Truſt repoſed in them; and that no Man's Wilfulneſs ought to ſerve him to prevent Juſtice; and that they had therefore thought fit to take the Subſtance of what had paſſed into their ſerious Conſideration, to wit, the Charge and the Priſoner's Contumacy, and the Confeſſion which in the Law doth ariſe upon that Contumacy, the Notoriety of the Fact charged, and other the Circumſtances material in the Cauſe: And upon the whole matter, had reſolved and agreed upon a Sentence then ready to be pronounced againſt the Priſoner. But that in regard of his Deſire to be further heard, they were ready to hear him as to any thing material, which he would offer to their Conſideration before the Sentence given, relating to the Defence of himſelf, concerning the Matter charged; and did then ſignify ſo much to the Priſoner: Who made uſe of that Leave given only to proteſt his Reſpects to the Peace of the Kingdom, and Liberty of the Subject, and to ſay, That the ſame made him at laſt to deſire, that having ſomewhat to ſay that concerned both, he might before the Sentence given be heard in the Painted Chamber before the Lords and Commons; ſaying, It was fit to be heard, if it were Reaſon which he ſhould offer, whereof they were Judges. And preſſing that Point much, he was forthwith anſwered by the Court, and told,

That that which he moved was a declining of the Juriſdiction of the Court, whereof he had Caution frequently given him.

That it tended to further Delay, of which he had been too much guilty.

That the Court being founded (as often had been ſaid) upon the Authority of the Commons of England, in whom reſted the ſupreme Juriſdiction, the Motion tended to ſet up another, or a co-ordinate Juriſdiction, in Derogation of the Power whereby the Court ſat, and to the manifeſt Delay of their Juſtice; in which regard, he was told, they might forthwith proceed to Sentence: Yet for his further Satisfaction of the entire Pleaſure and Judgment of the Court upon what he had then ſaid, he was told, and accordingly it was declared, That the Court would withdraw half an Hour.

The Priſoner by command being withdrawn, the Court make their Receſs into the Room called the Court of Wards, conſidered of the Priſoner's Motion, and gave the Preſident Direction to declare their Diſſent thereto, and to proceed to the Sentence.

The Court being again ſet, and the Priſoner returned, was, according to their Direction, informed, That he had in effect received his Anſwer before the Court withdrew; and that their Judgment was (as to his Motion) the ſame to him before declared, That the Court acted, and were Judges, appointed by the higheſt Authority; and that Judges were not to delay, no more than to deny Juſtice: That they were good Words in the great old Charter of England, Nulli negabimus, nulli vendemus, nulli deferemus Juſtitiam vel Rectum: That their Duty called upon them to avoid further Delays, and to proceed to Judgment; which was their unanimous Reſolution.

Unto which the Priſoner replied, and inſiſted upon his former Deſires, confeſſing a Delay; but that it was important for the Peace of the Kingdom: and therefore preſſed again with much Earneſtneſs to be heard before the Lords and Commons.

In anſwer whereto, he was told by the Court, That they had before fully conſidered of his Propoſal, and muſt give him the ſame Anſwer to his renewed Deſires; and that they were ready to proceed to Sentence, if he had nothing more to ſay.

Whereunto he ſubjoined, He had no more to ſay; but deſired that might be enter'd which he had ſaid.

Hereupon, after ſome Diſcourſe uſed by the Preſident, for vindicating the Parliament's Juſtice, explaining the Nature of the Crimes of which the Priſoner ſtood charged, and for which he was to be condemned; and by way of Exhortation to the Priſoner, to a ſerious Repentance for his high Tranſgreſſions againſt God and the People, and to prepare for his eternal Condition:

The Sentence formerly agreed upon, and put down in Parchment-writing, O Yes being firſt made for Silence, was, by the Court's Command, ſolemnly pronounced and given. The Tenor whereof followeth:

'WHEREAS the Commons of England, aſſembled in Parliament, have by their late Act, entitled, An Act of the Commons of England, aſſembled in Parliament, for erecting of an High Court of Juſtice for the Trying and Judging of Charles Stuart, King of England, authorized and conſtituted us an High Court of Juſtice for the Trying and Judging of the ſaid Charles Stuart, for the Crimes and Treaſons in the ſaid Act mentioned: By virtue whereof the ſaid Charles Stuart hath been three ſeveral times convented before this High Court; where the firſt Day, being Saturday the 20th of Jan. inſtant, in purſuance of the ſaid Act, a Charge of High Treaſon, and other High Crimes, was, in the behalf of the People of England, exhibited againſt him, and read openly unto him; wherein he was charged, That he, the ſaid Charles Stuart, being admitted King of England, and therein truſted with a limited Power to govern by and according to the Law of the Land, and not otherwiſe; and by his Truſt, Oath, and Office, being obliged to uſe the Power con-

'committed to him, for the Good and Benefit of 'the People, and for the Preſervation of their 'Rights and Liberties; yet nevertheleſs, out of a 'wicked Deſign to erect and uphold in himſelf an 'unlimited and tyrannical Power to rule according 'to his Will, and to overthrow the Rights and 'Liberties of the People, and to take away and 'make void the Foundations thereof, and of all 'Redreſs and Remedy of Miſgovernment, which 'by the Fundamental Conſtitutions of this King-'dom were reſerved on the People's behalf, in the 'Right and Power of frequent and ſucceſſive Par-'liaments, or national Meetings in Council, he, 'the ſaid Charles Stuart, for accompliſhment of ſuch 'his Deſigns, and for the protecting of himſelf and 'his Adherents in his and their wicked Practices, 'to the ſame End, hath traitorouſly and maliciouſ-'ly levied War againſt the preſent Parliament, and 'People therein repreſented, as with the Circum-'ſtances of Time and Place, is in the ſaid Charge 'more particularly ſet forth: And that he hath 'thereby cauſed and procured many Thouſands of 'the free People of this Nation to be ſlain; and 'by Diviſions, Parties, and Inſurrections within 'this Land, by Invaſions from foreign Parts, en-'deavoured and procured by him, and by many 'other evil Ways and Means, he, the ſaid Charles 'Stuart, hath not only maintained and carried on 'the ſaid War both by Sea and Land, but alſo 'hath renewed, or cauſed to be renewed, the ſaid 'War againſt the Parliament and good People of 'this Nation in this preſent Year 1648. in ſeveral 'Counties and Places in this Kingdom, in the 'Charge ſpecified; and that he hath for that pur-'poſe given his Commiſſion to his Son the Prince, 'and others, whereby, beſides Multitudes of other 'Perſons, many, ſuch as were by the Parliament in-'truſted and imployed for the Safety of this Na-'tion, being by him or his Agents corrupted, to 'the betraying of their Truſt, and revolting from 'the Parliament, have had Entertainment and 'Commiſſion for the continuing and renewing of 'the War and Hoſtility againſt the ſaid Parlia-'ment and People: And that by the ſaid cruel and 'unnatural War ſo levied, continued, and renew-'ed, much innocent Blood of the free People of 'this Nation hath been ſpilt, many Families un-'done, the publick Treaſure waſted, Trade ob-'ſtructed and miſerably decayed, vaſt Expence and 'Damage to the Nation incurred, and many Parts 'of the Land ſpoiled, ſome of them even to De-'ſolation: And that he ſtill continues his Commiſ-'ſion to his ſaid Son, and other Rebels and Revol-'ters, both Engliſh and Foreigners, and to the 'Earl of Ormond, and to the Iriſh Rebels and Re-'volters aſſociated with him, from whom further 'Invaſions upon this Land are threaten'd by his 'Procurement, and on his behalf: And that all the 'ſaid wicked Deſigns, Wars, and evil Practices, 'of him, the ſaid Charles Stuart, were ſtill carried 'on for the Advancement and Upholding of the 'Perſonal Intereſt of Will, Power, and pretended 'Prerogative to himſelf and his Family, againſt 'the publick Intereſt, Common Right, Liberty, 'Juſtice, and Peace of the People of this Nation: 'And that he thereby hath been and is the Occaſio-'ner, Author, and Contriver of the ſaid unnatural, 'cruel, and bloody Wars, and therein guilty of 'all the Treaſons, Murders, Rapines, Burnings, 'Spoils, Deſolations, Damage, and Miſchief to 'this Nation, acted and committed in the ſaid 'Wars, or occaſioned thereby. Whereupon the 'Proceedings and Judgment of this Court were 'prayed againſt him as a Tyrant, Traytor, and 'Murderer, and publick Enemy to the Common-'wealth, as by the ſaid Charge more fully appear-'eth. To which Charge, being read unto him as 'aforeſaid, he the ſaid Charles Stuart was required 'to give his Anſwer; but he refuſed ſo to do. 'And upon Monday the 22d Day of Jan. inſtant, 'being again brought before this Court, and there 'required to anſwer directly to the ſaid Charge, he 'ſtill refuſed ſo to do: Whereupon his Default 'and Contumacy was entered. And the next 'Day, being the third Time brought before the 'Court, Judgment was then prayed againſt him 'on the behalf of the People of England for his 'Contumacy, and for the Matters contained againſt 'him in the ſaid Charge, as taking the ſame for 'confeſt, in regard of his refuſing to anſwer 'thereto: Yet notwithſtanding, this Court (not 'willing to take advantage of his Contempt) did 'once more require him to anſwer to the ſaid 'Charge; but he again refuſed ſo to do. Upon 'which his ſeveral Defaults, this Court might 'juſtly have proceeded to Judgment againſt him, 'both for his Contumacy and the Matters of the 'Charge, taking the ſame for confeſt, as afore-'ſaid.

'Yet nevertheſs this Court, for their own clearer 'Information, and further Satisfaction, have thought 'fit to examine Witneſſes upon Oath, and take no-'tice of other Evidences touching the Matters 'contained in the ſaid Charge, which accordingly 'they have done.

'Now therefore upon ſerious and mature Deli-'beration of the Premiſes, and Conſideration had 'of the Notoriety of the Matters of Fact charged 'upon him, as aforeſaid, this Court is in Judg-'ment and Conſcience ſatisfied that he the ſaid 'Charles Stuart is guilty of levying War againſt the 'ſaid Parliament and People, and maintaining and 'continuing the ſame; for which in the ſaid Charge 'he ſtands accuſed, and by the general Courſe of his 'Government, Counſels, and Practices, before and 'ſince this Parliament began (which have been and 'are notorious and publick, and the Effects where-'of remain abundantly upon Record) this Court is 'fully ſatisfied in their Judgments and Conſciences 'that he hath been and is guilty of the wicked De-'ſigns and Endeavours in the ſaid Charge ſet forth; 'and that the ſaid War hath been levied, maintain-'ed, and continued by him, as aforeſaid, in Proſecu-'tion and for Accompliſhment of the ſaid Deſigns: 'And that he hath been and is the Occaſioner, 'Author, and Continuer of the ſaid unnatural, 'cruel, and bloody Wars, and therein guilty of 'High Treaſon, and of the Murders, Rapines, 'Burnings, Spoils, Deſolations, Damages, and 'Miſchief to this Nation, acted and committed 'in the ſaid War, and occaſioned thereby. For 'all which Treaſons and Crimes this Court doth 'adjudge, That he, the ſaid Charles Stuart, as a 'Tyrant, Traytor, Murderer, and publick Ene-'my to the good People of this Nation, ſhall be 'put to death by the ſevering his Head from his 'Body.'

This Sentence being read, the Preſident ſpake as followeth:

'The Sentence now read and publiſhed, is the 'Act, Sentence, Judgment, and Reſolution of the 'whole Court.'

Whereupon the whole Court ſtood up, and owned it.

The Priſoner being withdrawn, the Court adjourned it ſelf forthwith into the Painted Chamber.

The Court being ſat in the Painted Chamber, according to Adjournment from Weſtminſter-Hall, aforeſaid:

Sir Hardreſs Waller, Col. Harriſon, Commiſſary-Gen. Ireton, Col. Deane, and Col. Okey, are appointed to conſider of the Time and Place for the Execution of the Sentence againſt the King.

And then the Court adjourned it ſelf till Monday Morning at Eight of the clock to this Place.

The more full Account of this Day's Action, take as follows:

THE King being come in, in his wonted Poſture, with his Hat on, ſome of the Soldiers began to call for Juſtice, Juſtice, and Execution. But Silence being commanded, his Majeſty began:

I deſire a Word to be heard a little, and I hope I ſhall give no Occaſion of Interruption.

Bradſhaw anſwered, You may anſwer in your time, hear the Court firſt.

His Majeſty replied, If it pleaſe you, Sir, I deſire to be heard, and I ſhall not give any Occaſion of Interruption, and it is only in a word: a ſudden Judgment ——

Bradſhaw. Sir, you ſhall be heard in due time, but you are to hear the Court firſt.

King. Sir, I deſire, it will be in order to what I believe the Court will ſay; and therefore, Sir, an haſty Judgment is not ſo ſoon recall'd.

Bradſhaw. Sir, you ſhall be heard before the Judgment be given, and in the mean time you may forbear.

King. Well, Sir, ſhall I be heard before the Judgment be given?

Bradſhaw. Gentlemen, it is well known to all, or moſt of you here preſent, that the Priſoner at the Bar hath been ſeveral times convented and brought before this Court to make anſwer to a Charge of Treaſon, and other high Crimes exhibited againſt him in the Name of the People of * England; to which Charge being required to anſwer, he hath been ſo far from obeying the Commands of the Court by ſubmitting to their Juſtice, as he began to take upon him to offer Reaſoning and Debate unto the Authority of the Court, and of the higheſt Court that conſtituted them to try and judge him: but being over-ruled in that, and required to make his Anſwer, he was ſtill pleaſed to continue contumacious, and to refuſe to ſubmit to anſwer. Hereupon the Court, that they might not be wanting to themſelves, to the Truſt repoſed in them, nor that any Man's Wilfulneſs prevent Juſtice, they have thought fit to take the Matter into their Conſideration; they have conſidered of the Charge, they have conſidered of the Contumacy, and of that Confeſſion which in Law doth ariſe upon that Contumacy: They have likewiſe conſidered of the Notoriety of the Fact charg'd upon this Priſoner, and upon the whole matter they are reſolved, and are agreed upon a Sentence to be pronounc'd againſt this Priſoner: But in reſpect he doth deſire to be heard, before the Sentence be read and pronounc'd, the Court hath reſolved that they will hear him. Yet, Sir, thus much I muſt tell you before-hand, which you have been minded of at other Courts, that if that which you have to ſay, be to offer any Debate concerning the Juriſdiction, you are not to be heard in it; you have offered it formerly, and you have ſtruck at the Root, that is, the Power and Supreme Authority of the Commons of England, which this Court will not admit a Debate of; and which indeed is an irrational thing in them to do, being a Court that acts upon Authority derived from them. But, Sir, if you have any thing to ſay in defence of your ſelf concerning the Matter charged, the Court hath given me in command to let you know they will hear you.

* Here a Lady interpos'd, ſaying, Not half the People; but was ſilenced with Threats.

King. Since I ſee that you will not hear any thing of Debate concerning that which I confeſs I thought moſt material for the Peace of the Kingdom, and for the Liberty of the Subject, I ſhall wave it; I ſhall ſpeak nothing to it, but only I muſt tell you, that this many a-day all things have been taken away from me, but that that I call more dear to me than my Life, which is my Conſcience and my Honour: And if I had a reſpect to my Life more than the Peace of the Kingdom and the Liberty of the Subject, certainly I ſhould have made a particular Defence for my ſelf; for by that at leaſtwiſe I might have delayed an ugly Sentence, which I believe will paſs upon me. Therefore, certainly, certainly, Sir, as a Man that hath ſome Underſtanding, ſome Knowledge of the World, if that my true Zeal to my Country had not overborne the Care that I have for my own Preſervation, I ſhould have gone another way to work than that I have done. Now, Sir, I conceive, that an haſty Sentence once paſs'd, may ſooner be repented of than recalled; and truly, the ſelf-ſame Deſire that I have for the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Liberty of the Subject, more than my own particular Ends, makes me now at laſt deſire, that I having ſomething to ſay that concerns both, before Sentence be given, that I may be heard in the Painted-Chamber before the Lords and Commons. This Delay cannot be prejudicial to you, whatſoever I ſay; if that I ſay no Reaſon, thoſe that hear me muſt be Judges; I cannot be Judge of that that I have: if it be Reaſon, and really for the Welfare of the Kingdom, and the Liberty of the Subject, I am ſure on't, 'tis very well worth the hearing; therefore I do conjure you, as you love that that you pretend, I hope it's real, the Liberty of the Subject, the Peace of the Kingdom, that you will grant me this hearing before any Sentence be paſt. I only deſire this, that you will take this into your Conſideration, it may be you have not heard of it before-hand; if you will, I'll retire, and you may think of it: but if I cannot get this Liberty, I do proteſt, that theſe fair Shews of Liberty and Peace, are pure Shews, and that you will not hear your King.

Bradſhaw. Sir, you have now ſpoken.

King. Yes, Sir.

Bradſhaw. And this that you have ſaid is a further declining of the Juriſdiction of this Court, which was the thing wherein you were limited before.

King. Pray excuſe me, Sir, for my Interruption, becauſe you miſtake me; it is not a declining of it, you do judge me before you hear me ſpeak: I ſay it will not, I do not decline it, though I cannot acknowledge the Juriſdiction of the Court; yet, Sir, in this give me leave to ſay, I would do it, though I did not acknowledge it: in this I do proteſt it is not the declining of it, ſince I ſay, if that I do ſay any thing, but that that is for the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Liberty of the Subject, then the Shame is mine. Now I deſire that you will take this into your Conſideration; if you will, I'll withdraw.

Bradſhaw. Sir, this is not altogether new that you have moved to us, not altogether new to us, though the firſt time in Perſon you have offered it to the Court. Sir, you ſay you do not decline the Juriſdiction of the Court.

King. Not in this that I have ſaid.

Bradſhaw. I underſtand you well, Sir, but nevertheleſs that which you have offered, ſeems to be contrary to that Saying of yours; for the Court are ready to give a Sentence: It is not as you ſay, That they will not hear their King; for they have been ready to hear you, they have patiently waited your Pleaſure for three Courts together, to hear what you would ſay to the Peoples Charge againſt you, to which you have not vouchſafed to give any Anſwer at all. Sir, this tends to a further Delay; truly, Sir, ſuch Delays as theſe, neither may the Kingdom, nor Juſtice well bear; you have had three ſeveral Days to have offered in this kind what you would have pleaſed. This Court is founded upon that Authority of the Commons of England, in whom reſts the ſupreme Juriſdiction; that which you now tender, is to have another Juriſdiction, and a co-ordinate Juriſdiction. I know very well you expreſs your ſelf, Sir, that notwithſtanding that you would offer to the Lords and Commons in the Painted-Chamber, yet nevertheleſs you would proceed on here, I did hear you ſay ſo. But, Sir, that you would offer there, whatever it is, muſt needs be in delay of the Juſtice here; ſo as if this Court be reſolved, and prepared for the Sentence, this that you offer they are not bound to grant. But, Sir, according to that you ſeem to deſire, and becauſe you ſhall know the further Pleaſure of the Court upon that which you have moved, the Court will withdraw for a time.

[This he did to prevent the Diſturbance of their Scene by one of their own Members, Col. John Downes, who could not ſtifle the Reluctance of his Conſcience, when he ſaw his Majeſty preſs ſo earneſtly for a ſhort Hearing: But declaring himſelf unſatisfied, forced them to yield to the King's Requeſt. Nalſon.]

King. Shall I withdraw?

Bradſhaw. Sir, you ſhall know the Pleaſure of the Court preſently.

The Court withdraws for half an Hour into the Court of Wards.

Serjeant at Arms, The Court gives Command, that the Priſoner be withdrawn; and they give order for his Return again.

[Then withdrawing into the Chamber of the Court of Wards, their Buſineſs was not to conſider of his Majeſty's Deſire, but to chide Downes, and with Reproaches and Threats to harden him to go through the Remainder of their Villany with them. Nalſon.]

Which done, they return; and being ſat, Bradſhaw commanded;

Serjeant at Arms, Send for your Priſoner.

Who being come, Bradſhaw proceeded:

Sir, you were pleaſed to make a motion here to the Court to offer a Deſire of yours, touching the propounding of ſomewhat to the Lords and Commons in the Painted-Chamber, for the Peace of the Kingdom: Sir, you did, in effect, receive an Anſwer before the Court adjourned; truly, Sir, their Withdrawing and Adjournment was pro formâ tantum; for it did not ſeem to them that there was any Difficulty in the thing: they have conſidered of what you have moved, and have conſidered of their own Authority, which is founded, as hath been often ſaid, upon the ſupreme Authority of the Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament: The Court acts according to their Commiſſion. Sir, the Return I have to you from the Court, is this; That they have been too much delayed by you already, and this that you now offer, hath occaſioned ſome little further Delay; and they are Judges appointed by the higheſt Authority; and Judges are no more to delay, than they are to deny Juſtice: they are good Words in the great old Charter of England; Nulli negabimus, nulli vendemus, nulli differemus Juſtitiam. There muſt be no Delay; but the truth is, Sir, and ſo every Man here obſerves it, it, that you have much delayed them in your Contempt and Default, for which they might long ſince have proceeded to Judgment againſt you; and notwithſtanding what you have offered, they are reſolved to proceed to Puniſhment, and to Judgment, and that is their unanimous Reſolution.

King. Sir, I know it is in vain for me to diſpute, I am no Sceptick for to deny the Power that you have; I know that you have Power enough: Sir, I muſt confeſs, I think it would have been for the Kingdom's Peace, if you would have taken the pains for to have ſhewn the Lawfulneſs of your Power; for this Delay that I have deſired, I confeſs it is a Delay, but it is a Delay very important for the Peace of the Kingdom; for it is not my Perſon that I look at alone, it is the Kingdom's Welfare, and the Kingdom's Peace; it is an old Sentence, That we ſhould think on long before we reſolve of great Matters ſuddenly. Therefore, Sir, I do ſay again, that I do put at your doors all the Inconveniency of a haſty Sentence. I confeſs I have been here now, I think, this Week; this Day eight Days was the Day I came here firſt, but a little Delay of a Day or two further may give Peace; whereas a haſty Judgment may bring on that Trouble and perpetual Inconveniency to the Kingdom, that the Child that is unborn may repent it: and therefore again, out of the Duty I owe to God, and to my Country, I do deſire that I may be heard by the Lords and Commons in the Painted-Chamber, or any other Chamber that you will appoint me.

Bradſhaw. Sir, you have been already anſwered to what you even now moved, being the ſame you moved before, ſince the Reſolution and the Judgment of the Court in it: and the Court now requires to know whether you have any more to ſay for your ſelf, than you have ſaid, before they proceed to Sentence.

King. I ſay this, Sir, That if you hear me, if you will give me but this Delay, I doubt not but I ſhall give ſome Satisfaction to you all here, and to my People after that; and therefore I do require you, as you will anſwer it at the dreadful Day of Judgment, that you will conſider it once again.

Bradſhaw. Sir, I have received Direction from the Court.

King. Well, Sir.

Bradſhaw. If this muſt be re-enforced, or any thing of this nature, your Anſwer muſt be the ſame; and they will proceed to Sentence, if you have nothing more to ſay.

King. Sir, I have nothing more to ſay, but I ſhall deſire, that this may be entred what I have ſaid.

Bradſhaw. The Court then, Sir, hath ſomething to ſay unto you; which, although I know it will be very unacceptable, yet notwithſtanding they are willing, and are reſolved to diſcharge their Duty.

[Then Bradſhaw went on in a long Harangue, endeavouring to juſtify their Proceedings, miſapplying Law and Hiſtory, and raking up and wreſting whatſoever he thought fit for his Purpoſe, alledging the Examples of former Treaſons and Rebellions, both at home and abroad, as authentick Proofs; and concluding, That the King was a Tyrant, Traytor, Murderer, and publick Enemy to the Commonwealth of England.

His Majeſty, having with his wonted Patience heard all theſe Reproaches, anſwered; Nalſon.]

I would deſire only one Word before you give Sentence; and that is, That you would hear me concerning thoſe great Imputations that you have laid to my Charge.

Bradſhaw. Sir, You muſt give me now leave to go on; for I am not far from your Sentence, and your Time is now paſt.

King: But I ſhall deſire you will hear me a few Words to you: For truly, whatever Sentence you will put upon me in reſpect of thoſe heavy Imputations, that I ſee by your Speech you have put upon me; Sir, It is very true, that -----

Bradſhaw. Sir, I muſt put you in mind: Truly, Sir, I would not willingly, at this time eſpecially, interrupt you in any thing you have to ſay, that is proper for us to admit of; but, Sir, you have not owned us as a Court, and you look upon us as a ſort of People met together; and we know what Language we receive from your Party.

King. I know nothing of that.

Bradſhaw. You diſavow us as a Court; and therefore for you to addreſs your ſelf to us, not to acknowledge us as a Court to judge of what you ſay, it is not to be permitted. And the truth is, all along, from the firſt time you were pleaſed to diſavow and diſown us, the Court needed not to have heard you one Word: For unleſs they be acknowledged a Court, and ingaged, it is not proper for you to ſpeak. Sir, we have given you too much Liberty already, and admitted of too much Delay, and we may not admit of any farther. Were it proper for us to do, we ſhould hear you freely, and we ſhould not have declined to have heard you at large, what you could have ſaid or proved on your behalf, whether for totally excuſing, or for in part excuſing thoſe great and heinous Charges that in whole or in part are laid upon you. But, Sir, I ſhall trouble you no longer, your Sins are of ſo large a Dimenſion, that if you do but ſeriouſly think of them, they will drive you to a ſad Conſideration, and they may improve in you a ſad and ſerious Repentance: And that the Court doth heartily wiſh that you may be ſo penitent for what you have done amiſs, that God may have Mercy, at leaſt wiſe, upon your better Part: Truly, Sir, for the other, it is our Parts and Duties to do that that the Law preſcribes. We are not here jus dare, but jus dicere. We cannot be unmindful of what the Scripture tells us, For to acquit the Guilty is of equal Abomination, as to condemn the Innocent: We may not acquit the Guilty. What Sentence the Law affirms to a Traytor, Tyrant, a Murderer, and a publick Enemy to the Country, that Sentence you are now to hear read unto you; and that is the Sentence of the Court.

Make an O yes, and command Silence while the Sentence is read.

Which done, the Clerk read the Sentence, drawn up in Parchment:

WHereas the Commons of England in Parliament had appointed them an High Court of Juſtice, for the Tryal of Charles Stuart, King of England, before whom he had been three times convented; and at the firſt time a Charge of High Treaſon, and other Crimes and Miſdemeanors, was read in the behalf of the Kingdom of England, &c.

Here the Charge was repeated.

Which Charge being read unto him, as aforeſaid, he the ſaid Charles Stuart was required to give his Anſwer; but he refuſed ſo to do: Expreſſing the ſeveral Paſſages of his refuſing, in the former Proceedings.

For all which Treaſons and Crimes, this Court doth adjudge, That he the ſaid Charles Stuart, as a Tyrant, Traytor, Murderer, and a publick Enemy, ſhall be put to Death, by the ſevering of his Head from his Body.

Which being read, Bradſhaw added;

The Sentence now read and publiſhed, is the Act, Sentence, Judgment, and Reſolution of the whole Court.

To which they all expreſſed their Aſſent by ſtanding up, as was before agreed and ordered.

His Majeſty then ſaid, Will you hear me a Word, Sir?

Bradſhaw. Sir, you are not to be heard after the Sentence.

King. No, Sir?

Bradſhaw. No, Sir; by your favour, Sir. Guard, withdraw your Priſoner.

King. I may ſpeak after Sentence, by your Favour, Sir: I may ſpeak after Sentence, ever.

By your Favour, (Hold!) the Sentence, Sir---I ſay, Sir, I do-----

I am not ſuffered to ſpeak: Expect what Juſtice other People will have.

[His Majeſty being taken away by the Guard, as he paſſed down the ſtairs, the inſolent Soldiers ſcoffed at him, caſting the Smoke of their Tobacco (a thing very diſtaſteful unto him) in his face, and throwing their Pipes in his way; and one more inſolent than the reſt, ſpitting in his face, his Majeſty, according to his wonted heroick Patience, took no more notice of ſo ſtrange and barbarous an Indignity, than to wipe it off with his Handkerchief.

As he paſſed along, hearing the Rabble of Soldiers crying out, Juſtice! Juſtice! he ſaid, Poor Souls, for a Piece of Money they would do ſo for their Commanders.

Being brought firſt to Sir Robert Cotton's, and thence to Whitehall, the Soldiers continued their brutiſh Carriage toward him, abuſing all that ſeemed to ſhew any Reſpect, or even Pity to him; not ſuffering him to reſt in his Chamber, but thruſting in, and ſmoking their Tobacco, and diſturbing his Privacy.

But through all theſe Tryals (unuſual to Princes) he paſſed with ſuch a calm and even Temper, that he let fall nothing unbeſeeming his former Majeſty and Magnanimity.

In the Evening, a Member of the Army acquainted the Committee with his Majeſty's Deſire, That ſeeing they had paſſed a Sentence of Death upon him, and his Time might be nigh, he might ſee his Children; and Dr. Juxon, Biſhop of London, might be admitted to aſſiſt him in his private Devotions, and receiving the Sacrament. Both which at length were granted.

And the next day, being Sunday, he was attended by the Guard to St. James's; where the Biſhop preached before him upon theſe words, In the Day when God ſhall judge the Secrets of all Men by Jeſus Chriſt according to my Goſpel. Nalſon.]

Commissioners meet.

Ordered, That Mr. Marshall, Mr. Nye, Mr. Caryl, Mr. Salway, and Mr. Dell be desired to attend the King, to administer to him those Spiritual Helps as should be suitable to his present Condition. And Lieut. Col. Goffe is desired forthwith to repair unto them for that purpose.

Who did so, but after informed the Court, That the King being acquainted therewith, refused to confer with them; expressing, that he would not be troubled with them.

Ordered, That the Scaffold upon which the King is to be executed, be covered with Black.

The Warrant for Executing the King being accordingly delivered to those Parties to whom the same was directed, Execution was done upon him, according to the Tenour of the said Warrant, about Two of the clock in the Afternoon of the said Thirtieth of January.

The Tryal of James Duke of Hamilton, and Earl of Cambridge, Febr. 9. 1648. as publish'd by Dr. Burnett in his Memoirs of the House of Hamilton. To which is added, Mr. Steel's Argument on the behalf of the Commonwealth, touching the Matter of Law.

MR. STEEL and Mr. Cook, the Counsel for the People of England, did exhibit on the Ninth of February, being Friday, the following Charge:

That the Earl of Cambridge about the 19th of July last, traitorously invaded this Nation in a hostile manner, and levied War to assist the King against the Kingdom and People of England, and had committed sundry Murders, Outrages, Rapines, Wastes, and Spoils, upon the said People; and particularly about the 20th of August, near Preston, did make War, join Battel, and fight against the Forces of the Parliament, and therein did murder and kill Colonel Thornley and others.

To this the Duke put in the Declinatour and special Plea following, intending at last to answer the Charge, if the Plea was not sufficient: having first told the Court, he was better known by another Name than the Earl of Cambridge. His Plea consisted of three Heads: First, He pleaded this his undertaking that Employment was by Command of the Parliament, and Supreme Authority of the Kingdom of Scotland, for such Ends as he conceived were good and justifiable, and in no way derogatory to the Peace and Happiness of these Dominions: That he did earnestly endeavour to decline it, but that not being accepted of, he could not disobey their Commands without incurring the severest Censures. Secondly, That he was born in Scotland before the Naturalization of his Father in England, therefore he conceived himſelf an Alien, and not triable in England. Thirdly, That he had render'd himſelf Priſoner upon Capitulation and Articles with thoſe who had Major-General Lambert's Commiſſion; and that by theſe he was firſt a Priſoner of War; next, his Life and the Safety of his Perſon was ſecured to him by the Articles, which were ſigned by the Commiſſioners of both ſides, before he was their Priſoner, and that they could faſten neither a Breach nor Non-performance on him. Upon this the Counſel of the People cauſed the Act of his Father's Naturalization to be read, and ſpake a little to aggravate and ſet out his Fact: but he deſired a convenient time to procure Papers, Witneſſes, and other Evidences material to his Plea, which he ſaid was ſeldom denied to any in that condition; and it was well known to many there, how that ſince the beginning of this Parliament many Weeks were granted to an Eminent Man upon his Tryal, (by whom he meant the Earl of Strafford, who had time allowed him to ſend to Ireland.) The Court adjourned to the next day, without giving him any ſatisfactory Anſwer. But the Duke's Carriage and Diſcourſe that day gained much on all the Spectators, being ſo ſerene and calm, that his very Enemies did applaud it.

Saturday the 10th, in the Evening, his Grace was again brought to the Bar, and he deſired Counſel, which was granted; and it was referred to him, whether the Court or himſelf ſhould name them: which he then paſſed over, and without much ſpeaking on either ſide, the Court adjourned; notice being given him, that he muſt appear again on Tueſday the 13th. But no Order being iſſued forth for Counſel, ſome Counſel who were dealt with did decline the Employment.

Tueſday the 13th, his Grace being brought again to the Bar, deſired a longer time, ſince notwithſtanding ſerious means had been uſed, no Lawyer would be his Counſel without the Court's Orders. This was granted by the Preſident after ſome Expoſtulation, and upon his Grace's Nomination, Mr. Chute, Mr. Hales, Mr. Parſons, and Dr. Walker, were aſſigned him for Counſel, to have free Acceſs to him, in the preſence and hearing of ſome of his Keepers, and to be ready againſt Thurſday following to maintain his Plea: upon which, the Court adjourned till the 15th.

Thurſday the 15th, his Grace being again brought before the Court, declared that their Order being offered to his Counſel, they all found themſelves unable to plead for him, or to do what was otherwiſe fitting, and ſo had refuſed to come and ſpeak with him at St. James's. The Court objected the time they had already granted, and alledged this was a mere Delay: but his Grace proteſted it was true, and offered one of his Servants to atteſt it. Dr. Walker in Court declared, he would not be of his Counſel, by reaſon of his Employment under the Parliament. His Grace deſired a convenient time, as was uſual in the like Caſes, not only in reſpect of his Lawyers, but that he might ſend to Scotland, and other remote Places, for Witneſſes and Evidences neceſſary for his Defence; ſince no Prejudice could come by that Delay, and this was denied to none in Tryal for Life, and had been granted to Mac-Guire and Mac-Hun, two Iriſhmen. But for his Counſel, the Court ordained, that any of the ſix he ſhould name might be authorized to adviſe with him in private, and to ſpeak in Court in the Matter of Law ariſing out of the Fact of the Plea, after the Matter of Fact was handled, which his Grace was to maintain next Saturday. And for the Time he craved, they ſaid, he looked on the unreaſonable Time was granted to Strafford and Canterbury, thoſe grand Offenders, with whom he had been too familiar, as Precedents; but thoſe were Precedents without a Precedent, and none were to expect the like at this time, eſpecially ſince there were now ſo many Priſoners to be try'd.

Saturday the 17th, his Grace was brought to the Court with ſome Witneſſes, his Counſel being near, but not preſent; and in order to the Parts of his Plea, he firſt produced Duplicates of the Commiſſion, and Orders from the Parliament of Scotland and Committee of Eſtates there. The Court demanded Evidence for both. His Grace anſwered, Were Time granted, he would not only ſufficiently prove theſe, but many other Points belonging to his Juſtification. But the Court anſwered, That unleſs they were preſently atteſted viva voce, they would not ſuffer them to be read. Whereupon his Grace deſired that his Servant Mr. Lewis might be examined, whoſe Teſtimony was accepted, and the Papers he produced were received for Evidences, and read. Next, the Declaration containing the Ends of the Engagement was read, and being proved by the ſame Witneſs, was left in Court with the former Papers. Then the Court upon his Grace's deſire produced the original Articles of Capitulation, which were read; and Mr. Cole proved he ſaw them delivered to his Grace about Nine in the Morning, before the Lord Gray came in.

The Lord Gray depoſed, That two ſeveral Summons, which were ſent by him to his Grace to yield upon Mercy, were both anſwered negatively in reſpect of the Ceſſation and Treaty; That by a Letter from Cromwell, dated Warrington Auguſt 20. he was enjoined to purſue the Scotiſh Forces with all vigour; That he had received Letters from the Staffordſhire Gentlemen with whom the Ceſſation begun, intimating that they had condeſcended to it, on purpoſe to gain a few days time to ſtrengthen themſelves, in regard the Scots were ſo numerous: and that he diſpatched away Wayte and Peters that Morning in which the Treaty ended, to proteſt againſt it.

Peters was next examined, and anſwered, That going that Morning to proteſt, by Order from the Lord Gray, he came accidentally to the Duke, where he found the Hoſtages in his Chamber, and asked if he was willing to be the Lord Gray's Priſoner, who anſwered, he could not, in regard of the Treaty; but if he were afterwards to be diſpoſed of, he had rather be his Lordſhip's Priſoner than any other's, being of his Acquaintance: That he had ſeen the Summons, and the negative Anſwer to them; That this was about five in the Morning; and that Wayte and he went a part of the way towards the Place of Treaty, where he heard the Articles were concluded.

Lilburn was next examined, who depoſed, That the Articles were ſigned by himſelf, and the other Treaties, about Five in the Morning, and were to be ratified by the Duke and Lambert; and that his own Meaning of preſerving the Duke's Life (he knew not how the reſt meant) was only to preſerve him from the Violence of the Soldiers, and and not from the Juſtice of the Parliament. At this Peters roſe up, expreſſing great diſlike of Lilburn's Gloſs, ſaying, That much Tenderneſs was to be uſed where the Life of ſo eminent a Perſon was concerned: That he had ſeen many Articles of War, but had never heard of ſuch Ambiguity; and that it was clear by thoſe Articles the Duke held his Life ſecured, as well from the Parliament as the Soldiers; and wiſhed to God, that if their Commiſſioners had meant otherwiſe, it had been ſo expreſſed in the Articles, it being moſt neceſſary that Articles were in a Concernment of Life. The Preſident anſwered, You ſay well for the future, but it is now too late.

His Grace reſumed what had been ſaid, and ſpoke much on the Articles for weakening Lilburn's Gloſs.

Next, the Governour and Marſhal of Windſor were examined about his Eſcape from Windſor-Caſtle. The Governour depoſed, That the Duke ſaid to him he needed not fear his Eſcape, he would be a true Priſoner, and not go away though the Gates were opened. The Marſhal ſaid, he only heard this from the Governour.

The Duke expreſſed a deep Reſentment of this Injury done him by the Governour, who wounded his Honour ſo much, which he valued above all earthly things; and did ſhew how unlike it was, that any ſuch thing was either demanded or granted, ſince that is only done for a little more Liberty, whereas he was all the while kept under ſtrict Guards; nor had he the liberty of walking in the Park, but was always guarded by two Keepers, the one lying all night in the Room next him, and the other every night locking the Door, and carrying the Key with him: That the Governour's Teſtimony in this matter was not to be received, he being a Party, and now in hazard for his Negligence, for he was told that if he eſcaped, he ſhould die for it; adding, that if he were not a Priſoner, he would deſire Right of the Governour for that Scandal caſt on him, and chuſe no other place for it but Weſtminſter-Hall. But to all this the Governour made no Reply; only the Preſident ſaid, that though he could not blame the Earl of Cambridge for what he ſaid, yet for all that the Governour was not to be diſcredited.

After this, the Duke ſpake a little to all the three Branches of his Plea, reſerving the fuller enlarging upon them to his Counſel. He inſiſted moſt on the Articles, which he doubted not were ſufficient to protect him: he deſired them to conſider, how ſacred Articles of War were reputed in all Places, and among all Nations, and how inviolably they were kept, all Princes and States being moſt careful to obſerve them, not only to Strangers, but to Subjects; having great regard to Articles, though only for Quarter, much more when there was a Capitulation for Life: adding the following Inſtances. Eliſha the Prophet would not ſuffer the King of Iſrael to kill the Syrian Captains, ſaying, Wouldſt thou ſmite thoſe whom thou haſt taken captive with thy Sword and thy Bow? The Blood of Abner lay on Joab's head, who killed one that had the King's Safe-Conduct. The Gibeonites alſo, though they uſed Joſhua deceitfully, yet were preſerved according to the Articles given them; and not only Saul's Houſe, but the whole Land ſuffer'd for the Violation of them. That Prince Robert and the Lord Cottington, tho excepted from Life or Pardon by Act of Parliament, were notwithſtanding that, upon the Articles of the Rendition of Oxford, permitted to go beyond Sea, and never queſtioned for Life: and the like Juſtice was done the Earl of Briſtol and the Lord Paulet, upon the Articles of the Surrender of Exeter, tho both were excepted from Pardon: And that the Lord Fairfax and the Officers of the Army were moſt careful to ſee Articles always kept, in which they judged their Honour deeply concerned, and had often written to the Parliament to that end; therefore he did not doubt the like Juſtice would be done him. By this time it was late, and the Preſident appointed Monday next for the Duke to finiſh his Plea in Matter of Fact, ordering his Counſel to be in the Court, for their better Information; and ſo they adjourned.

Monday the 19th, the Duke and his Counſel were brought to the Bar. Colonel Wayte was examined, who depoſed, That the Duke rendred himſelf to be the Lord Gray's Priſoner, and deſired Wayte to protect him from the Multitude, who thereupon left a Guard at his going away. But during his Depoſition, Peters ſaid, He lyes, he lyes! And Peters, Spencer, and other Officers who were with Wayte at Uxeter, being examined, did totally falſify his Depoſition. Divers were alſo that day examined about the Place of the Duke's Birth, who all ſwore, they heard it always ſaid that he was born at Hamilton, and that it was not a thing to be doubted of. Others were examined about the ſigning of the Articles, who all witneſſed, that they were ſigned long before the Lord Gray came: and Major Blackmore deponed, That the Duke's being the Lord Gray's Priſoner, was by an Agreement betwixt him and Lambert, whoſe Occaſions preſſed him to go ſuddenly Northward.

After this the Duke ſpake a little, to ſhew how little weight was to be laid on Wayte's Teſtimony, which was ſo evidently diſproved. Next, his Counſel asked the Court's Directions how they ſhould proceed; and the Court anſwered, That after the Matter of Fact was handled, they might plead in Law upon all the parts of the Plea: and they told the Duke, by the next Wedneſday to finiſh his Evidence.

He deſired a Warrant for bringing ſome Gentlemen, then Priſoners in Whitehall, who were his material Witneſſes: but the Court adjourned, and promiſed to conſider of that Motion in the Painted Chamber; yet they granted it not.

Wedneſday the 21ſt, the Court ſat, and the Duke was brought to the Bar. Some were interrogated about the Time of his Birth, to prove him Poſt-natus: but it was not proved, one Perſon only ſwearing, that he heard him ſay he was ſome Years younger than the King. Evidence was alſo brought of his Conjunction with Langdale, which they accounted Treaſon; yet even that was not clearly proved, tho it was much laboured. Some Letters of his to Langdale had been taken, and were brought into Court: but as the Letters proved no Conjunction, ſo it did not appear that they were his Letters; only Peters aſſerted they were like his Hand. Then a Vote of the two Houſes was read, repealing a former Vote of ſetting an hundred thouſand Pounds Sterling upon him for Ranſom; and Proof was brought, that notwithſtanding Articles were given, yet ſome had been forced to take the Negative Oath; and thereby they ſtudied to evince, that the Parliament did not hold themſelves bound to ſtand to Articles.

After this, his Grace reſumed the Subſtance of all thoſe Evidences, and ſhewed that it was not proved proved he was a Poſt-natus, nor that he joined with Sir Marmaduke Langdale, who neither received Orders nor the Word from him, but marched and quartered apart; and that tho he had done otherwiſe, it could not be criminal in him, ſince he had no Orders to the contrary from the Parliament of Scotland, but was commanded by them to join with all who would concur with him for proſecuting the Ends of the Engagement, of which Sir Marmaduke approving, he had no reaſon to refuſe Concurrence with him; neither could this be made Treaſon by the Law of England: of all which it ſeem'd the Parliament was once well-ſatisfied, ſince by a Vote they had fined him in an hundred thouſand Pound Sterling, as the Price of his Liberty; by which it appeared they look'd not on him as a Traytor, but as an Enemy who had Life granted him by Articles.

Upon this, the Court adjourned till Thurſday the 22d, and his Counſel were appointed to plead, and he was to cloſe his Evidence. The Duke was brought to the Bar, and by divers Witneſſes it was proved, that there was no Rendition made to the Lord Gray, but a plain Refuſal; and that the Treaty was ended, the Articles ſigned, and Lambert come up, before the Lord Gray came thither. There was alſo produced an Order of Parliament, made four Years before, That no Quarters ſhould be given to any of the Iriſh in Arms, which inferred that others might have them: and another Order was read of the 14th of July laſt, declaring all the Scots who entred England Enemies, and all the Engliſh and Iriſh who aſſiſted them Traytors; and with this he cloſed his Evidence. And ſince he was not to be ſuffered to ſpeak any more, he enlarged on all the parts of his Plea, and ſpake at length as follows.

That he was ſent by the Kingdom of Scotland, which was a free Kingdom, and independent on England; That he having had his Birth, Honour, and Fortune there, was bound to give obedience to their Orders; That for himſelf, he had lived much out of Buſineſs, and was ſeldom in publick Truſt in that Kingdom, nor very deſirous of any; but that being commanded to undertake the Charge of General, for Ends which he conceived lawful, and no way contrary to the Peace or Intereſt of England, he was obliged to follow their Orders: and that by ſome Papers emitted by the Parliament of England againſt that Expedition, they declared they look'd on it as a National Breach, whereby Scotland had violated their Leagues and Treaties with them, ſo that it was no private Act of his: That the entring of the Scotiſh Army into England, Anno 1640. was accounted no Invaſion nor Treaſon, but on the contrary was acceptable to this Kingdom, which gave a brotherly Aſſiſtance for it; and that the late unfortunate Army was deſigned fully for as good Ends, and would have been ſo look'd on had it proſpered. And for his joining with Sir Marmaduke Langdale, he anſwered it as was before ſet down. Therefore he being taken priſoner in ſuch a War, he conceived it without a Precedent that he ſhould be try'd for his Life, for ſerving his native Kingdom in an open War. As for his being an Alien, he referred that to his Counſel, but ſaid it was undeniable he was born in Scotland, nor was he proved a Poſt-natus; he was alſo born before his Father's Naturalization, and ſo not included in it, and his own Naturalization had been in agitation in the beginning of this Parliament: That his ſitting in Parliament did not conclude him an Engliſh Earl, for if queſtioned, he might probably have been expelled out of the Houſe of Peers, as his Countryman Mr. Walter Stuart was out of the Houſe of Commons; and that his being an Earl did not naturalize him, that being the King's ſingle Act, whereas Naturalization was only by Act of Parliament. As for the Articles, it was clear, that Lambert being a General Officer, commiſſionated by Parliament, was impowered to capitulate both by the Parliament and by Cromwell, the Lord Gray having no Authority from the Parliament, but only from Cromwell's Letter: That he became the Lord Gray's Priſoner only by Lambert's Order, and that he made no Surrender till the Articles were ſigned and delivered: That tho the Lord Gray had proteſted againſt it, (and yet only an Intention to do it was proved) he was not concerned in it, nor bound to take notice of it, Lambert being the Parliament's Officer, and ſent againſt him by them. That Articles were to be expounded by their plain Meaning, and not by any mental Reſerves pretended by the Commiſſioners: That by the firſt Article, he was a Priſoner of War, and that it was ſeldom known that the Life of any ſuch was taken; and that by the ſecond Article, Life and Safety of Perſon were expreſly ſecured without any exception: That if Articles were now violated, it would make the Sequel of the Wars, if any more followed, a downright Butchery, ſince none would any more truſt to a Capitulation; which Miſchief he pray'd God to avert. That his Eſcape out of Priſon was no Breach, he being only bound by the Articles to deliver himſelf Priſoner, which he did, but not to continue ſo. And he concluded, That he was confident, had he no better Plea, his Articles were ſufficient, according to the Laws of all Nations, to preſerve his Life.

Then the Preſident asked him, if he had any thing to ſay as he was Earl of Cambridge? Whereupon he and his Counſel moved, That if what he had ſaid and proved was not ſatisfactory for the Averment of his Plea, he might anſwer the Charge exhibited, which he had not yet done. But to this, neither the Court nor their Counſel would yield, tho they gave no reaſon for it, ſave only that it imply'd a Deſire of Delay: but the reaſon, as was ſaid, was, That they knew had they yielded to that, the Charge had been overthrown, ſince the Law of England does not admit that to be Treaſon which they charged on him, that he had aſſiſted the King againſt the Kingdom and People by levying War. Then the Court told his Counſel, that Saturday was the longeſt time they allow'd them for performing their part: but the Counſel anſwered, That it was impoſſible for them to undertake it, and diſcharge their Conſciences to their Client, having ſo ſhort a time allow'd them; there being a neceſſity of ſearching divers Records for Precedents, which required a competent time, as had been allow'd in former Caſes. But the Court refuſed to promiſe it, only they ſaid they would take it into their conſideration. The Counſel inſiſted, and ſaid plainly, they declined the Employment on thoſe Terms, and would be forced to declare it.

Monday the 26th, the other two Officers that had ſigned the Capitulation for the Duke and his Troops, who had been ſent for a great way off, were examined; who agreed with the former Witneſſes in Matters of Fact, and alſo with Lilburn, that by ſigning the Articles, they only meant the Duke ſhould be preſerved from the Violence of the Soldiers, and not from the Juſtice of the Parliament. Then the Counſel began to plead, and all four ſpoke on the ſeveral Heads of the Plea. Mr. Heron ſpoke curſorily and elegantly, but not very materially: Mr. Parſons, a young Man, ſpoke boldly, and to good purpoſe: Mr. Chute the Civilian ſpoke learnedly and home: and Mr. Hales (ſince the much-renowned Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench) elaborately and at length. The Heads of their Arguments follow.

Duke

The Duke being, as was granted, a born Scotchman, his Tye of Obligation and Subjection to that Kingdom was indiſpenſable and indiſſoluble; ſo that his late Employment could not be refuſed when laid on him by the Authority of that Kingdom, no more than a Native of England, living in it, can diſobey the Commands of this Parliament: whereas any Subjection the Duke owed the Parliament of England was only acquired, and diſpenſable. That ſince no Man can be a Subject of two Kingdoms, whatever Tye lay on him to the Kingdom of England, it was not to be put in competition with what he owed Scotland; it being a Maxim in Law, That major Relatio trahit ad ſe minorem, and that Jus Originis nemo mutare poteſt: That there was an Allegiance due to the King, and another to the Kingdom, and no Treaſon could be without a Breach of Faith and Allegiance due to them againſt whom it was committed, for theſe Kingdoms were two diſtinct Kingdoms; and tho the Allegiance due to the King was the ſame in both Kingdoms, yet that due to the Kingdoms was diſtinct: nor was the actual Adminiſtration of the Kingdoms in the King's Perſon, when the Duke got his Employment. Therefore as his Allegiance to the Kingdom of Scotland was antienter and ſtronger than any Tye that lay on him in England, ſo what he did by their Order might well make him an Enemy to this Kingdom, but could not infer Treaſon. Yet all this of the Allegiance due to the Kingdom was founded on no Common or Statute Law, as Mr. Hales himſelf confeſſed afterwards: but he urged this well againſt thoſe who aſſerted it, it being the univerſally received Maxim at that time.

That whether he was a Poſt-natus or Ante-natus, did not appear; but tho he were, it did not vary the Caſe, nor his Obligation to the Place of his Nativity: and ſo tho he were Poſt-natus, or accounted a Denizen by his Father's Naturalization, his Offence could not be Treaſon, but Hoſtility at moſt; and by that ſuppoſed Hoſtility, he could only loſe his Privilege of a Denizen, but could not be made a Traytor, there being no Precedent where ever any Man was attainted of Treaſon for a hoſtile Invaſion, and it was queſtionable if this Offence could amount to that. Nor could any Caſe be alledged, where one born in another Independent Kingdom, acting by a Commiſſion from that Kingdom, and reſiding there when he received his Commiſſion, and raiſing the Body of his Army in that Kingdom, and coming into this in an open hoſtile manner, was ever judged guilty of Treaſon. Naturalization was intended to be a Benefit, and not a Snare; ſo that one might well loſe it, but was not to be puniſhed for it. And ſo when France and England were under one Sovereign, divers of both Nations were naturalized in the other; yet when Hoſtility broke out betwixt them, many ſo naturalized fought on the ſide of their native Kingdom, for which none were put to death, tho divers were taken Priſoners. And in Edward the Third's time, tho he claimed France as his by his Right; yet when the Conſtable of France invaded England, and was taken Priſoner, he was not try'd, nor put to death, but ſent back to France, as being a Native of that Kingdom. And when David Bruce King of Scotland invaded this Kingdom, and was taken Priſoner, great Endeavours were uſed to find a legal Ground for his Tryal, he being Earl of Huntingdon in England; but this Plea was waved, for it was found that it could not be done juſtly, that being but a leſs Degree of Honour, tho King Edward claimed a kind of Homage from the Crown of Scotland. That if the Duke were on that account put to death, it might prove of ſad conſequence, in caſe there was War any more betwixt the Kingdoms; ſince moſt of the preſent Generation were Poſt-nati, and all would be ſo quickly: and yet if the Lord Fairfax, who was both a Poſt-natus and had his Honour in Scotland, were commanded to lead an Army thither, and being taken were put to death, it would be thought hard meaſure. For the Duke's Father's Naturalization, it was true, by the Statute of the 25th of Edw. 3. proviſion was made, that Children born without the Kingdom, whoſe Parents were then in the King's Allegiance, ſhould be Denizens: but the Duke was born before his Father's Naturalization, which can never reach him, none but the Iſſue after his Father's Naturalization being included within it; and the word Hæres in the Act is only a word of Limitation, and not of Creation: nor did his making uſe of the Aſſiſtance of ſome Engliſh Forces, make him a Traytor. It is true, if an Engliſhman conduct a foreign Army, or if a Foreigner come of his own head, or in a rebellious way, to aſſiſt an Engliſh Rebellion, it will amount to Treaſon: for the Act of ſuch an Alien is denominated from the Crime of thoſe he aſſiſts here, where he owed a local Obedience, which was the Caſe of Shirley the Frenchman, and of Lopez. But if an Alien come with a foreign Force, tho he make uſe of Engliſh Auxiliaries, that only infers a Hoſtility, but no Treaſon; and was the Caſe of the Lord Harris a Scotchman, 15 Eliz. and of Perkin Warbeck, both having Engliſh Help: and tho Warbeck was put to death, it was by no Civil Judicatory, but only by the Will of Henry the Seventh, who erected a Court-Martial for that purpoſe. The preſent Caſe was yet clearer, where the Alien had Authority from his native Kingdom, and was commanded by them to make uſe of Engliſh Help: ſo that tho Langdale's aſſiſting the Duke did make himſelf a Traytor, yet the Duke's accepting of it only infers an Act of Hoſtility. And whereas it was objected, That the Parliament had already by their Act which conſtituted this Court for his Tryal, declared him a Traytor; it was not to be diſputed what the Parliament had power to do, but no Parliament had ever done the like before: and the Meaning of the Act muſt be, that he ſhould be try'd whether guilty of Treaſon or not, ſince if the Parliament have already declared him a Traytor, further Tryal was needleſs. And it was clear, the Parliament by their Act in July laſt, which declared all the Scots who entred England Enemies, conſidered not the Diſtinction of Poſt-nati, nor judged that inferred Treaſon, ſince moſt of them all were Poſt-nati; That many of the Officers of that Army, who had been taken Priſoners, tho clearly Poſt-nati, were ranſomed, others baniſhed, others ſtill in Priſon: why then ſhould the Imputation of Treaſon be faſtned on the Duke, when the reſt were uſed only as Enemies?

And for the Articles, they made it appear, they were the Publick Faith of the Kingdom, when given by Persons publickly authorized, upon the observing of which inviolably, depended the whole Intercourse of all Nations, and their mutual Confidence, which is founded on all States being bound by the Acts of their Publick Ministers: That this was not a pure Rendition, but a Paction concluded upon Deliberation, wherein the Parliament lost nothing, but on the contrary were Gainers: That the Parliament had ratified this upon the matter, by voting a hundred thousand Pounds Sterling Fine, to be the Price of the Duke's Liberty; That the secret Sense the Treaters pretended, was not to be considered, since all Compacts are to be understood according to the clear Meaning of the Words, and the universal Sense of Mankind, who look on Articles wherein Life is granted, as a sufficient Security, not only from the Soldiers, but from the Civil Powers; and that these Treaters, when the Articles were agreed, should have made known their secret Meaning, otherwise it was not to be regarded. And it was a most dangerous Precedent to admit of collateral Averments of secret Meanings against express Words, much more in a Case of Life, and yet much more in Military Agreements, wherein the Concernments of Armies and Nations were included, and which concerned the Honour and Security of all Soldiers. And for this divers Precedents were cited. The Argument ended thus: That as the Court consisted of Gentlemen, and Lawyers, and of martial Men; so the Plea consisting of three Branches, was the more proper for their Cognizance, a part of it being drawn from the Law of England, another part from the Civil Law, and a third part from the Martial Law: And if the Plea in any of the three Branches was made good (and they doubted not but it would be found so in them all) the Court would be satisfied, there was Reason and Justice for preserving the Duke's Life.

The Court adjourned till Friday the second Day of March, and the Duke being again brought to the Bar, the Counsel for the People pleaded, but so poorly, that all who heard them were ashamed: But they had one Advantage, that neither the Duke nor his Counsel were allowed to speak after them, nor to discover their impertinent Allegations, which made the Duke's Counsel obviate all they could imagine they might say, though they said a great deal so far out of the way of Reason, that none could have thought of it; and yet it was so weak, that it needed neither be obviated, nor replied to.

Yet at the end of every Branch of their Pleading, I shall add the Answers against them, as they are set down in some Notes taken by the Duke's Counsel.

They begun with Alienage, and studied to make it appear, that though he was a Scotchman born, yet he was no Alien, having enjoyed all the Privileges an Englishman was capable of, as being a Peer, a Privy-Counsellor, possessing Lands and Inheritances, and marrying in England. But Naturalization cannot be but by Act of Parliament, and not by the King's single Deed; much less by those Privileges of which any Stranger might participate.

Next they urged his Father's Naturalization, and since his Name was not in that Act, as was in other Acts of Naturalization, that proved him to be no Alien, otherwise his Name had been put in. From that it rather appeared he was an Alien, since others found it necessary to insert their Childrens Names; which his Father not doing, proves the Son an Alien still.

They also urged his being Post-natus, which must be held true, since he brought no Evidence to the contrary; and it being so, his Tie of Subjection was as great in England as in Scotland: That Allegiance was only due to the King, and not to the Kingdom; That there was a King when he entred into England, and that though he was secluded from the Government, yet all Writs were issued in his Name; so that this Expedition was a Breach of the Allegiance he owed the King. This was the oddest part of all their Plea, since his Charge was, That he assisted the King against the Kingdom; and now they did plead he owed no Allegiance to the Kingdom, but to the King, whom they had so lately murdered; the Duke's coming with his Army being only to relieve him from the barbarous Usage he had met with.

They also urged at large, That an Englishman's Children, in what place of the World soever they were born, were Denizens of England, and cited many Precedents. But the Mis-application of them was gross and palpable, those being of Persons who were Englishmen before their Children were born; whereas the Duke's Father was naturalized after he was born: so that he could not communicate that Privilege to him, which he did indeed transmit to his Children born after his Naturalization.

Next, they pleaded, That the Parliament of Scotland had no Power to commissionate him to enter into England; and that if some of them were there, they ought likewise to suffer for it; and it was fit he suffered for his Masters, who employed him: That it was pity the King had not suffered sooner. They also produced many Precedents of Strangers being condemned as guilty of Treason, for Treasons committed in England; as the Queen of Scots, Lopez, Perkin Warbeck, the Lord Harris, Shirley the Frenchman, and the Spanish Ambassador. All this was obviated in the former Argument, where Distinction was made betwixt secret Practices, and an open Invasion with a foreign Force. They added, That Scotland belonged to the Crown of England, and so was to be look'd on as some of the Counties of England. But Scotland had no Subjection to the Crown, but only to the King of England, whom they had murdered, and so they had no Power to judge any Scotchman.

As for the Articles, they pleaded it was not in the power of the Army to absolve any from the Justice of the Parliament, which being above them, was not tied to their Articles; and therefore, though they confessed the Words ought to have been less ambiguous, yet they said, the Exposition of those who signed them was to be admitted, since every Man was to be the Expounder of his own Words; and pleaded some Precedents about the Exposition of ambiguous Words. But the Words here were plain and not ambiguous, only a treacherous Equivocation was invented to break them.

Cook, by a strange Subtilty, said, The Articles only secured his Life during Imprisonment; so that his breaking of Prison, and being retaken, put an end to the Obligation of the Articles. Though he broke not Prison, but went out at Door and Gate, which was no Crime.

The Argument of Mr. Steel, on behalf of the Commonwealth, touching the Matter of Law in the Case of the Earl of Cambridge.

My Lord,

THE Counsel for the Earl of Cambridge have framed their Arguments upon the Fact, as they conceived it proved; and also by admittance of the contrary in some Points, I shall use the same Method: first arguing from the Fact, as I conceive it stated by the Proofs produced; and then by admittance of the contrary, that though the Fact should be as they would have it, that yet the Law will fall out to be against them.

The Charge being read to the Prisoner, he hath thereunto put in his Plea, consisting of three Parts; the Truth and Validity whereof hath been denied on the behalf of the Commonwealth.

First, The first Part of his Plea was, That he was imployed by the Parliament of the Kingdom of Scotland, not to invade this Kingdom, but for the Ends declared by them. The Improvement made of this part of the Plea, is, That the Earl was but a Servant in this Expedition, and under the Authority and Command of another, and tied under Oaths and Penalties to give Obedience; if he had disobeyed, he had been liable to Punishment; therefore it were hard for him to be punished for obeying also: That he hath not exceeded his Commission: Besides, the Parliament of England in their Declaration of the 17th of February last, lay the Blame of this Invasion upon the Parliament of Scotland: And lastly, That the Earl's Case is not unlike that of an Ambassador, who is not to be blamed for acting against a State, if he have it in Mandatis, as in the Case of the Bishop of Ross, in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth.

By endeavouring to give Satisfaction to all which, I shall dispatch what I have to say upon this first part of the Plea.

I shall admit it proved, That he had that Commission and Authority mentioned; and also, that the Rule is generally true, That a Man is not to be punished for an Act which he doth by the necessity of Obedience, because he hath not solutum Arbitrium, which is required to denominate Actions either blame-worthy or excusable: but I shall easily prove, that this Rule is capable of Restriction, both by the Rules of Law and Reason; and if we observe the Distinctions aright, which determine this Question, we shall still find the Earl of Cambridge within that part which renders him inexcusable.

First, The first difference is, where the Action is lawful, and where unlawful which is commanded: If it be lawful, a superior Command may dispense with some Circumstances; but if unlawful, the Servant obeying, is not the less to be blamed. I never held that Law of Ina the Saxon King to be warrantable Divinity; Servus si quid operis patrârit Die Dominico ex præcepto Domini sui, liber esto, if the Precept it self were unjust.

Now for the Action in question, wherein this Earl was engaged; it is not defended by his own Counsel, the Dispute being only de modo, whether he be to be punished as an Enemy, or as a Traytor, though if this Argument held, he were neither way to be punished: and therefore certainly the necessity of his Obedience is no Mitigation for his Crime; and if it should, Empson and Dudley, with all their monopolizing Successors, had been unjustly censured, who always have had Patents and Commissions from Authority to plead: And so also all that Catalogue of former Traytors, who have hatched their Treasons and Designs against this State in foreign Parts, and have ever had the Pope or foreign Princes to put a Stamp of Authority and Command upon them, must by this Argument be in some measure justified.

It was never expected from any under Command, to write himself more a Servant than usque ad aras, those being the Hercules's Pillars whereon a Non plus ultra is written; and therefore whoever exceeds those Bounds, he will find it to be at his Peril.

Secondly, The second Difference is, where the Instrument is inanimatum, and where an active living Instrument: Of the first it is truly said, Instrumenti nulla vis, all being therein attributed to the principal Efficient, but otherwise of the other. From hence the Statute of 1, 2 Phil. and Mary, *c.*10. did justly repeal the Statute of 33 H. 8. c. 20. which had punished a Man for Treason, though he became non compos Mentis before the Execution. And no less justly did 25 Ed. 3. de Proditionibus, by the Word [Imagination] alter in the like Point that Law which was in use till then, concerning such a Person's committing the Act of Treason, such an one being no better than quasi inanimatus. But who can affirm this Earl to be other than an active and vigorous Instrument? non modo vivit, sed in Senatum venit, being a chief Member of that Parliament, under whose Command he would shelter himself; and by that means he is a Master rather than a Servant, and so met with by that Declaration of the Parliament of this Kingdom, of which he would have made an Argument for himself.

Thirdly, Where there is Necessitas culpabilis, the Law will not excuse, as it will where there is no Crime in contracting the Necessity. Those who in former times gave Victuals and Provision to Sir John Oldcastle, were not punished as Traytors, because they did it (say our Records) pro timore Mortis, & recesserunt quam citò potuerunt, 3 Inst. 10. And upon this Reason seems that Opinion of Tremayle to be grounded in 21 H. 7. 39. That a Servant may justify the killing of another, to save his Master's Life, if he cannot otherwise escape.

But if one being drunk commits a Crime, though he hath not properly and immediately the free Exercise of his Will, yet the Law reputes him voluntarius Dæmon; and he is not at all the less excusable by our Law, 1 Inst. 247. 4 li. Beverley's Case: and by the Philosopher's Rule, such a one doth ignorans, not per ignorantiam agere; and is therein so far from being excused, that he is therefore to be doubly punished.

Now to assume, that whereby the Earl's Counsel would excuse him, viz. his Oath and Commission, renders him the less excusable; because both are strong Arguments of a free and full Consent: for who can imagine them of Scotland to be such meer Statists, as to think that Oath equally obliging, which was compulsive to the same, if freely taken; or that that General should be trusted with a Commission over all their Forces both by Sea and Land, as his Commission runs, whose Heart as well as Hand had not imbraced it? And truly, they that have heard his Letters read to Sir Marmaduke Langdale, wherein he prays for the Increase of the Distractions at London, and for his Friends at Colchester, would not judge him an unwilling Instrument, but one exceeding, rather than falling short in executing his Commission.

Laſtly, Neceſſity of Obedience may excuſe in privatis, but never in publicis. If a Feme-covert, together with her Husband, commit an Act which in another would amount to Felony, yet in her it ſhall not, becauſe ſub poteſtate viri, 27 Aſſ. p. 40. but otherwiſe the Law is in point of Treaſon; and ſo is the Judgment of my Lord Verulam; Nec valet Privilegium (ſaith he) contra Rempublicam. And as to the Caſe of an Ambaſſador urged on the other ſide, and in particular of the Biſhop of Roſs in the Days of Queen Elizabeth; I anſwer, Firſt, The Privileges of thoſe who are entertained as Ambaſſadors, are very great, and not to be made Precedents, or aſſumed by any other; whence Proregis Dedecus redundat in Regem: and therefore before 25 Ed. 3. it was Treaſon to kill an Ambaſſador, 22 Aſſ. p. 48. And from hence might ariſe that Privilege ſhewed to the Biſhop of Roſs. Secondly, It appears rather to be an Act of Grace than of Juſtice, that that Biſhop was freed, becauſe he was ſet at liberty after a long Impriſonment; which if not liable to the Cenſure of the Law, he ſhould not at all in Juſtice have endured. Alſo by the Judgment of my Lord Bacon, cited by the learned Doctor on the other ſide, in point of Conſpiracy againſt the State, even an Ambaſſador is not privileged; yet of this Biſhop learned Camden ſaith in his Eliz. Fuit liberatus, qui Rebellioni clam faces ſubjecerat. All which were Arguments of Grace, and therefore that Caſe will be no Precedent for this, wherein alſo Conſpiracies and Correſpondencies with many of this Nation have been proved, and are otherwiſe notorious.

And for that inevitable Labyrinth, out of which the Earl of Cambridge cannot extricate himſelf, but that whether obey or not obey, he is under a Miſchief, he may for that thank himſelf; volenti non fit injuria: this is like the Plague of an erroneous Conſcience, which whether obeyed or not, proves a Tormentor to its Subject.

Secondly, The ſecond Part of the Earl's Plea is, That he is no Engliſhman, notwithſtanding the Naturalization of his Father; which, in effect, is as much as to ſay, and ſo it hath been inſiſted on, he is by Birth a Scotſman, and by conſequence an Alien to, and not tryable as a Traytor by the Laws of England. Concerning the handling of which Queſtion, it being that whereupon the Validity of the other two doth, in my Judgment, principally depend; I ſhall firſt anſwer the material Objections which I conceive made by the Counſel on the other ſide, before I offer any thing poſitively to aſſert the Invalidity of this part of the Plea.

Obj. It hath been ſaid, The Proof is not clear for the Earl of Cambridge's being a Poſt-natus; viz. one born after King James's Acceſs to the Crown of England; and that being but a non liquet in favorem Vitæ, the moſt favourable Conſtruction is to be taken for the Priſoner.

Anſw. Firſt, I deny that the Proof amounts to no more in this Particular than a non liquet; for there is one poſitive Witneſs that ſpeaks directly to the Earl's Birth after K. James's coming to the Crown of England: another ſpeaks to the Earl's own Confeſſion, being about two or three and forty years of Age, which ſpeaks him born ſince that time; and a third ſpeaks to the common Report of his being born ſince: and if the Proof were but ſemiplena probatio, yet as Bracton ſaith, that amounts to a Preſumption; and, ſaith he, Preſumptioni ſtabitur donec probetur in contrarium, eſpecially when the Earl himſelf, who ſhould have proved the contrary for the making good his Plea, hath offered nothing againſt it; and being asked, never abſolutely denied it.

Secondly, I do agree, that what the Jewiſh Expoſitors obſerve in the Expoſition of their Laws, which founded in favour, is to be obſerved in our Law, in thoſe things which we uſually ſay the Law favours; viz. Favores ſunt ampliandi; and that ſtrict Expoſitions are only for penal Rules, according to that of the Civilians, Conſtitutio penalis non excedit Caſum: yet we ſhall find, that where the Penalty of a penal Law is againſt one or few Perſons, and the Benefit redounds to the Generality, in that caſe even a penal Statute ſhall be taken largely againſt the Offender; ſo the Rule is put, Plow. Com. 36. Plat's Caſe, where it is reſolved, though the Statute of 1 R. 2. c. 12. give an Action of Eſcape againſt the Guardian of the Fleet, yet for the Reaſon aboveſaid, it is, though a penal Law, by a benign Interpretation, to extend to the Sheriff of London: and in like manner, if there were any Latitude in Caſes of Treaſon and Murder (as there is not) yet to extend it on the behalf of the Priſoners, might prove to many thouſands crudelis Miſericordia.

Thirdly, Add to this, that the Law of England is ſo tender of the publick Weal, that though in other Caſes it may ſeem to inſiſt too much upon Formalities, yet herein it will diſpenſe ſometimes with its moſt certain Rules. Hence it is, that if one paſs over another's Land without his Conſent, to fetch a Falcon, or the like, he may be puniſhed as a Treſpaſſer; but not ſo, if to hunt or kill a Fox or an Otter (which Inſtances I ſuppoſe not unſuitable to the Priſoner) becauſe theſe are Creatures contra bonum publicum; which Reaſon the Book gives of the Law in that Caſe, 12 H. 8. 10. For the ſame reaſon no Man ſhall be puniſhed as a Treſpaſſer for erecting Bulwarks on another's Land, Dyer 36. Maleverer's Caſe. And hence certainly was the reaſon of that ancient Law, That capital Offenders, who had tranſgreſſed againſt the Law, had Lupina Capita, and might therefore by the Juſtice of Lex talionis, arte perire ſua; wherein the Law followed Naturæ Ordinem: The Rules of Nature are moſt conſtant, yet for the Preſervation of the whole, it will ſometimes contradict it ſelf; as to prevent a Vacuum, and the like, what an Inverſion do we ſee of Nature's moſt conſtant and ordinary Rules? Do not they then in this prove ſomewhat unnatural, imbrace a Cloud inſtead of Subſtance, that fear not to omit the weightieſt things of the Law, rather than in Caſes of invincible Neceſſity, diſpenſe with ſome Formalities?

Obj. But though the Earl of Cambridge were a Poſt-natus, yet he is quaſi Ligeus acquiſitus unto England; and if ſo, as his Allegiance began with an Act of the Nation, ſo it might determine by an Act of the ſame Power, to wit, by Command from the Parliament of Scotland.

Anſw. Firſt, The Strength of this Objection, if admitted, would, as I conceive, by a new invented Diſtinction, overthrow the learned and ſolemn Reſolution of all the Judges and Chancellor of England, 6 Jac. in Calvin's Caſe, wherein all Allegiances that the Wits of Men could imagine, are enumerated, and they are but four, viz. Ligeantia naturalis, acquiſita, localis, and legalis: and by the Judgment of that Caſe, Robert Calvin, Son and Heir to James Lord Calvin of Colcroſs in Scotland, born three Years after King James's Acceſs to the Crown (as alſo all other ſo born) were adjudged Subjects of this Kingdom of England, Ligeantia naturali, by the beſt and higheſt Allegiance, without any quaſi at all, in the ſame kind, and to all Intents and Purpoſes that any natural born Engliſhman was.

Pupoſes

Secondly, The Objection ſeems to me not only to be againſt the Judgment of this Caſe, but againſt Reaſon alſo: For what Acquiſition is there by the Party, or what contributes he to it, whether he be born in this or that Time or Place? The Conceit that there is any Act of the Party's in this (as there muſt be to make a Quaſi Ligeus acquiſitus) ſeems to favour of the Pythagorean Metempſucoſis, or that Opinion of Plato, who held a Pre-exiſtence of Souls, which after came into the Bodies, tanquam in ergaſtula.

Obj. It is inconſiſtent to have two natural Allegiances to two ſeveral Kingdoms, as it is impoſſible to have two Fathers; in which Caſe major relatio trahet ad ſe minorem: And in that Caſe the Earl is rather to be reputed a Subject of Scotland, where he was born, than of England.

Anſw. Firſt, It is indeed inconſiſtent that the ſame Perſon ſhould in two ſeveral Kingdoms have two original Allegiances, in a phyſical Acceptation, to wit, to be ſo born: Yet by Conſtruction of Law, he that is born in Scotland may have an Allegiance to England, equivalent with the other. Thus Calvin by the Reſolution of that Caſe was Scotus patria, and Anglus privilegio.

And thus, without any Contradiction, it was ever held for Law, That the Natives of Gaſcoign and Aquitain, and thoſe other Countrys which were geographically out of England, were yet in Conſtruction of Law equally Denizens and Subjects of England with thoſe born here; in regard of one Allegiance and Protection wherein they were equally involved. 27 Aſſ. Pla. 48.

Secondly, No Allegiance which gains the Name of Alta & Naturalis Ligeantia, can by the Common Law of England be diveſted, though otherwiſe it may be by the Civil Laws, there being no Magis & Minus that it's capable of, which the Objection would ſuppoſe. And the truth is, the Reſolution of Calvin's Caſe anſwers all the Suppoſitions of any future Contingencies, and poſitively reſolves, That this Allegiance cannot poſſibly be loſt by any Matter ex poſt facto, no, not by Difference of Deſcents and Governments, 7 Li. 27. And what is agreed to be inherent to a natural born Engliſhman, belongs alſo to a Poſt-natus, Non poteſt patriam in quo natus eſt exuere, nec Ligeantiæ Debitum ejurare, 1 Inſt. 129.

Thirdly, And for the Inconſiſtencies of Allegiances that the Objection ſeems to inſinuate, in the Caſe of Competition between the Kingdoms, Bracton hath met with that Suppoſal long ſince, Li. de Except. 427. ſpeaking of one that is ad fidem utriuſq; Regis, ſi contingat guerram accidere inter Regna; putting the caſe of one born in France, and indenized in England, Remaneat perſonaliter cum eo cui Ligeantiam fecerit, & faciat ſervitium debitum ei cum quo non ſteterit in perſona.

Obj. Though the Earl of Cambridge were a Poſtnatus, yet, as this Caſe is, it makes him not to differ from an Alien, becauſe the Kingdoms of England and Scotland were at the Time of this Invaſion divided, and there were then ſeveral Adminiſtrations of their Powers; from whence a double Allegiance is to be conſidered, Regis & Regni.

Anſw. Firſt, If we look upon the judicial Powers of the Kingdoms in a legal Conſideration, even at the Time mentioned in the Objection, beſides the Union of the Kingdoms made by force of 1 Jac. cap. 1. we ſhall find as ſtrong Stipulations and Engagements by Treaties, confirmed by Parliament and otherwiſe, betwixt the Nations as were poſſibly to be made; none of which were repealed at the time of this Expedition: And ſo far from that, that the Earl himſelf hath often at the Bar profeſſed, That neither his Coming or Commiſſion were againſt the Parliament or Kingdom of England. How then were the Powers of theſe Nations ſo legally or judicially different?

Secondly, The Union of the Laws and Governments of theſe Nations was a Thing deſired and endeavoured by ſome, as may appear by the latter part of the Statute of 4 Jac. cap. 1. but it was not effected. Therefore the Diſtinction of the Kingdoms was taken into Conſideration in Calvin's Caſe, where [Regna] was one of the Nomina operativa, and granted, That though the Kingdoms, Laws, and Nobilities of the Nations of England and Scotland were ſeveral and diſtinct, yet the Allegiance of all born in either Nation after the Union was one and the ſame. And the Pleading of that Caſe (which beſt denotes the Law) demonſtrates this, That ſuch Diſtinction of the Kingdoms was under Conſideration: For the Pleading was, That Calvin was born extra Ligeantiam Regni Regis Angliæ, and infra Ligeantiam Regni Regis Scotiæ. And the learned Chancellor of that Time ſaith, in his Poſt-nati, that the Judgment was, That neither Calvin, nor any other Poſt-nati, were Aliens to the King or Kingdom of England.

Thirdly, It is agreed on the other ſide, That there was always one Ligeantia Regis: And therefore, even thence, I do infer that there was alſo one Ligeantia Regni; becauſe that Allegiance which was due to the King, was certainly due to him in his politick Capacity, though not to that only, or divided in the Subject from his natural Capacity. However, it may be ſaid nevertheleſs, as it is in Calvin's Caſe, (by a Community of Properties) that it was due to the natural Capacity alſo, viz. As it ought ever to be accompanied with the politick, thence it was but juſt in the Parliament, notwithſtanding the King's perſonal Command and Oppoſition againſt them, yet to permit the taking of the Oath of Allegiance, and not to aboliſh it till after his Death, it being ad Legem Legatio; yet the Perſon was ſo neceſſary, that without it, it had been ridiculous to adminiſter it in the Form it was, in which caſe majus dignum trahit ad ſe minus. And hence it was that capital Crimes committed in one King's time, might be proceeded againſt after the Death of that King, 3 Ed. 3. Fitz. Reattach. 18. & Bro. Cor. 178. If the King had purchaſed Land to him and his Heirs, though the Word [Succeſſors,] the Word of his politick Capacity, had not been mentioned, yet he was ſeized thereof in Jure Coronæ, 43 Ed. 3. 20. And if Land had been given to the King and another, and their Heirs, they had for the ſame reaſon been Tenants in Common, and not Joint-Tenants, Com. 239. for the ſame reaſon. And tho many of thoſe Perſons who have been Kings have often oppreſſed, inſtead of preſerving their Subjects, yet ſtill that which Bracton hath ſaid upon the ſame Ground remains true of the Regal Power, Non aliud Rex poteſt, quam quod de jure poteſt, his Office ſtill being ex Officio, as 2 Littl. Co. Wiſeman's Caſe, ſaith; and Fitz. Nat. Brev. 113. out of the Regiſter, to provide for the Preſervation of his People. And if any other Conſtruction ſhould be made, then it muſt have followed in the King's perſonal Abſence, Minority, or Diſability, the Kingdom muſt either have been but weakly, or not at all govern'd. From all which it may be inferred,

That

That the Obligation and Allegiance which was owing to the King, did include that which sano sensu was the Kingdom's also.

It remains now that somewhat be spoken for the further invalidating of this part of the Plea; wherein I shall,

First prove, That one born in Scotland, after the Union of the Crowns, cannot be to any purpose considered as an Alien to England.

Secondly, That though the Earl of Cambridge had been born before the Union, yet he had not been an Alien to England, partly from a national Consideration, but more principally from personal Considerations, viz. 1. By reason of his local Allegiance both in Scotland and England. 2. Ligeantia acquisita; and that by the Naturalization of his Father, or his own Denization.

Thirdly, That though he had been an Alien, yet as this Case is upon the Proofs, he will prove triable for Treason by the Laws of this Kingdom.

Before I speak of any of these, I might touch upon that Part which layeth Murder to the Charge of this Earl; it having been fully proved that several Persons by name, amongst many others, were slain and murdered by the Scotish Army. And to make him punishable for this Crime, there is no need of Denization; it being an Offence in it self against the Law of God and Nations, and no Trust requisite to be an Ingredient to it, as is required in Treason. Hence we find Rape punishable in England, committed by a Scot, 13 Eliz. Dyer 304. and Murder done by the Lord Zanchar, of the same Nation, 9 Littl. Co. 116. where we find him indicted by the Name of Robert Creighton Esq; Which together with the express Authority of 11 Ed. 3. Fitz. Brev. 473. are, by the way, sufficient Warrants for our charging the Prisoner by the Name of James Earl of Cambridge, without mentioning his Dukedom, as he hath often intimated we should have done.

And if the Earl should say he killed not these Persons himself, his Counsel can soon tell him that's not material, the Law being, That if divers Persons come to do an unlawful Act, and one commit a Murder or Treason, it is so in all. 1 Mar. Dyer 38. 13 H. 4. 13. 19 Ed. 2. Fitz. Cor. 433. But the truth is, I shall not rely upon this, being not willing so high an Offence should pass under any other Name than that of Treason: Therefore I pass to those aforementioned Considerations, which will evince his Crime to be no less than Treason.

1. As to the first of these, there being so much said in the Argument of Calvin's Case, I shall omit the citing of any thing particularly from thence, and select something from the Statutes made shortly after the Union. It's agreed by all Historians that these two Kingdoms were antiently but one, Divisos orbe Britannos, & subducta Britannia mundo. Thence it's observable, that in the Preface of 1 Jac. cap. 1. by the Access of the King of Scotland to this Kingdom, the Parliament speaking of the Union, correct themselves in these Words, Or rather a Reuniting of these two Nations, (though antiently but one.) If so, this Reunion amounted to no less than (as it were) a national Remitter of the antient Union.

For the Settlement of this Union, Commissioners were chosen to compose some Differences betwixt the Nations, and to consider what was fit and necessary to be done for the Commonweal of both Kingdoms, 1 Jac. cap. 2. These Commissioners consult long about it; and because they could not perfect it within the Time prefix'd, an Act passeth for longer Time. 3 Jac. cap. 3.

At length the Work is finish'd by the Statute of 4 Jac. cap. 1. By which all Statutes that express or imply any Strangeness of the one Nation to the other are repealed. And moreover, it doth enact and say, That if there had appeared any other Statutes of this Realm of England, wherein any thing is ordained, enacted, and established, expresly and by name against the Scotish as Enemies, or Scotland as an Enemy-Country to the King of this Realm, or the State of the same; we should, for so much of them as concerneth Scotish Men or Scotland, have utterly abrogated and annulled the same, seeing all Enmity and Hostility of former Times between the two Kingdoms and People is now happily taken away. So the Statute. After which it seems as strange, that any born in Scotland after and during the Continuance of that Union, should make themselves Strangers to England; as if natural-born Englishmen should have made the same Allegation.

In the aforesaid Statute of 4 Jac. 1. there is a Clause, That no Scotishman coming into England to prosecute the Law against any Englishman offending in Scotland, is to be arrested here, except for Treason and Murder. And in the latter end of the Act, amongst other Things, it is enacted, That if any Englishman should commit Treason or other Crimes in Scotland, and come into England, he shall not upon his Apprehension here be sent into Scotland, to have his Tryal there, but be tried where he is taken. But the Statute of 7 Jac. cap. 1. which was the Year after the Resolution in Calvin's Case, repealed that Clause of 4 Jac. 1. last mentioned, as to all Offences but Treason, leaving the Offenders in that kind to be tried in the Kingdom where they were apprehended. And though the Statute speak only of English, yet the like Act was to pass in Scotland, in case any of that Nation committed Treason here; else neither was to be binding to the Nations.

2. In the next place, somewhat may be said from a national Consideration, to prove the Earl no Alien here, though born before the Union: Not that my Purpose is to endeavour the Revival of that antient Homage done formerly by that Kingdom to this; it is not worth the mentioning, in comparison of that Love and those Engagements which have been betwixt us: Gens una summa was heretofore said of us, and, if it may be, I wish sic simus in ævum. But because somewhat hath been on the other side cited from the Stories of Bruce and Baliol, in the Days of Edward I. and for that I find both Law and History afford some Matter for this Argument, I hold it my Duty not to be altogether silent in what passed in those Times, and since. I will not insist upon those several Appeals made by Magdolphus, and others of the Scotish Nation, to Edward I. contra custodes Scotiæ, and against the Kings of Scotland themselves: All Arguments of Allegiance then acknowledged from that Kingdom to this.

But to instance in some Precedents nearer to this in question, Simon Fryfel in 34 Ed. 1. Anno 1306. a Native of Scotland, came in an hostile manner from that Kingdom to invade this; and being apprehended here, he was condemned as a Traytor. The Words of Mat. West. 456. concerning him are, That he was a turri Londinensi per plateas distractus, ut proditor.

In the same Year of Edward I. William Wallis, the Commander in chief of the Scotish Forces, and a Native of that Nation alſo, as the Priſoner was, came into this Kingdom; and being apprehended, was, ſaith Walſingham, fol. 61. Londonias uſque ductus & judicialiter condemnatus, trahitur, ſuſpenditur, & ultimo decollatur; though he pleaded, as our Hiſtorians tell us, what this Earl doth, That he was a Subject of Scotland, and not of this Kingdom, and therefore ought not to be tried here for Treaſon. In 42 Ed. 3. cap. 3. in the Lord Beaumont's Caſe, when it was replied that the Party, objected againſt to be an Alien, was a Scotſman, the Plea is no longer inſiſted upon. A Protection quia profecturus lies not into a Country that is within the Allegiance and Protection of England, 7 H. 4. c. 14. Yet we ſhall find the only Reaſon given wherefore it was granted into Scotland, was becauſe of the Wars that were then betwixt the Nations; 7 Ed. 4. c. 27. After the ceaſing of which Wars, it may be collected by the Book, a Protection would have lien no more thither, than it would have lien into Wales or Ireland.

In 13 & 14 Eliz. Dyer 304. one was arraigned for a Rape. At the Return of the Venire Facias to try him, he pleaded that he was a Scotſman, and deſired a Medietate Linguæ, which Manner of Tryal is granted to Aliens by the Statutes of 27 & 28 Ed. 3. But by the Judgment of the Judges of both Benches it was denied him, for this reaſon, amongſt others, Becauſe, ſaith the Book, a Scotſman was never here reputed for an Alien, but rather a Subject.

Obj. Whereas it hath been ſaid, This was becauſe the Statutes of 27 & 28 Ed. 3. were made when Scotſmen were generally reputed Subjects to this Kingdom:

Anſw. I anſwer, 1ſt, That the Book gives no ſuch Reaſon. 2dly, To affirm this, is to ſuppoſe the Judges, by ſuch a foreign Conceit, to go againſt the expreſs Proviſion of two Acts of Parliament, and the conſtant Practice in purſuance thereof.

In the ſame Year of 13 Eliz. in the Caſe of the Duke of Norfolk, the Evidence of the Biſhop of Roſs, a Scotſman, was offered againſt the Duke by the Counſel for the Commonwealth; which the Duke oppoſed from the Judgment of Bracton, That a Foreigner's Teſtimony was not in that Caſe to be received. But Cataline, Chief Juſtice, though he ſays nothing to Bracton's Opinion touching Exterorum Teſtimonium, yet he gives the Rule of the Court, That the Teſtimony was to be received. Camden's Eliz. 214.

After this Time alſo the Queen of Scots was tried in this Kingdom, though not upon the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. yet upon the Statute of 27 Eliz. cap. 2. then in force. And though in the Proceedings of that Buſineſs Commiſſioners of both Nations met, and that the Scots Commiſſioners did proteſt, that though they did join with our Commiſſioners, yet they did thereby make no Acknowledgment that they were other than a Foreign Nation to this; yet the Engliſhmen proteſted againſt that Proteſtation, as we find in the Hiſtory of that Queen.

3dly, But to paſs from this national to a more perſonal Conſideration, and from thence (though he were an Ante-natus) to prove the Earl liable to Puniſhment for Treaſon againſt this State, and that by a local Allegiance both in Scotland and England: Wherein it muſt be granted as a Principle, and cannot be denied, but that if an Alien come into this Nation, and there abide, and commit that Act which would always be Treaſon in an Engliſh Subject, it is by the Law Treaſon in him during that Abode, becauſe he oweth Localem Ligeantiam, and the Indictment againſt him ſhall ſay contra Ligeantiæ ſuæ debitum, 7 Li. Calvin's Caſe. Thus in 36 Eliz. the Portugals here in England join in an Act of Treaſon with Doctor Lopez; and it was adjudged Treaſonin all. Thus this Earl, tho he had been born before the Union, yet he lived in Scotland after the Union, and at the very Time of this Invaſion, where by he became a Subject, at leaſt Locali Ligeantia.

So in England alſo, not only by his former Reſidence here, which he will ſay perhaps was avoided by his Removal hence, but by his late coming in, he became Ligeus here Locali Ligeantia, becauſe he came from a Kingdom then, by his own Confeſſion, in Amity with this. This was the Caſe of Shirley, a Frenchman, 4 Mar. who came from France, then in Amity with England; and being taken levying War in an hoſtile manner, was indicted and executed as a Traytor, Dyer 144. And as the Book puts it, 7 Li. Calvin's Caſe, if he had had Iſſue here, that Iſſue ſhould have inherited.

4thly, In the next place, I ſhall prove the Earl of Cambridge (though he had been an Ante-natus) to be a Subject of England Ligeantia acquiſita, and that by the Naturalization of his Father, or by his own Denization. But, Firſt, as to the Naturalization of his Father:

1. The Act of Parliament hath been read and proved, whereby the Father of this Earl, by the Name of James Marquiſs of Hamilton, Earl of Cambridge, in 21 Jac. was naturalized to be to all intents and purpoſes a Subject of this Nation, as if he had been here born; with a further Clauſe, That his Heirs might inherit and purchaſe any Lands, Tenements, &c. By which Act it clearly appears that this Earl is naturalized alſo: For, 1ſt, though in the Caſe of a Denization there may need the Word Heirs to extend it to them, becauſe it goes as it is limited, it may be for Life, in Tail, or upon Condition, 9 Ed. 4. cap. 7. yet it is repugnant to ſuppoſe that in point of a Naturalization, becauſe he that is born in England, as by Relation this makes him, without any other Expreſſions, conveys the Right to his Heirs. Hence Naturalization is never temporanea, though data, 1 Inſt. 129. 2dly, Here are not wanting Words neither, that reach to the Heirs, if neceſſary; for the Act is, That his Heirs may inherit and purchaſe, &c. And in purſuance hereof it's notorious that this Earl hath done both. But we ſhall find that oftentimes no more goes to expreſs a Naturalization than this; no other Expreſſion is uſed to import the Privilege of being Engliſh, to them that are born of Engliſh Parents beyond-Sea, but only that they may have, and freely bear the Inheritance within the ſame Allegiance as other Inheritors. 25 Ed. 3. De natis ultra Mare. And in 3 H. 6. cap. 55. Hall and his Wife brought a Writ of Trover: The Tenant pleaded that the Feme was an Alien. The Demandants reply, That the Feme, in the Time of Henry IV. was enabled by Act of Parliament to purchaſe Lands and Tenements, &c. With which Reply the Defendant's Counſel reſted ſatisfied, as if the Replication expreſſed it ſufficiently that ſhe was naturalized; and thereupon demanded View.

Obj. But it hath been objected, That this Act can have no other Effect than if the now Earl's Father had been born in England: And though he were a native Engliſhman, yet having Iſſue, this Earl, by a native Scotſwoman in Scotland, the Iſſue thereby remains an Alien, though his Father were naturalized or born in England.

Anſw. 1. I ſhall eaſily grant both that this Earl was ſo born in Scotland, and that the Naturalization amounts to no more than if the old Earl had been born in England; but do deny the Inference drawn from thence, That therefore the now Earl must be an Alien: For though in former Times some Controversy hath been touching this Question, viz. Whether the Issue of an Englishman, going out of the Kingdom, born of an Alien Woman, shall be a Subject of England, or no; yet I take the Law to be clear at this day, that such Issue is a Subject of England.

By the Common Law, if Father and Mother, both English, have Issue beyond-Sea, that Issue is English, 1 R. 3. 4. the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. De natis ultra mare, being declarative of the Common Law, 42 Ed. 3. cap. 10. And if the Reason and Practice of the Law be examined, we shall find it to be the same, where the Father only is English, for these Reasons:

First, Because at this day any Person may go from this Kingdom to another without Licence, though he be neither Nobleman, Merchant, or Soldier, except some Restraint by a Ne exeat Regnum, Proclamation, or other Act of State be against him. So is it resolved, 12 & 13 Eliz. Dyer 296. And though all, except Persons so qualified, were restrained by 5 R. 2. cap. 2. yet that Statute is repealed by the Statute of 4 Jac. cap. 1. made principally in reference to Scotland. Therefore however the Law may be as to such as go when prohibited, or who stay beyond-Sea when commanded to return; yet as to all others, at this day, and always as to Noblemen, as the Father of this Earl was, upon whom no Restraint was ever put by Common or Statute Law, certainly the Law is otherwise, especially when the Removal is to a Country in Amity, as Scotland was.

Secondly, Partus sequitur sexum, by the Common Law: Therefore, in 4 Ed. 4. 25. Statham Villen. 9. if a Freeman marry a Wife, and have Issue, that Issue is free; but otherwise, if the Man had been Villain, and the Woman free.

Thirdly, The Woman Alien by the Marriage is indenized, and the Issue then must needs partake of the Privilege. And it appears by 26 Ed. 1. Rot. Parl. 1. that when Edmond, the Brother of Edward I. who married the Queen of Navarre, died, all the Judges resolved she should be indowed. And what though she should not, as in other Cases it hath been doubted, yet that hinders not, but during Coverture she was indenized, and that's enough to indenize the Issue. If a Wife marry a Freeman, it is and hath been a Doubt, whether this be a perpetual Infranchisement to the Woman after the Death of her Baron: But it never was doubted but that both her self, during Coverture, and her Issue ever after, were infranchised. Lit. Sect. 187. 1 Instit. 136.

And for express Authority in the Point in hand, besides the antient Authority of Abridg. Ass. 39. tit. Bastard. 7. and Bro. Denizen 21. it was the Judgment of all the Judges of England, 12 Ca. in the Dutchy-Chamber, betwixt the King and Eaton, usually called Stephenson's Case, the Record whereof is ready to be produced; where Judge Yelverton and Harvey, then Judges Assistants to that Court, declared it to be their Judgments, as also of all the other Judges, That the two Sons of Stephenson, born beyond Sea upon the Body of an Alien, were Denizens.

Object. I observed but one Book cited for maintenance of the contrary Opinion, and that was 26 H. 6. where indeed it is 32 H. 6. 38.

Answ. Which Authority is against, not for that Opinion for which it is cited: for in an Action there brought, the Defendant pleads that the Plaintiff's Ancestor, in the time of H. 4. went beyond Sea without Licence, and there had Issue the Plaintiff. Upon this Plea, Arderne the Plaintiff's Counsel demurs; but saith the Book, Priest the Defendant's Counsel durst not demur.

Secondly, If the Book were as it is supposed, yet it makes nothing against the Law at this day; because by the Book it appears, that the Plaintiff's Ancestor went beyond Sea in the time of H. 4. without Licence; which being after R. 2. there was a Restraint upon him, except by Licence, or qualified as that Statute of R. 2. requires: which Restraint is now abrogated, as is before said; and the Inhabitants of England, as is suitable to all Islanders, may travel at pleasure, except especially forbidden: and so whatever the Law was then, it's otherwise now; Mutata ratione Legis, mutatur Lex.

Object. What if the present Earl did himself endeavour, or, as he saith, was advised, notwithstanding the Naturalization of his Father, to procure himself to be naturalized, or indenized.

Answ. Yet that could be but in majorem cautelam; as some Savings have been inserted into Acts of Parliament themselves, not for Necessity, but for Satisfaction of the Lay-Gents, as our Books express it, 1 Ii. Coo. 24. Plow. Com. 379. upon the Statute of 5 Ed. 6. And even in that Case of Stephenson, tho the Judges Assistants delivered what was their own Opinions and of the rest of the Judges; yet if making the Party a Denizen would end the Controversy, they did advise it.

5thly, Besides this Purchase of his Father's, the Earl hath himself contributed to his own Denization, not so much by inheriting his Father's Dignity, and purchasing and enjoying himself Lands in England, that being rather an Evidence of what he formerly was, than making him what he was not before; but by the Writ of Summons sent to this Earl himself, 15 Car. The Record whereof hath been read, commanding him ex fide & ligeantia sua to appear in Parliament as a Peer of this Realm, who accordingly did appear, and acted in this Parliament, being chosen of several Committees in the Lords House, to consider of many things of great Concernment, some whereof were for the Strength of the Nation, as hath been fully proved by the Records of the Lords House. All which Actions are so inconsistent with his being an Alien, and would be such a Solecism in State to admit an Alien to be invested amongst others with a judicial Power, that rather than it should be admitted, all this laid together will (I conceive) amount to, at least, a Denization.

I will not say, that the granting of every Office, or the being employ'd in any Transaction which concerns the Law or Government of the Kingdom, will make an Alien a Denizen; the Books of 9 Ed. 4. 1. and 14 H. 4. 19. forbid me to say so: but it's another thing to have a judicial Power in Parliament, and to sit by virtue of such Summons in the Parliament of England. The Lord Delaware was disabled to sit in the House of Peers during his Life; but he dying, and a Writ of Summons coming to his Son, he was by virtue thereof enabled not only to sit, but to enjoy that Place which his Ancestors formerly had done, 11 Ii. Coo. 1. And in 39 Ed. 3. 29. Umfrevil Earl of Angus ought to be named Earl in the Writ against him, because by that Name he was summoned to the Parliament; and for not naming him so, the Writ abated. A Denization is a kind of a National Manumission:

numiſſion: now as there is in Law an expreſs Infranchiſement of a Villain, and an Infranchiſement in Law, Lit. ſect. 205. ſo it may be ſaid of Denizations. And amongſt other Manumiſſions by Act in Law, I find in Britton, fol. 79, & 82. if a Villain were made a Knight, this did make him free ratione dignitatis, and did not make the conferring of that Dignity to be a void Act, parallel whereunto is the Caſe in hand.

Sixthly, The laſt thing I ſhall inſiſt upon, touching this ſecond Part of the Plea, is to make it appear, that tho the Earl had been born before the Union, and an Alien, that yet there are other Circumſtances in this Caſe yet remaining, which will clearly make this Act of his to amount to no leſs than Treaſon, viz. his coming from a Kingdom in Amity with this, and his marching in hither with Engliſh Traytors. That he march'd in and held Correſpondency with Sir Marmaduke Langdale and his Son, and with Sir Thomas Glenham, and divers others, hath been fully proved; and that that Kingdom was then in Amity with this, beſides the National Treaties and Engagements unrepealed, it appears as well by the Earl's own Confeſſions at the Bar, as by the Words of the Scotiſh Declaration made upon this Expedition, read at the Earl's own Requeſt; which, whatever it be, doth yet conclude this Earl and all his Party from alledging the contrary for their advantage, it having been often reiterated by him; and alſo therein ſaid, That this Expedition was neither againſt the Parliament nor People of England: beſides, that it is no ſlight matter to make Nations in Amity to become open Enemies in a legal Conſtruction, which we are now upon, as appears by the Book of 19 Ed. 4. 6.

Now that theſe Circumſtances will make this Act reach to Treaſon, appears by theſe Authorities of Law. In the days of Queen Mary, France and England were in Amity; Sherley, a French Native, during that Amity, joins himſelf with ſome Engliſh Traytors: Sherley is apprehended, and indicted as a Traytor, contra ligeantiæ ſuæ debitum, 4 Mar. Dyer 144. which is confirmed for good Law likewiſe, 7 li. in Calvin's Caſe, by all the Judges: with which agrees Brook. Treaſon 32. and Crompton's Juriſdiction of Courts 72. and Mr. Juſtice Dalliſon's Reports, 3, 4 Mar. All which Authorities agree in this difference, That if Alien Enemies join with Engliſh Rebels, and be apprehended, the Aliens ſhall be try'd by Martial Law, or ranſom'd; but if Alien Amies ſo join, it's Treaſon in all. And 'tis obſervable that the Caſe is put cautelouſly in H. 4. and ſo abridg'd by Broo. Treaſon 1. That where Alien Enemies join with Engliſh, the Aliens ſhall be try'd by Martial Law, and the Engliſh as Traytors.

Object. The Objection hath been made, and ſo far it ſeems the Law is agreed, That if Aliens fight under the Banner of Engliſh, that this may be Treaſon in all; but not if the Engliſh fight under the Command of Aliens, which is alledged to be the Caſe in hand.

Anſw. 1. I cannot ſafely admit that which the Objection takes for granted, that the Engliſh were the Auxiliaries, and the Scots the Principals in this Act, when I find it in the Proof offered by the Earl himſelf, that he came in by the Invitation of their Friends in England, and when I remember what was deſigned and produced in the South of England before and at the ſame time with this Expedition.

2. But admit it to be otherwiſe, yet if this Difference were material, then it ſhould follow likewiſe, That if Alien Enemies did fight under an Engliſh Command, it ſhould be Treaſon in all, but it is not ſo.

3. The Law makes no ſuch Difference, nay, the very Objection ſeems to be made and anſwered, 4 Mar. Dyer 144. for the Book ſaith, that tho Sherley were an Alien, yet hoc non refert tempore pacis inter Anglos & Gallos; the weight is laid upon tempus pacis only.

4. The true Reaſon of the Law in one Caſe is the ſame in both; which I conceive to be from the Deteſtation of conſpiring with an inward ſecret Enemy, and from the Truſt the Law repoſeth in ſuch as are of a Country in Amity. There is no Treaſon, but where there is a Truſt: hence antiently Treaſon, in its genuine and original Acceptation, was only and properly amongſt Allies and Friends, who mutually did repoſe Confidence in each other, as may be ſeen in the Mirror, fol. 30, & 201. And that a greater Truſt was placed in Aliens Amies, than in others, appears in that our Law allows not only Traffick and Commerce with them, but alſo allows them to be to ſome purpoſes Denizens; namely, as to the bringing perſonal Actions, which if they bring, it ſhall not be allowed to plead that the Plaintiffs are Aliens: 19 Ed. 4. 6. & 6 H. 8. Dyer 2.

Object. But the Earl hath objected, That upon the Scotiſh Forces coming in under his Command, they of that Nation were by the Houſe of Commons voted Enemies, and thoſe of this Kingdom who adhered to them, Traytors.

Anſw. 1. The words of that Vote ſeem to be excluſive of the Priſoner, mentioning only thoſe under his Command.

2. Tho every Enemy, in the legal Signification of the Word, be not a Traytor, yet every Traytor is an Enemy; and therefore if now he be proved a Traytor, he may be well enough an Enemy within that Vote. The preſent Charge againſt him is a Charge of High Treaſon, yet the Concluſion doth not improperly pray Judgment againſt him both as a Traytor and publick Enemy.

3. Take the Words in the ſtricteſt ſenſe, and the Vote only names thoſe of the Scotiſh Nation Enemies, but thoſe of this Kingdom Traytors. Now the labour hath been, and I ſuppoſe it clear that the Earl himſelf is of this Nation, and ſo a Traytor by that Vote, from which he would derive an Argument for himſelf.

4. If yet any other Conſtruction ſhould be made, Leges poſteriores priores abrogant; he is, by the Act whereby this Court now ſits, ordered to be try'd for Treaſon in the ſame kind as the reſt, who are now under queſtion: and if his Fact be Treaſon, it will eaſily follow by an Argument of à denominatis, that he is a Traytor.

The third Part of the Earl of Cambridge's Plea is, That he is a Priſoner of War, and rendred upon Articles, and that thoſe Capitulations were made before his Rendition with Major-General Lambert's Commiſſioners.

That there were Articles, and he a Priſoner of War, I ſhall agree to be proved; as alſo that one of thoſe Articles was, That he ſhould have Quarter, and have his Life aſſured: and it muſt be agreed on the other hand, That the Lord Gray, who had equal Authority, proteſted from the firſt againſt that Treaty, and after took him priſoner before any Aſſent thereunto. But whether, by the Proof, the Earl were not a Priſoner before the ſigning the Articles; and whether before the Articles were to have any effect, the ſame were not to be ratified by the Commanders in chief, is ſubmitted to Judgment upon the Evidence. That therefore I may do the Priſoner right in this point, which he ſeems to make his ſtrongeſt Aſylum, I ſhall admit that there were ſuch Articles, and wave the relying upon the other Circumſtances, which may not ſeem ſo clear in Proof.

Nevertheleſs I ſhall briefly ſhew my Reaſons, wherefore I apprehend no Security from the Stroke of Civil Juſtice belongs to the Priſoner by this Refuge; for as to the Military, is not the Contention.

Firſt, If theſe Articles be of avail againſt the Civil Power of the State, they muſt in effect amount to a Pardon or Diſcharge of Treaſon; (for this Point doth take the laſt Point by admittance, viz. that the Fact is Treaſon.) Now tho the Military Power may exempt a Priſoner of War from the Execution of the Sword, and of their own Power; yet it is not in their power, nor do they aſſume or ever challenged ſuch a Power, as to exempt Delinquents and Traytors from the Execution of the Magiſtrate; for the bringing of whom to condign Puniſhment, the Soldier was at firſt armed, and the War principally begun: and if it ſhould be in the power of one Soldier, it would pari ratione be in the power of all, as well to ſpare all as one; and if to grant a Pardon of Life, then likewiſe for their Livelihoods. And ſo the End of the War, and the Satisfaction promiſed, would be in the power of the Servants of the State to fruſtrate; not that the Articles have no effect, for he was by them freed from the immediate Execution of the Sword.

Secondly, The pardoning of Treaſon is a Power ſo inſeparable to the Supreme Power, that by the Authorities of Law it is not communicable to any other: in 5 Ed. 4. 123. it's made a great doubt, and ſo ſaid to be 1 Bro. Treaſon 22. Mercy and Juſtice being not transferable, 7 li. Co. in the Caſe of Penal Statutes, 9 Ed. 4. 2. & 20 H. 7. 6. It's true indeed, there was a time when ſome had gotten this Power into their hands, but by the Statute of 27 H. 8. cap. 24. this Power was reſumed into the Supreme Power, and there it hath ſince lodg'd. And however we diſpute not what the Parliament may do by expreſs Words, as they have done in many Acts and Tenders of Indemnity; yet without ſuch Expreſſions, not by any implicit Power, nor ex Officio, can any juſtly aſſume it.

Thirdly, By the Rules of Law no Officer or Miniſter of State can give away or diſpenſe with the Intereſt of the Commonwealth. If a Cuſtomer, who is an Officer of State, take a Bond in his own name for the Importation of Bullion, he cannot diſcharge this Bond; 4 Ed. 4. 4. & 12. The King was the ſupreme Officer of the Commonwealth, yet if an Indictment of Nuſance had been preferred againſt one in his name, it had not been in his power to have diſcharged this Offence; 3 Ed. 3. Fitz. Aſſ. 445. Nor could he for the ſame reaſon by any Non-obſtante diſpenſe with the Penalty of any Statute which did concern the Intereſt of the Commonwealth, 12 Jac. Sir Arthur Ingram's Caſe, and H. 36 Eliz. betwixt Hamond and Griffith, in an Information upon a penal Statute, the Informer died, yet the King's Attorney might proceed. The Difference I apprehend to be, as to the point in hand, betwixt one triable by Martial Law merely, as an Alien Enemy is; for ſuch a one being triable by the Sword, if taken, may be diſcharged by that Power, tho in that caſe I totally exclude not the Legiſlative Power: But for a Traytor, originally and legally only tryable by the municipal Laws of a State, to be abſolutely diſcharged by a ſubordinate Power, without the Concurrence or Confirmation of the Magiſtrate, will ever be ſtrange to me, till I find that Rule overthrown of Nil dat quod habet, which can never be in a juſt and moral ſenſe.

Fourthly, However the Words ſound, the Intention and true Meaning of the Parties was not to free thoſe that were concerned from Juſtice, if the State required it; and Intentions are the beſt Rules for Conſtruction in theſe Caſes. That it was intended only in this Treaty to free the Priſoner from the preſent Execution of the Sword by Martial Law, and no otherwiſe, hath been ſworn by two of thoſe Gentlemen that were Commiſſioners under Major-General Lambert, who have ſworn their own Intentions. Words, ſaith Bracton, are but Veſtimenta Rerum, as the Body and outward Form; the true Meaning and Intention of Parties is the Life and Soul of every Contract: as for Senſus literalis, it hath been (I have obſerved) via regia, but it hath not proved unto that ſide via tuta. However Words ſound, the Expoſition muſt be ſecundum ſubjectam Materiam. In 41 E. 3. 6. if one having divers Faculties hath an Annuity granted to him pro concilio impenſo, the Words are general, but it ſhall be conſtrued for Counſel in that Art which was intended. And as Brudnel ſaith, in 14 H. 8. 2. Contracts ſhall be expounded according to the Intents of thoſe that did contract. Cicero ſaith, ſpeaking de Juſtitia, as a Judge, not as an Advocate, fol. 24. to cavil with Words againſt the mind of the Parties, eſt Calumnia quædam & malitioſa juris Interpretatio; in which place he puts a Caſe upon a Treaty, as ours is, of one who had made a Truce for one hundred and thirty Days with his Enemy, and taking advantage of the Letter, fell upon his Enemy in the Night, alledging the Truce was only for Days, which the Orator derides as mere Injuſtice. And no otherwiſe may the literal Conſtruction, contended for, be in the preſent Caſe, except the Letter muſt be obſerved or not obſerved, as it proves advantageous or diſadvantageous to the Priſoner. Beſides, it's uſual in Law, that by Averments the Intentions of Parties take place, where the Letter would not ſo decide the Queſtion; as 5 li. Coo. 68. and 21 R. 2. Fitz. Deviſ. 27. Nor do I ſee, how in the penning thoſe Articles any other Expreſſions could well have been. If proviſion had been made, that the Priſoner ſhould have been exempted from the Power of Civil Juſtice, that had been void; and if it had been expreſſed, that nothing was by thoſe Articles intended to exempt him from Civil Juſtice, that had alſo implied a Power in them, if they had ſeen cauſe, to have given an abſolute Diſcharge from the Magiſtrate; which had been equally by Conſtruction derogatory to the Civil Power.

Fifthly, If the Earl had ever been de facto pardoned, yet he may ſeem to have loſt the benefit thereof by his Eſcape made after a ſpecial Promiſe to the Governour with whom he was Priſoner. The Civil Law, as Forteſcue obſerves, cap. 46. Libertinum ingratum in priſtinam redigit Servitutem; and our Law ſaith, if one hath committed a capital Crime, and, being pardoned after, do but break the Peace, he forfeits the Benefit of the Pardon; 3 H. 7. 7. as Bartue did the Benefit of his Licence to travel, by his Reſort to the Fugitives, 2 Eliz. Dy. 176. And I conceive no difference, whether the Condition be expreſſed or implied; which I infer not to make the Eſcape Treaſon, being ing not ſo charged, and the Statutes of 2 H.6. & 14 Eliz. being expired concerning that; but only for this purpoſe it is enforced, that he who rendred himſelf up a Priſoner of War, and had for that conſideration Quarter granted him, and yet after breaks that which was on his part to be performed, hath thereby deprived himſelf of that Privilege which otherwiſe he might have enjoy'd.

Object. If now the Priſoner ſhall be queſtioned for his Life, who by the Rendition of himſelf had Quarter given him for it, how is the Conſideration made good which did induce him to ſurrender? Beſides, there if he had died (as the Earl himſelf ſaid) he had preſerved his Eſtate, and avoided the Conſequences of Attainder.

Anſw. It's ſtrange that it ſhould be thought no privilege to have ſo much time to die, in caſe there were certainty of it, above a Death by military Execution, which uſually is ſudden, and ſine ſtrepitu Judicii.

2. Is it no privilege above an immediate Death by the Sword, to have a fair judicial Proceeding by a Charge againſt him, putting in his own Plea thereunto, the Matter of Fact by Witneſſes and other Evidence proved on both ſides, and Counſel aſſigned him of his own choice to argue his Cauſe in point of Law, and himſelf to be heard as much as he could ſpeak in his own Defence?

3. And the Danger ſeems by this manner of Tryal not greater than before; for he that dies a Traytor in furore belli, becauſe himſelf is the cauſe why Formalities of legal Proceedings againſt him cannot be obſerved, by the antient Law forfeited his Eſtate, and remained attainted notwithſtanding. Plowd. Com. 262. Fitz. Dower. 106. where, in a Writ of Dower, the Demandant was barr'd, for that her Husband went into Scotland, and joining himſelf with the Enemies, died in Enmity.

Object. As to the Examples of Joſhua with the Gibeonites, and of the Prophet Eliſha forbidding the King of Iſrael to ſmite thoſe whom he had taken captive with his Sword and Bow:

Anſw. I anſwer, as to the firſt, viz. that of Joſhua with the Gibeonites, God forbid but that as that, ſo all other Leagues and Treaties ſhould be kept ſo far, as to bind that Power that made them, and who can rationally expect more? Now Joſhua was the Succeſſor of Moſes, and a Magiſtrate as well as Commander. Beſides, it's ſaid the Princes of the Congregation ſwore unto them; and had theſe Circumſtances been incident to this Caſe, the Diſpute had been ended.

1. As to the other Inſtance, the Men of Syria had a perſonal Quarrel againſt Eliſha; and therefore none being intereſted but the Prophet, it might well become his Piety to be their Interceſſor.

2. For any thing appears, the Prophet only ſpeaks againſt their being ſmitten with the Sword of War, which, if it had been drawn in cold Blood, might have been the Blood of War in Peace; but not againſt the Sword of Civil Juſtice.

3. Theſe Enemies were taken in the midſt of Samaria, incruento prælio; and therefore Bread and Water might well be ſet before them, that they might eat, and go to their Maſters: but there hath been in this caſe much Blood drawn, and Miſchief done; for the avenging and ſatisfaction whereof, Juſtice cries to them that bear not the Sword in vain.

And now (my Lord) tho I might have demanded Judgment for want of the Priſoner's making good his own Plea, which he ought to have done before I had ſaid any thing to the contrary; the Plea of being an Alien lying on his part to prove that pleads it: 9 Ed. 4. 12. & Dy. 300. and the Plea of a Pardon being a Confeſſion of the Fact, if not made out, proves fatal and final alſo to the Party; Stanf. Cor. 150. Yet nevertheleſs, for that the Priſoner hath not been confined herein to the ſtrict Formalities of the Law, I have alſo, on the behalf of the Commonwealth, taken the privilege of ſpeaking thus much for aſſerting the Invalidity of his Plea. And therefore, upon the whole matter, having now ſaid what hath prevailed with my Judgment to offer in this Caſe, I humbly ſubmit the ſame to the Judgment and Conſideration of this Honourable Court.

[THUS did the Counſel of the People plead againſt him, to the conviction of all who looked on, that they thirſted for his Blood, and were only ſeeking Colours of Juſtice for it: which yet were ſo ſlight, that they could ſerve for no Diſguiſe, but only to abuſe thoſe who were blinded with Prejudice. Burnet.]

The Court adjourned to Tueſday, being the ſixth of March; and then the Duke was brought to the Bar, and the Judges ſat in Scarlet: They rejected the Duke's Plea in all its Branches, and found him guilty of the Charge whereof he was indicted. But before Sentence, Bradſhaw the Preſident reſumed all, and ſpoke long for aggravating of every Particular, juſtifying every thing their Counſel had pleaded, as if it had been all both good Law and good Reaſon. Then he cauſed read the Earl of Eſſex's Commiſſion, to ſhew how little Power was given him: (But ſpoke nothing of Fairfax or Lambert their Commiſſions, which had been more pertinent, but the reaſon was they were ampler; and yet the Parliament had never refuſed to ratify any Articles Eſſex gave.) He confeſſed the Duke's Articles were fuller than any others, therefore he would inſiſt the more to invalidate them. He ſaid, It was true, if there had been a War proclaimed, and proſecuted betwixt a foreign Nation and Enemy and England, then by the Law of Nations, to which their Law was conſonant, Articles ſigned by the Commiſſioners of both Parties ſhould have been kept inviolable: but the Priſoner was no Enemy, for when the ordinary Courſe of Juſtice was obſtructed by the late King's prevailing Party, ſo that neither Conſtables nor Sheriffs, nor other Civil Officers, could lay hold on ſuch Delinquents as he was, or bring them to Puniſhment, the Parliament was forced to raiſe an Army, commiſſionating their Generals to bring ſuch to condign Puniſhment. This being the End and Subſtance of their Commiſſion, it was not in their power, who were but the Sword of Juſtice in the Parliament's hand, to give Articles for ſecuring any from the Juſtice of the Parliament, ſince it was never intended their Acts ſhould limit that Power that gave bounds to them. He added alſo, That the Court was fully ſatisfied, that the Duke was naturalized. The Preſident laid out alſo the Caſe of the other Priſoners then at the Bar, and ſpoke many hours; at laſt Sentence was given againſt them all, That their Heads ſhould be ſever'd from their Bodies on Friday next, being the ninth Inſtant: yet it was remitted to the Parliament's Conſideration, what Mercy ſhould be ſhew'd to any of them; and ſo the Duke was carried back.

The reſt of that Day, and the next Day, the Duke was earneſtly ſollicited to preſerve himſelf by making Diſcoveries. And Mr. Peters, who appeared concerned for him during his Tryal, did now inſinuate himſelf on him to draw ſomewhat from him: but all was in vain, there being no choice to be made betwixt a Glorious Death and an Infamous Life.

On the Eighth of that Month, it being put to the Vote of the Houſe, whether he ſhould be reprieved or not, it was carried in the Negative.

And he was executed the Ninth of March 164$\frac{8}{9}$.

At the Guild-Hall of London, the 24*th of* October 1649. being Thurſday, at the Tryal of Lieut. Col. John Lilburne.

OYes made; all Perſons that were adjourned to the Court, requir'd to make their Appearance.

The Lieutenant of the Tower of London, Col. Francis Weſt, called to bring forth his Priſoner, according to the Precept.

Whereupon Col. Weſt, Lieutenant of the Tower, brought up the Priſoner out of the Iriſh Chamber, where he had been ſome time before the ſitting of the Court, and was guarded by the ſaid Lieutenant, and a ſpecial Guard of Soldiers beſides. And being brought to the Bar, the Sheriffs of London were directed to take the Priſoner into their cuſtody.

Silence commanded.

Cryer. John Lilburne hold up thy Hand.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne directed himſelf to Mr. Keble, one of the Keepers of the Great Seal, as the Preſident of the Court, and ſaid to this purpoſe: Sir, will it pleaſe you to hear me? and if ſo, by your favour thus. All the Privilege for my part that I ſhall crave this day at your hands, is no more but that which is properly and ſingly the Liberty of every free-born Engliſhman; viz. The Benefit of the Laws and Liberties thereof, which by my Birthright and Inheritance is due unto me; the which I have fought for as well as others have done, with a ſingle and upright Heart: And if I cannot have and enjoy this, I ſhall leave this Teſtimony behind me, That I died for the Laws and Liberties of this Nation; and upon this ſcore I ſtand, and if I periſh I periſh. And if the Fact that I have done, cannot be juſtified by the Law of England, let me periſh. I mention none of this for the gaining of Mercy, or by way of Merit; no, I ſcorn it: for Mercy I crave from none, but from the hands of my God alone, with whom I hope, and am aſſured one day to reſt; whom I have ſet before my eyes, and ſo walked, as believing I am always in his preſence, in whoſe Power my Confidence is fixed, whom I take and own to be my Stay, my Staff, my Strength and Support, and in whom I reſt as the Life of my Life, and whom I hope to meet with Joy, when this fading and uncertain Life ſhall have an end, to live with him in Glory and Bleſſedneſs for evermore. And therefore, becauſe I would not willingly trouble you with many Words, to cauſe you to ſpend your time impertinently; therefore, Sir, in reference to the Court, I ſhall crave but ſo much Liberty from you as was given to Paul when he pleaded for his Life before the Heathen Roman Judges, which was free Liberty of Speech to ſpeak for himſelf; the which I now humbly crave as my Right, not only by the Law of God and Man, but alſo by the Law and

Light

Light of Nature. And I ſhall do it with that Reſpect, Reaſon, and Judgment, that doth become a Man that knows what it is to plead for his Life. I hope God hath given me Ability to be Maſter of my own Paſſion, and endow'd me with that Reaſon, that will dictate unto me what is for my own good and benefit.

I have ſeveral times been arraigned for my Life already. I was once arraigned before the Houſe of Peers for (ſticking cloſe to the Liberties and Privileges of this Nation, and thoſe that ſtood for them) being one of thoſe two or three Men, that firſt drew their Swords in Weſtminſter-Hall againſt Col. Lunsford and ſome Scores of his Aſſociates. At that time, it was ſuppoſed, they intended to cut the throats of the chiefeſt Men then ſitting in the Houſe of Commons: I ſay, for this, and other things of the like nature, I was arraigned by the King's ſpecial Command and Order, the firſt of May 1641. I mention it to this end, that when I came before the Houſe of Peers, where was about three or fourſcore Lords then ſitting at the beginning of the Parliament, (who then were ſuppoſed the moſt arbitrary of any Power in England) yet I had from them free Liberty of Speech, to ſpeak for my Life at their Bar, without check or controul, in the beſt manner all thoſe Abilities God had given me would enable me. And when I was at Oxford, I was again arraigned as a Traytor before the Lord Chief Juſtice Heath, for levying War at the Command of the then Parliament againſt the Perſon of the King: and when I came before him in the Guild-Hall of Oxford, he told me (there being preſent with him, as his Fellow-Judge, Mr. Gardiner, ſometimes Recorder of the City of London, now Sir Thomas Gardiner, and others that ſat by a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer from the King; the which Commiſſion I did not ſo well then underſtand, as I hope I do now:) And my Lord Chief Juſtice Heath ſtood up, and in the face of all the Court, and in the face of all the Country preſent there, told me; Capt. Lilburne, you are brought here before us for High Treaſon, for levying War in Oxfordſhire againſt your Sovereign Lord and King; and tho you be now in a Gariſon, and were taken in Arms in open Hoſtility againſt the King, (yea Sir, and I muſt now tell you in ſuch Hoſtility, that we were but about 700 Men at Brentford, that withſtood the King's whole Army in the Field above five hours together, and fought it out to the very Sword's Point, and to the Butt-end of the Musket; and thereby hindred the King from his then poſſeſſing the Parliament's Train of Artillery, and by conſequence the City of London, in which very Act I was taken a Priſoner, without Articles or Capitulation, and was by the King and his Party then look'd upon as one of the activeſt Men againſt them in the whole Company) yet ſaid Judge Heath, we will not take advantage of that, to try you by the Rules of arbitrary Martial Laws, or any other arbitrary Ways; but we will try you by the Rules of the good old Laws of England: and whatſoever Privilege in your Tryal the Laws of England will afford you, claim it as your Birthright and Inheritance, and you ſhall enjoy it with as much Freedom and Willingneſs, as if you were in Weſtminſter-Hall, to be try'd amongſt your own Party. And this we will do for that end, that ſo at London your Friends ſhall not have any juſt cauſe to ſay, we murdered you with Cruelty, or denied you the Benefit of the Law, in taking away your Life by the Rules of our own Wills. Nay, further ſaid he, Capt. Lilburne, it is true I am a Judge, made by my Sovereign Lord the King, according to his Right by * Law, and ſo in a ſpecial manner am his Servant and Counſellor, and am to act for his Good, Benefit, and Advantage: And yet notwithſtanding, it is by the known Laws of this Land my Duty to be indifferent and free from Partiality betwixt my Maſter and you the Priſoner, and I am ſpecially bound unto it alſo by my Oath. And therefore you ſhall have the utmoſt Privileges of the Law of England, which is a Law of Mercy, and not of Rigour, and hath the Life of a Man in tendereſt and higheſt † eſtimation: And therefore it is the Duty of a Judge by Law, to be of Counſel with the Priſoner, in things wherein by his Ignorance he falls ſhort of making uſe of the Benefit of the Law, eſpecially when he is upon the Tryal of his Life. Yea, and to exhort him to anſwer without fear, if he perceive him daunted or amazed at the Preſence of the Court. Yea, it is my Duty to carry myſelf with all Fairneſs and Evenneſs of Hand towards you; and wherein that there ſhall ſeem any Miſtakes to appear, in Circumſtances or Formalities, to rectify you: For it's my Duty to help you, and not to uſe any boiſterous or rough Language to you in the leaſt, to put you in fear, or any ways prevent the Freedom of your Defence; and according to the Laws of England this is my Duty, and this is the Law. And accordingly he gave me liberty to plead to the Errors of my Indictment, before ever I pleaded Not Guilty; yea, and alſo became willing to aſſign me what Counſel I pleaſed to nominate, freely to come to Priſon to me, and to conſult and adviſe with me, and help me in point of Law. This laſt he did immediately upon my pleading to the Indictment before any Fact was proved: all which is conſonant to the declared Judgment of Sir Edward Cooke, that great Oracle of the Laws of England, whoſe Books are publiſhed by ſpecial || Orders and Authority of Parliament for good Law; who in his third Part of his Inſtitutes, Chap. of High Treaſon, fol. 29, 34. compared with fol. 137, 230. aſſerts the ſame.

* See the 27 of Hen. 8. c. 24.

† See the 2*d part Inſt. fol.* 28, 30, 42, 43, 53, 315, 316, 591. & part 3. fol. 34.

|| Which Orders are dated May 12. 1641. & June 3. 1642. You may at large read at the laſt end of his Inſtit. part 2.

Truly, Sir, I being now come before you to anſwer for my Life, and being no profeſſed Lawyer, may through my own Ignorance of the practick part of the Law, eſpecially in the Formalities, Niceties and Punctilio's thereof, run my ſelf with overmuch Haſtineſs in Snares and Dangers that I ſhall not eaſily get out of. And therefore being all of a ſudden bid to hold up my Hand at the Bar, I cannot chuſe but a little demur upon it, and yet with all reſpect to you, to declare my Deſireableneſs to keep within the Bounds of Reaſon, Moderation and Diſcretion, and ſo to carry my ſelf as it doth become a Man that knows what it is to anſwer for his Life.

And therefore in the firſt place, I have ſomething to ſay to the Court about the firſt Fundamental Liberty of an Engliſhman, in order to his Tryal; which is, That by the Laws of this Land all Courts of Juſtice always ought to be free and open for all ſorts of peaceable People to ſee, behold and hear, and have free Acceſs unto; and no Man whatſoever ought to be tried in Holes or Corners, or in any Place where the Gates are ſhut and barr'd, and guarded with armed Men: And yet, Sir, as I came in, I found the Gates ſhut and guarded, which is contrary both to Law and Juſtice.

 in,

Sir, the Laws of England, and the Privileges thereof, are my Inheritance and Birth-right: And, Sir, I muſt acquaint you, that I was ſometimes ſummoned before a Committee of Parliament, where Mr. Corbet and ſeveral others have had the Chair; and there I ſtood upon my Right by the Laws of England, and refuſed to proceed with the ſaid Committee, till by ſpecial Order they cauſed their Doors to be wide thrown open, that the People might have free and uninterrupted Acceſs to hear, ſee and conſider of what they ſaid to me; although I think the Pretence that I am now brought before you for, be the very ſame in Subſtance, that I was convened before Mr. Corbet for, which was about Books: and I am ſure there I did argue the caſe with him and the reſt of the Committee, ſoundly out in Law; proving that they were bound in Law and Juſtice freely to open their Doors, for the free Acceſs of all ſorts and kinds of Auditors: And I did refuſe (as of Right) to proceed with them, till by ſpecial Order they did open their Doors. For no Tryal in ſuch caſes ought to be in any Place, unleſs it be publick, open and free; and therefore if you pleaſe that I may enjoy that legal Right and Privilege which was granted unto me by Mr. Miles Corbet, and the reſt of that Committee, (when I was brought before them in the like Caſe that now I am brought before you) which Privilege I know to be my Right by the Law of England; I ſhall, as it becomes an underſtanding Engliſhman, (who in his Actions hates Deeds of Darkneſs, Holes or Corners) go on to a Tryal. But if I be denied this undoubted Privilege, I ſhall rather die here than proceed any further. And therefore foreſeeing this beforehand, and being willing to provide againſt all Jealouſies of my Eſcape, the Fear of which I ſuppoſe might be objected againſt me as a Ground to deny me this my legal Right; and therefore before-hand I have given my Engagement to the Lieutenant of the Tower, that I will be a faithful and true Priſoner to him.

And I hope the Gentleman hath ſo much Experience of my Faithfulneſs to my Word, that he doth not in the leaſt queſtion or ſcruple it; I am ſure he hath often ſo declared to me that he doth not.

Nay, I have not only engaged to be a true Priſoner in the Tower to him, but I have alſo ſolemnly engaged to him, that I will come civilly and peaceably with him, and that I will go civilly and peaceably back with him again: And that if any Tumult or Uproar ſhall ariſe in the Croud, of which I loſe him, and he me; or in caſe I ſhould be any ways by Force and Power reſcued from him, I have alſo faithfully engaged to him, that I will come again to him (by the Aſſiſtance of God) as ſoon as ever I can get away from that Force or Reſcue. And all this I entreated him to acquaint you with, that all Jealouſies and Diſputes might be avoided.

Judge Keble. Mr. Lilburne, look behind you, and ſee whether the Door ſtands open or no.

L. Col. Lil. Well then, Sir, I am ſatisfied as to that. But then in the next place, I have read the Petition of Right, I have read Magna Charta, and abundance of Laws made in Confirmation of it; and I have alſo read the Act that aboliſheth the Star-Chamber, which was made in the Year 1641. which laſt recited Act expreſly confirms thoſe Statutes that were made in Edward the Third's Time, which declares all Acts, Laws and Statutes that were made againſt Magna Charta, to be null and void in Law, and holden for Error.

In the reading of which Laws I do not find a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer to be legal and warrantable. I beſeech you, Sir, do not miſtake me; for I put a vaſt difference betwixt an ordinary and common Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer for holding ordinary and common Aſſizes and Seſſions, and betwixt an extraordinary and ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer to try an individual Perſon, or Perſons, for a pretended extraordinary Crime. The Laws I laſt recited, and the Fundamental or Eſſential Baſis of Freedom therein contained, knows no ſuch Names or Commiſſions of ſpecial Oyer and Terminer.

And thoſe Statutes in Edward the Firſt, and Edward the Third's Time, that doth erect thoſe ſpecial and extraordinary Commiſſions, and warrant the Uſage of them, are merely irrational (a) Innovations upon our indubitable Rights contained in Magna Charta, and mere Court and Prerogative-Devices to deſtroy the beſt of Men, by extraordinary Courts appointed to prejudge Proceedings that ſhould manfully ſtand in the way of the Prince, or any of his great Favourites: for ſure I am from the Petition of Right, no Ground or Foundation for any extraordinary or ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, upon any pretended, ſpecial or great Occaſion, cannot be founded; but rather the abſolute quite contrary, as to me clearly appears by the very plain Letter of that moſt excellent Law. And therefore ſuch a ſpecial Commiſſion upon any pretended ſpecial Occaſion, being expreſly againſt our indubitable Rights contained in Magna Charta, and the Petition of Right, viz. That no Engliſhman ſhall be ſubjected to any other Tryal, but the ordinary, univerſal and common Tryals at ordinary Aſſizes, Seſſions or Goal-Deliveries, and not in the leaſt to be tryed by extraordinary and ſpecial prejudged, packed, over-awing Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer; and therefore all ſuch extraordinary and dangerous Tryals are abſolutely aboliſhed, by the late excellent Acts that confirm the Petition of Right, and all and every the Clauſes therein contained, and aboliſheth the Star-Chamber, both made Anno 1641.

And, Sir, with your favour, the then Parliaments that made the laſt cited Laws, were ſo far from countenancing any ſpecial Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer, upon any ſpecial or pretended great Occaſions whatſoever that I can read of, that I rather find and read the Parliament's Proceedings in the Year 1641. an extreme Out-cry of the Houſe of Commons againſt ſpecial Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer, with a great deal of Bitterneſs and Vehemency, as may fully and clearly be read in that excellent Argument of Mr. Hyde, April 1641. printed and publiſhed in a Book, called Speeches and Paſſages of Parliament, p. 409, to 417. which I have here at the Bar to produce; which Mr. Hyde was

(a) And excellent to this purpoſe is Lieutenant Colonel Lilburne's Argument, in his ſecond Edition of his Picture of the Council of State, p. 8. againſt the Erection of extraordinary Courts, which thus followeth: He granting that the Parliament hath Power to erect a Court of Juſtice to adminiſter the Law, provided that the Judges conſiſt of Perſons that are not Members of Parliament; and provided the Power they give them be univerſal; that is to ſay, to adminiſter the Law to all the People of England indefinitely, who are all equally born free alike, and not to two or three particular Perſons ſolely; the laſt of which for them to do is unjuſt, and altogether out of their power, &c. Which Argument or Reaſon is moſt notably illuſtrated and inlarged in the ſecond Edition of the Legal Fundamental Liberties of England, revived of the 8th of June, 1649. p. 72.

then the ſpecial and appointed Mouth of the Houſe of Commons before the Lords, who unto them in conformity to his Commiſſion from the then Houſe of Commons, complains to the Houſe of Lords extremely of a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer that was exerciſed in the five Northern Counties of England; and earneſtly, in the name of the Houſe of Commons, craves the ſpecial Aſſiſtance of the Houſe of Lords, to pluck up that Court by the very Roots, founded upon a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, being ſo illegal and unjuſt in the very Foundation of it, as it is inconſiſtent with the People's Liberties, and as that which deſtroyed and diſinherited all the People that were tryed, both of their Birthright and Inheritance, viz. their Liberties and Freedoms contained in Magna Charta. And this, Sir, was the declared and avowed Judgment and Opinion of the Houſe of Commons in April 1641. in their primitive Purity and Non-defilement, when they acted bravely and gallantly for the univerſal Liberties and Freedom of this Nation (and not Self-intereſt) when they were in the Virginity of their Glory and Splendor, as he there fully and moſt excellently declares; and yet he there gives an extraordinary Reaſon for the original Erection of that Court founded upon a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, as can be rendred.

The original Reaſon or Occaſion of which, he there declares to be thus: That by reaſon of the Suppreſſion of the Abbies in the 27th of Henry the Eighth's Time, in the North of England (through Diſcontent thereat) there did ariſe from the ſaid 27th Year to the 30th no fewer than ſix grand Inſurrections, moſt of them under the Command of ſome eminent Man of thoſe Countries; which Inſurrections and Rebellions occaſioned the levying of great Armies, which had like to have ſet the whole Kingdom in an univerſal Flame: for the ſuppreſſing and preventing of which in future times, King Henry VIII. cauſed a ſpecial Court to be erected, by a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer; which Court alſo continued in Edward the Sixth's Time, Queen Mary's, and firſt and ſecond of King James: The Baſis of which Commiſſion was founded upon thoſe fore-mentioned innovating Statutes made in Edward the Second's and Edward the Third's (b) Time: Which ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer was ſeveral times renewed by the late King Charles, as in the fifth, eighth, and thirteenth Year of his Reign. And the ſaid Mr. Hyde there in his Argument or Speech, which I have here in Print, names ſeveral of the Preſidents of that illegal Court of ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer: And he there alſo declares in what an extraordinary Manner, and upon what an extraordinary Occaſion it was granted; which was ſo great, as that a greater could not be imagined: and yet notwithſtanding he declares, that this extraordinary Commiſſion, which being granted to ſuppreſs and quiet thoſe many extraordinary Inſurrections and Rebellions, which do not admit of ſo long Delay as times of ordinary Tryal, in times of Peace, when the ordinary, legal and common Courts of Juſtice are open and free, will do, when Peace and Quiet is in the Nation, as now it is; and yet for all that, he condemns it for illegal.

And therefore, Sir, admit my Actions in their Tendency, to be as dangerous and heinous as any of my Adverſaries can imagine or declare them to be; yet they are but in the Aſhes, but in the Hearth, they are not broke out into viſible and violent hoſtile Actions. And therefore I ſay, if ſpecial Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer, granted in ſuch ſpecial and tranſcendent Caſes as thoſe in Henry the Eighth's Time, were illegal; much more muſt a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer granted to try me barely for Words, or at moſt for pretended Writings or Books, at ſuch a time when there is no burning Flame of Inſurrections or Rebellions in the Kingdom, but all in viſible Peace, and all the ordinary Courts of Juſtice open: and I and my Friends have often ſought to enjoy the Benefit of the Law in a legal Tryal, from firſt to laſt, but could never enjoy it in the leaſt meaſure, although many Aſſizes and Seſſions have paſt over my Head ſince my firſt Commitment, now ſeven Months ago; at the firſt of which, in the County where my pretended Crime was committed, I ought by Law and Juſtice either to be tryed or acquitted. So that, Sir, by what I have already ſaid, you may ſee the Judgment and Opinion of the Houſe of Commons upon ſpecial Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer, in their firſt Purity, when as a full Houſe, there being conſtantly 400 or 500 of them ſitting in the Houſe, as the deputed and choſen Truſtees of the People of England, whoſe Opinion was to damm them, and pluck them up by the Roots, as unjuſt and illegal in their original Inſtitution, which they have accordingly done, and declared to the whole Nation in the Act that aboliſhed the Star-Chamber; where that Court ſpoken againſt by Mr. Hyde, is totally dammed and pulled up by the Roots. So that now in Law I cannot ſee how ſpecial Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer can be legal at this preſent, admit the Power never ſo juſt from whom it comes; but abundantly much more, ſeeing there is no actual Wars, nor popular Inſurrections: which if lately there had been any, and yet were overcome, there is no Pretence or Ground by the good old Laws of England, for any extraordinary Proceedings againſt any Man, although he had been in Arms againſt you, but he ought to have the Benefit of the ordinary, accuſtomed and common Tryals at the Common Law, as clearly appears by the expreſs Words of the Petition of Right (c). But I was never in any hoſtile manner againſt thoſe that are the preſent Governours of the Nation, but have been under their Command in ſeveral Battels in the Nation, and have hazarded my Life for them, and never yet in the leaſt changed my original or firſt Principles; nor never was engaged in the leaſt in any Hoſtility againſt them, but have always, ſince I five Years ago gave over my Command, lived in Peace and Quietneſs in mine own Houſe and Abode: and was the ſame Day at the Houſe of Commons Door that their Votes paſſed againſt me, declaring me in general (which in Law ſignifies nothing) to be a Traytor; and ſpake with a Gentleman that is now a Judge amongſt your ſelves (viz. Mr. Rigby) at the Houſe-door, who, in ſome Great Ones Names, proffered me large Matters, if I would do as I ſhould be directed by them. After this, I went home to mine own Houſe in Southwark, where I ſtayed in Peace and Quietneſs, well enough knowing the Votes that that Day paſſed againſt me, without either particular Accuſation or Accuſer, or any ſuch thing; where I ſtayed, whenas I might eaſily have eſcaped the Hands of mine Enemies, and been gone: but having the ſweet Peace of a good Conſcience within me, which did aſſure me that I had done nothing that was againſt the Welfare of the Nation of England in general, nor againſt the Welfare of any one particular Man in England, but really wiſh'd it well, and all its Well-wiſhers:

I ſay that, notwithſtanding my certain Knowledge of all that at the Houſe had paſſed againſt me; and although I alſo knew that the further Deſign againſt me, which was, That the Council of State (as they are called) would take me away thereupon with armed Force the next Morning; yet notwithſtanding all this, I ſtirred not out of my Houſe, but remained there till about Five a-clock the next Morning; at which time 200 or 300 armed Horſe and Foot (without ſo much as one Civil or Magiſterial Officer with them) came by force of Arms, and haled me out of Bed from my Wife and Children, not according to the Law of England, as is expreſly provided in two ſeveral Statutes, viz. the 1ſt of Edw. 6. chap. 12. and the 5th and 6th of Edw. 6. chap. 11. By which Rules of the Law, and no other, they ought to have proceeded againſt me from firſt to laſt; and I am ſure they both expreſly provide, That if any Man be accuſed of Treaſon, that he ſhall be accuſed firſt to one of the King's Counſel, or to one of the King's Juſtices of Aſſize, or elſe to one of the King's Juſtices of the Peace being of the Quorum, or to two Juſtices of the Peace within the Shire where the ſame Offence or Offences ſhall happen to be done or committed (d).

But contrary to theſe and other wholeſom and good Laws (although there hath been an eight Years War in England, pretendedly, for the Preſervation of the Laws and Liberties of England, yet, I ſay, contrary to the expreſs Tenor of theſe Laws, as alſo of the Petition of Right, yea, and alſo of the expreſs Letter of that excellent Law that aboliſhed the Star-Chamber this Parliament) was I by force of Arms (that never fortified my Houſe againſt the preſent Power, nor never diſputed any of their Summons, though ſent by the meaneſt Man that ever appertained to them; and who, if they had ſent their Warrant for me by a Child, I would have gone to them) I was fetch'd out of my Bed in Terror and Affrightment, and to the Subverſion of the Laws and Liberties of England, and led through London-Streets with Hundreds of armed Men (like an Algier Captive) to their Main-Guard at Pauls, where a mighty Guard ſtaid for the further conducting me by force of Arms to White-hall. Now, Sir, if I had committed Treaſon, I ought not to have been apprehended and proceeded againſt by armed mercenary Soldiers, but by Civil and Magiſterial Officers, and no other; according to thoſe excellent Privileges that the Parliament themſelves in the Year 1641. in their own Book of Declarations, p. 36, 37, 76, 77. did claim for thoſe ſix Members, viz. the Lord Kimbolton, Mr. Pym, Mr. Hollis, Mr. Stroud, Sir Arthur Haſlerig, and Mr. Hampden: I ſay and aver, I ought to have had the Proceſs of the Law of England, due Proceſs of Law according to the foremention'd Statutes and Precedents; for I never forcibly reſiſted or contended with the Parliament; and therefore ought to have had my Warrant ſerved upon me by a Conſtable, or the like Civil Officer; and upon no Pretence whatſoever, ought I to have been forced out of my Bed and Houſe by mercenary armed Officers and Soldiers. But, Sir, coming to White-hall, I was there alſo kept by armed Men, contrary to all Law and Juſtice; and by armed Men againſt Law, I was by force carried before a Company of Gentlemen ſitting at Derby-Houſe, that look'd upon themſelves as authorized by the Parliament to be a Committee or Council of State, (who by the Law I am ſure in any kind had nothing at all to do with me in Caſes of pretended Treaſons) where I was brought before Mr. John Bradſhaw, ſometimes a Counſellor for my ſelf before the Houſe of Lords, againſt my unjuſt Star-Chamber Judges; who there in my behalf, Feb. 1645. did urge againſt the Lords of the Star-Chamber, as the higheſt Crime againſt the Liberties of the People that could be, as being illegal, arbitrary and tyrannical, that the Lords in Star-Chamber ſhould cenſure me to be whip'd, pillory'd, &c. for no other Cauſe but for refuſing to anſwer their Interrogatories againſt my ſelf. And when I was brought before the ſaid Council of State, I ſaw no Accuſer, no Proſecutor, no Accuſation, no Charge nor Indictment; but all the Crime that there was laid unto my Charge, was Mr. Bradſhaw's very ſeriouſly examining me to Queſtions againſt my ſelf: although I am confident he could not forget, that himſelf and Mr. John Cook were my Counſellors in February 1645. at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, where he did moſt vehemently aggravate, and with Deteſtations condemn the Lords of the Star-Chamber's unjuſt and wicked dealing with Engliſh Freemen, in cenſuring them for their refuſing to anſwer to Queſtions concerning themſelves; and yet notwithſtanding walked with his dealing with me in the very Steps that formerly he had bitterly condemned in the Star-Chamber Lords; yea, and there for refuſing to anſwer his Queſtions, (for any thing he declared to me to the contrary) committed me to Priſon for Treaſon in general. And you know very well, better than I do, that by your own Law, Generals in Law ſignify nothing.

Judge Jermin. Mr. Lilburne, you very much abuſe and wrong your ſelf, for you very well know Mr. Bradſhaw is now denominated by another Name, namely, Lord Preſident to the Council of State of England; and it would well become you in your Condition ſo to have ſtiled him.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. And although no Crime in Law (which ought to be particularly expreſs'd) was laid unto my charge; yet when I was firſt impriſoned, there were thouſands of my Friends (Well-wiſhers to the Freedoms of England, and to the common Cauſe in which they had been engaged in for theſe eight Years together) both old and young, both Maſters of Families, young Men and Apprentices, and abundance of others of the Feminine Sex too, with abundance of cordial honeſt Men in ſeveral Countries, joined in ſeveral rational and fair Petitions, and delivered them to the Houſe in the behalf of my ſelf, and my three Fellow-Priſoners; in which they moſt earneſtly intreated them, that they would not prejudge us before we were heard, and knew our Accuſers

(d) See alſo to this purpoſe, part 3. of Coke's Inſtit. ch. High Treaſon, f. 26, 27, 28. and part 1. Parl. Declar. in the Caſe of the Lord Kimbolton and the five Members, p. 38, 39, 76, 77.

and Accuſations, but rather that they would releaſe us, and take off their prejudging Votes againſt us, which they had cauſed to be proclaimed in all the publick Places of the Nation againſt us, and let us have a fair and legal Tryal, according to the Laws of England, and according to the undeniable Privileges of the due Proceſs of the Law from firſt to laſt; and they would put in any Security that they would require of them, that we ſhould be forthcoming at all times to anſwer whatſoever in Law could be laid to our charge. Unto all which Petitions, which were very many, they could get no manner of ſatisfying Anſwer, but Slights, Abuſes and Scorns.

But beſides this, Gentlemen, that you may ſee that I am rational, and that you may ſee that I have an innocent and quiet Conſcience within me, that does not accuſe me, nor terrify me; therefore I muſt acquaint you, that I again and again proffered my chiefeſt Adverſaries, and ſent often to them, being earneſtly deſirous to chuſe two Members of the Houſe of Commons, and let them chuſe two more, whom they pleaſe; and I would with all my Heart freely refer all manner of difference betwixt them and me, to the final Determination and Jugdment of four of their Fellow-Members: but all this would do no good, and yet they would not in the leaſt let me underſtand what was the Thing they deſired of me; but, by their Power and Will, I had my Pockets and Chamber ſearch'd to find out Advantages againſt me; and alſo lock'd up cloſe Priſoner, with Centinels Night and Day ſet at my Door, and denied the Acceſs and Sight of my Wife and Children for ſome certain time; and for about twenty Weeks together in the heat of Summer, kept cloſe Priſoner, and denied the Liberty of the Priſon, and my Eſtate with a ſtrong Hand taken away from me, without any Pretence (or due Proceſs) of Law, to the Value of almoſt three thouſand Pounds, that was legally and juſtly inveſted in me, and in my Poſſeſſion. But being I will avoid (at this time eſpecially) Provocations as much as I can, I will name no Perſon by whoſe Power and Will it hath been done, although he be notoriouſly known; but the Gentleman that took it away by his pleaſure, without all Rules of Law or Juſtice, told my Father to this purpoſe, That I was a Traytor, and under the Parliament's Diſpleaſure; and therefore he would ſecure it from me, although I were not in the leaſt convicted of any Crime, neither in Law then, or for many Months after had I the leaſt Pretence of Crime laid unto my charge. And although my own Eſtate by force, againſt Law, was taken from me, yet was I alſo denied in my cloſe Impriſonment that legal Allowance that ſhould have kept me alive; for in all this miſerable Condition I never yet received a Penny of my legal Allowance, but was poſitively denied that Teſtimony and legal Right that the late King conſtantly allowed to all the Members of the Parliament that were committed in the Third of his Reign, and ſeveral other times; unto whom for their Diet he allowed three, four and five Pounds a Week, according to their Quality, although they had great and large Eſtates peaceably in their Poſſeſſion. And one of them that is now beyond the Seas, a Colonel, I have forgot his Name, (but it was Colonel Long) confeſſed in the Lieutenant of the Tower's own Chamber, the laſt Year, that the King was ſo bountiful to him and the reſt of his Fellow-Priſoners, that he let them enjoy the Allowance of about four or five Pounds a week for Diet; and that while he was Priſoner in the Tower, he ſpent the King about 1500 l. for his own particular ſelf in Proviſion. But notwithſtanding I was denied all this, and to fill up the height of the inſufferable Provocations put upon me, abundance of my own and antient Acquaintance were ſet upon me to calumniate, beſpatter and reproach me; yea, and to endeavour to become Inſtruments to take away my Life, ſome of them confeſſing they were underhand ſet on by ſome Parliament-Men: All whoſe baſe and wicked Petitions, Papers and Books preferred and publiſhed againſt me, were hugged and imbraced; altho, for my own part, I do not know of any Man in this World that can juſtly tax me with any Action, or maintaining any Principles or Tenents, but what doth become a Man that doth believe all that is contained in the Law and the Goſpel, and does believe the Reſurrection of the Dead, and Life eternal; nay, that does believe that I my ſelf ſhall ariſe and go to the Lord of Glory. Yet notwithſtanding all theſe unparallel'd Provocations put upon me, eſpecially by divers of my old Acquaintance, whom I had upon all Occaſions faithfully ſerved, but never wronged, injured nor provoked, being inſtigated (as they themſelves confeſs in ſome of their own Congregations) by Parliament-Men ſo to do.

Truly, Sirs, I appeal to your own Judgments, and to your Conſciences, and to all the People that hear me this Day, whether all theſe Provocations laid upon a poor Man, which is but Duſt and Aſhes, as well as other Men, be not too inſupportable a Burden, and too much for the Cauſers of them to take advantage of the Fruits produced by them, to deſtroy me, and take away my Life.

And therefore, Sir, in the firſt place, I ſhall humbly crave that Favour and Right, ſeeing I am brought before you by a piece of Parchment that truly I could not read, neither could he do it that ſhewed it me, (I mean the Lieutenant of the Tower;) for admit that if I did well underſtand Latin, as indeed I do not, only ſome ordinary Words, yet was it in ſuch an unuſual ſtrange Hand, that I could not read it. And therefore being I am brought before you implicitly, and not as I conceive an Engliſhman ought to be, who ought to ſee and read the Authority, by virtue of which he is convened before any Power. It's true, I know ſome of you, Gentlemen, that I ſee ſit before me, yet not many of you; and truly I have nothing but a piece of unlegible Parchment, which cannot ſatisfy my Underſtanding of the Legalneſs of my Convention before you: but being I am not able to diſpute that Power that compulſively brought me, but here I am; and therefore in order to the declaring of my ſelf to be a true Engliſhman, I moſt humbly crave (and that I think is conſonant to Reaſon, and I hope to Law too) that I may ſee, and hear read the Commiſſion, by virtue of which you ſit here this Day, and convene my Perſon before you, that ſo I may compare it to the Law; and conſider whether or no, that by my pleading before you by virtue of it, I do not betray my Liberties. And therefore I humbly crave that you would let me hear your Commiſſion read; for this Court is no ordinary and common Aſſizes, Seſſions, or Goal-Delivery, the only proper Courts for trying me for all criminal Faults; yea, and thoſe alſo ought to ſit where the Crimes are committed: and I was impriſoned for a pretended Crime, pretended to be committed in the County of Surrey, where by the Common Law of England, and expreſs Statutes,

I ought to be tried therefore, and no where elſe.

And therefore being brought in an extraordinary manner to ſuch an extraordinary Place as this, which is no ordinary Aſſizes or Seſſions, no, nor yet in mine own County; therefore I again humbly deſire that you will be pleaſed to let me ſee and hear your extraordinary Commiſſion, that ſo I may conſider whether the Extent or Latitude of the Commiſſion be conſonant, or no, to the Petition of Right, and other the good old Laws of England. For thoſe that now ſit at Weſtminſter, exerciſing the ſupreme Power, by two ſpecial Declarations, the one dated the 9th of February laſt, and the other the ſeventeenth of March laſt, have poſitively declared, and called God to witneſs, That they will maintain, preſerve, and defend that excellenteſt of Laws, the Petition of Right, as in the ſeventh Page of the laſt Declaration they call it; and that the People of England ſhall enjoy all the Benefit therein contained, whether to Life, Liberty, or Eſtate, with all Things incident thereunto. And therefore I humbly beg and crave that Favour from you, that ſeeing to me you appear to be ſent in an extraordinary manner, not according to the ordinary Cuſtoms of the Laws of England, that you will be pleaſed to let me hear your Commiſſion read, that ſo I may conſider the Conſonancy thereof to the Petition of Right, and other the good old Laws of England; and after the reading of it, I hope I ſhall return you ſuch an Anſwer as doth become a rational and ingenious Man: Who though he hath Right to all the Privileges of the Laws of England, and hath read all the declared and plain Laws of England, that are to me the Fundamentals of all, yet the practick Part of the Law, which are in other Tongues beſides the Engliſh, I cannot read, know, nor underſtand. And in the Petition of Right, and other the good old fundamental Laws of England, I can find no Foundation or Bottom for ſuch an extraordinary Court, as this before my Eyes ſeems to be: And therefore I again make it my moſt humble Suit to hear your Commiſſion read.

Judge Keble. Mr. Lilburne, you are fully heard.

Mr. Prideaux Attorney-General. My Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, nor none elſe, have Cauſe to complain that he hath wanted your Patience in being fully heard. My Lord, that which at the beginning of his Arraignment you expected from him, which was to hold up his Hand, he denied; and upon his Denial deſired Liberty of Speech to ſpeak, and he hath enjoyed it. But, my Lord, how pertinent his Diſcourſe is to what was propoſed to him, the Court, and all that hear him, will judge. My Lord, I am not here to juſtify the Actings of thoſe that here he hath complained againſt; but they are a Court, they are a Council, and my Thoughts are (and ſo ought his to be) honourable of them; and what they have done (my Lord) towards him, in ordering this Court to try him, is but Juſtice. My Lord, there is no ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, but a general Commiſſion; and upon that general Commiſſion here is a ſpecial Preſentment of Mr. Lilburne here at the Bar: The general Commiſſion is according to the Law of the Land; and upon that ſpecial Preſentment it is expected he may be proceeded againſt according to Law. And for your Commiſſion, my Lord, that hath been read and publiſhed to the Court before Mr. Lilburne came to the Court, and the Court is ſatisfied with it, that it is in the ordinary way; and I hope the Judgment you will give, will declare it to be according to the Law, in the ordinary way. And as for the Commiſſion it ſelf, in the Form of it, it is not a Tittle varied from the ordinary accuſtomed Form. But, my Lord, the Petition of Right, Magna Charta, the Statutes, and all Declarations that have been ſpoken of, they are all confirmed in this, and all do confirm it; for in that ordinary Tract, that hath been practiſed in this Nation for five hundred Years, is Mr. Lilburne now to be tried, and that by the old good Laws of England, Mr. Lilburne's Birth-right, and every Man's elſe, he has his Tryal; the beginning of which hath been Mr. Lilburne's Preſentment, which is already found by the Grand Inqueſt, who are Men of Integrity, Men of Ability, Men of Knowledge. My Lord, he is now come to his Tryal, not in an extraordinary way, but by a Jury of good and legal Men of the Neighbourhood; by Men that do know, my Lord, and underſtand what is Fact, what is (a) Law, and to do Juſtice indifferently between both.

And, my Lord, I do know, and publiſh to all that now hear me, that the Commiſſion for Tryal of Mr. Lilburne this Day, for thoſe Differences that are between the State and Mr. Lilburne, is free in Law from all thoſe Exceptions that he is pleaſed to put upon it, and is unqueſtionably legal, and uſed for theſe many hundred Years together. And as for Mr. Lilburne's declaring the Fact, for which he was originally impriſoned, for to be committed in Surrey, and therefore there in Law he ought to be tried, and not here in London, being another County; as for Mr. Lilburne's Crimes committed in Surrey, his own Conſcience beſt knows what they are: But Mr. Lilburne, at moſt, can but yet gueſs at what we intend to try him here for, or lay unto his Charge.

But, my Lord, if Mr. Lilburne will pleaſe to put himſelf upon his Tryal, according to Law, my Lord, I hope the Court, and all that hears and ſees their Proceedings, will receive full Satisfaction in the Legality and Fairneſs of their Proceedings againſt him, and himſelf the Benefit of Juſtice and Law.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, by your favour, in two Words, I ſhall not be tedious, I now perceive who is my Accuſer and Proſecutor, the Gentleman that is a very unequal one; for he is one of the Creators (being a Member of the Houſe) of you that ſit here this Day to be my Judges; and therefore an over-awing and unfit Accuſer or Proſecutor.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, I pray you hear me a Word; for now you ſpeak not rationally nor diſcreetly: You have had a fair Reſpect and Hearing. What you ſpeak of Liberties and Laws, we come here to maintain them for all, and for you too: And we alſo come for to vindicate our Actions. And as for that you ſpeak of in reference to the Commiſſion, I muſt let you know the Commiſſion is warrantable by the Laws of England for this five hundred Years, nay, and before five hundred Years in ſubſtance. The ſecond Thing that you ſpeak to, is, That you were apprehended in ſuch an hoſtile Manner, underſtanding by Law you ſhould have been taken in an ordinary way, by an ordinary Officer. But, Mr. Lilburne, in all Apprehenſions of Traytors, Felons, and Murderers, is not the Power of the County to be raiſed, and the Sheriff is to call and take what Power he pleaſeth.

(a) Mark that well; for Judge Jermin called it a Damnable Doctrine, when Mr. Lilburne declared the Jury were Judges of Law as well as of Fact.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. By your favour, Sir, not unleſs I reſiſt; which I did not. And beſides, there was no Sheriff, nor no other Civil Officer, at my Apprehenſion.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, ſpare your ſelf: It is as they are informed of the Danger of the Man; they may do it before ever they ſee him. The next Thing you are upon, is, The Wrong and Injuſtice that you received by the Proceedings in the Star-Chamber againſt you. You ſee the Proceedings there have been queſtioned, and you juſtified: If there be any thing elſe that hath been by others in the North, or elſewhere acted, there is no Man here that will juſtify them in their Evil. But for a private Man, as you are, to tell us of them here, and to come and tell us to our Faces that we are created and conſtituted by the Attorney-General, we will not ſuffer it, nor further hear of it. And therefore, Mr. Lilburne, although you have ſpoken fair Words, (and happily more than your Friends expected from you) I muſt tell you that Words are but Words; and it were well that you would do as well and as rationally as becomes a rational Man, as you have declared you will.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. With your favour, but one Word more.

Judge Jermin. Mr. Lilburne, pray ſpare a Word, and hear the Court: This Court ſits here by lawful Authority, and that is from the Parliament, that are the ſupreme Authority of England; ſo that our Power is not derived from thoſe that have no rightful Authority to conſtitute us, but our Power is from the publick Authority of England, which is now, by an admirable Act of God's Providence, lately, but truly revived and ſettled by God upon them. By that Authority this Court doth now ſit; and you are brought here before them that are moſt of us Judges of the Law, and we are ſworn to do you and every Man Juſtice and Right, according as his Cauſe requires, according to Law, Judgment, Equity, and Reaſon. And it was ſaid truly, that which my Brother Heath (who now is dead) did ſay, It's the Duty of the Judges to be of Counſel with the Priſoner at the Bar before him, and to do that which they are ſworn to do: And that you ſhall have. And accordingly you have received more Favour than ever I heard of a Priſoner that was accuſed of Treaſon in my Life ever had. And as for the Commiſſion, I muſt tell you it is uſual to have Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer, and that even in Term-time, for high Offences, and ſuch as tend to the Deſtruction of the Nation, as Overbury's did, and thoſe that tend to capital Treaſon, whereof you are now accuſed, by a Grand-Jury of London, that are Freemen of London, Citizens, able Men, Men of Religion, Men of Eſtate, Men of Conſcience, Men of Quality: Theſe are your Accuſers; who have found you, upon their Oaths, guilty of Treaſon, and cry out to us the Judges for Juſtice againſt you: And it is they, not we, that proceed againſt you. And as for our Commiſſion, it is according to the good old Laws of the Land, founded upon the Statute made in Edward the Firſt's Time, called Weſtminſter the Second. That Statute authorizeth Commiſſions: According to that Commiſſion we ſit by here this Day. And Edward the Firſt was a wiſe and a good Prince, and conſented to the People, to let them have ſuch Commiſſions as ours we ſit by is, which the People had fought ſtoutly for in the Barons Wars in his Father's Time, and alſo in his; for he himſelf was taken Priſoner at Lewes, in the County of Suſſex. And being a wiſe Prince, he knew that the Love of the People was not more to be got than by wholeſom and ſafe Laws, that every Man's Life, and every Man's Eſtate, and every Man's Liberty, might be preſerved by, and not be ſubject to any arbitrary Will or Power; but that the ſober, and diſcreet, and wiſe Laws of the Kingdom, which our Anceſtors won by their Swords, might be their Protectors. A ſpecial one of which was this Statute of Weſtminſter the Second, made in Edward the Firſt's Time: By virtue of which Statute is this Commiſſion directed to the Juſtices of the one Bench and the other; and they be all here this Day, but only thoſe that of neceſſity muſt attend at Weſtminſter, only to preſerve the Term. Now you are come to anſwer to that Charge, which hath been the greateſt Oppoſition to the Settlement of Government that can be; I mean the Settlement of the ſupreme Authority of the Nation in the Commons now aſſembled in Parliament, not newly erected, but revived into the right Place and Hands; for it is the Law of England revived, that the ſupreme Authority is in the (a) Commons aſſembled in the Parliament of England: For ſo it was in the Saxons Time, and in the Romans Time, and in all Times (b) it hath been as it is now; which will ſufficiently juſtify our preſent Proceedings againſt you. And therefore, I ſay, for the Commiſſion it ſelf, it is in general for the Tryal of all Treaſons whatſoever. But the Grand Inqueſt have found out no other Traytor, that they may accuſe, but Maſter John Lilburne, who is now here at the Bar. But it is not a bare Accuſation, but it is the ſolemn Verdict of almoſt a double Jury, that hath appeared upon the Roll; and upon their Oaths do conceive thoſe Crimes of Treaſon that are laid againſt you, to be of ſo dangerous Conſequence againſt the State and Commonwealth, that they do call for Juſtice againſt you as a Traytor already found guilty. And therefore I do require you, as you are an Engliſhman, and a rational Man, that you do conform your ſelf, and tell us plainly what you will do, as in reference to the putting your ſelf upon your Tryal by the Law, and hear with Patience thoſe Offences of Treaſon that are laid to your Charge.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. May it pleaſe you, Sir, by your favour, I ſhall not now trouble you with many Words.

Ld Keble. You go improperly to work.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. That Gentleman, I do not know his Name, (pointing to Judge Jermin:) You were pleaſed to ſay, That I have had more Favour than ever you have heard of any before ever had, in the like Caſe. But, Sir, by your favour, I ſhall tell you of ſome that in the like Caſe have had as much, if not more; and that was Throgmorton, in Queen Mary's Time, who was impeached of higher

(a) But by his Favour, never before practiſed nor uſed without both King and Lords; a Precedent of which he is deſired to ſhew and produce out of any of his Law-Books.

(b) But there was before the Conqueſt neither Inns of Court, Lawyers, nor Term-Judges in England, but only twelve good and legal Men, choſen in each Hundred, finally to decide all Controverſies: Which laſted till William the Conqueror ſubdued that excellent Conſtitution, and inſtead thereof introduced by his Will and Sword (contrary to his ſolemn Oath, three ſeveral times taken) the intolerable Bondage of Weſtminſter-Hall, or Term-Judges, and their Outlandiſh or Norman Law-Practice in the French Tongue; as all the Engliſh Chronicles univerſally and truly declare.

Treaſon than now I am; and that in the Days of the commonly accounted bloodieſt and cruelleſt Prince that this many hundred of Years hath reigned in England: And yet, Sir, I am ſure in this very Place, and that by ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer; who was accuſed for being one of the chiefeſt Confederates with Wyat, in his Kentiſh Rebellion; which Wyat marched with an Army againſt the Queen to London: For which actual War or Rebellion, Throgmorton was in this Place arraigned as a Traytor, and enjoyed as much, if not more Favour than I have now enjoyed, altho his then Judges and Proſecutor were bent to take away (a) his Life, right or wrong. And therefore, Sir, by your favour, it is no extraordinary Favour that you have afforded me; it is but only my Right by Law, Juſtice, and common Equity. But, Sir, I ſhall be ſhort, and put my Buſineſs to a plain Iſſue, which is this:

I have here at the Bar given in many ſtrong Arguments againſt the Validity and Legality of a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, and ſuppoſing that to be ſuch an one by virtue of which you ſit, and intend to try me for my Life; and therefore I have humbly deſired (as in Reaſon, and I think in Law, I may juſtly do) to hear your Commiſſion read; but you have poſitively denied me that. And therefore I deſire all my Friends, and all the People that hear me this Day, to bear witneſs, and take notice, that you, contrary to Reaſon and common Equity, denied me to let me hear read your Commiſſion, by virtue of which you go about to take away my Life; which, I cannot chuſe but deſire them to take notice, I declare to be very hard Meaſure.

But, Sir, to ſave my ſelf from your forelay'd Snares and deſired Advantage againſt me, I will come a little cloſer to the Buſineſs. You demand I ſhould hold up my Hand at the Bar; and I know not what it means, neither what in Law it ſignifies. It's true, I have read the moſt part of the Laws that are in Engliſh, which I take to be the Foundation of all our legal Engliſh Privileges; and in them I cannot find any thing that doth clearly declare unto me the full Signification or Meaning of a Man's holding up his Hand at the Bar. Therefore if you pleaſe but to explain what the Meaning and Signification of holding up the Hand at the Bar is, I ſhall ſeriouſly conſider of it, and, I hope, return you a rational and diſcreet Anſwer: For truly in thoſe Laws which are in the Engliſh Tongue that I have read, although I find mention made of holding up the Hand, yet I cannot find much of the full Signification of it, only I find it to be of a large Extent. And as for thoſe Laws, or rather the practick Part of the Law, that are in French and Latin, I cannot read them, and therefore much leſs underſtand them. In which regard, for me to hold up my Hand at the Bar before I underſtand the true Signification of it in Law, (which tells me it is in it ſelf a tickliſh Thing) were for me to throw away my own Life upon a Punctilio or Nicety that I am ignorant of; and therefore, truly, I think I ſhould be a very Fool, in my own Ignorance to run that Danger. And therefore, Sir, I humbly deſire the clear Explanation of the Meaning of it in Law, and after that I ſhall give you a fair and rational Anſwer.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, you ſhall ſee we will deal very rationally with you, (and not inſnare you in the leaſt manner) if that be all. The holding up of your Hand, we will tell you what it means and ſignifies in Law: The calling to the Party to hold up his Hand at the Bar, is no more but for the ſpecial notice that the Party is the Man inquired for, or called on; and therefore if you be Mr. John Lilburne, and be the Man that we charge, do but ſay that you are the Man, and that you are there, and it ſhall ſuffice.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I am John Lilburne, Son to Mr. Richard Lilburne of ----

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, what you have to ſay we will hear preſently; only take notice that we will take your acknowledging of your Name to be ſufficient, if you will ſay that you are the Man: You are called by your Name, you have come and anſwered to your Name, in order to your anſwering the Charge to be read againſt you; do but this, and it ſhall ſuffice, without holding up your Hand. Therefore let us have no more Diſcourſe as to that.

Judge Jermin. Mr. Lilburne, pray ſpare me a Word; for you have been heard with Patience. You have deſired to have the Right of the Law of England; and yet you do queſtion a fundamental Thing, that hath been always uſed in caſe of criminal Offences. By the Law of England, that you deſire to have the Meaning of it, is but juſt; but you muſt know that the Law of England is the Law of God; and if there be any thing in the Law of England but what was by admirable Conſtitution and Reaſon, we would not meddle with it. But I pray know this, that the Law of England is no written Law: It is the Law that hath been maintained by our Anceſtors, by the tried Rules of Reaſon, and the prime Laws of Nature; for it does not depend upon Statutes, or written and declared (b) Words or Lines. And this is our Laws, that have been maintained by our Anceſtors, and is ſubordinate to the Law and Will of God: Therefore I ſay again, the Law of England is pure primitive Reaſon, uncorrupted and unpolluted by human Humours, or human Corruptions, Wits, or Wills: That's the Law of England. There be two Reaſons why holding up the Hand hath been uſed always: Firſt, for notice that thoſe that are called for capital and criminal Offences, that they hold up their Hands, is to declare that they are the Men. My Lord hath given you this one Reaſon already; which I ſay is, that he be notified by holding up the Hand to all the Beholders, and thoſe that be preſent, and hear him that he is the Man. But beſides this, there is more in it; that's thus: A pure innocent Hand does ſet forth a clear unſpotted

(a) Whoſe remarkable and excellent Defence you may at large read in Hollingſhead's Chronicle, in the Life of Queen Mary, which Diſcourſe is excellently well worth the ſpeedy Reprinting, eſpecially ſeeing Men are made Traytors for Words; which Cruelty Queen Mary abhorred, as may clearly be read in that excellent Statute of hers, made in the firſt Year of her Reign, Chap. 1.

(b) But ſaith Mr. Hyde, in his forementioned Argument, againſt the Northern ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, Pag. 411. Miſera ſervitus eſt, ubi jus eſt vagum aut incognitum; that is to ſay, It is a miſerable Servitude, where the Law is uncertain or unknown. And the very ſame ſaith that great Oracle of the Law, Sir Edward Coke, in the Proem to the third Part of his Inſtitutes, and in the fourth Part, fol. 332. and in ſeveral Places beſides. But the People may eaſily ſee hereby, that theſe preſent Judges drive to have no other Law in being in England, but what is in their own and their Maſters Breaſts; (that ſo by pretence of Law they may give away all the Liberties and Properties of the People of the Nation, as their Brother Judges did lately to the King, in the caſe of Ship-Money:) And then woe, and woe to the People, to be brought back again to that Faith, That Ignorance is the Mother of Devotion or Obedience.

Heart; that ſo the Heart and Hand together might betoken Innocency. And therefore hold up your Hand, that thereby you may declare you have a pure innocent Heart: If you refuſe to do this, you do wilfully deprive your ſelf of the Benefit of one of the main Proceedings and Cuſtoms of the Laws of England. Now for this, do what you think fit.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Well, then, Sir, (applying himſelf to Mr. Keble, as the Preſident of the Court) I take your Explanation of it, and lay hold of that.

Ld Keble. You muſt anſwer poſitively, Sir, for you have had Advice enough, yea, good Advice if you embrace it, it is good Advice to you; but the Court doth not expect an Anſwer from you to what hath been already ſaid to you, but they expect that without any more diſpute you apply yourſelf to anſwer according to that which you are adviſed unto. Do it if you will, and if you will but anſwer to it ſo as hath been declared to you, it ſhall ſuffice; but ſo far you muſt go to this, as to declare whether you be the Man or no before you go away. And therefore diſpute it no more, leſt you deprive yourſelf of the Benefit of the Law.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Well then, Sir, according to your own Explanation, I ſay my Name is John Lilburne, Son to Mr. Richard Lilburne of the County of Durham, a Freeman of the City of London, and ſometimes Lieutenant-Colonel in the Parliament's Army: and if you will not believe that I am the Man, my Guardian the Lieutenant of the Tower there (pointing to him) will aver that I am.

Ld Keble. So then you are the Man.

Judge Jermin. Ask him again: hearken Mr. Lilburne, hearken what he ſays, and uſe that Moderation, and Temper, and Diſcretion that you have promiſed.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. One word more, and I ſhall have done; and that is by the Law of England—— But being interrupted, he cry'd out, With your favour, Sir, I will come to the main thing; I hope you do not go about to circumvent me, therefore hear me I beſeech you.

Ld Keble. Hear the Court, Mr. Lilburne, there ſhall be nothing of Circumvention or Interruption: but as you have profeſſed to be a rational and underſtanding Man in Words, let your Deeds ſo declare you.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I beſeech you do not ſurprize me with Punctilios or Niceties, which are hard things for me to loſe my Life upon. I tell you again, my Name is John Lilburne, Son to Mr. Richard Lilburne.

Ld Keble. Talk not of Punctilios with us, nor talk not of Judges made by the Laws, you ſhall not want Law: but if you talk of Punctilios here in this Room, we will ſtop that Language.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Truly, Sir, I am upon my Life, and ſhall my Ignorance of the Formalities of the Law in the practick part thereof deſtroy me? God forbid! Therefore give me but leave to ſpeak for my Life, or elſe knock me on the head, and murder me where I ſtand, which is more righteous and juſt than to do it by pretence of Juſtice. Sir, I know that Mr. Bradſhaw himſelf, Preſident to the High Court of Juſtice, as it was called, gave Duke Hamilton (a hoſtile Enemy) leave to ſpeak to the Punctilios of the Law; yea, and to my knowledge again and again made an Engagement unto him and the reſt try'd with him, that the Court nor he would not, by virtue of their Ignorance of the Niceties or Formalities of the Law, take advantage againſt them to deſtroy them; but did declare again and again, that all Advantages of Formalities ſhould be totally laid aſide, and not in the leaſt made uſe of againſt them to their prejudice. And I hope you will grant me, that have often been in Arms for you, but never againſt you, as much Favour and Privilege as was granted to Duke Hamilton, never of your Party, but a General of a numerous Army againſt you.

Ld Keble. Take it as you will, we have had patience with you, and you muſt and ſhall have patience with us: we will paſs over all that is bypaſt, but take heed by your ſurly Croſſneſs you give not advantage in the face of the Court, to paſs Sentence againſt you, without any farther Proceedings, or Proof of your Actions, but what our own Eyes ſee. The Ceremony is for your advantage more than you are aware of: but if you confeſs yourſelf to be Mr. John Lilburne, we have done as to that.

Judge Jermin. Mr. Lilburne, at the beginning you talked of Moderation, and that you would carry yourſelf with Rationality, which methinks in your Actions you fall ſhort of; for you have ſaid, that Mr. Attorney-General was a very unequal Proſecutor of you, becauſe you ſay he was the (a) Creator of our Commiſſion. Pray hear me, I heard you; and do not you think to put Affronts upon us undeſerv'd. And as for that Man that you call Mr. Bradſhaw, I tell you again he is Lord Preſident of the Council of State of the Commonwealth of England; and why you ſhould ſo much neglect him, doth not ſo much ſavour of Rationality and Moderation, as you pretend yourſelf to be poſſeſſed with.

Ld Keble. Come, will you read the Indictment?

Mr. Broughton reads. Hold up your Hand, John Lilburne, and hearken to your Charge.

Thou ſtandeſt indicted of High Treaſon by the Name of John Lilburne, late of London Gent. for that thou as a falſe Traytor, not having the Fear of God before thy eyes, but being ſtirred up and moved by the Inſtigation of the Devil, &c. as it followeth verbatim, in the ſecond Day's Proceedings, to which the Reader is referred.

Mr. Broughton. What ſay'ſt thou, John Lilburne, art thou guilty of this Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Gentlemen, I require the Favour that I may be heard, and I ſhall deſire nothing but that which may ſtand with Reaſon and Juſtice.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, we ſhall deal with you according to Reaſon and Juſtice, and after ſuch a manner as you yourſelf ſhall judge rational and right.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Gentlemen, I ſhall ſpeak but a few words; I beſeech you hear me, for it is upon my Life.

Ld Keble. You ſay you will deal rationally in thoſe ways; that is to be expected from you the firſt in Reaſon, is to anſwer, and plead; and before you ſo do, you cannot be heard.

(a) Mr. Lilburne here endeavoured to ſpeak, and ſhew the Judge his Miſtake; for he did not ſay that Mr. Prideaux was the Creator of the Commiſſion, but that he was one of the Creators of all the Judges, and thereby was Judge of his Judges, and in that regard he was no competent Accuſer or Proſecutor: but they would not ſuffer him to ſpeak, but cry'd out, Hear the Court; which thing alſo they frequently did afterwards.

Lieut.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Give me leave to ſpeak, and I ſhall not ſpeak ſix Lines: (which with much ſtruggling being granted, Mr. Lilburne went on and ſaid to this effect) Then Sir, thus, By the Laws of England I am not to anſwer to Queſtions againſt or concerning myſelf.

Ld Keble. You ſhall not be compel'd.

Another Judge. Mr. Lilburne, is this to anſwer againſt yourſelf, to ſay you are not guilty? By the Laws of the Land you are to plead to your Charge, and it is no accuſing of yourſelf to ſay Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, by your favour——

Judge Keble. To anſwer that you are Not Guilty, is no great matter, nor definite in Law.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. By the Law of England I am to be tried by a Rule, but I do not know, by the Rules of Law, what Benefit, in reference to my Exception againſt the Illegality of my Indictment, I may deprive myſelf of, in caſe I ſhould anſwer before I except.

Ld Keble. The Law is plain, that you are poſitively to anſwer Guilty or Not Guilty, which you pleaſe.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, by the Petition of Right, I am not to anſwer to any Queſtions concerning myſelf; therefore I humbly intreat you to afford me the Privileges of the Laws of England, and I will return a poſitive Anſwer to it; if you will but pleaſe to allow me Counſel, that I may conſult with them, for I am ignorant of the Formalities of Law in the practick part of it, altho I here declare I own the good old Laws of England, and a legal Jury of twelve Men, yea, and a Tryal by a Jury of legal Men. And I do humbly crave, Sir, a Copy of the Indictment, or ſo much of it as I may ground my Plea upon it; and reaſonable Time to conſult with my Counſel, altho it be but eight or nine days.

Ld Keble. You ſpeak well, but you muſt do well, 'tis that we come for: the Rationableneſs of it is this, that you ſhould ſhortly anſwer, Sir, to that Queſtion, and in a rational legal way. When you have anſwered it, you ſhall have liberty to make your Defence, to maintain that you ſay; but this that we now ſpeak of, is a thing in your own Breaſt, in your own Knowledge, whether you be guilty of this that is laid to your charge, or no: And if you be clear, you cannot wrong yourſelf, nor your Conſcience; for in ſaying Not Guilty, you know better what you ſay than any other doth.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I am ignorant of the Formalities of the Law, having no Books in Engliſh wherein I can read them; and as for other Tongues, I underſtand none: and therefore for you to take away my Life for my Ignorance, when the practick Part of the Law, or the Formalities thereof, is lock'd up in ſtrange Language, that it is impoſſible for me to read or underſtand, is extreme hard.

It is true, in thoſe Engliſh plain Laws which I have read, I find ſomething ſpoken of it; but muſt aver, that I find there is a great deal of Nicety and Danger in locking a Man up to ſingle Formalities, in anſwering Guilty, or Not Guilty: and therefore I beſeech to aſſign me Counſel, to inform my Ignorance, and give me but leave to conſult with my Counſel, and I will return you an Anſwer according to your deſire, without any Demur, as ſoon as it is poſſible for me to know what grounds I go upon.

Mr. Broughton. John Lilburne, what ſay'ſt thou, art thou guilty of the Treaſon laid unto thy charge, or art thou not guilty?

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. But under favour thus, for you to come to enſnare and entrap me with unknown Niceties and Formalities, that are lock'd up in the French and Latin Tongue, and cannot be read in Engliſh Books, they being not expreſſed in any Law of the Kingdom, publiſhed in our own Engliſh Tongue: it is not fair play according to the Law of England, plainly in Engliſh expreſſed in the Petition of Right, and other the good old Statute Laws of the Land. Therefore I again humbly deſire to have Counſel aſſigned to me, to conſult with, what theſe Formalities in Law ſignify; ſo that I may not throw away my Life ignorantly upon Forms.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, we cannot grant you that Favour, it is not conſiſtent to the Law, whatſoever you ſay to the contrary.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I hope you will not go about to enſnare me, and take away my Life for Punctilios.

Another Judge. Well then, you will not plead?

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Yes, if I may be allowed that which I conceive to be my Birthright and Privilege, to conſult with Counſel; or that you pleaſe to make the ſame Engagement to me that Mr. Bradſhaw, as the Preſident of the High Court of Juſtice, made to Duke Hamilton; which was, that the Court would take no advantage at all of his Ignorance in the Niceties and Formalities of the Law in his pleading: let me but enjoy this Engagement from you, and I will plead.

Ld Keble. You ſhall have that which is according to the Law; therefore, Mr. Lilburne, I adviſe you for to plead, and you ſhall have fair play, and no advantage taken againſt you by your Ignorance of the Formality of the Law.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Well then, Sir, upon that Engagement, and becauſe I ſee you are ſo poſitive in the thing——this is my Anſwer; That I am not guilty of any of the Treaſons in Manner and Form, as they are there laid down in that Indictment, (pointing to it.) And therefore now, Sir, having pleaded, I crave the Liberty of England, that you will aſſign me Counſel.

Mr. Broughton. By whom wilt thou be tried?

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. By the known Laws of England, and a legal Jury of my Equals, conſtituted according to Law.

Mr. Broughton. By whom wilt thou be tried?

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. By the known Laws of England; I mean, by the Liberties and Privileges of the Laws of England, and a Jury of my Equals legally choſen. And now, Sir, I again deſire Counſel to be aſſigned me, to conſult with in point of Law, that ſo I may not deſtroy myſelf through my Ignorance. This is but the ſame Privilege that was granted at Oxford unto me, and the reſt of my Fellow-Priſoners arraigned with me.

One of the Clerks. You muſt ſay, by God and your Country; that's the Form of the Law.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Why muſt I ſay ſo?

Another Judge. This is the Form and Law of the Land: Will you plead, Mr. Lilburne, according to the Laws of England?

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Truly I never read it, Sir, in the Laws of England, what it is to plead in this nature.

Ld Keble. You ſay you will be tried by the Laws of the Land, then it is by the Country, and ſo you may plead, and do yourſelf no harm; for by the Country is meant a Jury of your Equals.

Lieut.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I am doubtful of my Ignorance in the Laws, yet I will return you an Anſwer, you making good your already engaged Promiſes, that you will take no advantage againſt me, if through my Ignorance, and your Importunity, I plead in any Form, that in ſtrictneſs of acceptation may deprive me of any real Benefit the Law will afford me.

Judge Thorp. Mr. Lilburne, you will be tried by the Law, and by the Rules thereof: when you ſay ſo, you do really declare it to be by your Country. So that the true Signification of being tried by the Law, is the ſame thing in ſubſtance with being tried by the Rules of the Law.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Then I hope my Anſwer is clear and fair, Sir.

Judge Jermin. The Formality is ſhortly this, to be tried by God and your Country; no more is meant by it but thus, by God, as God is every where preſent, yea in all Courts of Juſtice, and ſits and knows all things that are acted, ſaid, and done: The other part of it, by your Country, that is, by your Country or Neighbourhood; the Country is called Patria, becauſe your Neighbour and your Equals, which you are willing to put yourſelf upon the Tryal of. By force of that word, the Country, a Jury of the Neighbourhood for Tryal of you are ſummoned. Now do what you will.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, under your favour thus; then in the negative I ſay, God is not locally or corporally here preſent to try me, or paſs upon me; but affirmative, I return this Anſwer, That I deſire to be tried in the preſence of that God, that by his omnipotent Power is preſent every where, and beholds all the Actions that are done upon the Earth, and ſees and knows whether any of your Hearts be poſſeſſed with a premeditated Malice againſt me, or whether any of you come with ſo much Forethought of Malice againſt me, as that in your hearts you intend to do the utmoſt you can, right or wrong, to deſtroy me: and before this all-ſeeing God I deſire to be tried, and by my Country, that is to ſay, by a Jury of my Equals, according to the good old Laws of the Land.

Juſtice Thorp. You have ſpoken very well.

Ld Keble. You have done like an Engliſhman ſo far as you have gone; and I do aſſure, that in any Formality (as you expreſs or call them) there ſhall be no advantage againſt you, if you miſtake in them. Now what you have the next to think upon, is your Jury of your Countrymen, or Neighbours of your Equals; and I promiſe you we will take care of that, that they ſhall be good and lawful Men of England.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I thank you, Sir, but under your favour thus: Your Indictment is extreme long, and of abundance of Particulars, it is impoſſible that my Memory, or of any one Man's in England, can contain it, or carry it in our heads; and therefore that I may make my Defence ſo as becomes a rational Engliſhman, I earneſtly intreat you, that now you will be pleaſed to give me a Copy of my Indictment, or ſo much of it, as you expect a Plea from me upon, and an Anſwer unto, and Counſel aſſigned me, and Time to debate with my Counſel, and Subpœnas for Witneſſes.

Ld Keble. For Counſel, you need none, Mr. Lilburne; for that Not Guilty which you have pleaded, is that which lies in your own Breaſt, which reſts in your own Counſel, and you know how it is, and can beſt plead that yourſelf: Counſel lies in Matter of Law, not of Fact.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Under favour I deſire Counſel for Matter of Law, and not for Matter of Fact. My Indictment I believe in Law, is all Matter of Law, and I have ſomething to ſay to it in Law.

Ld Keble. If Matter of Law do ariſe upon the Proof of the Fact, you ſhall know it, and then ſhall have Counſel aſſigned to you.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I myſelf have before this been upon ſome Tryals, and never before this was denied Counſel, no nor ſo much as ever diſputed whether I ſhould have it or no. I alſo was at a great part of the Earl of Strafford's Tryal, who was ſuppoſed a moſt notorious Traytor; and yet if my Obſervation and Memory do not exceedingly fail me, he had Counſel aſſigned him at his firſt deſire, and they were continually with him, not only at the Bar when he was there, but alſo had continual and free Acceſs to him in Priſon.

Beſides, Sir, I being accuſed of Treaſon in ſuch an extraordinary manner, and being but an ordinary Man myſelf; no eminent experienced Lawyer dare well meddle with my Buſineſs, no nor ſo much as beſtow a Viſit upon me, but he runs a hazard of being undone. And truly my Eſtate is in an extraordinary manner taken from me, ſo that I have not Money to ſend Meſſengers up and down privately to their Chambers: and therefore that I may be freely and allowedly able, without danger of Ruin to any Man that ſhall adviſe me, I ſhall humbly crave as my Right by Law, and I am ſure by common Equity and Juſtice, that I may have Counſel and Sollicitors alſo aſſigned me.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, ſpeak rationally for yourſelf; when there comes a Matter of Law, that you are able to ſay, this is for Matter of Law, ariſing from Matter of Fact, that hath been proved or endeavoured to be proved, when you come beyond that, you ſhall have it as willingly as you can deſire: and withal, this that you ſay concerning your Memory, which you ſay is not able to carry away, or contain the Particulars of this Indictment; the Indictment, ſo much as will charge your Memory, will be very ſhort: for it is the publiſhing of thoſe Books charged upon you in the Indictment, that will be the Matter which will ſtick, and that Matter will be very ſhort, which we muſt prove againſt you, which is only Matter of Fact, and not of Law. And therefore for Fact of Treaſon you can be allowed no Counſel, but muſt plead it yourſelf.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, under favour, you expect from me Impoſſibilities; for ſeeing I have been ſeven Months in Priſon for nothing, and could not in the leaſt know perfectly what would be laid to my charge, nor after what manner I ſhould be proceeded againſt, (conſidering all Proceedings againſt me hithertoward have been ſo abſolutely arbitrary, that it was impoſſible for me in Law exactly to come provided:) and therefore ſeeing I am now here, and you pretend to proceed with me according to the due Courſe of Law, and ſeeing the Form of the Proceedings in this manner with me is not expreſly and exactly declared in Print in Engliſh, which Tongue only I can read and underſtand; and ſeeing by the Law, which is in Engliſh, which I have read, and clearly underſtand, that there are a great many Snares, and a great many Niceties in the Practick, that are formal Proceedings of the Law; and ſeeing I know not certainly, whether if I proceed to Matter of Proof, before in Law I make my Exceptions againſt your Indictment, as to Matter, Time, and Place, I be not in Law deprived of that Benefit, which I prin-

Principally aim at for the preſervation of my Life; therefore I beſeech and moſt earneſtly intreat you, to aſſign me Counſel to conſult with, before I be too far inſnared: and if you will not do it, and give me ſome reaſonable time to prepare my Plea and Defence, then order me to be knock'd on the head immediately in the place where I ſtand, without any further Tryal; for I muſt needs be deſtroyed, if you deny me all the Means of my Preſervation.

Judge Jermin. Mr. Lilburne, it were reaſonable to give you ſatisfaction, if you would receive it. You ſay you were preſent at my Lord of Strafford's Tryal, and you ſay he had Counſel aſſigned him, not only to ſtand by him at the Bar, but to repair to Priſon to inſtruct and adviſe: but that was not a Tryal in ſuch a way as this is; it was a Tryal by way of Impeachment before the Peers aſſembled in Parliament, and his Attainder was made up into an Act of Parliament; but that is not a Tryal at the Common Law per Pares, which is that which yourſelf have deſired, a Tryal by lawful Men, according to the Liberties of the Laws of England. After your Anſwer to your firſt Queſtion, that is to ſay, whether you be guilty or not guilty of the things whereof you are accuſed, no Counſel in the world can follow, till the Fact be proved, and Matter of Law do ariſe thereupon. So that the firſt thing that muſt be done, the Matter of Fact muſt be proved againſt you; and then if it ſhall appear thereupon to the Court, that Matter of Law doth ariſe, and you do expect Counſel, we muſt and will perform it; the Court are of your Counſel ſo far as to Fact. And then in that caſe, that Law ariſe thereupon, you may and ought to have other Counſel aſſigned; and do not you doubt but the Court will be as careful of you, as you can be of yourſelf, and allow you more Favour, it may be, than your Friends do expect.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Under your favour, and by your good-liking; I was once arraigned at Oxford for my Life, upon the Matter of Treaſon, for levying War in Oxfordſhire againſt the King, as their Indictment then ſaid; and my Arraignment was by virtue of a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, that was (and in Law I am ſure of it) as legal and as juſt as yours is: and my Lord Chief Juſtice Heath, the chief Commiſſioner or Preſident, who was in the eye of the Law as legal a Judge as any of you, and yet he—— Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, we do remember it.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I beſeech you give me leave to ſpeak for myſelf, and to go on, for my Life lies upon it.

Ld Keble. Hear me one word, and you ſhall have two. This that you did ſpeak but even now, do not you think that we have ſuch bad Memories, as that we have already forgot it; your Life is by Law as dear as our Lives, and our Souls are at ſtake if we do you any wrong.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I wiſh you may be ſenſible of that, Sir.

Judge Jermin. Mr. Lilburne, you need not to ſay ſo, our Souls are upon it, and we are to ſtand or fall by Juſtice and Righteouſneſs as well as yourſelf is.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I ſay, my Lord Heath and the Court at Oxford proffered me Counſel before any one Witneſs was produced to my face, or any Matter of Fact came to the Proof; yea, and gave me liberty to make my Exceptions to the Inſufficiency of the Indictment, which was very ſhort in compariſon of yours. I crave the ſame Privilege from you (the Nation's pretended Friends) that I found at Oxford amongſt its declared pretended Enemies, againſt whom in ſeveral Battels I had fought. And I hope you that pretend to be the Preſervators of the Liberties of England, will not be more cruel and unrighteous than the declared Deſtroyers of them. If you will not allow me Counſel as I had there, I have no more to ſay to you; you may murder me if you pleaſe.

Judge Jermin. You were pleaſed to mention ſome Precedents of thoſe that have been accuſed of High Treaſon, that have had Counſel aſſigned to them; and for one you mention that of my Lord Strafford, whoſe Tryal I told you was Parliamentary before the Houſe of Peers, upon the Impeachment of the Commons of England in Parliament aſſembled, and ſo it went on in a Parliamentary way: This Proceeding is in an ordinary Courſe of the ordinary quondam Court of Juſtice, according to the Common Law. Now for my Lord of Strafford, give me leave to obſerve this; he had no Counſel aſſigned him until ſuch time as Queſtions of the Law did ariſe, which required Counſel, and then he had Counſel aſſigned him, but not before: for that my Lord doth not ſay, that you ſhall have no Counſel, but that you ſhall have that which the Law allows. And as for that which you ſpeak of Counſel at Oxford, it could not be. But when upon the Proof of Matter of Fact, it appears to the Court that there is any Queſtion or Matter of Law ariſing upon the Fact; and when it doth ſo appear unto us, then you ſhall have Counſel for that. But (I beſeech you) hear me on: You are now come before us, acccording to the Common Law, to be tried by your Country; there is now nothing in queſtion, but whether that Matter, that Thing, thoſe Words contained in the Indictment read to you, be true, yea or no; that is, whether they be done or no: for we will not give Counſel to plead to the Matter of Fact contained in your own Books, which you remember very well.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Thoſe Books ſuppoſed mine: pray let me have fair play, and not be wound and skrew'd up into Hazards and Snares.

Ld Keble. If they be not yours upon good grounds proved before you, you are in no danger; and if upon the Proofs of the Words and Deeds done, there do appear Matter of Law, you muſt and ſhall have Counſel: ſtay till that be done. In the mean time the Court will take care that a Jury ſhall be returned, of honeſt and ſufficient legal Men to judge of the Proofs.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. There was arraigned with me at Oxford Colonel Vivers of Banbury now alive, and Captain Catesby who is dead: I will bring Colonel Vivers to depoſe here upon his Oath, That my Lord Heath, and the reſt of the Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer, proffered me Counſel, and allowed me and him Counſel before ever ſo much as any Witneſſes were produced, to prove the leaſt Matter of Fact. And if you will not be ſo juſt towards me as the Cavaliers were, and allow me Counſel as they did, I have no more to ſay, but reſolve upon this ſcore to ſtand, and here to die upon the Principles of an Engliſhman. If you will not be ſo juſt as the Cavaliers were, with whom you and the Parliament ſet us together by the ears to fight with, pretendedly for their Injuſtice, let God and all righteous Men judge betwixt you and me.

Judge Nichols. If you will not be led by the Proceedings of Law, it will be worſe for you; and you are to know this is not Oxford.

Lieut.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, by what better Rules of the Law can I be led by, than thoſe that I have before my eyes? I am ſure at Oxford, as my Right by Law, I was, before any Fact was proved, proffered Counſel by my Judges, which were my Lord Heath, and Mr. Gardiner, now Sir Thomas Gardiner, who is now in London: if you pleaſe I will produce him to this Bar, to juſtify it upon his Oath, That the Lord Chief Juſtice Heath in his preſence proffered me Counſel upon my Arraignment for Treaſon there, as my Right by the Privileges of the Laws of England, before the Fact came to be proved; yea, and alſo gave me liberty to aſſign the Errors of my Indictment. He is now in London, and I will produce him here at this Bar (if you pleaſe) to juſtify what I ſay, if you will give me time, and enable me with Ability to ſummon him in.

Judge Nichols. Mr. Lilburne, whether Mr. Gardiner will juſtify it or no, it is nothing to us; for we are not to walk by Oxford Precedents, but by the Rules of the Law: and the Law will afford you no Counſel, but in Points of Law ariſing upon Proof of the Fact (z).

L. Col. Lilb. Under favour, thus: I conceive the Precedents at Oxford, ſo far as they are righteous, are fit for your Imitation; and whether it be a righteous thing for you, when I am tryed for Treaſon before you, to be more cruel towards me, who have fought for you, than the Cavaliers at Oxford in the like Caſe were, againſt whom I fought: And I muſt tell you, I further conceived it the moſt unequal and unjuſt thing in the World for me to have to do, upon the Tryal of my Life, with all the Judges of the Land (who are all engaged Men) that have had above ſix Months time to beat their Brains together, with the Aſſiſtance of divers of my Adverſaries, who are Parliament-Men, that were the Creators of their Power, and for one of them to be my Proſecutor; and in this ſo extraordinary Caſe, for me to be denied to conſult with Counſel; I tell you, Sir, it is moſt unjuſt, and the moſt unrighteous thing, in my Apprehenſion, that I ever heard of, or ſaw in all my Life. O Lord! was there ever ſuch a Pack of unjuſt and unrighteous Judges in the World? Sir, in plain Engliſh let me tell you, if I had thought you would have bound me up to a ſingle Plea, and not have given me in my Plea the juſt Latitude of Law, Equity and Reaſon, but hold me thus cloſe to your ſingle Formalities, contrary to your Promiſes, I would rather have died in this very Court before I would have pleaded one Word unto you; for now you go about, by my own Ignorance and Folly, to make my ſelf guilty of taking away my own Life: and therefore unleſs you will permit me Counſel, upon this Lock I am reſolved to die.

Ld Keble. This is not the rational way you ſaid you would go in.

L. Col. Lilb. Sir, my Life is before you, you may murder me, and take away my Blood, if you pleaſe.

Ld Keble. I will not be out-voiced by you, our Lives and our Souls are upon it, therefore you ſhall have Equity and Juſtice; yea, ſuch as you deſire your ſelf: but you are now going to fly into Extravagancies and Heats, which will manifeſt the Rancour of the Diſtemper'dneſs and Invenom'dneſs of Spirit which is within you. And beſides, if we ſhould enter into it, we might aggravate your Crimes by your own Words at the Bar. Take heed of it, that you give not advantage againſt your ſelf to your own Ruine.

L. Col. Lilb. Sir, I am in no Heats, I am but with Earneſtneſs pleading for my Life, when you deny me all the juſt Means of my Preſervation, which is my Right and Due by your own Law.

Judge Thorp. Mr. Lilburne, I deſire to correct a Miſtake of yours in the Law: You were pleaſed to condemn it as unjuſt; for the Attorney-General's ſpeaking with me when your Indictment was a reading, you are to know, he is the Proſecutor for the State here againſt you; and he muſt confer with us upon ſeveral Occaſions, and we with him, and this is Law.

L. Col. Lilb. Not upon the Bench, Sir, by your favour, unleſs it be openly, audibly and avowedly, and not in any clandeſtine and whiſpering way: And by your favour, for all you are a Judge, this is Law, or elſe Sir Edward Coke in his (a) 3d Part Inſt. cap. High Treaſon or Petty-Treaſon, hath publiſhed Falſhoods, and the Parliament hath licenſed them; for their Stamp in a ſpecial manner is to that Book.

Judge Thorp. Sir Edward Coke is Law, and he ſays, The Attorney-General, or any other Proſecutor may ſpeak with us in open Court, to inform us about the Buſineſs before us in open Court.

L. Col. Lilb. Not in hugger-mugger, privately or whiſperingly.

Judge Thorp. I tell you, Sir, the Attorney-General may talk with any in the Court, by Law, as he did with me.

L. Col. Lilb. I tell you, Sir, it is unjuſt, and not warrantable by Law, for him to talk with the Court, or any of the Judges thereof in my abſence, or in hugger-mugger, or by private Whiſperings.

Ld Keble. No, Sir, it is no hugger-mugger for him to do as he did; ſpare your Words, and burſt not out into Paſſion; for thereby you will declare your ſelf to be within the compaſs of your Indictment, without any further Proof: Look to it, that you behave your ſelf according to the Bounds of Reaſon and Law, and hear me; for we muſt cauſe the Jury to be returned.

L. Col. Lilb. Sir, under favour, I crave but one Word more, hear me out: I know very well, and I read in your own Law-Books, ſuch a Prerogative as that in Caſes of Treaſon no Counſel ſhall plead againſt the King, hath been ſometime challenged to be the King's Right by Law; but let me tell you, it was an uſurp'd Prerogative of the late King, with all other arbitrary Prerogatives and unjuſt Uſurpations upon the People's Rights and Freedoms, which has been pretended to be taken away with him. And, Sir, can it be juſt to allow me Counſel to help me to plead for my Eſtate, the leſſer; and to deny me the help of Counſel to enable me to plead for my Life, the greater? Nay, Sir, can it be juſt in you Judges, to take up ſeven Years time in ending ſome Suits of Law for a little Money or Land, and deny me

(z) What a lying Judge is this Mr. Nichols! whenas he himſelf with Mr. John Maynard the Lawyer, was aſſigned by the Preſident, Lord Chief Baron Wilde, to be of the Counſel with Major Rolfe upon his Deſire; and that before ever the Grand Jury found his Indictment of Treaſon, as is fully declared in the next day's following Plea of Mr. Lilburne.

(a) Whoſe Words there, fol. 29, 30. are ſo plain and expreſs to prove what Mr. Lilburne ſaid to be good Law, as nothing in the World can be plainer. See alſo to the ſame purpoſe, the ſecond Part Inſt. fol. 49, 103, 104.

a few Days to consider what to plead for my Life? Sir, all these Pretences of yours, were but all the Prerogatives of the King's Will, to destroy the poor ignorant and harmless People by, which undoubtedly died with him; or else only the Name or Title is gone with him, but not the Power or hurtful Tyranny or Prerogative in the least. Therefore seeing all such pretended and hurtful Prerogatives are pretended to be taken away with the King, by those that took away his Life, I earnestly desire I may be assigned Counsel to consult with, knowing now especially no Pretence why I should be denied that Benefit and Privilege of the Law, of the just and equitable Law of England, having put my self upon a Tryal according to the Privileges thereof. And it was declared to me at Oxford, upon the Tryal of my Life there, after I was taken Prisoner, fighting against the King and his Party, even almost to Handy-gripes, and to the Sword Point, and to the But-end of our Muskets, being in Person one of that little Number that for many Hours together at Brentford fought with the King's whole Army, where in the manner, without any Articles or Composition, I was taken a Prisoner, and immediately thereupon arraigned at Oxford; where notwithstanding all this, it was declared to me by Judge Heath to be my Right, by the Law of England, to have Counsel assigned me to help me in point of Law, and I had it granted. I confess he is my best Authority that I have, and I am sure he was a Judge of the Law, or else I had never pleaded to him; and he was upon his Oath to do Justice and Right; and he was an able and understanding Lawyer, and yet did allow me (an hostile Enemy) Counsel to help me, as my Right by Law, before ever any Proof to Matter of Fact was produced: and I beg but the same legal Privilege from you, from whom I have more Cause to expect it.

Ld Keble. Were you there indicted for Treason?

L. Col. Lilb. Yes that I was, and for the highest of Treasons, by the Letter of the Law, for actual levying War against the King.

Judge Thorp. And yet, for all that, you know it was no Treason, and so did he too; for you know that you had committed no Treason at all in obeying the Parliament's Command: for what you have done, was done by the Parliament's special Authority and Command; and you had your Commission to justify you in your hostile Actions: and he knew it well enough your Act was no Treason, though he did offer you Counsel, or else he durst not allow you Counsel.

L. Col. Lilb. I had nothing to justify me in that Act, but the equitable Sense of the Law, the Letter of it being point-blank against me, and on the Cavaliers side, by which if they had prevail'd, they might have hanged both you and me for levying War against the King, notwithstanding our Parliament Commissions: and this I know, Sir, you know to be Law in the Letter or Punctilio's of it.

Judge Thorp. It was no Treason in you, and he that assigned you Counsel, knew it was no Treason; and this Arraignment of you was as illegal as his assigning you Counsel.

L. Col. Lilb. Sir, by your favour he was a Judge of the Law by legal Authority, being made by the King, in whom, by Law, that Power was invested; and he looked upon himself as a legal Judge, and so did I too: and as a legal Judge he arraigned me for doing that Act, that by the express Letter of the Law was Treason; and as a legal and honest Judge, according to his Duty in Law, he allowed me Counsel.

Judge Jermin. For that matter that you talk of, they knew it was no Treason, and therefore gave you more Privileges than was their right by Law, very well knowing, that whatsoever was done to any of you that did fight for the Laws, Religion and Liberties of their Country, there might be the like done to others that were Prisoners in the Parliament's Power: and this was the truth of it, and you know it very well; and therefore it is nothing to us, nor in Law his Willingness.

L. Col. Lilb. Upon my Letters, after the first Day of my Tryal, that Declaration of Lex Talionis was made, as clearly appears by the Words and Date of it now in Print, which the Reader may peruse in the first Part of the Parliament's Declarations, p. 802, 803.

Judge Thorp. I wonder they did not proceed in the Prosecution of the Indictment, and find you guilty of Treason, and so to Execution.

L. Col. Lilb. Under your favour, thus; I appear'd at the Bar, I pleaded to my Indictment Not guilty, I made Exceptions against my Indictment; and my self, and the two other Gentlemen arraigned with me, had Counsel assigned us as our Right by Law: and the Judges most fairly and rationally further told us, Because we will not surprize you, we will give you a Week's time to consider (with what Counsel you please in Oxford to chuse to come to you) what to plead for your Lives; and whatsoever other Privileges you can claim by the Liberties of the Law of England, you shall enjoy them to the utmost. Upon which Promise I spoke in open Court to the Judge, shewing him the Irons upon my Hands, in which I was arraigned, and told him; My Lord, by the Laws of England, no Prisoner for any Crime whatsoever, that behaves himself civilly and peaceably in his Imprisonment, ought to be put in Irons, or to any other Pain or Torment before he be legally convicted; and therefore I desire, as my Right by Law, that my Irons may be taken off. And I said further, My Lord, I am shut up a close Prisoner in my Chamber, denied the use of Pen, Ink and Paper, which is contrary unto Law, especially in the time of my Tryal. Why, says he, you shall be released from your Irons, from your close Imprisonment, and have the use of Pen, Ink and Paper: And Capt. Lilburne, I tell you, you shall enjoy whatsoever other Privilege you can challenge as your Right by Law; for the Law of England is a Law of Mercy, and I hope we shall appear just Judges of it: And therefore you shall freely have either Lawyer, or whom you will in Oxford, to come unto you to help you and advise you. And, says he, because you shall see that Law and Justice is of the King's side against the Parliament, and because they shall have no Cause to calumniate us at Westminster, and to say we are unrighteous and unjust Judges, that surprize you, and thereby go about to murder you, the Court is freely willing to give you a Week's time, to consider with your Counsel in the mean time what this Day Sevennight to plead for your Life. In which time, being freed of my Irons, and of my close Imprisonment, and enjoying Pen, Ink, and Paper at my Pleasure, by special Order from the other two Gentlemen, I writ a Letter to my Wife, and in it inclosed another to your Speaker, and another to young Sir Henry Vane, then my familiar Acquaintance; tance; all which I ſent in poſt-haſte away to my Wife by the Hands of Capt. Primroſe's Wife, which Capt. Primroſe was Priſoner there; and his Wife, who brought up the Letter to my Wife, is now in London. Which Letter my Wife delivered to the Speaker, &c. and by her importunate Sollicitation procured the Declaration of Lex Talionis; the Subſtance of which, in a Letter from Mr. Speaker, my Wife brought down to Oxford, and delivered to the Lord Heath's own Hands upon the Sunday after the firſt Day of our Arraignment. And the third Day before we were to appear again, my Wife arrived at Oxford with the Speaker's Letter, which ſhe delivered to Judge Heath himſelf: Which Letter taking notice of our Tryal, threaten'd them with Lex Talionis, to do the like to their Priſoners that they did to us, or any of us. And they having many of their great eminent Men Priſoners in the Tower, and in Warwick-Caſtle, and other Places, did induce them to ſtop all further Proſecution of Colonel Vivers, Captain Catesby, and my ſelf. And if it had not been for this threatning Letter, in all likelihood we had all three been condemned by a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, and executed: For my Wife did hear Judge Heath ſay to ſome of his Aſſociates, at the reading of the Letter, That as for all the threatning part of it, as to his particular ſelf, I value it not; but, ſaid he, we muſt be tender of the Lives of the Lords and Gentlemen that ſerve the King, and are in the Cuſtody of thoſe at Weſtminſter. And that Clauſe of Lex Talionis put a ſtop to our Proceedings, and further Tryals at Law.

Ld Keble. It was well for you, by your Story that you do tell, that you had ſo fair Play: You ſhall have with us, who are upon our Lives and Oaths, as much as the Law will afford you, and ſo much as our Judgments and Conſciences can lead us to, without doing Injuſtice in granting more than the Laws of England will afford. What was done there, is nothing to us here; for we are not to walk by their Precedent, but by our own Judgments, according to the Rules of the Law. And here 'tis thus far juſt, That upon the Proof of Matter of Fact, if Law do ariſe, you are to have Counſel; if not, you are to have none. By your Allegation, you ſay you had Counſel aſſigned you before any Matter of Fact came to be proved, when as a Judge of the Law he could not but do it; but if he did, it is nothing to us, we cannot do it. Yet we have in this Place proceeded legally hitherto with you; and when that Matter of Law doth ariſe from the Fact, as you had Counſel there aſſigned you, ſo ſhall you have here, and you ſhall have fair Dealing, and fair Play, according to Law, which is abſolutely as I tell you.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, by your favour, I crave but one Word more; and that is this: Here is a Gentleman that is a By-ſtander, a Friend of mine, and my Sollicitor, who by Law, as well as any other By-ſtander, may (a) ſpeak for the Priſoner at the Bar, in caſe he perceive Things urged againſt him contrary to Law; and therefore I deſire he may ſpeak two or three Words.

[Mr. Sprat beginning to ſpeak.]

Ld Keble. Spare your ſelf; when your Time comes, you ſhall ſpeak.

Mr. Sprat. He asked leave for me firſt. And, Sir, it is eaſy to prove the whole Indictment to be Matter of Law.

Judge Jermin. What impudent Fellow is that, that dare be ſo bold as to ſpeak in the Court without being called? Mr. Lilburne, by your own Words you ſay you were told at Oxford, That by Law you were to have Counſel; that is as true, that the Court is of Counſel for the Priſoner arraigned at the Bar; and ſo we ought, and ſhall permit you other Counſel, if Matter of Law, upon the Proof of the Fact, do ariſe: But for any other Counſel to be aſſigned you before that appear, is not by Law warranted: We ſhall tread the Rules of Juſtice. And we ſhall do Wrong to the whole Commonwealth, if we ſhould allow you Counſel before Matter of Law doth ariſe from the Proof of the Fact; and to allow Counſel in any other Caſe, the Court commits Injuſtice.

Ld Keble. And this, Mr. Lilburne, I will promiſe you, that when there comes Matter in Law, let be a Lawyer, or your ſelf, he ſhall ſpeak in your behalf; but before he cannot.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, the whole Indictment, under favour, is Matter of Law; and the great Queſtion that will ariſe (admit the Fact ſhould be true, and admit it ſhould be granted) is, Whether the Words be Treaſon in Law, yea or no? And alſo it is Matter of Law in the Indictment, whether the Matter in the Indictment be rightly alledged as to Matter, Time, and Place. And it is Matter of Law in the Indictment, where there divers ſeveral pretended Treaſons committed in divers and ſeveral Counties, put into one and the ſame Indictment, be legal, yea or no?

Ld Keble. Upon Proof of the Matter of Fact, you ſhall hear and know whether Matter of Law will ariſe; and till the Words be proved, we cannot ſay whether that be the Law that you ſuppoſe.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne, Truly, Sir, you promiſed me a fair Tryal, and that you would not take advantages of my Ignorance in the Law's Formalities: But the Lord deliver me, and all true-hearted Engliſhmen, from ſuch unjuſt and unrighteous Proceedings as I find at your hands, who go about, I now clearly ſee, by my Ignorance, in holding me to a ſingle and naked Plea, which is purely as bad, if not worſe, than all the Prerogatives; and for the worſt and groſſeſt of his Prerogatives, in a more rigorous manner than they were uſed in his Lifetime, to be thus preſs'd upon me at this Day, after he hath loſt his Life for pretended Tyranny and Injuſtice, Liberty and Freedom in publick Declarations declared to the Kingdom: I ſay, if there be Juſtice and Equity in this, I have loſt my Underſtanding; and the good Lord God of Heaven deliver me from all ſuch Juſticiaries.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, you have been arraigned before us for High Treaſon, and we bid you forbear thoſe Terms of yours long ago; ſpeak that you do rationally, and you ſhall have fair and chriſtian Anſwers and Replies, as ever any Man had at a Bar; and go on, you ſhall have it ſtill, if you will be fair and rational, and not break out into Extravagancies and Bitterneſs of Spirit.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. For my part, Sir, I muſt look upon my ſelf as a loſt and dead Man if I have not Counſel to help my Ignorance, to pitch upon thoſe Things that tend to my Preſervation.

(a) Coke, in his Inſtit. 3 par. cap. Petty-Treaſon, fol. 29. is expreſs in this Particular: So he is in cap. 63. being his Cap. Of Counſel learned in Pleas of the Crown, fol. 137.

And therefore if you will not aſſign me Counſel to adviſe and conſult with, I am reſolved to go no further, tho I die for it; and my innocent Blood be upon your Heads.

Juſtice Jermin. You have alledged part of the Law of England for your own Advantage; but every one that ſays ſo, does not prove it to be ſo. You have ſaid you will be tried by the Laws of England; and yet againſt the Laws of England you have utterly refuſed, in that you would not hold up your Hand, which I do not know any Engliſhman that ever refuſed ſo to do, but your ſelf. You have been told by the Court what the Law of England is; and yet you will not be ſatisfied. We are upon our Oaths, and therefore will diſcharge our Conſciences, and that in a more eminent manner than my Brother Heath did, altho we do not deny you Liberty to ſpeak for your ſelf. But now you who would have Counſel aſſigned before any Matter of Law doth appear upon the Proof of the Fact, which we cannot do; for it were to do Injuſtice, and to do againſt the Law, which the Court cannot juſtify.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, under favour, whether or no I have tranſgreſs'd the Law, I will not judge: But I am ſure the Law, in the Equity and Intention of it, would have all Tryals to be equal, and not prejudicial. My Proſecutors have had time enough to conſult with Counſel of all ſorts and kinds to deſtroy me, yea, and with your ſelves; and I have not had any time at all, not knowing in the leaſt what you would charge upon me, and therefore could provide no Defence for that which I knew not what it would be. And if by the Law of England I cannot have Counſel, then upon your own Grant, which is, That the Laws of God are the Laws of England, I deſire to have the Privilege of the Law of God, which you your ſelf ſaid is the Law of England; and I am ſure the Law of God is, That you ſhould do as you would be done to. Now it cannot be according to the Law of God, for my Adverſaries to have the Helps of all manner of Counſels, by Snares, Tricks, and Provocations, to take away my Life, and for me to be denied the Benefit to conſult with any to preſerve my innocent Life againſt potent Malice.

Ld Keble. You ſay well: The Law of God is the Law of England; and you have heard no Law elſe but what is conſonant to the Law of Reaſon, which is the beſt Law of God; and here is none elſe urged againſt you.

Another Judge. The Laws of God, the Laws of Reaſon, and the Laws of the Land, are all joined in the Laws that you ſhall be tried by.

Juſtice Jermin. The Queſtion is but this, Whether the Law of God, and the Law of Reaſon, and the Law of Man, may be conſonant to each other? And whether the Court or John Lilburne ſhall be Judges thereof? That is the Queſtion.

Ld Keble. And that which you ſaid, Mr. Attorney hath had ſo much Time againſt you, and Opportunity to conſult with all manner of Counſel to deſtroy you, your ſecret Actions, though they are now come to publick View, are ſo heinous, as that they do require time to put them into the moſt ſure way of Tryal; we have proved the Clandeſtineneſs of them: You did this in ſecret; now it is come to the Face of the World. Now this being Matter of Fact, no Matter of Law can appear till Proof paſs upon it. You have had Times to complot your treaſonable venomous Books, which ſhall be proved upon you; and till this be done, there is no Matter of Law to be looked at. This is the Law of God: When a Man hath done ſuch treaſonable Things, he ſhall anſwer directly and poſitively whether he be guilty of them, or no; and if he anſwer Not guilty, and they be not fully proved againſt him, there needs no more to be ſaid.

Juſtice Thorp. Mr. Lilburne, there fell ſome Words from you even now, wherein you think you have this Hardſhip put upon you, when you ſay the Judges and your Proſecutors have had ſix Months time to meet together, and conſult together how to deſtroy you. Firſt, I would not have you to believe, nor the reſt that hear it, that that is true that you ſay; for I ſpeak it for my own particular, that I never ſaw your Indictment till this time that I came here; and yet you ſay we have had ſix Months together to frame it. Theſe are your Words: This was not rightly done of you; for it is not true. I ſpeak in my own particular.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I am ſure the Subſtance of it you might ſee many Months ago; and though all you Judges have not at one time met about it, yet the greateſt part of you have, that commonly carry the Domination of the whole; and at Serjeants-Inn, with Mr. Attorney-General, the moſt of the Judges of England have had ſeveral Meetings, ſix, five, and four Months ago: for I have had Friends there that have ſeen it, and who have inquired into the Cauſe of ſuch ſolemn Meetings, and your own Servants have told them it hath been about me and my Tryal.

Juſtice Thorp. I ſpeak as for my own particular, that I never was there, and that I never ſaw your Indictment till this time.

Juſtice Jermin. Why, Mr. Lilburne, might we not have ſuch Meetings as thoſe, your Buſineſs being a Matter of this Importance, as this is, through the Heinouſneſs of your Offence? and that it might be ſo grounded as the Warrant of the Law is, the Judges did meet: And they ought to meet (a) to conſider of it, that nothing ſhould be done againſt you, or any Man elſe, contrary to the Law. But yet, for my part, my Dwelling is out of London, I heard not of it ſo ſoon as you ſpeak of; but after I came to Town, I confeſs I heard of it, and have been preſent about ſome Debates about it.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Only this I ſay, If by your Prerogative you will deſtroy me, as Nebuchadnezzar did endeavour to deſtroy Daniel by his Prerogative, I am as willing to die, as he was to be thrown into the Lions Den: And if you will not allow me Counſel, to conſult with what Plea to make for my Life, I have no more to ſay. Sir, it is but a vain Thing to ſpend any more Words.

Ld Keble. Theſe are but Words and Flouriſhes, Sir, that you are ſo willing and ready to die, as you declare you are: But if you be, it is better for you. And alſo it is well you have not to do with Judges that would be auſtere upon you; for you to term us to be Men that come hither to deſtroy you as Nebuchadnezzar went about to do Daniel: You may

(a) But Coke, in his Chapter of Petty Treaſon, in 3 Par. Inſt. fol. 29. expreſly ſaith, and to the end, That the Tryal may be the more indifferent, ſeeing the Safety of the Priſoner conſiſteth in the Indifferency of the Court, the Judges ought not to deliver their Opinions before-hand of any criminal Caſe that may come before them judicially. And he there cites Humphrey Stratford's Caſe, that Arch-Traytor, in which Huſſey, Chief Juſtice, beſought Henry VII. not to demand of them their Opinions before-hand. And in 4 Par. judge of what is within you; but of us, what is within us, you cannot judge. You ſhall have Juſtice here in the Face of the Country, and of all that hear us: Theſe ſhall be Judges of our Proceedings towards you. Take heed, Mr. Lilburne, this Language is but the Sparks of that venomous Heat that is within you; and they may burſt out to prove you guilty before us, and in our Preſence, of that you are charged with, without any further Proof or Proceedings; for you may do it, you may do it where you ſtand: And therefore be adviſed, and take heed what you ſay.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I have caſt up my Account, and I know what it can coſt me: I bleſs God I have learned to die, having always carried my Life in my Hand, ready to lay it down for above this twelve Years together, having lived in the Favour and Boſom of God; and I bleſs his Name, I can as freely die as live.

Ld Keble. You ſhall not now lay it down, if you do not deſtroy nor caſt away the Commonwealth; but if you go about to deſtroy the Commonwealth, the Commonwealth will ſpue you up, and deſtroy you.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I deſire nothing but Counſel, and a little Time to conſult with them, and to produce my Witneſſes, and a Copy of my Indictment: If not, I am willing to die as the Object of your Indignation and Malice, do your Will and Pleaſure.

Ld. Keble. We are willing to die too.

Mr. Attorney. What is agreeable to the Law of England, the conſtant ſettled Practice of trying Priſoners, will not be denied Mr. Lilburne: But as for that Privilege that was granted him at Oxford, is no Tie in Law to us; neither was it ever heard of in England that any, that did underſtand the Law, did ever, as Mr. Lilburne now deſires, allow Counſel to a Priſoner for ſuch an Act as this is, or had the Copy of the Indictment. It ſhall not be denied Mr. Lilburne, which is his Right by Law, in its due place; but to make new Precedents and new Laws, which, my Lord, when done by ſuch a Bench as this is, moſt of the Judges in England being preſent, runs to all criminal Caſes whatſoever, whether in Treaſon, Murder, or other Felonies: It's true, Mr. Lilburne is now only concerned in it; but if granted to him, it would be a Precedent to all future Times; by means of which there would never be an end of Tryals in criminal Caſes. And it is a wonderful ſtrange Thing to me, that when the Priſoner hath pleaded the uſual way, you proceed not immediately to Tryal. It's true, Mr. Lilburne hath pleaded his own Ignorance, and therefore deſires longer Time: But, my Lord, to make a Precedent of this nature, that never was known by the Laws of England, is very dangerous, very perilous. My Lord, the Thing that I preſs is not in relation to Time, but in relation to the publick Juſtice; for the ſame Reaſon it's granted him, it ought not to be denied to any Man that asketh it, neither for Treaſon or Felony. And of what evil Conſequences it would be, I leave your Lordſhip and the Court to judge.

My Lords, I do humbly deſire that Mr. Lilburne may be dealt with all legal, juſt, and fair Proceedings from the Court. My Lord, I do deſire accordingly that Proceedings may for the Commonwealth be ſo too; and that Mr. Lilburne may be without Delay, according to Law, proceeded againſt for his notorious Treaſons.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, with your favour, I ſhall crave but one Word: This Gentleman declares unto you what an evil Precedent it would be to give me a little Time to conſult with Counſel, to frame a Plea for my Life; and yet that Judge was pleaſed to ſay the Law of England is founded upon the Law of God, and the Laws of Reaſon, unſpotted, uncorrupted, or undefiled. I am ſure the Law of God, and the Law of uncorrupted Reaſon, is to do as you would be done to, and not to lay Snares for your Neighbour's Life: I am ſure the Law of God would have all Tryals indifferent, and no Man's Life ſurpriſed or taken away by Niceties or Formalities, tho never ſo notoriouſly accuſed. And, Sir, for Mr. Prideaux, and others of you, ſo often to call me notorious Traytor, as you do; I tell you, Sir, you reproach me: for though I am never ſo notoriouſly accuſed, yet in the Eye of the Law of England I am an innocent Man, yea, as innocent as any of thoſe who call me Traytor, till ſuch time as I be legally convicted of the Fact or Crime laid unto my Charge; and therefore, Sir, I beſeech you ceaſe your calumniating of me, for you thereby deal not fairly nor legally with me. And, Sir, I confidently hope I ſhall appear in the Eye of the Law, in the Eyes of you, and in the Eyes of all Men that hear me this Day, an innocent, a juſt, and a true Engliſhman, that really loves the Welfare of his native Country, if I may have fair Play, and the Scope of the Law. And therefore, Sir, blemiſh me not in the Ears of the Auditors, till the Law, and a Conviction by it, do blemiſh me; for I tell you I am in the Eye of the Law as innocent as any of your ſelves, till I be juſtly convicted. And therefore I pray ceaſe the calling of me Traytor in this manner.

Ld Keble. What need we any more, when we are of your Opinion? We wiſh you may come as clearly off as you ſay you hope to do.

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, and that it may be ſo declared, and that the World may know whether Mr. Lilburne be an innocent Man, or no, I pray put it to the final iſſue, and let the Law judge.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Under favour, for me to be denied Law, which I conceive is done unto me when I am denied Counſel, and to put the Niceties and Formalities of the Law upon me, the Signification of which are writ in ſuch Language and Tongues as I cannot read, much leſs underſtand; and would you deſtroy me for the not knowing of that which it is impoſſible for me to know? Sir, I beſeech you be not ſo extreme towards me. That Gentleman ſaith the Law of God is the Law of England; and it would have no Snares laid to take away a Man's Life: I pray let me have the Benefit of that.

Mr. Attorney. Once you had; and it is but juſt you ſhould; and I am ſure it will be granted unto you.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, you ſay well; the Priſoner doth not know the Law; you do not, and many others do not: But I tell you again, you know ſo much of the Law as is ſuitable to this Plea; you your ſelf know whether your Conſcience accuſe you guilty of the Fact laid unto your Charge, or not. For our parts, we ſay no more than one and twenty Men upon their Oaths have informed us, upon ſufficient Teſtimony of Witneſſes, that what they had ſaid we ſhould further inform our ſelves of, before your Life be taken away; yea, ſuch is the Law of England, the tendereſt Law in the World of a Man's Life. I ſay again, that no ſuch Tryal for Life is to be found in the World, as in England---- in any Place but in England. A Man's Life may be taken away upon two or three Witneſſes;

Witneſſes; but in England two or three Witneſſes do not do it: For there is two Juries beſides, and you have four and twenty Men returned; you have one and twenty Men upon their Oaths and Conſciences that have found you guilty: And yet when you have done that, it is not enough by the Law of England, but you are alſo to have twelve rational underſtanding Men of your Neighbours to hear all over again, and to paſs upon your Life. This is not uſed in any Law in the World but in England, which hath the righteouſeſt and mercifulleſt Law in the World: And this we ſit here to maintain, and let all the World know it, that according to the Rules thereof we have proceeded againſt you.

Judge Michel. Mr. Lilburne, you were ſpeaking of the Laws being in other Tongues; thoſe that we try you by are in Engliſh, and we proceed in Engliſh againſt you; and therefore you have no cauſe to complain of that.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. By your Speeches you ſeem to bind me up to a ſingle Plea: Truly I conceive that is not equitable by the Law of God, and the Laws of Reaſon. No Man's Life is to be deſtroyed by Niceties and Formalities; yet contrary to your ſolemn Promiſes, you take all Advantage againſt me by them, and make my ignorance in the tickliſh Formalities of the Law to be the means of my own Deſtruction: although before I pleaded you ingaged unto me you would take no Advantage by my Ignorance in your Formalities, and my Miſtakes in them ſhould be no Diſadvantage unto me; and yet now I have pleaded, you ſeem to hold me cloſe to a ſingle Plea. Truly, Sir, I think that is not juſt nor fair, ſo to break your Promiſes, and by fair Words to ſmooth me on into Nets and Snares, and to make uſe of my Willingneſs to be tried by the Law of England to drill me on to my own Deſtruction. Truly, Sir, had I ever thought or believed I ſhould have been denied Counſel, I would have died before ever I would in any manner have pleaded to your Charge, or have yielded to your ſmooth Inſinuations.

Juſtice Jermin. Thoſe Men that know the Laws of England, know well that it taketh away no Man's Life but upon clean Proof, and upon manifeſt Contempts of the Law. The Law is, Whoſoever ſhall go ſuch a way in a Court as evidently gives affront to the Law, that ſuch one takes away his own Life. The Facts that you are charged with, if they had taken effect, would have taken away the innocent Lives of many: Therefore you are now before us charged with the Fact; and every Man's Conſcience knows whether he committed the Thing charged upon him, or no; and your ſelf does know whether you be guilty of that you are accuſed of, or no. But the Court muſt not ſpend any further time; for Mr. Attorney-General hath returned the Writ of Veniri facias, for the calling or ſummoning of a Jury of Life and Death.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, you ſay you well underſtand your ſelf: You knew of your coming, and you knew of the Fact that you have committed.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Truly, Sir, ſix Months ago I heard much of my Tryal; and I longed for it, but could not have it, but was ſtill kept in Priſon, and abundance of Provocations put upon me, to make me cry out of my Oppreſſions; and then to hang me therefore, by a Law made after my pretended Crime was committed, is not juſt. And truly, Sir, I heard by uncertain common Fame of my Tryal now. But Parliament-Men told my Wife and Friends that my chiefeſt Crime was correſponding with the Prince; and to defend my ſelf againſt that, I fitted my ſelf, never dreaming that only Books ſhould be laid to my Charge, and therefore I could not as to that come prepared: And therefore do humbly deſire Counſel, a Copy of my Indictment, and Time to bring in my Witneſſes.

Ld Keble. Hear what is ſaid to you: For your Witneſſes, you ſhould have brought them with you; we'll give you leave to ſend for them: We will give you time to do, to conſider with your ſelf what to ſay for your ſelf, you ſhall, till to-morrow Seven a-clock.

L. Col. Lilburne. Sir, ſome of my Witneſſes lives, abides an hundred or eighty Miles off; and yet I muſt bring them to-morrow Morning: How's that poſſible? And therefore I deſire Time to bring them in, and alſo Subpœna's; for ſome of them are Parliament-Men, and ſome of them Officers of the Army, and they will not come in without Compulſion.

Ld Keble. That's the time we will give you longer; you knew of your coming long ago, and therefore ought to have come provided.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I beſeech you give me a convenient time, eight or ten days, that ſo I may get them together; for how could I be provided before-hand for any thing, but for that for which I was at the firſt impriſoned for, nothing of which is now laid to my charge? Could I divine upon what you would proceed againſt me? But, Sir, I have that within me, I bleſs God, that will be a Portion of Comfort with me, to carry me through all your Malice and Injuſtice.

Ld Keble. Never talk of that which is with you; God is in us, as well as in you: never make a flouriſh of what is in you; for the Fear of God is before our eyes as well as yours, and what we do we ſhall have comfort in, in that it is according to the Laws of England, the Rules of which we are ſworn to obſerve, and every Man will do righteous things as well as you.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Pray will you give me but eight days time then?

Ld Keble. We will give you no more, you ought to have brought them with you, you knew of it long ago; and the Court cannot, nor will not wait upon you.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. By your favour, Sir, thus; then let me have a little time to conſult with Counſel.

Ld Keble. I tell you, that if the Matter be proved, there needs no Counſel.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I ſhall not much inſiſt upon that, but the queſtion is, Whether the Matter be Treaſon in Law or no, and whether in Law it be rightly expreſſed in the Indictment, as to Time and Place, with other Circumſtances thereunto belonging? And I queſtion the Legality of the Indictment, and that ought in Law to be diſputed, before the Matter of Fact come to be ſpoken to.

Ld Keble. Sir, you ſaid at firſt, you would ſpeak as a rational and moderate Man, and yet you will not be anſwered. If Matter of Law do ariſe out of your Fact, that we have told you again and again, you ſhall have Counſel and Time.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, by your favour, it may be too late to deſire Counſel after the Fact is proved. And beſides, having legal Exceptions againſt the Indictment, why ſhould you run me upon the hazard of my Life, by tickliſh Niceties and Formalities; and as my Proſecutor Mr. Prideaux ſaith——(But being interrupted, cry'd out) Sir, I beſeech you, do but hear me.

Ld

Ld Keble. Your Diſtemper will break out; your Heart is ſo full of boiling Malice and Venom, you cannot contain yourſelf.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Mr. Prideaux is pleaſed to urge, that the granting of me my Deſire in reference to Counſel, will be ſo inconvenient a Precedent, as will deſtroy the Commonwealth: therefore to avoid the danger of ſuch a deſtroying Precedent, as he is pleaſed to call it, I deſire to have ſome time aſſigned me to get my Witneſſes together, and then I ſhall, I doubt not, but convincingly ſhew you the hazard and deſtroying Miſchief of that deſperate Precedent in denying Men liberty to conſult with Counſel, when they are upon Tryals for their Lives. For my own Judgment, my own Conſcience doth tell me, that it is my undoubted Right by the Law of England, by the Law of God, and the Law of Reaſon; and if it be totally denied me, I can but die: and upon that ſcore, by the aſſiſtance of God, I am reſolved to die.

Ld Keble. You ſpeak great words of your own Judgment, your own Conſcience, your own Zeal, and the like: and I tell you, our Conſciences, and our Religion, and our Zeal, and our Righteouſneſs, I hope ſhall appear as much as yours. You would make yourſelf Judge in your own Cauſe, which you are not, and ſo make Cyphers of us; but all your high Words of Conſcience and Righteouſneſs is but a Flouriſh, to make the People believe or be apprehenſive as tho we had none, you had all: but you ſhall know, here we ſit with as much Tenderneſs and Integrity as you ſtand there, and to do that uprightly which is according to Law and Juſtice.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I ſhall not in the leaſt make any compariſons, neither do I in that particular; I only ſpeak of my own particular, in reference unto that God in whom I have believed, and in whom I enjoy Content, Peace, and Quietneſs of Mind: and yet for my part I ſhall rather die than willingly go any further, except I have Counſel firſt.

Ld Keble. Well, Mr. Lilburne, the Court is very tender not to take up any of your time; you have heard what was declared to you there, that Mr. Attorney hath made Proceſs againſt you returnable to-morrow at Seven of the clock, and therefore to ſpend more time will be but your loſs and damage. The Sheriffs of London are to take care to return the Jury to-morrow morning, and therefore the Court doth adjourn till Seven a clock to-morrow in the morning; and in the mean time they do commit the Priſoner at the Bar to the Lieutenant of the Tower again.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I did not hear you the firſt words.

Ld Keble. You ſhall not be denied to hear it again, the Court deſires to be good Husbands of Time for you; we could have ſat long enough, to have trifled away your time that you may ſpend your Meditations, and take your Friends Advice, do not ſtand upon and deſtroy yourſelf by words. Mr. Lilburne, all that are here, are * to take notice of it, that the Priſoner at the Bar hath had more Favour already, than ever any Priſoner in England in the like caſe ever had: for by the Laws of England, in the Matter of Treaſon, whereof you are indicted, you ought to have been try'd preſently, immediately: But becauſe all the World ſhall know with what Candor and Juſtice the Court do proceed againſt you, you have till to-morrow morning; which is the Court's extraordinary Favour, and the Doors are wide open, that all the World may know it.

* Juſt. Jermin, take notice, the Judge ſtood up and ſpake out an Appeal to the People.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I can ſhew one hundred Precedents to the contrary in your own Books, to diſprove what you ſay.

Ld Keble. Adjourn the Court.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I humbly thank you for what Favour I have already received.

The Court adjourned till the next Morning, and the Priſoner remanded to the Tower.

Guild-Hall, October 26. 1649. being Friday. At the Tryal of Lieut. Col. John Lilburne, the Second Day.

THE Priſoner being brought to the Bar, ſpake as followeth: Sir, I pray hear me a word or two.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, I am afraid ſomething troubles you; I will have no body ſtand there *, let all come out but one Man.

* That was in the Bar, where his Brother Col. Robert Lilburne, his Sollicitor Mr. Sprat, and other of his Friends ſtood.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Here's none but my Brother and my Sollicitor.

Ld Keble. Sir, your Brother ſhall not ſtand by you there; I will only have one hold your Papers and Books, and the reſt not to trouble you: wherefore the reſt are to come out.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I beg of you but one word, tho I do not know any reaſon why of myſelf I ſhould not have the Privilege of the Law, as well as any Man in England; yet beſides what yeſterday I alledged for myſelf, for to have Counſel aſſigned, yet to-day give me leave to mention an unqueſtionable Precedent for my purpoſe, and that is Major Rolfe, who being an Officer in the Army, and being lately indicted for High Treaſon, (before the Lord Chief Baron Wilde, that now is at Hampſhire Aſſizes) for conſpiring to poiſon and piſtol the late King, which by Law was the higheſt of Treaſons, did conceive himſelf, in regard of his Ignorance, unable to defend himſelf ſingly againſt his Enemies Deſign, which was to take away his Life: whereupon he becomes an humble Suitor to the Lord Chief Baron Wilde, that he might have Counſel aſſigned him; and the Court, before ever the Grand Jury received any Teſtimony againſt him to find the Bill, aſſigned him Counſel, who as I underſtand were one Mr. Nichols, now a Judge of this Bench, and ſitting there; and Mr. Maynard of the Temple: they were both aſſigned his Counſel, and from Mr. Maynard himſelf I have it, yea, from his own mouth; who being aſſigned his Counſel, they came into the Court, where the Grand Jury was called before the Judge. Mr. Maynard, and Mr. Nichols, now a Judge here, had liberty there to be in the open Court, where the Witneſſes, before the Indictment was found, was called, and in open Court was ſworn, and in open Court gave in their Evidence before the Grand Jury; Major Rolfe's Counſel being by in open Court, to hear all the Evidence that was given againſt Major Rolfe, who in his Indictment was indicted for two Matters of Fact; the firſt was, That he had declared that in ſuch a Month, and at ſuch a Place, he had an intent to piſtol the late King, which by the Letter of the Law of 25 Edw. 3. chap. 2. was Treaſon. Then there was another Charge, That ſuch a day he had ſo ſaid or declared declared to poiſon him, in the preſence of ſuch a one; and they were both put into one Indictment. Whereupon Mr. Maynard being aſſigned by the Lord Chief Baron Wilde, that now is, to be of Counſel for Rolfe in the ſame Caſe, (but with abundance of more advantage to him, than I am now in) Mr. Maynard was then of Counſel to the Priſoner, and had liberty to hear what the Witneſſes ſwore againſt him, and to make his beſt advantage of it, and that in open Court, before the Indictment was found by the Grand Inqueſt; and altho there were two expreſs Witneſſes againſt him, yet but one of them ſwore to one thing, and another to another. Mr. Maynard being one that knew the Law better than Major Rolfe did himſelf, he apply'd the two Statutes of Edward VI. viz. the 1 Edw. 6. chap. 12. and 5 & 6 Edw. 6. chap. 11. to Rolfe's Caſe; which Statutes do expreſly declare, That no Man ought to be convicted of Treaſon, but by two ſufficient Witneſſes upon plain and clear Evidence to each Fact of Treaſon: which Evidence, as Sir Edward Coke ſays in the third Part of his Inſtitutes, ought to be as clear as the Sun at Noon-day, and not upon one ſingle Witneſs, and upon conjectural Preſumptions, or Inferences, or Strains of Wit. Now, Sir, I am an Engliſhman as well as Major Rolfe, and I have been an Officer in the Parliament-Army as well as he, and there fought for them as heartily as ever he did in his life, and he was accuſed for the higheſt of Engliſh Treaſons. And therefore I humbly crave, that in regard there are many particular Errors in the Indictment, as to Matter, Time, and Place; that therefore in reference to the Illegality of the Indictment, according to this Precedent by one of your own Fellow-Judges, that you would, according to my Birthright declared in Major Rolfe's Caſe, aſſign me Counſel as he had, to help my Ignorance, that ſo I may not be deſtroyed by Surprizal, and illegal and unjuſt Prerogatives.

Ld Keble. You ſee with what a great deal of Favour, inſtead of a few Words, we have heard you many; this is a Privilege: but this that you ſay upon it, it may be it was done; but that we do, ſhall be according to that you and we ſhall find to be according to the Laws of the Land, and our Conſcience, and the Privilege of the Subject: that that they did before the Grand Jury, and the Witneſſes, the Witneſſes are here ſworn in Court in preſence of the Grand Jury, ſo far we go with them; that of Mr. Maynard and Mr. Juſtice Nichols being aſſigned Counſel, for what cauſe it was then they beſt know, it is nothing that doth now concern us, tho the Treaſon was againſt thoſe Laws that then were in being; we muſt come to proof, it may be he confeſs'd his Fact; if you will do ſo too, it alters the Caſe.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. No, Sir, he never confeſs'd it, for if he had, he had been found guilty; but he was ſaved merely by the Skill and Honeſty of his Counſel Mr. Maynard, and his Indictment null'd and evaded before ever the Grand Jury found it, and that upon this Point of Law, becauſe by the two Statutes of Edward VI. there ought to be two plain and clear Witneſſes to every part of Treaſon; and tho Rolfe was accuſed by two Witneſſes, yet there was two Facts, and but one Witneſs to the Proof of each of them.

Ld Keble. When you come to Tryal, if we ſee there be need of Counſel, the Court will be inſtead of Counſel to you; nay the Court, if they ſee any Matter of Law for Counſel, tho you do not ask it, they will give you it. And therefore ſet your heart at reſt, for if there be any thing rational in Law that we can ſpy out, as well as your Counſel, we will help you in it.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sweet Sir, I crave but one word more; I am upon my Life, and if you deny me what the Law affords me, and that which hath been granted to be Law by Cavalier Judges, yea and by your Fellow-Judges, who are now in power at this day; the Lord deliver me from ſtanding in need of you to be my Counſellors.

Ld Keble. We are upon our Lives too, as well as you.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. No, by your favour, not in ſo imminent a manner as I am.

Ld Keble. We are upon our Lives and our Souls to all Eternity.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I beſeech you hear me one word.

Ld Keble. I will hear no more.

Mr. Prideaux. My Lord, I deſire the Court would proceed, and not prolong time, ſeeing he has pleaded Not Guilty, and confeſſed ſomething.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. No, Sir, you do me wrong, and abuſe me: I never confeſſed any thing, neither did I plead Not Guilty; for my Plea was conditional, grounded upon your Promiſes, not to take any advantage of my Ignorance in your Formalities.

Ld Keble. Go on; be ſilent Mr. Lilburne.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. If you take away my Life without affording me the Benefit of the Law, my innocent Blood be upon your heads.

Ld Keble. Sir, theſe paſſionate Words will do you no good, you had better forbear them.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Pray hear me then.

Ld Keble. Do you ſay that we do offer to take away your Life, Sir? if we do take it away contrary to Law, we are liable to ſmart for it: but we ſhall judge what you have done. [The Lieutenant-Colonel preſſing to ſpeak, was not ſuffered, but bid be ſilent.] Sir, I adviſe you, Sir, ſpare yourſelf with patience, and hear the Court.

Juſtice Jermin. Be quiet, Sir.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I beſeech you, Sir, let me hear but the Grand Jury ſpeak; for I underſtand from ſome of themſelves, they never found me guilty of Treaſon, but do conceive themſelves wronged by ſome Words yeſterday, that paſſed from ſome of the Judges: I pray let me hear them ſpeak.

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, you ſaid you would be rational, you would be moderate; you do break out, you will do yourſelf more hurt than any here can do you: you muſt be ſilent and hear the Court, we can loſe no more time to hear you. Cryer, call the Jury.

Cryer. The Jury called——[And Mr. Lilburne earneſtly preſſed to be heard, but could not.] Cryer. Miles Petty, William Wormwell.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I beſeech you let me but ſee theſe Gentlemens Faces.

Ld Keble. You Maſter Sprat, you muſt not talk to the Priſoner; you may ſtand and hold the Books: you did offend yeſterday, but you ſhall not do ſo to-day, for you ſhall not ſtand near the Priſoner to talk to him.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. My Lord, the Law ſays a Stander-by may ſpeak in the Priſoner's behalf at the Bar, much more whiſper to him; but eſpecially if he be his Sollicitor.

Cryer. John Sherman, Thomas Dainty, Ralph Els, Edmund Keyzer, Edward Perkins, Ralph Packman, Francis Woodall, William Commins, Henry Hanſon, Roger Jenkenſon, Joſias Hamond, Richard Allen, Richard

chard Nevill, John Mayo, Henry Jooley, Arthur Due, Roger Sears.

Clerk. You good Men of the City of London appear. Stephen Ives, John Sherman, Ralph Ely, Roger Jenkinſon, Joſias Hamond, Richard Allen, Richard Nevill, Roger Sears, John Mayo, Nicholas Murren.

Clerk. You Priſoner at the Bar, theſe good Men that are here preſented before the Court, are to be of your Jury of Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, you muſt challenge them before they go to be ſworn, and then you ſhall be heard.

Cryer. Every Man that can inform my Lords the Juſtices, and the Attorney-General of this Commonwealth, againſt Maſter John Lilburne Priſoner at the Bar, of any Treaſon or Felony committed by him, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard, for the Priſoner ſtands upon his Deliverance; and all others bound to give their Attendance here upon pain of Forfeiture of your Recognizance, are to come in.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I beſeech you give me leave to ſpeak.

Ld Keble. You cannot be heard.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Truly, Sir, I muſt then make my Proteſt againſt your unjuſt and bloody Proceedings with me, before all this People; and deſire them to take notice, that yeſterday I pleaded to my Bill conditionally, that no advantage ſhould be taken againſt me for my Ignorance in your Formalities, and you promiſed me you would not.

Ld Keble. We give you too much time; you will ſpeak words that will undo you: is this your Reaſon? You ſhall talk in your legal time, and take your legal Exceptions, we will hear you till midnight.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Then it will be too late, Sir.

Juſtice Jermin. You have given a great Slander, and that doth not become a Man of your Profeſſion; you ſpeak very black words.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I beſeech you, do but hear me one word; I do not know the Faces of two of the Men that were read unto me, I hope you will give me time to conſider of them.

Ld Keble. No, Sir, you ought not to have it.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Will you let me have ſome Friends by me that are Citizens of London, that know them, to give me information of their Qualities and Conditions? for without this, truly you may as well hang me without a Tryal, as to bring me here to a Tryal, and deny me all my legal Privileges to ſave myſelf by.

Ld Keble. If you be your own Judge, you will judge ſo; go on.

[Mr. Sprat, or Col. Robert Lilburne, whiſpers to the Priſoner to challenge one of the Jury, which the Judge excepted againſt.]

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, by your favour, any Man that is a By-ſtander may help the Priſoner, by the Law of England.

Ld Keble. It cannot be granted: and that Fellow come out there, with the white Cap, pull him out.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. You go not according to your own Law in dealing thus with me.

Juſtice Jermin. Your words were never a Slander, nor never will be; hold your peace. Cryer, go on.

Cryer. Stephen Blyth, look upon the Priſoner.

Abraham Seal, John King, Nicholas Murren, (Thomas Dariel) [the Priſoner excepted againſt him] Edward Perkins, Francis Peale.

Juſtice Jermin. Was he recorded and ſworn before he ſpake or no?

Cryer. No, my Lord.

Juſtice Jermin. Then let him continue, if he be right recorded.

Cryer. The Oath was not given quite out.

Juſtice Jermin. Then he hath challenged in time; let him have all the lawful Favour that may be afforded him by Law.

Williams Comins ſworn, Simon Weedon ſworn.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. He's an honeſt Man, and looks with an honeſt Face, let him go.

Henry Tooley ſworn, Arthur Due excepted againſt.

Ld Keble. Take away Mr. Due, let him ſtand a little by.

Henry Hanſon put by, being ſick; one that could not hear, excepted againſt; John Sherman, Ralph Head, Roger Jenkinſon, Joſias Hamond, Richard Allen, John Mayo, Roger Seares, Henry Hanſon excepted againſt, Edmond Keyzer ſworn.

The Jury called.

Clerk. Twelve good Men and true, ſtand together, and hear your Evidence.

Juſtice Jermin. Cryer of the Court, let the Jury ſtand ſix of the one ſide, and ſix of the other.

Clerk.
1. Miles Petty,
2. Stephen Ives,
3. John King,
4. Nicholas Murren,
5. Thomas Dainty,
6. Edmond Keyzer,
7. Ed. Perkins,
8. Ralph Packman,
9. William Comins,
10. Simon Weedon,
11. Henry Tooley,
12. Abraham Smith.

Of the Jury, ſix live about Smithfield, one in Goſling-ſtreet, two in Cheapſide, two in Bread-ſtreet, and one in Friday-ſtreet.

Juſtice Jermin. It's well done.

Cryer. The Lords the Juſtices do ſtraitly charge and command all manner of Perſons to keep ſilence, while the Priſoner is in Tryal.

Mr. Broughton. John Lilburne, hold up thy Hand.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. As I did yeſterday, I acknowledge myſelf to be John Lilburne Freeman of London, Son to Mr. Richard Lilburne, of the County of Durham, and ſome time Lieutenant-Colonel in the Parliament-Army.

Juſtice Jermin. You refuſe to hold up your Hand; and tho you break the Law of England, the Court will not break it.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I do what the Court declares what is my Right and Duty to do; I do no more than declare my Name to be ſo as it is.

Ld Keble. Read the Indictment.

Mr. Broughton reads. Hold up thy Hand, John Lilburne; thou ſtandeſt here indicted of High Treaſon by the Name of John Lilburne, late of London Gentleman, for that thou as a falſe Traytor, not having the Fear of God before thine eyes, but being ſtirred and moved up by the Inſtigation of the Devil, did endeavour not only to diſturb the Peace and Tranquillity of this Nation, but alſo the Government thereof to ſubvert, now eſtabliſhed without King or Houſe of Lords, in the way of a Commonwealth and a Free-State, and happily eſtabliſhed; and the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, being the Supreme Authority of this Nation of England, to diſgrace, and into Hatred, baſe Eſteem, Infamy and Scandal, with all the good, true, and honeſt Perſons of England to bring. That is to ſay, that thou the ſaid John Lilburne, on the firſt Day of October in the Year of our Lord 1649, and in divers other Days and Times, both before and after, in the Pariſh of Mary the Arches, in the Ward of Cheap, London, aforeſaid, of thy wicked and deviliſh Mind and Imagination, falſly, maliciouſly, adviſedly, and traitorouſly, as a falſe Traytor, by writing and imprinting, and openly declaring, that is to ſay, by a certain ſcandalous, poiſonous, and traitorous Writing in Paper, intitled, A ſalva Libertate; and by another ſcandalous, poiſonous, and traitorous Book, intitled, An Impeachment of High Treaſon againſt Oliver Cromwell, and his Son-in-Law Henry Ireton Eſqs; late Members of the late forcibly diſſolved Houſe of Commons; preſented to publick View by Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilburne, cloſe Priſoner in the Tower of London, for his real, true, and zealous Affections to the Liberties of this Nation: And by another ſcandalous, poiſonous, and traitorous Book, imprinted, and intitled, An Outcry of the Young-men and Apprentices of London, or an Inquiſition after the loſt fundamental Laws and Liberties of England, directed Aug. 29. 1649. in an Epiſtle to the private Soldiers of the Army, eſpecially all thoſe that ſigned the ſolemn Engagement at Newmarket-Heath, the fifth of June 1647. but more eſpecially the private Soldiers of the General's Regiment of Horſe, that helped to plunder and deſtroy the honeſt and true-hearted Engliſhmen, traitorouſly defeated at Burford, the fifteenth of May 1649. And alſo by another ſcandalous, poiſonous, and traitorous Book, intitled, The legal fundamental Liberties of the People of England, revived, aſſerted, and vindicated; didſt publiſh that the Government aforeſaid is tyrannical, uſurped, and unlawful; and that the Commons aſſembled in Parliament are not the Supreme Authority of this Nation. And further, that thou the ſaid John Lilburn as a falſe Traytor, God before thine eyes not having, but being moved and led by the Inſtigation of the Devil, endeavouring, and maliciouſly intending, the Government aforeſaid, as is aforeſaid, well and happily eſtabliſhed; thou the ſaid John Lilburne, afterwards (that is to ſay) the aforeſaid firſt Day of October (a) in the Year of our Lord 1649 aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at London aforeſaid, that is to ſay, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, London aforeſaid, maliciouſly, adviſedly, and traitorouſly didſt plot, contrive, and endeavour to ſtir up, and to raiſe Force, againſt the aforeſaid Government, and for the Subverting and Alteration of the ſaid Government, and to do thoſe wicked, malicious, and traitorous Adviſements to put in execution, &c. And thou the ſaid John Lilburne afterwards, that is to ſay, the aforeſaid firſt Day of October in the Year of our Lord 1649 aforeſaid, and divers Days and Times as well before as after, at London aforeſaid, that is to ſay, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, of thy depraved Mind, and moſt wicked Imagination, in and by the aforeſaid ſcandalous, poiſonous, and traitorous Book, intitled, An Impeachment of High Treaſon againſt Oliver Cromwell, and his Son-in-Law Henry Ireton, Eſqs; late Members of the late forcibly diſſolved Houſe of Commons; preſented to publick View by Lieutenant-Colonel John Lilbnrne, cloſe Priſoner in the Tower of London, for his real, true, and zealous Affection to the Liberties of his native Country: falſly, maliciouſly, adviſedly, and traitorouſly, didſt publickly declare, amongſt other things in the ſaid Book, theſe falſe, ſcandalous, malicious and traitorous Words following; 'But my true Friends, (meaning the Friends of the ſaid John Lilburne) 'I (meaning the foreſaid John Lilburne) ſhall here 'take upon * me the Boldneſs, con- 'ſidering the great Diſtractions of 'the preſent Times, to give a little 'further Advice to our Friends afore- 'ſaid, from whoſe Company or So- 'ciety, or from ſome of them, hath been begun 'and iſſued out the moſt tranſcendent, clear, ra- 'tional and juſt things for the Peoples Liberties 'and Freedoms, that the foreſaid John Lilburne 'had ſeen or read in this Nation, as your notable 'and excellent Petition of May the 20th, 1647. 'burnt by the hands of the common Hangman, 'recorded in my Book called Raſh Oaths unwar- 'rantable, pag. 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35. with di- 'vers Petitions of that nature, and the Petition 'of the 19th of January 1648. recorded in the 'following Diſcourſe, pag. 45, 46, 47, 48. and the 'Maſculine Petition of the 11th of September 1648. 'ſo much owned by Petitions out of ſeveral Coun- 'ties; yea, and by the Officers of the Army's 'large Remonſtrance from St. Albans, the 16th of 'November 1648. pag. 67, 68, 69. The Subſtance 'of all which, I (thou the foreſaid John Lilburne meaning) 'conceive is contained in the printed 'Sheet of Paper, ſigned by my Fellow-Priſoners, 'Mr. William Walvin, Mr. Richard Overton, and 'Mr. Thomas Prince and myſelf, dated the 1ſt of 'May 1649. and intitled, The Agreement of the Free 'People of England.' Which falſe, ſcandalous, and traitorous Book, called, The Agreement of the People of England, tends to the Alteration and Subverſion of the Government aforeſaid. 'The 'Principles of the foreſaid Agreement, I (meaning yourſelf the ſaid John Lilburne) 'hope and de- 'ſire you (the Friends of the foreſaid John Lilburne meaning) 'will make the final Centre, and 'unwavering Standard of all your Deſires, Ha- 'zards and Endeavours, as to the future Settle- 'ment of the Peace and Government of this diſ- 'treſſed, waſted, and divided Nation; the firm 'eſtabliſhing of the Principles therein contained, 'being that only which will really and in good 'earneſt marry and knit that Intereſt, whatever it 'be, that dwells upon them, unto the diſtreſſed 'or oppreſſed Commons of this Nation.

'But the Principles of the foreſaid Agreement 'being ſo deteſtable and abominable 'to the preſent * ruling Men, as that 'which they know will put a full end 'to their Tyranny and Uſurpation, 'and really eaſe and free the People from Op- 'preſſion and Bondage; that it is ſomething dan- 'gerous to thoſe that go about the Promotion of 'it: yet I ſhall adviſe and exhort you, (meaning the Friends of him the aforeſaid John Lilburne) 'vigorouſly to lay all Fear aſide, and to ſet on 'foot the Promotion of it (meaning the ſaid A- greement) 'in the ſame method we took for the 'promotion of the foreſaid Petition of the 9th of 'January 1647. laid down in the following Diſ- 'courſe, pag. 23, 24, 25. and write to all your 'Friends in all the Counties of England, to chuſe 'out from amongſt themſelves, and ſend up ſome 'Agents to you (two at leaſt for each County, 'with Money in their pockets to bear their Char- 'ges) to conſider with your called and choſen 'Agents, of ſome effectual Courſe ſpeedily to be 'taken, for the ſettling of the Principles thereof, (meaning the aforeſaid falſe Agreement, deviſed by yourſelf the aforeſaid John Lilburne) ‘ and to ſet ‘ up the promoting of, (the foreſaid feigned Agreement meaning) ‘ as that only which in an ‘ earthly Government can make you (the aforeſaid Friends of the ſaid John Lilburne) ‘ happier: ‘ at leaſt to know one another's Minds, in owning and approving the Principles of the foreſaid falſe ‘ Agreement, that ſo it may become to ‘ you (meaning the foreſaid Friends of the foreſaid John Lilburne) ‘ and all your Friends, your ‘ Centre, Standard, and Banner, to flock together to, ‘ in time of thoſe foreign Innovations, and domeſtick Inſurrections, that are like ſpeedily to bring ‘ Miſeries enough upon this poor diſtreſſed Nation, (the aforeſaid Nation of England again meaning) ‘ and unanimouſly reſolve and engage one to another, neither to ſide with, or fight for, the Chimera's, Fooleries, and Pride of the preſent Men ‘ in Power, (the aforeſaid Parliament of England meaning) ‘ nor for the Prince's Will, nor any ‘ other baſe Intereſt whatſoever: the which if you (the aforeſaid Friends of the ſaid John Lilburne meaning) ‘ ſhould fight for, it would be but an ‘ abſolute Murder of your Brethren and Countrymen you know not wherefore, unleſs he or they ‘ will come up to thoſe juſt, righteous, and equitable Principles therein contained, and give rational and good Security for the conſtant adhering thereunto.

‘ And upon ſuch Terms, I do not ſee but you ‘ may juſtifiably, before God or Man, join with ‘ the Prince himſelf; yea, I am ſure, a thouſand ‘ times more juſtly, than the preſent ruling Men ‘ (upon a large and ſerious Debate) joined with ‘ Owen Roe O-Neale, the grand bloody Rebel in ‘ Ireland; who, if we muſt have a King, I (meaning he the aforeſaid John Lilburne) ‘ for my part ‘ I had rather have the Prince, (meaning Charles Stuart, Son to the late King) ‘ than any Man in ‘ the world, becauſe of his large Pretence of ‘ Right, which if he come not in by Conqueſt, ‘ by the hands of Foreigners (the bare attempting ‘ of which, may apparently hazard him the Loſs ‘ of all at once) by gluing together the now divided People, to join as one Man againſt him; but ‘ by the hands of Engliſhmen, by Contract upon ‘ the Premiſes aforeſaid, (which is eaſy to be ‘ done) the People will eaſily ſee, that preſently ‘ thereupon they will enjoy this tranſcendent Benefit, (he being at peace with all foreign Nations, and having no regal pretended Competitor) viz. The immediately disbanding of all ‘ Armies and Gariſons, ſaving the old Cinque-Ports: and ſo thoſe three grand Plagues of the ‘ People will ceaſe, viz. Free-Quarters, Taxations, and Exciſe; by means of which, the People may once again really ſay, They enjoy ſomething they can in good earneſt call their own. ‘ Whereas for the preſent Army to ſet up the pretended falſe Saint Oliver, (or any other) as their ‘ elected King, there will be nothing thereby from ‘ the beginning of the Chapter to the end thereof, ‘ but Wars, and the cutting of Throats, year after ‘ year; yea, and the abſolute keeping up of a perpetual and everlaſting Army, under which the ‘ People are abſolute and perfect Slaves and Vaſſals, as by woful and lamentable Experience they ‘ now ſee they perfectly are; which Slavery and ‘ abſolute Bondage is like daily to encreaſe, under ‘ the preſent tyrannical and arbitrary new-erected ‘ robbing Government. And therefore rouze up ‘ your Spirits before it be too late, to a vigorous ‘ Promotion, and ſettling of the Principles of the ‘ foreſaid Agreement, as the only abſolute and ‘ perfect Means to carry you off all your Maladies ‘ and Diſtempers.’

Here Lieutenant-Colonel Lilburne, in the firſt Day's reading the Indictment, taking notice of the Judge Thorp and Mr. Prideaux to whiſper together, cry'd out, and ſaid to this effect:

L. Col. Lilb. Hold a while, hold a while, let there be no Diſcourſe but openly; for my Adverſaries or Perſecutors whiſpering with the Judges, is contrary to the Law of England, and extremely foul and diſhoneſt Play: and therefore I pray let me have no more of that Injuſtice.

Mr. Attorney. It is nothing concerning you (let me give him ſatisfaction) it is nothing concerning you, Mr. Lilburne.

L. Col. Lilb. By your favour, Mr. Prideaux, that is more than I do know; but whether it be or not, by the expreſs Law of England, it ought not to be; therefore I pray let me have no more of it.

Mr. Broughton. And further, thou the ſaid John Lilburne ſtand'ſt indicted, for that thou the aforeſaid firſt Day of October, in the Year of our Lord 1649, and divers Days and Times, as well before as after, in London aforeſaid, and in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, didſt maliciouſly, adviſedly and traytorouſly publiſh another falſe, poiſonous, traytorous and ſcandalous Book, intitled, An Out-cry of the Young Men and Apprentices of London, or an Inquiſition after the loſt Fundamental Laws and Liberties of England: having theſe traytorous and ſcandalous Words (amongſt other things) following; that is to ſay, We (meaning the Young Men and Apprentices of London) conſidering what is before premiſed, * are neceſſitated and compelled to do the utmoſt we can for our own Preſervations, and for the Preſervation of the Land of our Nativity, and never, by popular Petitions, addreſs our ſelves to the Men ſitting at Weſtminſter any more, or to take any more notice of them, than as of ſo many Tyrants and Uſurpers; and for the time to come to hinder (as much and as far as our poor deſpiſed Intereſt will extend to) all other whatſoever from ſubſcribing or preſenting any more popular Petitions to them; and only now as our laſt Refuge, mightily to cry out to each other, of our intolerable Oppreſſions, in Letters and Remonſtrances ſigned in the behalf, and by the Appointment of all the reſt, by ſome of the ſtouteſt and ſtiffeſt amongſt us, that we hope will never apoſtatize, but be able by the Strength of God to lay down their very Lives for the maintaining of that which they ſet their Hands to. And further, That thou the aforeſaid John Lilburne afterwards, that is to ſay, the aforeſaid firſt Day of October, in the Year of our Lord 1649, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, not being an Officer or Soldier, or Member of the Army aforeſaid, at London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, as a falſe Traytor, did maliciouſly, adviſedly and traytorouſly endeavour to ſtir up a dangerous, mutinous and traytorous Diſtemper, Mutiny and Rebellion in the Army, now under the Command of Thomas Lord Fairfax, and didſt endeavour to draw Thomas Lewis, John Skinner, and John Toppe from their Obedience to their ſuperiour Officers, &c. and further, didſt deliver unto the three Soldiers before-named, the ſaid Book, intitled, An Out-cry of the Young Men and Apprentices of London; having theſe Words following contained in them: ‘ Surely all Senſe and Compunction of Conſcience is not totally departed from ‘ you; hear us therefore in the earning Bowels of ‘ Love

* Which Words are in pag. 11.

'Love and Kindneſs, we intreat and beſeech you 'with Patience, and do not abuſe us, for com- 'plaining and crying out, for the Knife hath been 'very long at the very Throats of our Liberties and 'Freedoms; and our Burdens are too great and 'many for us, we are not able to bear them and 'contain our ſelves; our Oppreſſions are even rea- 'dy to make us deſpair (or forthwith to fly to 'the prime Laws of Nature, viz. the next violent 'Remedy at hand, light where it will, or upon 'whom it will) they are become as devouring 'Fire in our Boſoms ready to burn us up, rendring 'us deſperate and careleſs of our Lives, prizing 'thoſe that are already dead, above thoſe that are 'yet alive, who are rid of that Pain and Torment 'that we do and muſt endure, by ſenſible ſeeing 'and beholding, not only the dying, but the daily 'Burial of our native Liberties and Freedoms, that 'we care not what become of us, ſeeing that we 'are put into that original State or Chaos of Con- 'fuſion, wherein Luſt is become a Law; Envy and 'Malice are become Laws, and the ſtrongeſt Sword 'rules and governs all by Will and Pleaſure; all our 'antient Boundaries and Land-marks are pulled up 'by the Roots, and all the Ties and Bonds of hu- 'man Society in our Engliſh Horizon totally de- 'ſtroyed and extirpated. Alas for pity! we had 'rather die than live this Life of a languiſhing 'Death, in which our Maſters poſſeſs nothing (to 'buy themſelves or us Bread to keep us alive) that 'they can call their own; therefore it's no boot for 'to ſerve out our Times, and continue at our 'drudging and toiling Trades, whilſt theſe Op- 'preſſions, Cruelties and Inhumanities are upon us, 'and the reſt of the People, expoſing thereby the 'Nation, not only to domeſtick Broils, Wars and 'Blood-ſheds (wherein we are ſure our Bodies muſt 'be the principal Buts) but to foreign Invaſions by 'France, Spain, Denmark, Swethland, &c. as was 'well obſerved by an endeared and faithful Friend 'of the forementioned late treacherouſly defeated 'Party at Burford, in their Book of the 20th of 'Auguſt 1649, intituled The Levellers vindicated, or 'the Caſe of the Twelve Troops truly ſtated, pag. 11, 'and 12. which we cannot but ſeriouſly recom- 'mend with them, to your ſerious Peruſal and 'Judgment, and deſire to know of you (but eſpe- 'cially the private Soldiers of the Gen. Regiment of 'Horſe, who we underſtand had a hand in ſeizing 'upon, and plundering our true Friends at Burford) 'whether you do own the abominable and palpable 'treacherous Dealings of your General and Lieu- 'tenant-General Cromwell, and their perfidious Of- 'ficers with them, or no? (that ſo we may not 'condemn the Innocent with the Guilty, and may 'know our Friends from our Foes) as alſo to tell 'us, Whether you do approve of the total Defec- 'tion of your Army, under which it now lieth, 'from their Faith and fall'n Engagement made at 'Newmarket-Heath, the 5th of June 1647. not one 'of thoſe righteous Ends, in behalf of the Parlia- 'ment and People, on which your Vow was made, 'being yet fulfilled or obtained; but on the con- 'trary (as we have before-rehearſed) a whole 'Flood-gate of Tyrannies are let in upon us, and 'overwhelm us; and whether you [the aforeſaid 'private Soldiers meaning] juſtify all thoſe Actions 'done in the name of the Army, upon your Ac- 'count, and under the Pretence of that Engage- 'ment, ſince the Engagement it ſelf was broken, and 'your Council of Adjutators diſſolved? And whe- 'ther you will hold up your Swords to maintain 'the total Diſſolution of the People's choiceſt In- 'tereſt of Freedom, viz. frequent and ſucceſſive 'Parliaments, by an Agreement of the People, or 'obſtruct the annual Succeſſion? Whether you do 'allow of the late ſhedding the Blood of War in 'time of Peace, to the Subverſion of all our Laws 'and Liberties? And whether you do countenance 'the Extirpation of the Fundamental Freedoms of 'this Commonwealth, as the Revocation and Nul- 'lity of the great Charter of England, the Petition 'of Right, &c.? And whether you do aſſent to the 'Erection of Arbitrary Prerogative Courts, that 'have or ſhall over-rule, or make void our antient 'way of Tryals in Criminal Caſes by a Jury of 'Twelve Men of the Neighbourhood? And whe- 'ther you will aſſiſt or join in the forcible Obſtruc- 'tion of this martial and tyrannical Rule over us? 'Alſo whether you will fight againſt and deſtroy 'thoſe our Friends that ſhall endeavour the Compo- 'ſure of our Differences, together with the Procure- 'ment of our Freedoms, and Settlement of our Peace '(your Plenty and Proſperity) according as it was 'offered by the four Gentlemen Priſoners in the 'Tower of London, upon the firſt Day of May 1649. as a 'Peace-offering to the Nation, by the Agreement of 'the People, [the aforeſaid feigned Agreement meaning.] 'Laſtly, We [the aforeſaid Young Men and Apprentices 'of London meaning] earneſtly beſeech you [the a- 'foreſaid private Soldiers again meaning] to acquaint 'us, whether from your Hands, to your Power, 'we may expect any Help or Aſſiſtance in this our 'miſerable, diſtreſſed Condition, to the Removal 'of thoſe Iron Bonds and Yokes of Oppreſſion [the 'aforeſaid Government in way of a Commonwealth and 'Council of State meaning] that have thus enforced 'us to complain, and addreſs our ſelves thus to 'your Conſideration; for we [the aforeſaid Young 'Men and Apprentices again meaning] cannot chuſe 'but acquaint you [the aforeſaid private Soldiers 'again meaning] that we are ſeriouſly reſolved, 'through the Strength and Aſſiſtance of God, 'with all the Intereſt we have in the World, to 'adhere to the righteous things contained in our 'treacherouſly defeated forementioned Friends Vin- 'dication, [the aforeſaid traytorous Book, intituled, 'The Levellers Vindicated, or the Caſe of the 'Twelve Troopers truly ſtated, again meaning.']

And further, thou the ſaid John Lilburne, as a falſe Traytor, by moſt wicked traytorous Conſpiracies, Deſigns and Endeavours of thine aforeſaid, afterwards, that is to ſay, the aforeſaid firſt Day of October, in the Year of our Lord 1649, aboveſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, didſt in the Pariſh and Ward of London aforeſaid, in and by the aforeſaid ſcandalous, poiſonous and traytorous Book, intituled, An Impeachment of High Treaſon againſt Oliver Cromwell, and his Son-in-law Henry Ireton, &c. moſt falſly, maliciouſly and traytorouſly publiſh, and openly declare, amongſt other things, in the ſaid Book, theſe following ſcandalous, treacherous, tumultuous and traytorous Clauſes and Words following; that is to ſay, 'But I [meaning thy ſelf the ſaid John Lilburne] 'and many other Perſons [meaning the aforeſaid 'Friends] intreat you ſeriouſly to conſider that I 'cannot adviſe you to make Addreſſes to him '[meaning the aforeſaid Thomas Lord Fairfax, Cap- 'tain-General] as the General of the Nation's For- 'ces [the Forces of this Nation of England meaning] 'for he [the aforeſaid Captain-General meaning] is 'no General, but is merely a great Tyrant [meaning 'the aforeſaid Captain-General] ſtanding by the Power 'of his own Will, and a ſtrong Sword borne by 'his Vaſſals, Slaves and Creatures [the Soldiers of

'the Army aforeſaid meaning] having no Commiſſion 'to be General, either from the Law or the Par- 'liament, nor from the prime Laws of Nature 'and Reaſon. For Firſt, when he was made Gene- 'ral by both Houſes of Parliament, it was expreſ- 'ly againſt the Letter of the Laws. And Second- 'ly, when he refuſed to disband, &c. he hath re- 'belled againſt his Parliament-Commiſſion, and 'thereby deſtroyed and annihilated it, &c.

[The Reader is deſired to take notice, That in the Indictment it ſelf there was a great many other things than in this is expreſſed; as particularly divers Paſſages out of a Book, called Mr. Lilburne's, intituled, The Legal Fundamental Liberties of England revived, &c. as alſo out of another Book, intituled, A Preparative to an Hue and Cry after Sir Arthur Haſlerig, &c. as alſo out of The Agreement of the People, of the firſt of May 1649. with ſeveral other remarkable Things in Matter and Form, that were more neglected to be taken than the Pleadings; becauſe it was not ſuppoſed, but the Indictment (being a Record) a true Copy of it might eaſily be had; conſidering that by Law all Records ought freely to be uſed by any Freeman of England, and Copies of them denied to none that deſire to take them: But that Privilege being in this Cauſe already diſputed and denied; in which regard, the Reader muſt at preſent accept of the beſt imperfect Notes that the Publiſher could pick up.] But to go on.

And further, That thou the ſaid John Lilburne, as a falſe Traytor, all and ſingular the Clauſes and Engliſh Words aboveſaid, and many other traytorous, poiſonous and malicious Expreſſions in and by the aforeſaid Writings, and by the aforeſaid ſeveral Books, as aforeſaid recorded, and by thee the aforeſaid John Lilburne publiſhed, and openly declared in the ſeveral Books ſo as aforeſaid printed, and by the aforeſaid Writings, and by thee the aforeſaid John Lilburne, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, publiſhed, and openly divulged and declared divers other ſcandalous, malicious, tumultuous and treacherous Clauſes and Words in the ſaid Books contained, falſly, maliciouſly, adviſedly and traytorouſly, haſt publiſhed and openly declared, to the intent to ſtir up, and raiſe Forces againſt the Govermnent aforeſaid, in the way of a Commonwealth, and free State as aforeſaid eſtabliſhed; and for the ſuppreſſing and Alteration of the ſaid Government, and to ſtir up Mutiny in the Army aforeſaid; and alſo to withdraw the ſaid John Tooke, Thomas Lewis and John Skinner, and many other Soldiers from their Obedience to their ſuperior Officers and Commanders, and to ſet them in Mutiny and Rebellion againſt the publick Peace, and to manifeſt Contempt of the Laws of this Commonwealth and free State, and againſt the Form of the Statutes in this Caſe made and provided.

The Indictment being reading, and the Noiſe of the People in the Hall great, the Priſoner ſaid he could not hear, and had ſome few Lines before read over to him.

L. Col. Lilb. Pray hold your peace, Gentlemen; I beſeech you be quiet (ſpeaking to the People.)

Ld Keble. Quiet your ſelf, we will quiet them for you.

Broughton. Which Country are you? ſo that you are to find whether he is guilty or no, he having already pleaded, Not Guilty. If you find that he is guilty of any the High Treaſons laid to his Charge, then you are to enquire what Goods, Lands or Chattels he ſtood poſſeſſed of, when he committed the ſaid High Treaſons; but if you find him Not Guilty, you ſhall then enquire whether he did not fly for it; and if he did not fly for it, then you are to ſay ſo and no more: therefore hearken to your Evidence.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. May it pleaſe your Honour.

Cryer. If any Man can give any Evidence to my Lords, the Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, againſt Mr. John Lilburne, let him come in, and he ſhall be heard.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I deſire to be heard to ſpeak two or three Words. I humbly deſire the Favour to ſpeak two or three Words. I humbly deſire the Favour to be heard two Words.

Ld Keble. It is not a fit time; you ſhall be heard in your due time: but hear what the Witneſſes ſaith firſt.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I conceive I am much wronged, in ſaying that I pleaded Not Guilty, for I pleaded no ſuch Plea; I appeal to the Court, and to all that heard me, whether I pleaded any ſuch Plea: for before I pleaded, the Court became engaged to me, to take no Advantage of my Ignorance of the Formalities of the Law; and promiſed to give me as much Privilege as my Lord Duke of Hamilton, and others enjoyed before the Court of Juſtice.

Ld Keble. We know all this.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, by your favour, I pleaded conditionally, and now I make my abſolute Plea to the Indictment, which is this; That I except againſt the Matter and Form of it, Matter, Time and Place, and humbly crave Counſel to aſſign and plead to the Errors thereof.

Ld Keble. You muſt hear us, we hear you; a word is a great deal; theſe things we have taken perfect notice of, the Court is not ignorant of them; therefore they need not ſo ſuddenly be repeated to us again; you need not repeat theſe things, for I tell you again, they are all freſh in our Memories, and that we have done we muſt maintain, or we have done nothing.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Truly it is requiſite for me to ſay, that I am wronged, I had no ſuch ſingle Plea; I plead a Plea at large to the Errors of the Indictment; and firſt now crave liberty of the Law of England to have Time and Counſel aſſigned me.

Ld Keble. You ſhall have the Laws of England, although you refuſe to own them in not holding up your Hand; for the holding up of the Hand hath been uſed as a part of the Law of England theſe 500 Years. Go on.

Mr. the Counſel that was an Aſſiſtant to Mr. Prideaux.

My Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted as a Traytor, for that he contriving, and maliciouſly intending not only to diſturb the publick Peace, but alſo to bring the Government of the Nation happily ſettled in a free State or Commonwealth, without a King, or an Houſe of Lords, and the Commons in Parliament aſſembled to bring in Diſgrace and Contempt amongſt all good Men; he did the firſt of this Inſtant October, and divers times before and ſince in this City, falſly and maliciouſly, adviſedly and traytorouſly, by writing, printing and openly declaring, in and by one Paper of his called, A Salva Libertate, and by divers other Papers and Books, whereof one he calls, An Impeachment of High Treaſon againſt Oliver Cromwell and his Son-in-law Henry Ireton; and another Book of his, entitled, An Out-cry of the Young Men and Apprentices of London, directed to all the private Soldiers of the Army, &c. A third, A Preparative to an Hue and Cry after Sir Arthur Haſlerig; and a fourth, The Legal Fundamental Liberties of the People of England revived: That he did in theſe Books publiſh, That the ſaid Government is tyrannical, uſurped and unlawful; and that the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, are not the Supreme Authority of this Nation. He ſtands further indicted, That he, as a falſe Traytor, did maliciouſly, adviſedly and traytorouſly, plot and contrive to raiſe Force againſt the preſent Government, and for the Subverſion and Alteration of it; and for the fulfilling of his moſt malicious and traytorous Deſigns, he did in and by the ſaid traytorous Books falſly, maliciouſly and adviſedly, utter and declare ſeveral moſt falſe and ſcandalous, malicious and traytorous Words and Writings, that in the Indictment are particularly named and expreſſed. And thirdly, That as a Traytor, not being an Officer, nor a Soldier, or a Member of the Army under the Command of the now Lord General Fairfax, he did moſt maliciouſly and traytorouſly endeavour to withdraw certain Soldiers of that Army from their Obedience to their ſuperior Officers, which are particularly named in the Indictment: And that for the full Accompliſhment of his Contrivances and Endeavours, did maliciouſly, adviſedly and traytorouſly, publiſh and deliver the poiſonous Book, called An Impeachment; and in particular directed by the Title of the Book, to all the People of England, being for that end publiſhed by him to publick View: In which Book are contained moſt falſe and ſcandalous, malicious, mutinous and traytorous Expreſſions, as in the Indictment are ſet forth. And further, That in the ſaid Book, which he called An Impeachment, That the preſent Government is tyrannical and uſurped; and that the Commons of England in Parliament aſſembled, are not the Supreme Authority. And he further ſtands indicted, and the Jury further finds and preſents, that by all theſe and other Expreſſions written by him, and publiſhed by him in written Papers and printed Books, he hath falſely, maliciouſly and traytorouſly ſtirred up Strife on purpoſe, and to the intent, to ſtir up and raiſe Force againſt the preſent Government, ſettled in the way of a Commonwealth and free State, without King and Lords, on purpoſe it to ſubvert and deſtroy. And further, he hath alſo moſt traytorouſly endeavoured to withdraw the private Soldiers from their Obedience and Subjection to their ſuperior Officers: And all this in manifeſt Contempt of the Laws of this Commonwealth, in that behalf made and provided, and to the hazard of the Overthrow, and utter Subverſion of the ſaid Government.

To this Indictment the Gentleman hath pleaded Not Guilty, and hath put himſelf upon his Country; and if we can prove this againſt his Plea, it is at an Iſſue.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I deny that, Sir, I never pleaded any ſuch ſingle Plea as Not Guilty: and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I beſeech you take notice he extremely wrongs me in ſaying ſo; for my Plea was a conditional Plea, as as a Plea at large.

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard the Indictment read unto you, and you have heard it opened unto you; and you have heard what Mr. Lilburne ſays, That he did not plead Not Guilty: and I hope he is aſhamed of his Plea now he hears the Indictment opened unto him. My Lord, in this Indictment there is contained theſe ſeveral Grand Treaſons.

The firſt is, That he hath adviſedly, traytorouſly and maliciouſly publiſhed, That the Government that is now eſtabliſhed, by way of a free State or Commonwealth, without either King or Houſe of Lords, is tyrannical, uſurped and unlawful. And further, That the preſent Parliament now aſſembled, are not the Supreme Authority of the Nation.

The ſecond is, That he hath plotted, contrived and endeavoured to ſtir up, and raiſe Forces againſt the preſent Government, and for the Subverſion and Alteration of the ſame.

The third is this that relates to the Army; you have heard what his Expreſſions have been, and they have been read unto you, concerning them and the reſt, That he, not being an Officer, or Soldier or Member of the preſent Army, hath offered to ſtir up Mutiny in the Army, and to withdraw the Soldiers from their Obedience and Subjection to their ſuperior Officers, and thereby to ſtir them up to Mutiny and Diſcontent.

Theſe are the main Parts and Subſtance of what I intend to charge him with in the Evidence, to prove that which was contained in the Indictment. My Lord, you have heard in what hath been read out of the Indictment, what Expreſſions they are; thoſe that are traytorous to the Publick, and have been ſo declared, ſo judged, ſo executed, theſe are here Mr. Lilburne's engaged true Friends: The Parliament, the Government, the Authority of both Parliament and Army, they are Tyrants, Uſurpers, Mercenaries, Janiſaries, Murderers, Traytors, ſtanding by their own Power and Swords, and over-ruling all by their Wills: Theſe are the Expreſſions that he hath uſed. My Lords, I ſhall not trouble you with any thing of Aggravation; for, my Lords, I do conceive, that the reading of the Books themſelves aggravates every thing againſt him; and I think there is no Engliſhman (as Mr. Lilburne ſo often ſtiles himſelf to be) will own ſuch Words or Acts as theſe are.

And truly, my Lord, if I had read the Books, and not known the Perſon, I ſhould not have thought he had been either a Chriſtian, or a Gentleman, or a civil Man, to have given ſuch baſe and bitter Language; but, my Lords, and you of the Jury, I ſhall hold you no longer, the Evidence being ſo plain, and the Matter ſo foul, that it will not admit over-much, or ſtand in need of any Diſpute; and to make it plain and clear to your Judgments and Conſciences, there are Witneſſes in the Court evidently to prove every thing that will ſtand in need to be proved for the Indictment.

My Lords, the Words are maliciouſly, adviſedly, and traitorouſly: I ſhall not catch at Words, but, as himſelf ſays, what he prints is of mature and deliberate Conſideration; and ſuch are his Books in print, that himſelf hath either printed, or cauſed to be publiſhed.

The firſt that he is charged withal, is that which is called An Outcry: It hath a very dangerous Title, and in the Direction eſpecially to the Soldiers of the Army, but eſpecially to the private Soldiers of the General's Regiment of Horſe, that helped to plunder the true-hearted Engliſhmen, traitorouſly defeated at Burford; ſo that the Rebels at Burford were Mr. Lilburne's dear Friends. My Lords, it hath not only a dangerous Title, but was publiſhed at a dangerous Time, yea, and for a dangerous End, which was to ſtir up the great Mutiny that was in the City of Oxford. My Lord, for the Proof of this we ſhall offer this, That Mr. Lilburne himſelf was Captain Jones's Aſſociate in the publiſhing that Book: For Mr. Lilburne and this Captain Jones brought this Book to the Preſs to be printed. We ſhall offer unto you where he hath publiſhed it to Soldiers of the Army, to engage them in a Mutiny and Diſcontent againſt their ſuperior Officers. Therefore in the firſt place call Thomas Newcombe.

Thomas Newcombe ſworn.

Juſtice Jermin. Before you ſpeak look upon the Priſoner firſt, whether you know him, or not.

Mr. Attorney. My Lord, if you pleaſe, he may take the Book in his Hand, and ſee whether he printed it, and when he printed it, and who brought it to the Preſs?

Mr. Newcombe. I printed of this Book only the laſt Sheet, not knowing where the former part of it was done; which Book was brought to me by Lieut. Col. Lilburne and Capt. Jones, which Capt. Jones did agree with me in the Price: I was ſtop'd in the Proceedings in it. I ſay that Capt. Jones, together with Lieut. Col. Lilburne, did bring it to me, and that Capt. Jones did agree with me in the Price; but I was taken before I did perfect it: But Capt. Jones did indent with me for the Price. But this I muſt ſay, Lieut. Col. Lilburne came alone with the Copy; and afterwards at Night he came again, and had a Proof of it; and that he was preſent when it was corrected.

Mr. Attorney. And when the firſt Sheet was printed, then they came at Night again, and examined the Proof with Capt. Jones and his Corrector?

Ld Keble. And he brought the Copy of the whole Draught of the Book unto you?

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, by your favour, if Mr. Prideaux have done with the Witneſs, I crave my Right by Law to ask him ſome Queſtions. In the firſt place, I deſire he may be asked, Whether I was either Reader of the original Copy, or the Overlooker of the printed Proof?

Mr. Newcombe. You had a printed Sheet of it, and that was all.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I deſire to know whether I was either the Reader of that he printed, or the Looker upon the written Copy?

Mr. Newcombe. You look'd upon the Sheet that was printed, Capt. Jones read the Manuſcript.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Ask him the Queſtion thus, Whether was I the Corrector of the Thing printed, or the Looker-on upon the printed Copy? And whether, or no, he can ſwear that that printed Sheet, that he ſays I had, was corrected and reviſed, and was a true and perfect Sheet, according to the Original?

Mr. Newcombe. It was a Copy of the Sheet before it was corrected or reviſed.

Mr. Attorney. And Mr. Jones did read the Original, and Lieut. Col. Lilburne corrected the Copy.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Under favour, you are miſtaken: He ſays that I caſt my Eye upon the Copy; but doth not in the leaſt ſay that I corrected it. And therefore, Sir, you do abuſe me, in going about to make him ſay more than his own Conſcience tells him is Truth.

Ld Keble. While the Examination was, he ſaith you read the Proof.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, he ſays no ſuch Thing, by your favour.

Ld Keble. Mr. Newcombe, was not Mr. Lilburne there the ſecond time at Night, and did he not look upon the Copy?

Mr. Newcombe. That he did, my Lord: But, my Lord, I ſhall tell you the Manner of our Trade in this particular. The Manner is, That after we have ſet a Form of the Letter, we make a Proof of it, which Proof we have a Corrector does read: My Corrector he had one, being he corrected it, and Capt. Jones look'd upon the Manuſcript. And Lieut. Col. Lilburne had a Copy of the ſame Sheet uncorrected; but he did not correct it, nor read to the Corrector. There was two pulled off; the Corrector had one, and Mr. Lilburne had the other; and Capt. Jones look'd upon the Manuſcript, and read it to the Corrector.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. He has declared unto you, That he was taken printing the Thing before it was perfected: I deſire to know whether I was at his Houſe to give any further Directions at all after it was taken?

Mr. Attorney. That's no Thanks neither to you nor him.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I pray let him anſwer the Thing: Let me have fair Play above board. Sir, I beſeech you let me hold him cloſe to the Queſtion. He ſays he was taken before the Sheet was perfected: Truly I think they are his very Words.

Mr. Newcombe. I ſaid in my Examination that it was a Proof of that printed which you had.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I deſire again to know this of him, whether before he had printed or perfected that Sheet he had doing, he was not taken, and both the Forms?

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, you muſt deſire to ask him the Queſtion; and not you to demand it of him your ſelf.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I ſhall, Sir.

Mr. Newcombe. It was before the Forms were taken.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I ask you, whether before the Things were compleat and perfect, your Forms were not both taken, and your Perſon ſeized upon?

Mr. Newcombe. There were only ſome few Copies printed, and then I was ſeized upon, and the Forms taken away before I had perfected the Sheet. But this I ſay, He did not indent with me for the Price; neither had I the Copy from Mr. Lilburne's Hands, but from Capt. Jones's Hands.

Juſtice Jermin. You ſay that he had one Proof, and Jones another: When was this you ſpeak of? Give us the Time as near as you can.

Mr. Newcombe. I cannot juſtly ſay the Time; but as I remember, it was about ſeven or eight Weeks ſince.

Mr. Attorney. Stand you aſide; and call John Tooke, John Skinner, Thomas Lewis, John Hawkins, and John Merriman, Witneſſes ſworn.

Mr. Attorney. John Tooke, do you declare now your Knowledge. That which I call him for, is to this purpoſe, That Mr. Tooke being a Soldier of the Army, one of them mentioned in the Indictment, Mr. Lilburne delivered him one of the Outcries, on purpoſe to draw him from his Obedience to his ſuperior Officers.

Ld Keble. Shew him the Book.

Mr. Tooke. I have ſeen the Book; but I had not the Book in my Hand before.

Mr. Attorney. Tell what you know; that's all we ask you.

Mr. Tooke. About ſeven Weeks ago, being at Dinner with Thomas Lewis and John Smith, all Soldiers, after Dinner we met with Lieut. Col. Lilburne in

Ivy-

Ivy-Lane; and Thomas Lewis knowing of him, took acquaintance of him.

Juſtice Jermin. All Soldiers under my Lord General Fairfax?

Mr. Tooke. Yes, Sir.

Juſtice Jermin. Go on.

Mr. Tooke. Mr. Lilburne asked me to go and drink a Cup of Beer: We did ſo. And ſo when we went in, he asked whether we had ſeen ſuch a Book as the Apprentices Outcry? And Mr. Lewis anſwered, That he had ſeen it in a Man's Hand. Then Lieut. Col. Lilburne ſaid he had one in his Pocket, that was given him; and if he pleaſed to accept of it, he would give it him. So told him he had thought to buy one of them, for he heard they were ſold in the City; but he would accept of his. So Mr. Lilburne delivered it to Mr. Lewis.

Mr. Attorney. What did Maſter Lilburne ſay further unto you?

Mr. Tooke. He ſaid, That you Soldiers keep us all in Slavery.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I beſeech you, let me ask him one Queſtion.

Mr. Tooke. There was ſome to be ſold; but I forgot the Place.

Mr. Attorney. Did he name a Place and Perſon to you, where you might have ſome of them?

Mr. Tooke. He did name a Place, but I have forgot it, where there were more Books to be ſold.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Sir, I beſeech you let me ask you one Queſtion----

Ld Keble. Mr. Lilburne, for your Direction, you muſt make your Queſtion to us, and require us to ask him the Queſtion; and then if your Queſtion be fair, it ſhall not be denied you.----

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Then thus: Whatſoever this Gentleman ſays of meeting him in Ivy-Lane, and deſiring him to go to drink with me, yet I deſire you to ask him whether I did take Notice or Cognizance of any of them firſt? or whether they did ſpeak to me before, before ever I ſaid any thing to them?

Ld Keble. To what end do you ask this?

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. Becauſe in your Indictment I am charged that I went among the Soldiers to ſeduce them from their Obedience to their ſuperior Officers; when I have made it my Endeavour to ſhun them as much as I can, and not to come nigh the Place where I know they are, if I can avoid it; no, although I meet with them, not to diſcourſe with any of them, unleſs they begin firſt.

Ld Keble. I tell you this, which may direct you afterwards: Whoſoever began to diſcourſe firſt, if you did give them the Book afterwards, it is all one.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. But, ſhall pleaſe you, I am upon my Life; and by Law I ought not to be denied to ask the Witneſſes that ſwear againſt me any Queſtion that I pleaſe, that I my ſelf judge pertinent for my Advantage.

Mr. Attorney. Call Thomas Lewis.

Thomas Lewis. And it ſhall pleaſe you, I am upon my Oath to ſpeak the Truth; and I ſhall deſire by the Help of God ſo to do, and no more. One Day, which I conceive, to my Remembrance, was the 6th Day of September laſt, we being upon a Guard at Paul's, went to an Houſe to refreſh our ſelves; and when I came forth I met with Lieut. Col. John Lilburne, whom I had formerly known, and ſometimes viſited in his Impriſonment, and whom I was very glad to ſee, having a little before heard as though ſome ſudden Accident or Miſchance had befallen him; and I did ask of him how he did. He ſaid unto me he was well: And ſo with that ſays he, What are you upon the Guard? To my beſt Remembrance this was his Expreſſion; yet ſee whether it was he, or another that ſaid it. As I take it theſe were his Words: Says he, I have almoſt forgotten you. Sir, I was known to you formerly, having ſometimes been with you in the Tower. Says he, Will you go drink? If you pleaſe, we will: And ſo upon that we went to a Place called the Red-Croſs in Newgate-Market. And there we ſitting down to drink, having not much Diſcourſe for the preſent, we ſitting ſtill, he asked me at length, Have you heard of a Book called the Outcry of the Apprentices? Sir, ſaid I, I have heard of it, and have a longing Deſire to buy one of them to read it; and my Reaſon why I ſo ſaid was, becauſe I did underſtand it was to be ſold at the Exchange; there I intended to go to get one of them. Says he, I had one given to me; and if you will, I will give it unto you. So I received the Book with Thankfulneſs; and further expreſſing, which was ſomething mean, it would ſave me a Penny in buying of it. And I further entreated him, if he could direct me where I might buy ſome more of them. I have a Friend, ſays he, in ſuch a Place; if you would go to him, and tell him that I am here, I ſhould think my ſelf beholding to you. Now the Place's Name was Martin's-Lane, but the Man's Name, whither I went, I have forgot, and the Man too: I never heard of the Man before nor ſince; ſo I told Mr. Lilburne. Now he ſaid to me, Peradventure where you find that Man, you may have ſome more of the Books. Now theſe were the Words, to my beſt Remembrance and Knowledge, as I deſire to ſpeak with a pure Conſcience.

Mr. Attorney. Mr. Lilburne gave you one of thoſe Books?

Mr. Lewis. Yes, Sir; and I put it into my Pocket, and when I had done, Mr.---- he will deliver him.----

Whether there was any Books or Paſſages betwixt them? And upon which he told him, Yes; there is a Book that Mr. Lewis has, that has ſuch a Title.

Mr. Attorney. What did you with the Book?

Mr. Lewis. I delivered it to the Lieutenant.

Mr. Attorney. The ſame Book that you received from Mr. Lilburne, you delivered to the Lieutenant.

Mr. Attorney. What did Lieutenant-Colonel Lilburne ſay to you concerning your Pay? Did not he ask you, &c.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I pray, Sir, do not direct him what to ſay, but leave him to his own Conſcience and Memory, and make him not for fear to ſwear more than his own Conſcience freely tells him is true.

Mr. Lewis. The Diſcourſe was thus: Says he, You Soldiers (to my beſt Remembrance) are the Men that keep us all in Slavery. Now what to conceive of that Expreſſion, I muſt leave that unto you. And as concerning our Pay, he asked us, How is your Pay? Theſe were the Words, or to that effect. But there was Money come for us, and ready to be delivered out unto us.

Mr. Attorney. Call John Skinner: He was one of thoſe that was in Company, and can ſpeak to it.

Mr. Skinner. To my beſt Remembrance, and it ſhall pleaſe you, 'twas the beginning of September, I cannot juſtly tell what Day, that I met with Mr. Lilburne in Ivy-Lane, near unto Paul's; and meeting with him, I was going towards the Guard, and ſo was Mr. Lewis with me, being walking forth of the Lane, having been refreſhing our ſelves.

And

And near the end of the Lane we met Lieutenant-Colonel Lilburne, which Lieutenant-Colonel Mr. Lewis very well knew; and knowing of him, asked him how he did, and how it went with him, in regard he had heard before he was in Priſon; and ſo I did not take any heed what he ſaid further. Neither do I know whether Mr. Lewis asked Mr. Lilburne to go with him to drink, or Mr. Lilburne asked him; but to the Red-Croſs in Newgate-Market we went to drink. And Mr. Lilburne did ask Mr. Lewis whether or no he had ſeen the Book which was called the Apprentices Outcry. Mr. Lewis anſwered him, That he had not ſeen the Book, (as I remember;) but he had heard of that Book that it was forth, and he did intend to buy one of them, in regard they were publickly ſold abroad. Says Mr. Lilburne, I have ſuch a Book in my Pocket, which was given me even now; and I will give it you, if you will.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. I pray let me hear two or three Lines before.

Mr. Skinner. Whereupon you anſwered, and ſaid, I have the Bock in my Pocket, and it was given me, and I will give it you. And Mr. Lewis received it; and that was all. And preſently I went away.

Mr. Prideaux. You hear, Gentlemen of the Jury, that it is the ſame Book that he received from the Hands of Lieut. Col. John Lilburne.

Lieut. Col. Lilburne. My Lord, I beſeech you hear me before the Witneſſes go: And he that was ſworn before, I deſire to ask him this Queſtion, Whether or no that this is the very Book that is mentioned in the Indictment? And whether or no they have examined the Words of it with the Indictment?

Mr. Prideaux. You need not; that ſhall be proved preſently. Mr. Skinner, That Book which Mr. Lilburne gave you, what did you with it?

Mr. Skinner. It was delivered unto my Lieutenant, who ſtands there.
